It is needless for me to inform your Excellency that the news from Paris has caused the greatest sensation here. It has also had the effect of forcing the Hungarian legislators to quit the tedious routine with which the Dietal proceedings are conducted.

The Delegates went on leisurely with the co-ordination of the Free Towns' Bill; but when the news arrived (on Wednesday) of the revolution in France, they saw that some decisive step must be taken. Frequent conferences were accordingly held yesterday by both parties. Count Stephen Szechenyi proposed that they should proceed in a body to the Palatine, and request him to make known their wishes to His Majesty; but this proposal was not listened to. It was finally decided that Kossuth should make a motion to-day to the effect, that in a representation to His Majesty they should express their sentiment of loyalty, attachment to the Imperial dynasty, &c., but at the same time intimate that the system of policy hitherto pursued must be entirely changed; for which purpose they should request His Majesty to appoint, without delay, a certain number of men in whom the nation could place confidence as members of the Vice-Regal Council; that these Councillors should forthwith attend the Diet, in order that the questions under discussion might be terminated in a few weeks without going through the tedious routine of representations, Royal Rescripts, &c.; and that the said Councillors should afterwards be intrusted with the execution of the laws and be responsible to the Legislature; which is, in plain language, demanding a responsible Ministry of the Liberal party.

The reason they adopted this way of proceeding is, that, de jure though not de facto, the Members of the Vice-Regal Council are responsible to the Diet for their official conduct. If, therefore, His Majesty should name, say 6 members of the Liberal party, Vice-Regal Councillors, and each of them be charged with the execution of laws relating to a special branch of the administration, Hungary would possess a responsible Ministry under another name—a circumstance which, it is hoped, may induce the Austrian Government to comply with the request.

At a conference held yesterday evening the Conservative Delegates agreed to give their tacit support to the motion, or, in other words, that the motion should be carried, without a single observation being made from either side of the House, by general acclamation.

A Circular sitting was accordingly held this morning at half-past 10. Kossuth made a very animated though moderate speech; the motion was carried by acclamation, and before 12 o'clock the sitting was over.

The representation was sanctioned at a Dietal sitting held this evening and to-morrow will no doubt be assented to by the Magnates nem. con. and transmitted to the Hungarian Chancery.

The Magnates held a short sitting this morning, after which the Palatine left for Vienna, no doubt to urge the necessity of the Austrian Government complying with the demands of the Hungarian Liberals. Meanwhile Dietal business is of course quite neglected; every one is anxiously waiting for an answer to the representation, and also to see what steps England will take in the present conjuncture of European affairs.

This morning there was a complete panic here in respect of the Austrian bank notes. It was impossible to get a five-florin note changed in any of the shops without purchasing something, whereas at other times the shopkeepers are very glad to get rid of their silver. However, this afternoon a good round sum in zwanziger has arrived from Vienna, which has somewhat allayed the panic.

Presburg, March 9, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inclose a continuation of the summary, together with a translation of the representation voted by the Delegates, as stated in my despatch of March 3rd. After being duly sanctioned at a Dietal sitting, the representation was read at a sitting of the Magnates, held at 12 o'clock on the 4th, when the Judex Curie, Count George Mailath (President of the Chamber in the absence of the Palatine), requested them to wait until the return of His Imperial Highness from Vienna, before they took such an important document into their consideration, the more so as a satisfactory result could only be anticipated by His Imperial Highness' mediation. After a few remarks from Count Louis Batthyany, the House assented to the proposal of the Judex Curie.

The Palatine, the Judex Curie, Count Stephen Széchenyi, and several other Vice-Regal Councillors, are holding conferences at Vienna with the Austrian Ministers, which some of the Liberals here hope will lead to a satisfactory result.

The steamer that arrived here this evening brought 30 kegs, each containing 1000 C.M.

THE URBARIAL QUESTION.

THE nuncium respecting the appointment of a Dietal committee to inquire into the Urbarial laws came before the Upper House on February 3rd. This nuncium was drawn up in conformity with the resolution passed by the Delegates on December 4th (see page 10), that the proposed law should only be coercitive for the landlords. Most of the leading Magnates, Liberals as well as Conservatives, expressed their disapprobation of this principle. Count Anthony Szápáry and a few others wished to make the law coercitive for both parties; but by far the greater number who spoke on the question were of opinion that a permissive law would be more desirable than a coercitive one.

Baron Nicholas Vay spoke in this sense, contending that if the law was coercitive, it ought unquestionably to be coercitive for both parties; but was of opinion that, under existing circumstances, the most appropriate course they could pursue would be to extend the provisions of the Act 7§, 1840 (14), that is to say, to afford greater facilities for the commutation of the Roboth by the mutual agreement of the parties concerned; only rendering the law coercitive for both parties in some particular cases which the Committee would have to point out in their report. He should therefore move, that in their renuncium they should state their willingness to agree to the appointment of a Dietal committee on the above-mentioned conditions; the attention of the Committee to be chiefly directed to the removal of the existing obstacles in the way of commutation by mutual agreement, and above all to the most expedient manner of raising the capital required for the commutation or redemption of the Roboth in a way that would afford full compensation to the landlords without ruining the peasants; for which purpose the Committee would have to take into consideration the expediency of establishing hypothecary banks, and appointing an impartial Urbarial commission for the equitable adjustment of all claims and demands which the commutation or redemption might give rise to.

Baron Vay's motion was supported by the leading members of both parties, Conservative and Liberal, the only difference of opinion being on minor points, which it was agreed they would be better able to discuss when it was agreed the bill, founded on the report of the proposed Committee, should be submitted to their consideration.

Count Anthony Szecsen informed the House, that the commutation of the Roboth was an admitted principle which it was highly essential, for the welfare and prosperity of the country, should be carried out to its full extent. The application of an admitted principle required, however, great caution on the part of the Legislature. Now the application of the principle of the commutation of the Roboth would have, in his opinion, to go through 3 stadia. The first was what might be termed the permissive stadium, that on which they had entered by the Acts 8 §, 1836, and 7 §, 1840. The third was the coercitive stadium, when both parties were compelled by law to enter into contracts for the commutation or redemption of the Roboth and other Urbarial services. The middle point was the stadium on which the question then stood, and which might be regarded as a transition period from the permissive to the coercitive stadium. Each stadium imposed certain conditions on the Legislature, which could not be infringed without dangerous consequences. To make the proposed law merely permissive would be to return to the first stadium; to make it strictly coercitive would be to enter the third stadium without having passed through the second; but as they were then in this second stadium, they would necessarily have to comply with the conditions it imposed; and these conditions were, in his opinion, that the law should continue permissive with an extension of the provisions of the Acts passed in the first stadium of the question, and only be rendered coercitive for exceptional cases. He should therefore vote for the motion of his Excellency the Crown Warden. (15.)

The celebrated Lonavics (vitch), Bishop of Csanad (Tsha-nahd), also supported Baron Vay's motion, and observed that it was erroneous to suppose that the clergy were averse to the commutation of the Roboth. He could assure the House that the contrary was the case, and that the clergy would always be ready to support any measure that tended to ameliorate the condition of the peasantry.

Baron Vay's motion being thus supported by both sides of the House, was carried without a division.

A renuncium drawn up in conformity with the motion was read and authenticated (16) in a sitting held on February 10.

THE FAMINE QUESTION.

It would appear that for some time past, famine, with its usual attendant the typhus, has been severely felt in several of the northern counties of Hungary. Now the Diet met on November 12, probably when the distress caused by this scourge was at its height; still no one thought even of alluding to the subject until after the Christmas recess, when (January 11) one of the Delegates brought the question before the House, and moved that a Committee should be appointed to devise a remedy for the evil. The Delegates of the counties in which the famine prevails showed how necessary it was that speedy succour should be afforded to the starving population, and complained bitterly of the general inattention of the House when such an important question was under discussion.

Gabriel Lónyay, first Delegate of the county of Zemplen, observed that the honourable Delegates seemed to regard the discussion of the question as a mere pastime, as something to occupy themselves with until the hour of dinner. Some, he said, flippantly remarked that the Government ought to take the necessary measures for remedying the evil; others were for appointing a Committee, but they ought themselves to take the subject into serious consideration, the Government being obviously unable to do anything effectively without the aid of the Legislature.

Notwithstanding Lónyay's cogent arguments, the Delegates passed a resolution, to the effect that a representation should be sent to request that His Majesty would be graciously pleased to order that effective measures be taken to remedy the evil.

A representation was accordingly drawn up and sanctioned at a Dietal sitting held on January 27th. This representation was not brought before the Upper House until February 10th, when it was adopted without discussion, but the renuncium to inform the Delegates that this had been the case was only authenticated on February 18th.

HUNGARIAN LANGUAGE AND NATIONALITY BILL.

This Bill, of which mention has previously been made was passed at a Dietal sitting of the Delegates on January 15th. It contains eight clauses or paragraphs.

The first is merely the insertion of a fact, stating that His Majesty having been graciously pleased to assure the Diet that care had been taken to have the members of the Imperial Family duly instructed in the Hungarian (Magyar) language, this assurance had been inserted in the Act as a guarantee for the future.

The other clauses are imperative.

The second, decreeing that Hungarian (Magyar) be exclusively used as the official language of every department of the State, civil and ecclesiastical, with the exceptions mentioned in § 5, 6, 7. Official documents drawn up in any other language to be invalid.

Third. The Hungarian language to be also exclusively used for public instruction in all the schools, colleges, and universities in the kingdom.

Fourth. All Hungarian coins and seals of office to bear Hungarian devices and inscriptions in the Hungarian language. The vessels of the Hungarian Littoral to bear exclusively the Hungarian flag (consequently not the Austrian).

Fifth. The 3 Slavonian counties to be still allowed to make use of Latin and the Hungarian Littoral either of Latin or Italian, for the space of 6 years, commencing with the close of the present Diet, but only for local (Comitatal) affairs.

Sixth and Seventh. The provisions of § 2 to be only extended to the Partes Adnexæ (Croatia), in so far that the authorities of the Partes (the Croatian authorities) will have to correspond with the Hungarian authorities in the Hungarian language, but are permitted still to make use of the Latin language for the administration of local affairs.

Eighth. The provisions of § 3 not to extend to the Partes, but the Hungarian language to be taught in all the public schools of the Partes.

This Bill gave rise in its progress through the House to very warm debates, that is to say, to the usual conflict between Magyarism and Slavism that takes place on such occasions; the former, of course, domineering by an overwhelming majority. In respect to votes, Magyarism may be said to be represented in the Lower House by the 46 counties of Hungary Proper, and Slavism by the 3 Slavonian counties and Croatia,—the 3 Croatian counties only having one vote.

Ossegovich, the Croatian Delegate, neglects no opportunity of defending what he imagines at least to be the rights of Croatia. On the present occasion he contended that under the denomination Partes (Partes Adnexæ), which was consecrated by long usage, ought to be understood Croatia, Slavonia, and the Hungarian Littoral, which formed one kingdom, united with, but not dependent on Hungary; for this kingdom had its own Diet (the so-called Croatian Provincial General Congregation) and its own municipal laws and usages.

This was, of course, denied by the Hungarian Delegates, who cited various documents to show that the 3 Slavonian counties had always formed an integral part of Hungary, and that the phrase Partes Adnexæ, was only applicable to Croatia, in which sense it was to be understood in the Bill then before them.

Ossegovich also protested against the right assumed by the Hungarian Diet to decree what language should be made use of by the local authorities of Croatia for the administration of local affairs. Such a right, he contended, belonged, exclusively to the United Provincial Congregation (Diet of Croatia), and he would not suffer it to be called in question.

Both Ossegovich and the Slavonian Delegates complained of the injustice of forcing the Croatian and Slavonian authorities to correspond with the Hungarian authorities in the Hungarian instead of in the Latin language. The Hungarian Delegates answered by accusing them of agitating for a repeal of the Union, and attributing to them the secret design of forming an Illyrian Kingdom, either dependent on or independent of Austria, according to circumstances, which was, in fact, tantamount to accusing them of high treason. Notwithstanding the protest of the Croatian and Slavonian Delegates, the Bill was passed amid a general cry of "Maradjon."

When the third clause of the Bill was under discussion in the Circular sittings, Goldbrunner, Delegate of the free town of Schemnitz, tried in vain to show that an exception ought to be made in favour of the Schemnitz Mining Academy. This, he said, was one of the most celebrated institutions of the kind ever established, and was annually frequented by students from every country in Europe, as well as from America. If they persisted in making Magyar the exclusive language for public instruction, it was evident that the Schemnitz Academy would soon be deserted, as it could not be expected that foreigners who came to Schemnitz, to acquire a knowledge of mining, would take the trouble of learning an isolated Oriental language, which in their future career would not be of the least service to them.

"If Hungarians," exclaimed one gentleman, "are obliged to learn a foreign language when they frequent a foreign academy, why should not foreigners be obliged to learn Hungarian when they frequent an Hungarian academy?"

"But I defy you," rejoined Goldbrunner, "to find a professor capable of giving a lecture on mining and mineralogy in the Magyar language. You will first have to coin a number of technical words, which the language is at present totally devoid of."

"They shall not be wanted," replied the Magyarists.

"You ought also to take into consideration," said Goldbrunner, "the pecuniary advantage which the town derives from the residence of such a number of students."

"Let the town of Schemnitz perish, so that Hungarian nationality be preserved," was the only answer this German could get from the gentlemen he had to contend with.

The debate took place in the Upper House on February 4th and 5th.

When the Bill had been read, Bishop Lonovics rose, and after expressing in general terms his approbation of the Bill, observed that some of its provisions might perhaps be deemed rather too stringent, but on such a cherished and revered subject, this stringency could only be ascribed to a patriotic zeal in the sacred cause of Hungarian nationality, and in such a cause it was the bounden duty of the Magnates to vie in zeal with the Delegates. The first clause was exceedingly gratifying, as it would serve as a perpetual testimony of the patriotic sentiments by which the Imperial Family was animated. Their present beloved Monarch had done more for the propagation and cultivation of the Hungarian language than all the Sovereigns who had ever worn the ancient diadem of St. Stephen.

Respecting the second clause, he would merely observe, that the official language of the clergy should be understood to mean the language used in their correspondence with lay authorities and for public documents, and not to be applicable to their correspondence with ecclesiastical authorities, or for documents relating strictly to the affairs of the Church. It was in this sense that he understood the provision, and he trusted that the Delegates would give it this signification.

To the third clause the Bishop proposed an amendment, with which the Delegates are delighted. They had inserted an exceptional clause, purporting that the language of public instruction for elementary schools should be left to the decision of the local authorities; whereas the Bishop proposed to confine this to the 2 lowest classes in these schools, and make it imperative that the upper classes should be taught in the Hungarian language, which, he said, would be the best way to Magyarize the towns that are still, in the eyes of the Hungarians, too German.

To the fourth clause, with its Hungarian coins, and seals, and tri-coloured flag, the Bishop said that he had nothing to object.

In respect to the sixth and seventh clauses, he thought that they would do well to allay the agitation that prevailed in Croatia, by showing that while they made use of all legitimate means in their power for the propagation of the Hungarian language, they would not adopt any measures that might be deemed hostile to the nationality of Croatia. He should therefore suggest that, in respect to the administration of affairs strictly local by the Croatian local authorities, the use of the Latin language should not be made imperative, but potential; the clause to be worded, not that "the Latin language shall be used," but that "the Latin language can be used," which would not exclude the use of the national idiom of Croatia, though no mention ought to be made of it in the Act.

Bishop Lonovics had been often interrupted in his speech by loud cheering from the galleries. Haulik, Bishop of Agram, who spoke after him in defence of Croatian nationality, was as often interrupted by hisses and other signs of public disapprobation. (17.)

Count Louis Batthyany (the leader of the Opposition) then rose, and said he trusted that the House and the galleries would listen to him patiently, and abstain from hissing, for he was aware that they would be too much inclined to receive what he was going to propose, with signs of public disapprobation.

"I fully concur," he continued, "in the opinions expressed by the enlightened Bishop of Csanad, and approve of every amendment suggested by his Excellency, with the exception of that relating to the 6th clause. Here I must differ from our patriotic prelate, for, in my opinion, it is neither reconcileable with sound sense, nor with sound policy, nor, least of all, with the principles of equity and justice, to force the Croatians to make use of a dead language. Such a proceeding will be an act of tyranny still unrecorded in the pages of history, and expose us, and justly expose us, to the derision of the civilized world. Conquerors have frequently forced their own language on a subjugated people; but where shall we find an instance of a people having been compelled to make use of a dead language? I shall therefore propose that for the administration of their local affairs, the Croatsians be permitted to make use of the Croatian instead of the Latin language." (Marks of disapprobation from the galleries.) "I should, I must confess," continued the Count, "have hesitated in suggesting such an amendment to the 6th and 7th clauses of the bill, if I entertained the slightest fear respecting the Hungarian language and nationality; but this is far from being the case; our language has taken firm root in the country, and is no longer in danger. Our nationality is a fait accompli—a bright and glorious reality. It is to the development of our constitution, and not to our nationality, that our future efforts ought to be directed. Our nationality was for centuries a dream, a mere illusion—our constitutionality is so still. Let us therefore conciliate our Croatian brethren, and they will unite their efforts with ours to work out the regeneration of our common fatherland. The amendment I have suggested is a step that will surpass their most sanguine expectations, and if it be adopted, we shall no longer be reproached for our exclusive nationalism and liberalism."

Count Anthony Szécsén (the leader of the Conservatives) expressed his satisfaction at the speech they had just heard, and was overjoyed to find that he could give his cordial support to an amendment proposed by Count Louis Batthyany. He must however remark that the word "nationality" was susceptible of a distinction being made in its signification. It might be applied to designate either the language or the material power and independence of a people. It was in the former acceptance of the term that he should make use of it.

After a few more remarks Count Szécsén concluded by saying that he should vote for Count Batthyany's amendment to the 6th and 7th clauses, and for the Bishop of Csanad's amendments to the other clauses of the bill.

Count Zay, Baron Jeszenak, Count Ladislaus Teleky, Count Dominic Teleky, and Baron Louis Vay, all of them Liberals and Protestants, the Zays and Jeszenaks being Lutherans, the Vays and Telekys Calvinists, as well as Count Casimir Batthyany, Count Otto Zichy, Count Joseph Palfy, and in fact all the leading members of the Opposition, after eulogizing what they termed "the truly generous amendment proposed by their noble friend Count Louis Batthyany, regretted to say that they could not give it their support. They (the Hungarians or Liberals) had friends in Croatia (the so-called Magyar-Croatian party) whom they must not abandon. Hungarian nationality was, they feared, not so deeply rooted in the country as their noble friend supposed.

Count Dominic Teleky asked what was the policy that England had pursued in respect to Ireland and Wales? Were the Irish permitted to make use of the Irish language or the Welsh of the Welsh language for the administration of their local affairs? By no means; in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland there was but one official language; the Parliament, the courts of justice, the Government offices, the army, the navy, knew no other language than English.

Count Otto Zichy said that he also could not concur with his noble friend in the opinion that Hungarian nationality was firmly rooted in the country. The towns were still German; German was still the language of social life. He continued by observing that in the 47 free towns and 53 market towns and free districts that possessed civic guards, not more than 40 or 50 of these corps had the Hungarian arms, though prescribed by a positive law, on their accoutrements; and there was only 1 regiment, that of which he had the honour of being the colonel (the Civic Guard of Raab), that possessed a tri-coloured flag, and that flag was presented to the regiment, not by an Hungarian lady, but by a high-minded and free-born daughter of Albion.

All the above-mentioned gentlemen declared that although they should prefer leaving the 6th and 7th clauses as they stood, still to show that they were also willing to follow a conciliatory policy, they would vote for the amendment of the Bishop of Csanad.

Busan, the Delegate of Croatia, (18) said that their nationality was as much cherished by the Croatians, as Hungarian nationality was by the Hungarians. Hungarian nationality was now triumphant; the Hungarian language was the official language of the country, and had been spoken from the Throne; and still they refused to make a just concession to the Croatians. The Croatians were grieved at the bitterness displayed in both Houses of the Diet against them; but what grieved them the most was, that the authorities of the Hungarian Littoral were allowed to make use of the Italian language, whereas the vernacular idiom of the Littoral was the Illyrian (Croatian); cries of "no, no." He was not the person to be put down by cries of no, no; he regarded these cries as the mere negation of a fact, and he should persist in maintaining, as his colleague had done in the Lower House, that the Littoral was an integral part of Croatia, and he presumed that, although Italian was spoken in the sea-ports, no one would pretend to deny that the bulk of the inhabitants were of the Slavonic race.

This assertion of the Croatian Delegate gave rise to the usual controversy respecting the true signification of the term "Partes Adnexæ," and Magyarism and Illyrianism were again in violent conflict.

On the second day of the debate, Bishop Lonovics said that there was no essential difference between his amendment and Count Batthyany's; the latter was however the more explicit, and he should modify his own amendment by proposing that the words "the Croatian language may also be made use of," be inserted.

Count Emilius Dessewffy observed that 3 amendments had been proposed: one by the Bishop of Csanad, that "Latin can be used;" another, also by his Excellency, that "Croatian may also be used;" and a third by Count L. Batthyany, that "the Croatian language be used instead of the Latin." He must however remind the House that while they were deliberating whether Latin ought to continue, de jure at least, the official language of Croatia, the Croats had, de facto, made their own national idiom the official language for the administration of local affairs. He thought, therefore, that mention ought not to be made of any language, but that the clause should be worded "the language to be made use of for the administration of local affairs shall be left to the judgment of the local authorities."

When the Palatine had summed up the votes, he announced that the majority was in favour of the Bishop of Csanad's 2nd amendment, with the modification of Count Dessewffy. Count Ladislaus Teleky observed that this was a contradiction, whereupon the Judex Curie, Count George Majlath, showed that there was no contradiction, the Bishop of Csanad's amendment having been modified or replaced by Count Dessewffy's amendment, and it was obviously this modification, or, in other words, Count Dessewffy's amendment, that had been carried. He was therefore of opinion that the majority had pronounced in favour of Count Dessewffy's amendment of the 6th and 7th clauses, and of the Bishop of Csanad's amendments to the other clauses of the Bill.

This decision of the Judex Curie having met with the approbation of the House, a renuncium was ordered to be drawn up accordingly.

This renuncium was read and duly authenticated at a sitting on February 29th.

The Croats are thus allowed, that is to say if the Delegates agree to the amendment, to make use of a language which in point of fact they actually do make use of.

14. The Hungarian serfs were emancipated from their thralldom in 1405 by a decree of Sigismund II, which allowed them free migration, a decree which was confirmed, and its provisions extended by a Dietal Act passed in 1458. This Act was, however, annulled in consequence of the sanguinary insurrection that took place in the beginning of the 16th century, under George Dozsa; but free migration was again allowed by the Acts Ferdinand I, cap. 10, § 26, 27, 29, passed in 1547, and Maximilian I, cap. 1, § 27, in 1566. The condition of the peasantry was further ameliorated by the Urbarial Regulations introduced under the reign of Maria Theresa, regulations which, in 1791, obtained the force of law, and which were further extended by the Acts 8 §, 1836, and 7 §, 1840. In conformity with these Acts the Roboth may be commuted into a money rent, or even redeemed for perpetuity by mutual agreement of the parties concerned. However, notwithstanding these laws the Hungarian peasants have still much to complain of. It is on their property that county rates are exclusively levied, and that too in the most arbitrary manner imaginable; for the rates may be levied on the peasant's land or his live-stock, or any other kind of real property he possesses, as the county magistrates think proper. Thus, to cite one instance among a hundred—Eötvös, in his recent admirable work, entitled "Reform in Hungary," mentions that in a county in which the landed proprietors had begun to turn their attention to sheep-breeding, the rates were mostly levied on the peasants' flocks, in order that the petty nobles might thus prevent plebeian competition, and have a trifling advantage in the sale of their wool. A peasant's holding or session, as it is called, varies in extent according to the nature of the soil and local usage, but is fixed by the Urbarial laws at a certain number of acres in each county, the minimum being about 25, the maximum 65 English acres. A peasant may hold a whole session, a half-session, or a quarter-session. For a whole session he has to work—to do Roboth—104 days in the year, or 52 days with a team, for the lord of the manor, besides making the roads, such as they are, and performing other Urbarial services for the county. The lord of the manor also takes 1-9th of the produce of the session in natura, and the Church 1-10th. The lord has likewise the privilege of being the butcher and vintner of the manor, one of the consequences of which is, that in an Hungarian village inn the traveller is sure to find the worst wine of the district.

15. The ancient Crown of St. Stephen is kept in Buda, under the custody of a chosen guard of men and 2 officers of State, called Wardens of the Sacred Crown, who take precedence immediately after the 12 Barons of the realm, or grand dignitaries of the Crown. They must, according to law, be lay Magnates, either by birth or ex-officio, and elected by the Diet without any distinction as to religion. Two Protestants might consequently be elected to the office, but it is the established usage to elect a Roman Catholic and a Protestant. The present Crown Wardens are the Noble Francis Urményi (a Catholic), and the nobleman Baron Nicholas Vay (a Calvinist).

It may not be irrelevant to remark that the Hungarian Crown is called sacred on account of the original diadem having been sent to King Stephen by Pope Sylvester in the year 1000,—the Pope, according to a popular legend, having received it direct from heaven by the hands of an angelic messenger. Koller, Grand Provost of Fünfkirchen, in an erudite work published in 1800, and entitled "Commentarius de S. Regni Hungaria Corona," has satisfactorily shown that the present crown consists of the conjoined fragments of 2 ancient crowns; the upper part being a fragment of the crown sent by Pope Sylvester, and the lower part a fragment of the crown sent to Geiza I by the Byzantine Emperor, Michael Ducas VII, as is apparent by the names and figures of both these Sovereigns being embossed on the outward rim.

16. The authentication of a nuncium means that the document was read to the House, and found to be strictly conformable to the resolution on which it was founded. During the reading of the nuncium, amendments in respect to style—no others being allowed—are frequently suggested and adopted, in which case the nuncium, when reprinted, has to be read a second time.

17. The galleries are open to the public, one in each House being reserved for the ladies. The side galleries are mostly filled by the Dietal jurists (juraten), few if any of them having gone through a regular course of jurisprudence. A jurist is in fact a kind of an apprentice, learning the profession of an Hungarian legislator. The jurist begins his career by attending the County Congregations. He is then sent to the Diet, where he learns to pick up a knowledge of Dietal business. On his return home he becomes a candidate for public employment; or is perhaps elected to the office of District Magistrate.

As the Delegates have to send regular reports of the Dietal proceedings to their respective counties—for in Hungary it is to the counties themselves that official documents are addressed—and are moreover in constant correspondence with these counties respecting the questions under discussion, each of them has 2 or 3 jurists (paid by the county, or honorary) in his service, who act as his secretaries and amanuenses. They are all of course nobles, and go to a Dietal sitting in the Hungarian costume.

18. Croatia sends 2 Delegates to the Diet, like an Hungarian county; but with this difference, that one of these Delegates has a seat and votes in the Upper House, while the other sits and votes in the Lower one.

May it please your Majesty, &c.

THE events which have recently taken place make it our irremissible duty to direct our attention to what our fidelity to your Majesty's dynasty, our lawful relations with the united monarchy, and our duty to our country demands.

On taking a retrospective view of our history, we acquire the sad conviction that for the last 3 centuries we have not only been unable to render our Constitution conformable to the spirit of modern times, but have been obliged to use all our efforts for its maintenance.

The reason of this has been, that your Majesty's Imperial Government (1) has not had a Constitutional tendency, and therefore could not be brought in unison either with the independence of our Government or with the chartered rights of the nation.

This tendency has hitherto only prevented the development of our Constitution; but we are now convinced that if such a system of policy be any longer maintained, your Majesty's throne and the monarchy, to which we are bound by the pleasing ties of the Pragmatic Sanction, will be involved in consequences of which it is impossible to foresee the final issue, and our country moreover suffer an inappreciable detriment.

Your Majesty summoned us to the present Diet in order that we might lay the foundation for the reform of our social institutions. We hailed this summons as the fulfilment of wishes long entertained, and have proceeded to the task of legislation with redoubled ardour and activity.

With the adoption of the principle of general taxation, we have resolved to share with the people (2) those public burdens hitherto exclusively imposed for defraying the expenses of Comitatal administration, and to raise in the same manner the funds now required for regnicolar purposes.

We have resolved, on the principle of an equitable compensation being afforded, to take the necessary steps for the liberation of the peasants from urbarial services, and by thus adjusting the conflicting interests of the people (2) and the nobles, to augment the national welfare and strengthen the throne of your Majesty.

To lighten the burden of the alimention and quartering of the troops stationed in Hungary is among the more weighty matters to which our attention has been directed.

We regard the political and administrative co-ordination of the Royal Free Towns and the Free Districts as a question that cannot any longer be postponed; and we are of opinion that the time has already come when our political rights must be shared with the people (2.)

That effective measures will be taken for the promotion of our trade, manufacturing industry, and agriculture, is what the nation has a right to expect.

Our Constitutional life also requires to be developed in a real representative direction (3)—our intellectual interests demand a support grounded on freedom.

Our defensive system requires to be radically changed (4), and rendered conformable to the national character and compatible with the common interests of the different classes of society; for which purpose it is highly necessary, both for the dignity of your Majesty's Royal Throne and the security of the country, that effective measures be immediately adopted.

The responsible administration of the Hungarian State revenue and finances, with due publicity of the accounts, is a question that we cannot any longer postpone (5), as it is only in this manner that we can fulfil those Constitutional duties relating to the expenses for defraying the splendour of your Majesty's Royal Throne and the exigencies of the country, as likewise all other lawful duties that can but tend to a wholesome result.

In respect to several of these questions, it will be necessary that the conflicting interests of Hungary and the hereditary provinces of the empire be equitably adjusted (6); in order to effect which we shall always be ready, with the due maintenance of our independent national rights and interests, to lend a helping hand.

We are moreover convinced that the laws which will have to be enacted for the development of our social institutions, as well as for the promotion of the intellectual and material welfare of the nation, can only acquire vigour and reality when, for their execution, a national Government, totally independent and free from any foreign influence whatsoever, shall be called into existence, and which, in conformity with Constitutional principles, must be a responsible Government, and the result of the majority of the people. We therefore regard the conversion of the actual Collegial system of government (7) into a responsible Hungarian Ministry, as the principal condition and the essential guarantee for every measure of reform.

It is in this manner that we have the conception of the duties of our vocation.

To bring these questions with the agreement of your Majesty to a satisfactory conclusion during the present Diet, is our fixed and earnest design.

Our country expects this from us; millions expect it. It is commanded by that impulse of loyalty and attachment that binds us, with indissoluble ties, to your Majesty's dynasty. We are moreover convinced that it is only in this manner that tranquillity, peace, and concord can be so firmly established in our fatherland, that no unforeseen events or storms will be able to shake the solid foundation and it is only by such a guarantee of peace and contentment that we can endow the united powers of the State with that force and harmony, in which your Majesty's dynasty, under any circumstances whatsoever, may calmly and confidently rely.

But your Majesty will share our conviction that peace and tranquillity are the essential conditions for attaining to so desirable a result.

In this respect it is impossible for us not to perceive without apprehension those symptoms of disturbance that, in many parts of the monarchy to which we are united by virtue of the Pragmatic Sanction, are but too apparent, and of which the unforeseen complication caused by the most recent foreign events, will greatly increase the intensity. (8.)

We will not grieve your Majesty's paternal heart by entering into any details respecting these lamentable symptoms, neither will we examine the palpable effect which, in a financial point of view, they have already produced; (9) but the sentiments of loyalty by which we are animated, and the responsibility we are under compel us to declare that we can only look for the source of the evil now becoming so manifest, as well as for the principal cause of our social retardment, in the principles on which your Majesty's Imperial Government is founded. We are also thoroughly convinced that your Majesty will find the most secure guard against any possible untoward contingencies, as well as the most cordial agreement with your loyal people, and the most complete fusion of the different provinces of the monarchy, and consequently the firmest support of the Throne and the reigning dynasty, when your Royal Throne is environed by those Constitutional institutions imperatively called for by the exigencies of the age, and which can be no longer postponed. (10.)

Sire,—Events are in the hands of the Almighty. We place our trust in the protection of Divine Providence, but at the same time feel it to be our duty to remind your Majesty, that your loyal Kingdom of Hungary must not be unprepared to meet an uncertain future. We regard the bringing of the above-mentioned questions of reform to a satisfactory conclusion, on Constitutional principles, during the present Diet, as the irremissible means of allaying our anxiety; and we fear that the usual course of Dietal business, and the tedious negotiations with the Government, consequent on the actual collegial system, will dangerously retard our arriving at a result responding to your Majesty's paternal intentions and the legitimate expectations of the country.

We therefore venture, with steadfast loyalty and confident reliance, humbly to beseech your Majesty to be graciously pleased, on account of the extraordinary circumstances in which we are placed, to send to the Diet, as the powerful organs our most gracious Royal will, such individuals who, in the manner prescribed by existing laws, are members of the highest Government office, viz., the Vice-Regal Council; and who, being honoured beforehand with your Majesty's gracious confidence, will appear as the Constitutional representatives of the executive power, and have entrusted to them, in a prescribed manner and under their personal responsibility, the execution of the act of the Legislature. They will also have to take an immediate part in the Dietal proceedings; to direct the Diet in respect to your Majesty's gracious intentions; to furnish, especially in respect to the finances, the requisite explanations and statements; and to afford such assistance in bringing the questions under discussion to a satisfactory conclusion, that the contemplated salutary laws may the sooner be submitted for your Majesty's sanction; and, whatever unexpected turn affairs may take, peace and tranquillity being thus securely established in the country, a foundation will be laid for the development of that intellectual power and material welfare which your Majesty, with our stedfast loyalty, in every possible contingency of the uncertain future, will find to be the firmest support of your Royal Throne. (11.)

Explanatory Remarks on the preceding Representation.

I HAVE previously had occasion to observe that Royal rescripts are invariably drawn up in the so-called curial or chancery style. This style is also often employed by the Delegates for their representations, although they more frequently, as in the present instance, indite them in ordinary, and consequently more perspicuous language. I have therefore deemed it advisable to add a few explanatory remarks—referred to by figures—by way of commentary.

(1.) In the original "birodalmi Kormanya," which may be rendered "the Government of the realm," but they evidently mean the Central or Imperial Government of the Austrian Empire, to which the Hungarian Government, in their opinion, has been unlawfully subjected.

(2.) "People" (nep), in these paragraphs is used for "peasants." "We nobles have resolved to share with you peasants," &c. In other paragraphs "people" seems to be used for peasants and burgesses, two classes which, in Hungarian law-language, are included under the negative denomination of "non-nobles," which is in fact a better term than plebeians: a half-spurred or skin-clad noble being much more plebeian in his manners than the burgess of a free town or a sessional peasant.

(3.) The development of Constitutional life in a representative direction is a Hungarian phrase. "Alkotmányos életünk," our Constitutional life (unser constitutionelles Leben) is a favourite expression of the Hungarians. The plain English of the paragraph is,—“ We require a real Representative legislature, and liberty of the press.”

(4.) A radical change in the defensive system of Hungary may be made to mean:—1st. That the Hungarian troops remain within the kingdom. 2nd. That no foreign (Austrian) troops be stationed in Hungary. 3rd. That the strip of land running for upwards of 1000 miles along the Turkish border be incorporated with the adjacent counties, and consequently be placed under a Constitutional instead of a Military Government. 4th. That the present Civic Guards be converted into National Guards, and the number greatly augmented.

(5.) This, in plain English, is asking His Majesty to appoint a responsible Hungarian Chancellor of the Exchequer.

(6.) This paragraph more particularly alludes to the intermediate customs line, the removal of which was recommended in the Royal Propositions. And “ the due maintenance of our independent national rights and interests,” means that the fixation and regulation of the Hungarian customs duties belongs, de jure, exclusively to the Diet.

(7.) By “ a Collegial system of Government,” they mean the administration of public affairs by irresponsible Government offices (colleges), as the Vice-Regal Council, the Hungarian Chancery, &c.

(8.) i. e., by the Parisian Revolution.

(9.) Viz., a fall of 20 per cent. in the Austrian funds, and a run on the Austrian National Bank.

(10.) This is also a way of telling His Majesty that the heterogeneous States of his empire can only be kept together when the present bureaucratic Administration is superseded by a Constitutional Government.

(11.) The Delegates foresaw that if they demanded in plain language a responsible Ministry,—a Minister of Finance, a Minister of the Home Department, &c.,—their representation would not be adopted by the Magnates, or, if adopted by them, would not be listened to in Vienna. Hence they merely request His Majesty to send Vice-Regal Counsellors to the Diet; these Counsellors being already, de jure, though not de facto, responsible to the Legislature for their official conduct. And as these Vice-Regal Counsellors are to have the execution of the laws intrusted to them, and be responsible, both de jure and de facto, to the Diet, they must obviously be persons who are able to command a majority, especially in the Lower House; which is, in other words, requesting His Majesty to intrust the Government of his Kingdom of Hungary to a responsible Ministry formed of Magnates and Delegates of the Liberal party.

No. 7.—Viscount Ponsonby to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Mar. 28.)
 MY LORD, Vienna, March 19, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inclose a despatch I have received from Mr. Blackwell, together with the continuation of his summary of the proceedings of the Hungarian Diet. I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

PONSONBY.

 (Extract.) Presburg, March 15, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inclose a summary of the proceedings on the Responsible Ministry question, by which your Excellency will perceive that the Magnates have at length given their reluctant consent to the measures proposed by the Delegates; though unfortunately not until they were forced into compliance by the revolution—for it is a revolution—that has so unexpectedly taken place in Vienna.

The conferences ended as I had anticipated. On Saturday last the Conservatives turned the idea of a responsible Hungarian Ministry into ridicule, while the clever men of the party talked of the bad policy of complying with popular demands. In short, on Saturday and Sunday resistance was the order of the day. If the Liberals, they said, did not choose to follow the usual course of Dietal business, the Diet must be dissolved, and the Government would be sure of a majority in the next Diet.

Yesterday morning the Conservatives appeared very much perplexed; some were evidently inclined to make concessions, but others not. The events that took place in Vienna yesterday evening produced a great change in opinions; and this morning, when the news arrived that Prince Metternich and Count Apponyi had been compelled to resign the seals of office, the Conservatives, having no other alternative left, were obliged to comply with the demands of the Liberals.

It is now self-evident that the Hungarians must have a bond fide responsible Ministry, liberty of the press, and annual Diets at Pesth.

RESPONSIBLE MINISTRY QUESTION.

HAVING previously given a statement of this question, it will suffice to observe that at the memorable Circular sitting held on March 3rd, Kossuth began his speech by alluding to a proposal previously made by the Delegate of the county of Raab, respecting the solvency of the Austrian national Bank. This, he said, had now become an object of secondary consideration; what they wanted, and must have, was a responsible Hungarian Minister of Finance. This was the only way to save Hungary from being involved in the national bankruptcy with which Austria was threatened. But the time was already come when their demands must not be limited to the nomination of a responsible Finance Minister; they must tell His Majesty, in plain language, that the only chance left of saving the empire from dissolution, would be to place all the people under his sceptre in the enjoyment of Constitutional freedom. Kossuth then proceeded to show what Hungary especially required, his speech being, in fact, a mere amplification of the representation which he concluded by moving should be laid before His Majesty without a moment's delay. This motion, by the tacit consent of the Conservatives, was carried, as I previously observed of (March 3), by acclamation.

This representation, a literal translation of which will be found in the supplementary documents, having been sanctioned at a Dietal sitting, was brought in the Upper House on the following day (the 4th), when the Magnates consented to the proposal of the Judex Curie, not to take it into consideration until the return of the Palatine from Vienna.

On the following Monday (the 6th) the Magnates did not meet, the Palatine being still in Vienna. This was also the case on the 7th, when the Delegates began to complain very loudly of this remissness on the part of the Magnates. The absence of the Palatine, they said, was a mere pretext; for in his absence, the Judex Curie was ex officio the President of the Chamber, and in the absence of the Judex, the Tavernicus. On the 8th, after several violent speeches, in which the proceedings of the Magnates, or rather of the high official dignitaries, were stigmatized in no measured terms, it was decided to send the chairman of the day (there are always 2 Delegates presiding over a Circular sitting) to the Judex Curie and Tavernicus, for the purpose of urging them to hold a sitting; but the Chairman on their return announced that both the Judex and the Tavernicus, as well as most of the other high dignitaries, were gone to Vienna.

This announcement gave rise to some very severe remarks from Kossuth, Pazmandy, and other Liberals, who contended that the Magnates by these unconstitutional proceedings had virtually given up their authority, and that the Diet had de facto again become a uni-cameral Legislative Assembly.

The Conservatives remarked that it was quite natural that in the present critical state of European affairs, His Majesty should summon his trusty Hungarian Counsellors to Vienna. It was merely what might have been expected; and they, the Delegates, would have had just reason to complain had such not been the case. To which Kossuth pithily observed that such a plea might have been listened to a few days ago, but it was sheer nonsense now; every one being aware that these noble and learned gentlemen were gone to Vienna to hold conferences on Hungarian affairs with the Austrian Ministers, that was to say, with men who had not the shadow of a right to interfere in any way whatsoever, directly or indirectly, in the affairs of the Kingdom of Hungary. Such conferences were therefore both illegal and unconstitutional, and moreover highly dangerous for the liberties of the country.

On the 9th the Delegates voted that a nuncium should be sent to the Magnates to urge them to take the representation into consideration, and at the same time to express the marked disapprobation of the Delegates at their proceedings. As the "Personal" was also at Vienna, Sarközy, the Vice-Palatine, presided at the Dietal sitting at which this nuncium was adopted by acclamation.

The Vienna conferences having terminated, most of the gentlemen who assisted at them returned to Presburg on the 11th and 12th. The Magnates were to have held a sitting yesterday (the 13th), but it was decided at a private conference to await the result of the petition of the Austrian Landstände. A sitting was also announced for this morning, but was postponed in consequence of the events which have taken place at Vienna. It was however finally decided at a private conference, that both Houses should meet at 3 o'clock this afternoon (the 14th) and pass the representation, with an additional paragraph, by acclamation. Long before 3 the galleries of the Chamber of Magnates were taken possession of by the jurists. When the sitting commenced the House was crowded to suffocation. The representation was of course voted by acclamation, together with the additional paragraph demanding in express terms, liberty of the press, trial by jury, and annual Diets at Pesth. A renuncium was immediately sent to the Delegates, who also passed the representation thus amended by acclamation. The representation was then signed and sealed at a Mixed sitting, with the customary formalities; but instead of being transmitted in the usual manner through the Hungarian Chancery, it will be taken to Vienna to-morrow (the 15th) by a numerous deputation of Magnates and Delegates, and presented to the King (Emperor) in person.

This evening at 9 o'clock, the Civic Guards of Presburg in full uniform, each armed, not with a musket, but a flaming torch, together with the jurists in Hungarian costume, were drawn up before the "Grüner Baum" Hotel, for the purpose of giving Kossuth what the Germans call "eine Fackelmusik," i. e., a noisy torch-light serenade. Kossuth of course made a patriotic speech on the occasion from the balcony of the hotel. The Civic Guards and jurists then marched through the town, the jurists bearing several large national tri-coloured flags, brandishing their sabres and cheering for the independence of Hungary, while the band played the "Rakoczy" and other national melodies. In this manner they proceeded to the Landhaus to give a "Fackelmusik" to the Palatine. This however was soon over, the popularity of the Palatine being on the wane; and at the hour I write (12 o'clock), Presburg is as quiet as the greatest lover of order could wish it to be.

No. 8.—Viscount Ponsonby to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. April 3.)

MY LORD,

Vienna, March 28, 1848.

THE concessions made to the Hungarians will, I hope, pacify the country for the present. Count Louis Batthyany has been here during some days, and the Ministry formed by him seems to give satisfaction in Hungary, and will be agreed to by this Government. It appears to me that there are reasons which might influence the patriots who take the lead in the Hungarian Diet, to content themselves with what they have obtained. They are Magyars, and the number of that race in Hungary is estimated at 4,000,000. It is true that they have held the Government of the territory for some centuries, but there are 10,000,000 inhabitants of other races who, it is said, are not without jealousies of the Magyars, nor without ideas of national organization, which would be at least inconvenient to the masters of the kingdom. The support of Austria may be looked to by the Magyars.

The Imperial Government is not at present disposed to abandon the right to appoint the commander of the troops raised in Hungary, or the power to dispose of those troops. The Government expects that the Hungarian Diet will provide the men and funds necessary for them.

The abolition of the Roboth (corvée, it is called in French) will, as I am told, deprive the landed proprietors, all of them of one-third, and many of them of one-half of their revenue from their estates. The proprietors will also have to pay certain taxes which hitherto they have not been subject to.

No. 9.—Viscount Ponsonby to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. April 7.)

MY LORD,

Vienna, March 30, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inclose in translation, the copy of some demands made by a deputation which arrived here last night from the Kingdoms of Dalmatia, Croatia, and Slavonia. These demands seem at variance with the wish they commence by expressing, namely, that of remaining under the Hungarian Crown.

With regard to those demands which refer to the troops, and more especially that numbered 18, it may perhaps be worth while to remind your Lordship that the Croatian frontier troops are in fact military colonists. The frontier regiments are, I believe, 18 in number, and when not on foreign service live upon the produce of land which is allotted to them by the Government, and which they themselves cultivate. They are stationed all along the Austrian and Turkish frontier, forming a series of military villages, in which every man is a soldier, brought up to the use of arms from his earliest youth, and in constant employment on the "Cordon" service. They are said to be the best troops in the Austrian service.

The deputation is to have an audience at the Palace to-morrow morning, and I will endeavour to ascertain what answer is made to their demands.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

PONSONBY.

(Inclosure.)—Demands of the Croatsians.

DEMANDS of the Nation which were unanimously resolved upon at a national meeting of the three Kingdoms, Dalmatia, Croatia, and Slavonia, called together by the Provisional Committee, and held at the capital Agram, in the Town-Hall, on the 13th March, and which have been transmitted through an influential deputation to the Imperial Throne for sanction.

The nations of the United Kingdoms, animated by the desire of continuing as heretofore under the Hungarian Crown, with which the free Crown of Croatia, Slavonia, and Dalmatia, was voluntary united by their ancestors; animated by the desire of remaining true to the reigning dynasty which at present rules the land according to the Pragmatic Sanction; and finally animated by the desire of maintaining the integrity of the Austrian Monarchy and that of the Kingdom of Hungary, while they at the same time are anxious to uphold those great boons which were obtained for the whole Austrian Empire, during the 3 bloody and important days of the 12th, 13th, and 14th of March, make the following demands upon the King's sense of justice.

1. The extraordinary position in which the nation finds itself, as well as the restoration of its legal order, requires an authorized head, and with this view, it has unanimously elected Baron Joseph Jellachich, principal magistrate of the 3 united kingdoms, a man who possesses the confidence of the whole nation, and wishes that the command of the frontier troops and the right of calling together the Diet may also be granted to him.

2. That the Diet of these kingdoms be summoned to meet at Agram by May 1st of this year, at the latest.

3. A strong and new union in every respect of the Kingdom of Dalmatia, which by tradition and by law belongs to us, with the Kingdoms of Croatia and Slavonia, as well as the annexation of the Military Frontiers as regards their political administration, and the incorporation of all other parts of our country which in the course of time have become lost to us and united with the Hungarian counties and Austrian provinces.

4. Their national independence.

5. Their own independent Ministry, responsible to the Diet of these kingdoms, whose members shall consist of men of popular opinions, and devoted to the more modern tendencies towards freedom and progress.

6. The introduction of the national language into the interior and exterior administration of these kingdoms, as well as into all establishments for public instruction.

7. The foundation of a University at Agram.

8. Political and intellectual development on the principles of a free national spirit.

9. Freedom of the press, creeds, instruction, and speech.

10. A yearly Diet at Agram, Esseg, Zara, and Fiume, in turns.

11. The representation of the people on the principle of equality without reference to rank, for the approaching, as well as for all future Croatian, Dalmatian, and Slavonian Diets.

12. Equality of all in the sight of the law, as well as publicity in law proceedings, together with a jury, and responsibility of the judges.

13. Proportionate taxation upon all classes without regard to rank.

14. Exemption from all compulsory labour and "corvée."

15. Establishment of a National Bank.

16. Restoration of our National Funds, which hitherto have been under Hungarian management, as well as of all properties and funds belonging to the Finance Department. The above to be managed by a responsible Finance Minister.

17. National Guard. The command of which to be vested in the "Lands Captain," chosen by the Diet, according to the old custom.

18. The National Troops of every description in times of peace to remain in the country; the officers to be natives, and the word of command to be given in the national language; in times of war, or of observation of a foreign enemy, viz., upon frontier duty, the troops to receive food, pay, and clothing. All foreign troops to leave the country, and the "military colonists" who are now in Italy to be sent home.

19. The national troops to swear fidelity to the common Constitution, their King, and the freedom of their nation and of all other free nations composing the Austrian Monarchy, according to the principles of humanity.

20. All political prisoners, whether in the United Kingdoms or in other free provinces of Austria, and especially our distinguished author and worthy fellow-countryman, Nicholas Tomasseo, to be set at liberty.

21. Right of association, assembly, and petition.

22. Abolition of all Custom Houses upon the frontiers of our country, and Slavonic-Italian-Austrian States, and proclamation of reciprocal free trade.

23. Free entry of sea-salt, according to our old rights.

24. The abolition of all Imperial and public "corvée" on the Military Frontier, as is proposed in case of private individuals in the provinces, and a restoration to the Communes of their forest and pasturage rights.

25. The Frontier Funds shall be managed by our own Ministry, instead of the War Department as heretofore.

26. Every frontier man to enjoy equal rights and liberties with the other inhabitants of the United Kingdoms.

27. The town and country communes of the country to be organized upon the principles of liberty with the right of self-government and freedom of speech.

28. The old name for the Lieutenants of counties, "Zupanie," to be resumed, and they themselves to be organized according to old customs, but in the spirit of modern freedom.

29. All offices without exception, temporal as well as spiritual, to be vested exclusively in natives of the United Kingdoms.

30. Abolition of celibacy in the Church, and the use of the native language in Church service, according to old Croatian rights and customs.

No. 10.—Viscount Ponsonby to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. April 7.)
(Extract.) Vienna, March 30, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to forward to your Lordship 6 despatches which I have received from Mr. Blackwell.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

PONSONBY.

(Inclosure 1.)—Mr. Blackwell to Viscount Ponsonby.

I WRITE a few hasty lines to say that the Revolution is complete.

The public facts will be known to your Excellency by the Press, which is now quite free. Meanwhile I have the honour to inclose a number of the "Pannonia," and the resolutions passed at what may be termed a permanent popular committee.

I subjoin a brief summary of facts.

1. The Delegates have declared their sittings to be en permanence, and were in fact sitting (with short intervals) the whole day (Saturday) until midnight.

2. They no longer vote by counties, but each Delegate has a free vote; Delegates of counties, free towns, free districts, and chapters (of cathedrals), without distinction. They have consequently formed themselves into a National Convention or Constituent Assembly, the Magnates adopting nem. con. whatever they think proper to pass.

3. The Roboth, the tithe of 1-10th to the church, of 1-9th to the manor, and all other Urbarial services are abolished. The lords of manors are to receive a compensation from a national fund for their tithe of 1-9th, but the clergy have been obliged to submit to the abolition of their tithe without compensation.

4. A regular system of taxation for all classes without distinction to be forthwith established.

5. The aviticity laws and the law of primogeniture to be abolished.

6. A national guard to be immediately organized. This in fact is already taking place simultaneously in all parts of the kingdom. They calculate that in a few weeks they will have 200,000 men under arms.

It is further contemplated—

7. To send all the foreign (Austrian) troops out of the kingdom.

8. To recall the Hungarian troops from the Austrian States.

9. To incorporate the Military Frontiers with the adjacent counties. Thus putting in execution the paragraph of the representation respecting “a radical change in the defensive system of Hungary.”

10. To effect a union with Transylvania, and to insist on Dalmatia being incorporated with Hungary.

When the representation was voted, Pepe Eötvös hastened from Pesth, seeing that the time was come to realize the views he put forth in his work entitled “Reform in Hungary.” He is now working night and day, and is indefatigable in reconciling the different parties and in preserving order.

The Ministry is not yet formed, the following combination at present seems the most likely, but to-morrow another may probably be substituted for it.

Count Louis Batthyany—Premier.

Déak—Minister of the Interior.

Kossuth—Finances.

Baron Eötvös—Public Instruction and Religious Worship.

Prince Esterházy—Minister not as yet of Foreign but of International Affairs, i.e., of the diplomatic relations of the independent Kingdom of Hungary with the other States of the Austrian Empire.

H.E. Viscount Ponsonby.

J. BLACKWELL.

(Inclosure 2.)—Mr. Blackwell to Viscount Ponsonby.

Presburg, March 21, 1848.

ON Saturday last, the 18th, the revolution was complete. The Liberals were very sanguine; several Ministerial combinations were formed, and it was hoped that things would go on satisfactorily; but to-day affairs have a much more gloomy appearance. There is in fact no Government in the country. Buda and Pesth are under the rule of Klauzal, one of the most celebrated Delegates at the last Diet, and also—then at least—one of the most moderate of the Liberal party; and most of the towns from which news has arrived, are governed much in the same manner by Committees of Public Safety.

No Ministry is yet formed. Déak arrived here yesterday, and does not appear to approve of the revolutionary proceedings of the Delegates.

H.E. Viscount Ponsonby.

J. BLACKWELL.

(Inclosure 3.)—Mr. Blackwell to Viscount Ponsonby.

Presburg, March 22, 1848.

As your Excellency is probably too much occupied to read long letters, I will merely observe that nothing of importance has taken place since yesterday.

The tumult respecting the Jews has subsided. Forty or fifty persons were arrested last night; most of them, it seems, are Austrians, who, after plundering in the environs of Vienna, had come here for the same purpose. I never saw Presburg so quiet as it is this evening. As I came home (11 o'clock), there was scarcely a person to be seen in the streets.

Count Batthyany has not been able yet to form a Ministry.

Meanwhile a bill has been brought in respecting the Ministry; and until it has passed through the Upper House and received the Royal sanction, Count Batthyany cannot well submit the names of his colleagues for His Majesty's approbation. According to this bill there are to be 9 Ministers, viz.:

A Premier Minister, Minister of the Interior, Minister of Foreign Affairs, Minister of Finances, Minister of Public Works, Minister of Trade and Agriculture, Minister of Public Instruction, Minister of Justice, and Minister of War.

By a Minister of Foreign Affairs they now understand an Hungarian Minister who is to reside in Vienna, and be consulted in all transactions with foreign States in which the interests of Hungary are in any way involved.

On Saturday and Sunday the Magnates accepted everything sent up from the Lower House, nem. con. They were in fact frightened, and some of the most haughty amongst them might be seen conversing familiarly with Delegates whom they had previously never condescended to speak to.

The only persons the Liberals have to fear are the so-called half-spurred nobles, who must necessarily be disfranchised, and who will moreover have to pay taxes. This is the real cause of their great anxiety to bring the Diet to a close, being afraid that the Conservatives will make use of these discontented nobles, and get resolutions passed at the County Congregations, condemning their proceedings.

H.E. Viscount Ponsonby.

J. BLACKWELL.

(Inclosure 4.)—Mr. Blackwell to Viscount Ponsonby.

Presburg, March 23, 1848.

THIS morning the bill respecting the Ministry passed the Chamber of Magnates, when Count Batthyany announced that he had formed a Ministry (the arrangements having been completed during the night), and would make known the names of his colleagues previous to their being submitted to His Majesty. He then announced them in the following order:

Premier, without Portefeuille	..	Count L. Batthyany.
Interior (Home Department)	..	Szemere.
Foreign Affairs	Prince Esterhazy.
Finance	Kossuth.
War	Mészáros (a Colonel of Hussars, now at Milan.)
Public Works	Count Stephen Szechenyi.
Public Instruction and Religious
Worship	Baron Eötvös.
Trade, Agriculture, and Manufacturing Industry	Klauzal.
Justice	Déak.

Notwithstanding this public announcement, I do not regard the Ministry as definitively formed. There are three of its members who are by no means satisfied. A few days ago Szemere drew up a provisional law on the Press, which has passed with trifling amendments through both Houses.

This law, it appears, has been highly disapproved of by the Pesth Republicans. They even threaten to convoke a Diet, or more properly speaking, a National Convention, at Pesth, on the plea that the present Diet is not a popular assembly; that its proceedings (since the nomination of Count Batthyany) are too dilatory; that the measures proposed are not sufficiently energetic! In one word, by all that I am able to learn, they want to establish a Republic, or at least "a Monarchy with Republican institutions." They are organizing a most effective National Guard with a train of artillery. Szemere and Eötvös are in their eyes Conservatives; even Kossuth, they say, begins to lose his popularity in Pesth. In Presburg people have been satisfied by quietly removing the Imperial arms from the Post, Salt, and other public offices, leaving the doors and railings of these offices with their black and yellow stripes untouched; but at Pesth the Imperial arms were torn down and thrown in the street, and in a few hours the doors and railings repainted with the national colours—red, white, and green.

Of one thing I am fully convinced, which is, that if the Austrian Cabinet should attempt to render the Hungarian Ministry dependent on them, or in other words should do anything that might awaken the suspicion that they still regard Hungary as a dependency of Austria, your Excellency may expect to see 50,000 armed Hungarians before the gates of Vienna.

Presburg, March 25, 1848.

IN the letters which I had the honour of addressing to your Excellency on the 22nd and 23rd instant, I alluded to the Republican spirit that prevails in Pesth, and which can only be counteracted by the Austrian Government lending its support to Count Batthyany's Ministry. From all that I am able to learn, a strange infatuation seems still to prevail at Vienna. Should this really be the case, I have not the least hesitation in saying that Hungary is lost for the House of Hapsburg. They seem to imagine that because no blood has been shed, a revolution has not taken place in this country—that the Hungarian Government must still continue, in some manner at least, dependent on the Imperial Government. They must however renounce these ideas, and that too without a moment's delay, otherwise the country will be in a state of anarchy.

I am told that some of the Austrian Ministers fancy that the students were in-tigated to the bold step that led to the resignation of Prince Metternich by the Hungarian Liberals, that they were in secret correspondence with Kossuth and other leaders of the Liberal party. There cannot be a more erroneous notion. The revolution at Vienna took every one here by surprise. Kossuth, Szemere, and Szentkiralyi were I know quite astonished—never dreamt of such an event happening. They certainly expected a revolution at Prague, from the notorious fact of the Government having had recourse in Bohemia to precisely the same arbitrary measures that in England were adopted under Charles I. I, for my part, expected that the first burst would break out in Gratz; but I repeat, no one here supposed for a moment that a Government having such a strong military force at its command could fall before a handful of students. The Liberals, in their famous programme (a translation of which I gave in the supplementary documents No. 1), stated their views without the least disguise, that they would use all the efforts in their power to obtain a responsible Ministry, liberty of the press, &c., at the same time recommending His Majesty to grant Constitutions to the hereditary States of the empire. This programme and the representation of March the 3rd, together with Kossuth's speeches in the Lower House, no doubt exercised a great influence on public opinion in Vienna; but this is the only kind of conspiracy the Hungarian Liberals have been guilty of. They were determined to realize their views by constitutional means, and by constitutional means only.

Now a bill for the organization of the Ministry and the necessary abolition of the Hungarian Chancery, Vice-Regal Council, in short, of the old Collegial system, passes both Houses. Count Batthyany hastens to Vienna to submit the bill, together with the names of the Ministers, for the Royal sanction and approbation. He is followed by Déak and the Palatine, and I presume has been joined by Prince Esterhazy. Count Batthyany has been in Vienna upwards of 48 hours, and it would appear has not been able to obtain the Royal sanction.

This morning I observed to Eötvös that I thought the Premier had committed a breach of etiquette, in announcing the names of his colleagues in the Chamber of Magnates previous to their being submitted to His Majesty. He admitted that this was the case, but said they had no alternative, having received in the night of the 22nd an estafette from the Committee of Public Safety in Pesth, stating in plain language, that if they, the Committee, were not able to announce the definite formation of the Ministry within 24 hours, the National Guards would storm the arsenal at Buda, and summon a National Convention to meet at Pesth without delay.

Count Batthyany and the Palatine (or Regent as he will now be called) have no doubt stated the danger to be apprehended from Pesth if the bill be not sanctioned without delay. Count Batthyany has formed a Ministry of the most moderate men of the Liberal party. Eötvös even thinks that it will be too late; that when the events of Milan are known at Pesth they will summon a National Convention. He says indeed that, in point of fact, a National Convention is already sitting at Pesth; deputations arriving daily from the counties and towns to the Committee of Public Safety, and 2 or 3 members of each deputation remaining in Pesth and sitting with the Committee as the representatives of their respective towns and counties. Thus, in a few weeks, the Committee will become a bond fide National Convention ; and it is a very significant fact, that the counties send deputations to the Pesth Committee, and not to the Presburg Diet.

The Illyrian party also begins to be a source of apprehension for the Ministry. The favourite plan of this party is to form Slavonia, Croatia, Carniola, Carinthia, Istria, Dalmatia, Bosnia, and Servia, into an Illyrian Kingdom.

Presburg, March 29, 1848.

THE Palatine returned from Vienna early this morning, with a Royal resolution respecting the Ministerial bill, which has caused the greatest dissatisfaction. The Royal resolution was printed in the course of the day, but all the copies that the jurists could get hold of have been publicly burned on the Promenade this evening.

In fact, if Hungary really possesses a responsible Ministry, the Royal sanction ought either to have been given or refused ; whereas they have adopted the old collegial system of having recourse to Royal resolutions. They wish, it seems, to retain the Hungarian Chancery, when it is obvious that, with a responsible Ministry, the Chancery is superfluous. To some other points, respecting the nomination of bishops, field-officers of the National Guards, &c., no valid objections, I think, can be made ; in fact, Count Batthyany has made a few concessions which the Delegates have approved of.

It will be needless for me to state what passed at the conferences of Vienna, as your Excellency is no doubt acquainted with the details more fully than they have been related to me. I can only say that Count Batthyany and Déak have returned highly dissatisfied at the proceedings of the Emperor's advisers. The Austrian Ministry seem to forget that they have no alternative left. Austria is at this moment utterly powerless. Count Batthyany has formed a Ministry of the most moderate men of the Liberal party. Eötvös received a number of despatches yesterday by estafette from all parts of the country, with which he expressed himself very much satisfied. Szemere has been received at Pesth with a Fackelzug ; in short, they flattered themselves that they should be able to allay the agitation that prevails, and keep Hungary under the sceptre of its legitimate Sovereign.

The Royal resolution has been discussed this evening in the Chamber of Delegates. Kossuth did not say much, but what he did say shows that the Liberals are determined not to give way. Count

Stephen Szechenyi, who of late years has been regarded as a Conservative, made a speech that reminded the auditors of the time when he was the fiery leader of the Opposition. He intends leaving early to-morrow morning for Vienna, and will try to induce them to give way. The Palatine also made a solemn declaration in the Chamber of Magnates, that he should set out in the course of the night for Vienna, and to-morrow either bring back the Ministerial bill with the Royal sanction or resign his office.

H.E Viscount Ponsonby.

J. BLACKWELL.

No. 16.—Viscount Ponsonby to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. April 21.)

MY LORD,

Vienna, April 15, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Lordship a despatch which I have this day received from Mr. Blackwell.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

PONSONBY.

(Inclosure 1.)—Mr. Blackwell to Viscount Ponsonby.

MY LORD,

Presburg, April 13, 1848.

THE Diet was closed on the 11th instant, and the Emperor, having acceded to all the demands of the Hungarians, was received with the usual manifestations of popular satisfaction.

The last and probably most important concession, in order to obtain which the Palatine was obliged to hasten to Vienna on Saturday night, was that respecting the Military Frontiers.

The Diet required, as a matter of course, that the border troops should be placed under the authority of the Hungarian Minister of War. They did not pass a bill to incorporate the frontiers with the adjacent counties, leaving that to be done by the next Diet; but in the bill respecting the elective franchise the Military Frontiers are regarded as an integral part of the kingdom, and therefore empowered to send Representatives to what is now termed the "National Assembly."

The Austrian Government wished, 1st, to retain the command of the border troops; and 2nd, that the decision respecting the extension of the franchise to the Military Frontiers should be left to the next Diet. They were, however, finally obliged to give way on both points. The Borderers are consequently now under the authority of the Hungarian Ministry, and will send Representatives to the Hungarian Legislative Assembly.

The Hungarian Ministers would not venture to ask the Diet to afford assistance to Austria against the Italians. They are, in fact, reproached by the Hungarian press for not having insisted on the immediate recall of the Hungarian troops from the Austrian dominions, and the withdrawal of the foreign troops from Hungary.

At a public meeting held at Pesth on the 10th instant, it was announced, that the Committee of Public Safety had sent a memorial to the Ministers, urging them to recall the Hungarian troops from Lombardy, and to form an army of observation on the Lower Danube, and another at the foot of the Carpathians, without further delay; it being, in the opinion of the said Committee, a national crime to suffer the troops of Hungary to be made use of by Austria for the suppression of Italian independence. It was also announced at the same meeting, that the Committee would send deputations to the approaching German Parliament, to the Italian Governments, to the Poles, &c.

Wishing to give as accurate a view as possible of the present heterogeneous population, &c., of Hungary, I have devoted much time to the compilation of the papers which I have the honour to inclose. This has necessarily precluded me from noticing as fully as I could have wished the important measures adopted by the Diet since the Revolution of the 15th of March. When the laws that have received the Royal sanction are officially published, I will send a summary of them; meanwhile it may suffice to remark, that the next Diet is to meet at Pesth in August. The elective franchise is based on property. The holder of a quarter-session (about 8 acres—the peasants are now freeholders) has a direct vote, and that too by ballot. The Magnates tried in vain to induce the Delegates to limit the franchise to holders of half-sessions (16 acres). The Diet thus elected will be, to all intents and purposes, a Constituent Assembly or National Convention, and will probably make almost as sweeping reforms as those that have been made by the present Diet since the Revolution. Hungary and Transylvania are to be united, and represented at the Diet by 400 members, who are to receive a daily allowance, but not to be bound by instructions. At a meeting recently held at Klausenburg, it was resolved, that if the (Austrian) Government should not summon a (Transylvanian) Diet before the meeting of the next Hungarian Diet they, the Transylvanians, should regard the union as virtually effected, and send 67 Deputies—the number fixed in the bill—to the Hungarian Diet, as the only Legislative Assembly which they should henceforward acknowledge.

I have, &c.

H.E. Viscount Ponsonby.

J. BLACKWELL.

THERE is not a more difficult task than that of drawing up a table of the heterogeneous population of Hungary, for notwithstanding the most diligent research and careful calculation, such a table will be merely approximative. Except in the Military Frontiers, no official census is taken. We therefore find the greatest discrepancy in the statements of the most celebrated statistical writers. For instance, the population of Hungary (Hungary Proper, the Annexed Territories the Military Frontiers, and Transylvania) in the year 1839, is estimated by Becher at 15,322,488; by Fényes at 12,880,406. The average of these numbers is 14,101,447, probably the nearest to the truth. As Fényes' tables are drawn up from the parish registers (no doubt very carelessly kept) and other semi-official sources, they present a greater guarantee than those given by several distinguished German writers. I have therefore taken them for the basis of my calculation, but have gone through each county separately, and added from $\frac{3}{4}$ to $1\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. per annum, for the increase of population. The increase varies according to race and locality, it is the most rapid in the Military Frontiers, owing to the peculiar institutions of that district, and also more rapid among the Slavonic than among the Magyar population.

Hungary is divided juridically into 4 circles, called respectively the Cis and Trans-Danubian, and the Cis and Trans-Tybian. This is, however, a very unnatural division, especially in an ethnological point of view. I have therefore divided Hungary Proper into 3 natural districts, viz., the Northern or Carpathian District, coloured in the accompanying map, green; the Western Cis-Danubian District, yellow; and the Eastern or Trans-Danubian District, red. It will be found by referring to the subjoined Table, that in the Northern district, the Slovaks are in the majority, and in the Western and Eastern districts, the Magyars. The first column of the Annexed Territories shows the population of Slavonia, i. e., of the 3 Slavonian counties and the Slavonian Military Frontiers; the second that of Croatia, i. e., of the 3 Croatian Counties, the Croatian Military Frontiers, and the Hungarian Littoral.

It will be seen that Hungary Proper and Transylvania contain 13,200,000 inhabitants, 5,650,000 of whom are Magyars, 2,600,000 Dacians (Valachs); 1,390,000 Germans, and 3,252,000 of the Slavonic race. In this region the Magyars may therefore be regarded as the predominant race. It must also be borne in mind, that part of the German, Dacian, and Slovak population, is already Magyarized. This is also the case with the Rusniaks, at least the Delegates of the North-eastern counties, in which they are located, have assured me that one-third of them no longer speak the Rusniak (Russian) language.

It will also be seen that in the Annexed Territories, the entire population (within a mere fraction) belongs to the Illyrian branch of the Slavonic race.

If an accurate census were made, it would probably be found that the actual population of the Hungarian territories exceeds 16,000,000. Having taken Fényes' very low estimate as the basis of my calculation, I can only bring out 15,000,000, which gives about 120 inhabitants per (English) square mile. Bohemia has 243, Great Britain and Ireland 222 inhabitants per square mile. If the Hungarian territories were as densely peopled as Bohemia, the population would amount to 30,381,804. These territories are unquestionably sufficiently extensive, not to speak of the fertility of the soil, to support without undue pressure, a population of 25,000,000.

Table 2 shows the population of the Military Frontiers according to the official census of 1839. Becher calculates the increase of population in the Military Frontiers at 1,726 per cent. per annum. Taking, however, 1.5 per cent. as a fair average, the actual population will amount to 1,350,000.

The Military Frontiers furnish 17 regiments of infantry, 2 battalions, chiefly employed on the rivers, and 1 Hussar regiment.

The peace establishment is as follows :

		Men.
13 Hungarian regiments of 2,570 men	33,410
4 Transylvanian regiments of 2,264 men	9,056
		<hr/> 42,466
2 Battalions	2,537
1 (Transylvanian) Hussar regiment	1,792

In time of war this force is considerably augmented. The Government is thus enabled to place in active service, on ordinary occasions, 34,827 men; on extraordinary occasions, 47,354, and on any great emergency, 91,231, and leave a force within the frontiers sufficient for their protection.

In the year 1805, for instance, Austria withdrew 64,080 men from the frontiers, leaving 22,371 for their defence. And in the years 1799 and 1800, 101,692 of these borderers took the field against the French.

The frontiers are watched by day and night by a cordon of sentinels. This service requires

	Men.
On ordinary occasions	4,179
When danger, either from war or pestilence, is apprehended ..	6,795
On any great emergency	10,016

The regular contingent furnished by Hungary (Hungary and Transylvania) to Austria, has hitherto been 15 regiments of infantry and 11 Hussar regiments.

In time of peace, an Hungarian Hussar regiment consists of 1792 men; a regiment of infantry, of 3,693; but in time of war this force may be doubled. In the last war, for instance, an Hungarian Hussar regiment had 2,400, a regiment of infantry, 7000 men.

Taking the contingent at the peace establishment, the actual military force of Hungary now placed under the authority of a responsible Hungarian Minister of War, is as follows:

INFANTRY.				Men.
15 Regiments of the Line, 3,693 men ..				55,395
17 Border regiments	{ 13 .. 2,570 men }			42,466
	{ 4 .. 2,264 „ }

1 Border Hussar regiment				1,792
Total				<hr/> 121,902

It will be thus seen that the Hungarian Minister of War has already a force of upwards of 100,000 men at his disposal, and, if required, would no doubt be able to form a well-disciplined army of 300,000 men, not to speak of National Guards, the organization of which is proceeding very rapidly in all parts of the country.

Pesth, April 25, 1848.

HAVING heard that the Palatine would be on board the steamer of the 18th, on his way from Vienna to Pesth, I remained at Presburg a day longer than I intended, in order to go by the same steamer. I had thus an opportunity of witnessing the enthusiastic manner in which he was welcomed by the inhabitants of the Hungarian metropolis.

The Ministers have displayed great energy in preserving order. The Committee of Public Safety is dissolved. The young gentlemen of the University have resumed their studies. The tumultuous popular assemblies which were held almost daily in one of the large squares of this city, have been put a stop to by a Ministerial proclamation, enjoining those who call a public meeting to give 24 hours' notice to the proper authorities, and to state in writing the specific object for which the meeting is to be held. Should this object not be deemed strictly Constitutional, the authorities are empowered to prevent the meeting taking place. The promoters of a meeting are also, in some degree, made responsible for the proceedings, and persons who address the meeting are liable to an action at law for making use of inflammatory language, or discussing questions foreign to the purpose for which the meeting was called. This peremptory measure was adopted after the news arrived of the energetic steps taken by Her Majesty's Government respecting the Chartist meetings on Kennington Common; and I am happy to say has produced the most salutary effect.

The excitement against the Jews still continues in several counties, and has given rise in Presburg to a serious riot, in which it would appear several lives have been lost.

With this exception, order seems to prevail in every part of the kingdom, or more properly speaking, in the 49 Hungarian counties, the state of affairs in Slavonia and Croatia, especially in the latter, being far from satisfactory. The Croatians, in fact, refuse to acknowledge the authority of the Hungarian Ministers,—to receive the Acts passed by the late Diet, on the pretext that the Royal sanction was extorted by intimidation. The Ban of Croatia will not even acknowledge the Palatine as Viceroy of the kingdom. The Ministers have in consequence summoned the Ban to appear at Budapest [pronounced Boo-da-pesh], as the Hungarian metropolis is now termed—I believe on the 10th of next month. Should he refuse to obey the summons, it will, in their opinion, be a proof that the Croats are supported in their pretensions by the Austrian Government. I know from the best possible source, that at a Ministerial Council held on the 23rd, the policy, justly or unjustly, attributed to the Austrian Cabinet, was stigmatized as perfidious; and I believe explanations have in consequence been demanded.

One of the last Acts passed by the late Diet was to empower the Ministers to raise 1,000,000*l.*, and to employ 800,000*l.* for railways, and 200,000*l.* for the regulation of rivers. This is, of course, only a preliminary grant until the next Diet, when Count Stephen Szechenyi's plan of forming several trunk lines of railway from Budapest to the extremities of the kingdom, at the expense of the State, will, with the necessary modifications, probably be adopted. In a work which the Count published on the subject in February last, he shows that in the course of 12 years they might raise, without the slightest pressure, 12,000,000*l.*; of which sum he proposes to employ 800,000*l.* for the regulation of rivers, 1,200,000*l.* for turnpike roads, and 10,000,000*l.* for railroads, the total length of which he calculates at about 1,400 (English) miles.

Your Excellency is, no doubt, aware that the Emperor has addressed a letter to the Palatine Viceroy, in which he intimates that Hungary ought to take a part of the national debt; in other words, that the Austrian Ministers require the Hungarians to pay 1,000,000*l.* annually as their part of the burden.

The present Ministers are sincerely desirous of retaining the Hungarian Crown in the House of Hapsburg; but it cannot be denied that, in Pesth at least, a strong Democratic spirit prevails, and that a very powerful party would be glad to abolish Royalty as they have already virtually abolished nobility. These people regard the Pragmatic Sanction, to which the Austrian Ministers attach so much importance, as an obsolete document of no value.

Among the minor signs of Republicanism may be cited the disrepute into which titles have fallen. One person, whose name I forget, has presented his golden key of Imperial Chamberlain to the National Museum, "as the relic of a by-gone age." The official address of a Minister is, in Hungarian, simply "Minister Ur," i. e. Mr. Minister. Count Stephen Szechenyi, who has the title of Excellency, is simply addressed as "Mr. Minister Szechenyi."

The Hungarian army will, of course, have to wear the national uniform; and the Ministers, previous to the next Diet, will no doubt take care to replace the Imperial cockade, which the Hungarian troops still wear, by the national one; the black and yellow sashes of the officers by tricoloured ones, and F. I. (Ferdinand I, Emperor of Austria) by F. V. (Ferdinand V, King of Hungary). Except in the army, the national colours have been everywhere substituted for the Imperial ones—in all the public offices, barracks, sentry-boxes, doors, gates, railings, &c., throughout the kingdom.

The whole revenue of Hungary—mines and crown domains included—is now under the control of the Hungarian Minister of Finance. 300,000*l.* has been granted to the King for a civil list; but the annual sum is to be fixed by the next Diet.

H.E. Viscount Ponsonby.

No. 23.—Viscount Ponsonby to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. May 17.)

MY LORD,

Vienna, May 12, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Lordship a further report which I have received from Mr. Blackwell. I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

PONSONBY.

(Inclosure.)—Acts passed by the Hungarian Diet.

THE Diet of 1843-4, after sitting for 18 months, ended without having been able to pass a single bill of any great importance, owing to the impediments thrown in the way of legislation by the Austrian Government. The proceedings of the present Diet, until the memorable 15th of March, were much the same as those of the last; and if the revolution had not taken place, it is more than probable that only a few unimportant bills would have received the Royal Sanction, and the more weighty ones quietly deposited in the Hungarian Chancery for future consideration. The resolutions passed by the Delegates on the 15th of March gave quite a different character to the Diet. All the bills under discussion were thrown aside, and a number of fresh ones—most of them of a provisional nature—introduced. The Diet has thus been enabled to pass 31 Acts in the course of 3 weeks, Acts which have effected a radical change in the Hungarian Constitution and in the future independence of the kingdom.

I shall proceed to offer a few remarks respecting these Acts.

ACT. I.—Is a mere record of the services of the late Palatine.

Previous to the Revolution, a bill had passed through both Houses, for the purpose of founding an institution in memory of the late Palatine. This institution would have been called the “Josepheum,” and endowed with funds for objects left for future consideration. This bill, after the Revolution, was thrown aside, and a phrase of panegyric is the only monument with which the Hungarian Legislature has thought proper to honour the memory of the Archduke Joseph.

ACT. 2.—Records the election of the Archduke Stephen as Palatine, and the fact that the letter of candidature was returned unopened.

ACT 3.—It was this Act that gave rise to such frequent conferences at Vienna. It is regarded by the Hungarians as a second “Golden Bull,” or Magna Charta, as it has rendered Hungary, to all intents and purposes, an independent kingdom, merely connected with Austria by the circumstance of the 2 countries being still under the sceptre of a common Sovereign.

It will be seen, in fact, that by the 6th clause the King of Hungary binds himself to exercise the executive power in every department of the State, civil, military, ecclesiastical, and financial, exclusively by means of a responsible Hungarian Ministry. By the 7th and 8th clauses he reserves to himself certain rights, viz., the right of nominating the higher dignitaries of the Catholic Church; the right of conferring titles, orders, &c.; the right of employing the Hungarian army when it is without the limits of the kingdom, &c.; but as these rights can only be exercised under the responsibility of the Hungarian Minister of Foreign Affairs, who is always to be near the person of His Majesty they will, in point of fact, be as much under the control of the Legislature as any other department of the Executive. In respect to the employment of the Hungarian army, for instance, which is the most important point, it is needless to observe that when the Hungarian troops now stationed in Galicia, Moravia, Lombardy, and other Austrian States, return to Hungary, they cannot be sent out of the kingdom again without an order of the Hungarian Minister of War, who of course would not issue such an order without being authorized to do so by the Diet. And supposing, for instance, that the Hungarians should at any time deem it advisable to furnish a contingent of troops to assist Austria against any foreign Power, a measure that would be tantamount to a declaration of war against that Power by Hungary, and the Austrian Ministers should advise the Emperor-King to employ them for some other purpose than that for which they had been furnished, against another foreign Power, or a province in insurrection, for instance, it is obvious that this could not be legally done without the Royal Order being countersigned by the Hungarian Minister of Foreign Affairs; so that, in point of fact, the Hungarian army, whether within or without the limits of the kingdom, is placed under the authority of Hungarian Ministers, responsible for their actions to the Legislative Assembly of the nation.

With the exceptions stated in §§ 7 and 8, all branches of the Executive are, in the absence of the King, to be exercised by the Palatine. On a change of Ministry taking place he has to appoint the Premier. Even the Acts passed by the Diet are to be submitted, not to the King, but to the Palatine, and receive the force of law by his sanction. In order to enable him to fulfil these high functions, the Archduke Stephen was created Viceroy, or more properly speaking Vicgerent, in Hungarian, “Helytartó.” He is thus invested with far greater authority than a Viceroy of Lombardy, or a Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, and is, in fact, so long as the King resides in Vienna, quasi Rex. For instance, almost all the Lords-Lieutenant of counties have been recently replaced by men of the Liberal party. The nominations have been made by the Palatine at the suggestion of the Minister of the Interior, the decrees being signed "Stephen Palatine and Royal Vicegerent," and countersigned "Bartholomew Szemere, Minister of the Interior."

By § 10 the Ministry is composed of a President, and, if he does not take any particular department, of 8 other Ministers.

One of these Ministers is to remain near the person of the Sovereign, and be the responsible Representative of the Kingdom of Hungary, and as such to exercise an influence in all transactions that relate to the common interests of Hungary and the hereditary States of the empire, and consequently in all transactions with foreign Powers. He is not designated in this clause by any title, but is styled in official documents, as well as by the public, Minister of Foreign Affairs (Külügyminister). Consequently the present Ministry consists of A Premier or President.

Minister of Foreign Affairs.

Minister of the Interior (Belügyminister).

Minister of Finance (styled in Hungarian "Országos Penzügyminister," literally "Minister of the National Pence Affairs").

Minister of Public Works, Means of communication (Roads), and Navigation.

Minister of Agriculture, Industry, and Commerce.

Minister of Religion and Public Instruction.

Minister of Grace and Justice.

Minister of War (styled in Hungarian "Honvédelminister," literally "Minister of the Home-defence," i.e., of the department charged with the defence of the country).

It will thus be seen that the entire revenue of Hungary, from whatever source it may be derived, as well as the army, the fortresses &c., are placed under the administration of Ministers responsible to the Diet, and that the Executive Power is, with a few exceptional cases, exercised in the name of a quasi Rex, bearing the title of Palatine-Viceregent.

The remaining clauses of the Act are of minor importance.

According to § 25, a Minister has a seat in both Houses, but only a vote in the House of which he is a member.

Sections 32, 33, 34, and 35, relate to the impeachment of Ministers. The impeachment is to be made by the Lower House, the Minister or Ministers impeached, to be tried by a court of Magnates; for which purpose the Upper House will have to appoint by ballot 36 of its members, 12 of whom may be rejected by the accused, and 12 by the Commission charged by the Lower House to conduct the impeachment.

ACT 4.—A Diet is to be held annually at Pesth.

The Members of the Lower House, who of course will no longer be bound by instructions, to be triennially elected.

The King has the right to prorogue the Diet, and may dissolve it before the expiration of the 3 years; but in the latter case he is obliged to summon another Diet within 3 months after the dissolution of the former one.

This right is however virtually annulled by the next clause, which expressly states that the annual session of the Diet cannot be closed, nor the Diet dissolved, before the accounts of the past year and the budget for the ensuing year have been laid before the Diet, and a decision thereon been taken by that Assembly.

The President and Vice-President of the Upper House are appointed by the King, the other officers by the House. The Lower House elects by ballot its President, Vice-Presidents, and all its officers. The Presidents of both Houses are appointed for the whole duration of the Diet, 3 years, the other officers only for a session.

ACT 5.—As this is a mere provisional law, it was deemed expedient to leave the so-called half-spurred nobles in possession of the elective franchise.

Thus § 1 states that the Diet, not feeling itself authorized to deprive any one of a political right, leaves all who have hitherto enjoyed the elective franchise in possession of it. It is needless to observe that this class of nobles will be disfranchised by the next Diet.

The qualifications for electors are—a. To possess in towns real property in houses or land, to the value of 30*l.*; in the country real property equal in value to a quarter-session of the former Urbarial law; i. e., property equal in value to a plot of ground varying in extent in the different counties, but in general from 8 to 10 English acres.

§ 2. To have attained the age of 20 years; Hungarians by birth or naturalized; not under guardianship nor in domestic service, nor convicted of fraud, theft, murder, &c.

b. The elective franchise is also given to manufacturers and tradesmen who have a manufactory, workshop, or shop. Also to artisans domiciled in a place, and who have a fixed employment, and work with at least 1 assistant.

c. Also to those who, not possessing any of the above qualifications, have a fixed income of 10*l.* yearly, derived from land or investments.

d. And unconditionally, or irrespective of their income, to all physicians, surgeons, lawyers, engineers, academical artists, professors, members of the Hungarian Academy, apothecaries, clergymen, chaplains, public notaries, and schoolmasters.

Burgesses of free towns, not having any of the above qualifications, but who have hitherto enjoyed the elective franchise, are still to retain it (i. e., until the next Diet).

Every one who is an elector may be elected ; or, in other words, the qualification for a Deputy is the same as that for the enjoyment of the elective franchise, except that the Deputy must have attained to the age of 24 years, and be conversant with the Hungarian (Magyar) language.

There are to be in all 446 Deputies ; viz., 377 for Hungary and the Annexed Territories, and 69 for Transylvania, when the union is effected. Buda and Pesth will return 7 Deputies ; the county of Pesth 10 ; the 3 Croatian counties 18 ; the Croatian, Slavonian, and Banat military frontiers 15.

It must be remarked, however, that the whole country, towns included, will be divided into electoral districts, and only 1 Deputy returned from each district. For instance, the city of Pesth will be divided into 5 districts, each of which will return 1 Deputy ; a system precisely the reverse to that adopted by the Provisional Government of France.

According to the 32nd §, as it originally stood when the bill was under discussion, the elections were to take place in the manner usually practised in Hungary ; that is to say, by a rude method of balloting, the balloting being in a great measure public, and therefore answering very inadequately the purpose for which such a method of voting was devised. As this Hungarian balloting has frequently been turned into ridicule, especially by Eötvös in his "Village Notary," the clause was amended, and the elections for the next Diet will take place by a committee publicly writing down the names of the voters, much in the same manner as in England. A regular bonâ fide voting by ballot will no doubt be afterwards introduced.

A Deputy is to receive a daily allowance of 10s., besides 40l. annually to pay for his lodgings in Pesth.

Most of the other clauses of the Act relate to the manner of registration and election. The registration (now in operation) is to be made under the superintendence of a central committee, assisted by local committees and the county magistrates.

ACT 6.—An Act for the de facto re-incorporation of the 3 Transylvanian counties. [See Summary, page 22.]

ACT 7.—Decrees the union of Hungary and Transylvania ; for the purpose of effecting which, a Transylvanian Diet is to be summoned as soon as possible. Transylvania to send 69 Deputies to the Lower House, and a certain number of Transylvanian nobles to be members of the Upper House. But it is expressly stated that the Act is provisional, and that an equitable adjustment of the interests of both countries, and other ulterior measures, are left for the consideration of the first united Diet of Hungary and Transylvania.

I may observe that according to all accounts the Transylvanians are most anxious for the union to take place, a resolution having been passed at a public meeting held at Klausenburg, that if the Transylvanian Diet be not summoned previous to the meeting of the next Hungarian Diet, they, the Transylvanians, should regard the union as virtually effected, and send 69 Deputies to the Hungarian Diet accordingly.

ACT 8.—Establishes the principle of General Taxation for all classes without distinction. The Ministers to lay before the next Diet a plan for equitably adjusting the rates to be levied, which are to commence from the 1st of November, 1848; the amount of taxation to be of course decided by the next Diet.

ACT 9.—Abolishes the Roboth, the tithe of one-ninth of the produce to the landlord, and all other Urbarial services whatsoever, from the day on which the Act is published (April 11). Manorial Courts are also abolished. The landlords are to receive an indemnification, rather vaguely expressed by a high-flown Magyar phrase, viz., "The Legislature places the indemnification of the landed proprietors under the protecting shield of the national public honour" (a nemzeti Közbesület véd-paizsa ala helyezi).

ACTS 10, 11, and 12.—Acts passed as supplementary to the preceding Act, respecting certain Urbarial rights enjoyed by the peasants, such as that of cutting wood in the Manorial forests, &c.; also respecting Urbarial law-suits and suits brought before the Manorial Courts.

ACT 13.—Abolishes tithes to the clergy without compensation; or, according to the words made use of, simply records the fact of the clergy having voluntarily renounced taking tithes without claiming a compensation.

The poorer clergy, whose incomes were principally derived from tithes, to be duly provided for.

Lay persons who have acquired possession of tithes by contract, &c., to receive a compensation.

ACT 14.—Respecting the establishment of a Bank of Credit, particularly with a view to afford pecuniary assistance to the landed proprietors, a bill respecting which is to be prepared by the Ministry and submitted to the next Diet.

ACT 15.—Virtually abolishes the Aviticity laws, the Ministers being empowered to make the necessary modifications in the Civil Code to be submitted to the next Diet for their complete and final abolition; all Aviticity law-suits to be meanwhile suspended.

ACTS 16 and 17.—The so-called autonomic rights hitherto enjoyed by the counties being incompatible with the present Constitution, and with an executive power exercised by a responsible Ministry, these Acts place the management of county affairs in the hands of permanent Comitatal committees, until the next Diet; or, more properly speaking, substitute these committees for the turbulent County Congregations.

ACT 18.—Provisional law on the Press, which has been severely criticised, and caused great dissatisfaction, especially III., § 30, 2, which requires the proprietor of a daily paper to deposit 1,000*l.* as caution-money. (The sum was originally fixed at 2,000*l.*, but after the bill had passed both Houses, it was again taken into consideration in consequence of the remonstrances of the Committee of Public Safety of Pesth, and the sum reduced to 1,000*l.*) Also, IV., § 37, which requires a person establishing a printing or lithographic press, to deposit 400*l.* as caution-money.

ACT 19.—Places the University under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Public Instruction; the said University to be henceforward conducted on what are generally termed Liberal principles.

ACT 20.—Recognizes the Unitarian religion; that is to say, Unitarianism is declared to be in Hungary what it has long been in Transylvania—one of the legally recognised Christian sects.

§ 2. Places all the legally recognized religions (Roman Catholic, Greek Church, Calvinist, Lutheran, and Unitarian) on a footing of perfect equality. The money required for ecclesiastical and educational purposes to be furnished by the State, which implies that the clergy of all the recognized religions are to be paid by the State. None of the schools to be exclusively confined to any particular sect, but open to all without distinction. Bills for carrying out these principles to be prepared by the Ministers and submitted to the next Diet.

The Catholic bishops are afraid that this Act will encourage Protestantism, which in a few years will no doubt be the predominant religion in Hungary.

ACT 21. Respecting the national colours, Hungarian vessels to bear the Hungarian flag. The Hungarian flag has three horizontal stripes of the same colours as the Italian, only in a reversed order, the Hungarian being red, white, and green; the Italian green, white, and red.

ACT 22.—Respecting the organization of the National Guards. The most important clauses of the Act are:

§ 1. All persons from the age of 20 to 50 are to serve in the National Guards, who are, 1st, not in domestic service; 2nd, who possess real property in towns, of the value of 20*l.*; in the country, of the value of half a session (equivalent to from 16 to 20 English acres). Thus, by a strange anomaly or oversight, the qualification of a National Guard is higher than that for an elector [see page 690]; also those who possess an annual income of the value of 10*l.*

§ 3. Magistrates are empowered to admit persons not possessing these qualifications, but who are otherwise worthy of the honour, into the ranks of the National Guards, whenever they may deem it expedient.

§ 8. Optional for a person to serve in the cavalry or infantry; but those who do not choose the former, must serve in the latter.

§ 9. The National Guards elect their officers up to the rank of Captain. The field-officers, i.e., all above the rank of captain, are appointed, in Hungary, by the Palatine-Vicegerent, on the proposal of the Minister of War; in the Annexed Territories, by the Ban (of Croatia).

§ 11. The Commander-in-chief of the National Guards, is, in Hungary, the Palatine; in the Annexed Territories, the Ban; in the Hungarian Littoral, the Governor.

Acts 23, 24, 25, 26, and 27.—Provisional Acts—until the next Diet—for the co-ordination (municipal reform) of the free towns and free districts.

Act 28.—The Palatine was ex officio Lord-Lieutenant of the county of Pesth and Captain-General of the Jászygians and Cumanians, but these officers being under the control of the Minister of the Interior, are not deemed compatible with his present high functions as Vicegerent of the kingdom. The present Act was therefore framed to place the county of Pesth under the authority of an Administrator, and the free districts of Jászygia and Cumania under that of a Palatinal Captain-General; the said Administrator and Captain-General to have the rank of Lords-Lieutenant, and, as such, seats and votes in the Upper House.

Act 29.—Declares judges to be the only officers of the Crown that are not removable.

Act 30.—Empowers the Ministry to raise 1,000,000*l.*, of which sum 800,000*l.* is to be employed for railroads, and 200,000*l.* for the regulation of rivers

Act 31.—A Provisional Act respecting theatres.

No. 24.—Consul-General Fonblanque to Viscount Palmerston.
(Received May 17.)

MY LORD,

Belgrade, May 4, 1848.

I BEG to inclose copy of my despatches to Sir Stratford Canning.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

T. DE G. DE FONBLANQUE.

(Extract.) Belgrade, April 22, 1848.

YOUR Excellency probably noticed the appointment of Colonel Jellachich to the high administrative post of Banus of Croatia. The choice was obviously founded upon Colonel Jellachich's long experience of the Bosnian military-frontier service, his undeniable abilities, and extensive popularity. The title of Councillor of State was conferred upon him at the same time, as appropriate to so distinguished a public trust. Within the last few days, however, his Excellency has received promotion of an unusual kind. Not only has the new Banus been carried over the heads of 39 colonels who were senior to him, but he has passed from the grade of Colonel to that of Lieutenant-General—an advancement unprecedented, I believe, even in the case of Archdukes of the Imperial Family.

The question of incorporating Slavonia with Hungary, is not yet decided. The Illyrians there would much prefer a connection with Croatia, though it is very doubtful whether they would long remain contented with it. The people with whom the Hungarians seem least likely to disagree are, the Saxons of Siebenbürgen; the great danger there is from the sudden turbulence of the Wallachs on the Carpathian line.

Tithes being abolished, the excessive endowments of some of the Hungarian clergy will be curtailed, and some of the episcopal revenues are sure to be reduced, should they (contrary to expectation) escape being secularized.

The Illyrian populace at Carlowitz, Neusatz, and other towns, destroyed the registers of births, marriages, and deaths, because they were kept in the Hungarian language; and much greater disorders are threatened, though on no distinct provocation. I understand a proclamation, or a rescript from the Government at Pesth, deprecates these signs of malevolence, in terms which do honour to its policy, its feeling, and the rhetorical expression of both. The Illyrians are adjured to consider that the Hungarians themselves have only been emancipated within a few days, that they mean kindly by all who are placed within their influence, and appeal to the sense of fairness of their Greek brethren, whether they ought to condemn them before they have had time to frame any measures for their advantage or otherwise? The clergy of the Oriental Church tell the people to "disregard these delusive assurances, and ascribe them to fear."

H.E. Sir Stratford Canning.

(Extract.) Semlin, May 1, 1848.

I LEARN that the Illyrian leaders of public opinion now take a much more sober and rational view of the questions relating to their national pretensions and incompatibility with the Hungarians; that they are resolved to waive all minor considerations of disparity, and ask to be united with the Croats. This purpose, which is warmly combatted by the Greek clergy and the Russian party, really looks like the best solution of the present difficulty, and may even avert those dangerous consequences which I dreaded. Your Excellency will probably have remarked that the Constitution for Croatia is not yet settled, though no doubt is entertained of its being, to the full, as liberal as that of any other State in the Austrian Empire. The Illyrians pledge themselves that, on the desired compromise being completed, they will prove their unvarying devotion to the Imperial Crown. The great remaining embarrassment of this class of antipathetic populations, will be that of the Slovaks, who inhabit the more sterile of the counties on the Carpathian frontiers, while all the luxuriant valleys are in possession of the Hungarians. These Slovaks and the people of Wallachian origin who side with them, are almost as numerous as the Magyars of all Hungary. In order to propitiate the Illyrians of these parts, the Government at Pesth has selected Atanascovits, the Greek Bishop of Buda, for a Ministerial Post in the Department of Public Education; and M. Hadchick (the Neusatz advocate who was so long employed in Servia) is, ad latus, at the Ministry of Justice, with an immediate probability of being confirmed as director of one of the divisions. The measure has failed of its intended effect: it comes too late.

The Hungarian line regiment which bears the name of Dom Miguel is about to march from Peterwardein to Agram, and thence to Lombardy.

The anti-Magyarism in the Banat is represented to be even more virulent than in Slavonia.

May 3.

Conflicting orders have lately been issued. A few days since, rescripts were received from the Government at Pesth, at Vankavar, Esseg, and other principal towns in Slavonia, requiring the authorities to attend solely to the directions which might be conveyed to them from the Hungarian Departments of State; and immediately afterwards, the newly-instituted Banus laid his injunction on the same functionaries, to yield obedience to no commands save those of "the Banus of Croatia, Slavonia, and Dalmatia," as he is styled in his patent.

H.E. Sir Stratford Canning.

T. DE G. DE FONBLANQUE.

No. 25.—Viscount Ponsonby to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. May 22.)
(Extract.) Vienna, May 12, 1848.

THE demand made by the Hungarians that an order should be sent to the Banus, to place himself under the orders of the Palatine of Hungary, that is, that he should acknowledge the authority of the Hungarian Diet and Government, was consented to by the Imperial Government, for the purpose of preserving in office the existing Hungarian Ministry, which otherwise would, as it is said, have fallen and made way for men who would create great disturbance, perhaps anarchy in the kingdom.

It is certain that the Ban knows the reason by which the Imperial Government was moved, and it is believed, as well as hoped, that he will content himself with silent disobedience. He knows that the Hungarians are unable to enforce the order ; that the Hungarian Ministers themselves are perfectly aware of their own want of power, and therefore that no attempt will be made which will bring on a crisis. If this be so, time may be gained for an adjustment between Hungary and Croatia, which I presume must ultimately be accomplished by an abandonment of Hungarian pretensions. The Croats are, it is said, resolved not to allow any of their troops to be under the orders of the Hungarian Minister of War. They (the Croats) will only serve under the orders of the Emperor. It is also said that the Croats will not consent to sit in the Hungarian Diet, for which they have many reasons, and amongst them, that they do not speak the Magyar language, which by an Act passed some years ago at the instigation of Count Szechenyi, is the language to be spoken in that assembly ; and further, being less numerous than the Magyars, they would always be outvoted.

The Hungarians also pretend to the exercise of authority over the frontier military colonies, a pretension which they reject almost with scorn, founded on the idea of their own power being such as to make them more than a match for the Magyars, and able to overrun and ravage Hungary, if provoked by injuries.

If I am not in error, the Hungarian Ministers are now sensible that it is their interest to be closely connected with the Emperor, and the Emperor is certainly interested in the encouragement of the connection.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

PONSONBY.

No. 26.—Viscount Ponsonby to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. May 31.)
(Extract.) Vienna, May 24, 1848.

I HAD the honour some short time ago to report to your Lordship some circumstances attending the settlement of the demand made by the Hungarian Government, that His Imperial Majesty should send an order to the Croats to submit to the superiority of Hungary. Your Lordship may recollect that the Imperial Government was said then to give its consent to the demand, under the notion that the Ban of Croatia having (as it was supposed) perfect knowledge of what passes in Vienna, would know that it would not be necessary for the Croatians to take any notice of the affair, and might do no more than quietly allow it to drop, without paying obedience to the order.

I have now received a letter, dated Fiume, May 20, 1848, which I inclose. It contains an account of what took place at Agram on the 16th instant, on the communication made by the Ban of 2 orders received from the Viceroy of Hungary, which His Imperial Highness addressed to the Council, requiring the immediate recall of some publications, and declaring that martial law had been illegally proclaimed in Croatia. The orders were about to be burnt, but by the exertions of the Ban, that insult was not offered to the Imperial Government. The portraits, however, of the Viceroy and the Hungarian Ministers were publicly burned in the piazza before the Council House. The writer is of opinion that these proceedings leave no doubt of the intention of the Croatians to contest the right of the Hungarians to superiority; and he thinks the Croatians will declare their country a Vice-Royalty, independent of Hungary, and owing allegiance directly to the Emperor of Austria.

I have been aware of what was passing in Croatia, but I waited for such information respecting it as I could send to your Lordship. I foresaw the event in its substance.

The Croatians, including the Military Colonies, are the best affected and the best soldiers of the Empire.

May 20, 1848.

HAVING received instructions from the Consul-General at Venice, desiring me, now that communications between Venice and Fiume are so precarious, to lay before your Excellency any event that may occur at Fiume or in its vicinity, I have the honour to inform your Lordship, that this morning's post has brought the intelligence of a most serious disturbance having taken place at Agram, the 16th instant, on the occasion of the Ban's communicating 2 orders from the Viceroy of Hungary. The Council held, requiring the immediate recall of divers publications, and to declare the martial law, lately published, as illegally issued. After much noise and confusion, these orders were on the point of being destroyed by fire, and only saved at the earnest desire of the Ban, for whom the Croatians have an immense esteem. In this state of excitement the portraits of his Highness Prince Steffano, and those of his Ministers, were publicly burnt in the piazza before the Council House. This demonstration of the public feeling in Croatia leaves little or no doubt that it is their intention to contest with Hungary the right of superiority; and there is a great party spirit to declare themselves in a Vice-Royalty, independent of Hungary, owing their allegiance direct to the Emperor of Austria. Under such circumstances, the welfare and safety of this Littoral is at stake. Our communications with Pesth are through Croatia, consequently the commerce and property of individuals are subject to great inconvenience, if not worse, and the few British resident merchants are alarmed at our exposed situation, in case of hostilities taking place between the Croats and Hungarians, which, however, I trust will not happen.

This day's post brings also the departure of the Emperor from Vienna, and the consternation here is general.

Belgrade, May 22, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Excellency that the General commanding the corps d'armée round Peterwardein is appointed Special Commissioner for adjusting the difference between the Croats, &c., and the Magyars, and his Excellency will proceed to Agram at the end of this week. General Rhabowsky, a Hungarian by birth, and a kindly-disposed man, professes not to consider himself the agent of the King or Government of Hungary, but accepts the mission on the written request of the Emperor of Austria, and purely in the intent of pacification. It is generally believed, however, that the matter is beyond the reach of negotiation. Since the Palatine's portrait was (twice) publicly burnt at Agram, with the knowledge and consent of the higher authorities, if not in their actual presence, the Croatian people consider themselves at open war with the Hungarians, and all are occupied in preparation for a combat they desire, and which they believe to be certain. The Banus has appointed a set of Ministers (amongst them, a Minister for Foreign Affairs, it is said). The Minister of Finance is a person named Gaurilavitch, a Servian. The Slavonian and Sirmian movements are for the most part national and natural impulses.

To convey a notion of what sort of conditions some of the more peacefully disposed slaves think it would be just possible to induce the masses to consent to, I reproduce part of the outlines.

"A single Legislative Chamber, the members of which are to be chosen by the entire population, in the proportion of one for every 40,000 inhabitants.

"An Executive Council, elected by the Chamber, to propose the names of those from whom the Ministers of the Crown are to be taken, the list, and the choice, to maintain the proportion of not less than 5 to 3 of Illyrian over Magyar nationality.

"The Latin language to be restored as the diplomatic one of the whole country.

"Registrations, contracts, law and municipal proceedings, to be either bi-linguar, or in the language of the majority of the inhabitants of the particular districts, unless where litigants and witnesses happen to be all of the same nationality with the competent authority, and agree to the pleadings and records being made in the same language.

"Repudiation of all Austrian liabilities, and of all descriptions of incumbrances, obligations, and forfeitures connected with the old empire (meaning the empire up to the time of Prince Metternich's removal from power.)

"The final abolition of all nobiliary titles, feudal tenures and privileges," (a clause which the Croatian leaders would strenuously oppose), &c.

If all that I have attempted to describe to your Excellency on this head were now an ebullition mainly referable to the example elsewhere, and to the spread of popular success in other directions, it might, after a time, subside to a temperate point, at which the redress of obvious grievances usually let in conciliation and compromise. But in the mind of the vast majority, the case now presents itself under a different aspect. The idea which prompted the present movement was formed on no sudden impulse evoked by the course of events, though events have coincidentally favoured the development in a remarkable degree.

The garrison of Peterwardein is composed principally of two battalions of the Hungarian regiment Dom Miguel. There are some Illyrians amongst the officers and in the ranks of this corps.

THE Ban of Croatia has arrived here. I have heard, as I before reported to your Lordship, that the Hungarians will yield, and therefore that things will go on quietly for the present. BRAVE PEOPLE OF TYROL AND VORARLBERG!

YOU see us a second time within a short period in your friendly and hospitable capital.

Receive our hearty and two-fold greeting! Accept at the same time our warmest thanks for the renewed proofs of your attachment, which you could not show in a fairer manner than by the distinguished reception which you gave to our worthy well-beloved Ban, Joseph Baron Jellachich. He is no stranger to you, for there is still many a worthy old man on your mountains who fought by the side of his father, General Francis Jellachich, and won the victory at Feldkirch, and who shared his toils and his glory in those memorable days of Tyrol and Vorarlberg. Bregenz bestowed upon him the right of citizenship—and in his son this right still exists, and at the same time the important signification derived therefrom, that he unites in his person the loyalty both of the Croatian and the Tyrolese.

Brave people of Tyrol and Vorarlberg! our nation resembles yours in loyalty and courage; but happier are you, for you harbour among your mountains our gentle, our gracious Emperor. Happier also are you, because no hostile element opposes itself to your freedom, to your development. Boldly and uninterruptedly you will pursue the path of progress, and reap the fruits of your loyalty; while we, who are as firm as you are, have anxiously to expect still our well-deserved reward.

Do you inquire what we want? We will openly tell you.

We wish to be and to remain true to our well-beloved King and ruler. We wish for a great, strong, and happy Austria, whose power shall not be curtailed in her external and internal policy by dissensions. We wish to exist with equal right, and as free as all our other brethren, whatever nationality they may belong to. A proof that we speak openly and truly may be found in the fact of 30,000 of the bravest sons of Croatia and Slavonia fighting in Italy with ready devotion to their Emperor and country, and in our straightforward endeavours to avoid being torn asunder from that strong union which binds us to you, and which has hitherto held together all the parts of our fair monarchy.

You, brave people of Tyrol and Vorarlberg, are a free and noble-minded people, who never harboured the thought of employing your own liberty to oppress the rights and nationality of other people; and therefore we are also certain that you will not refuse your sympathy with these our wishes.

Lawful liberty and order, unshakeable loyalty to our Monarch and country! This is our motto, and will always be so.

Long live our beloved Emperor and King Ferdinand.

Long live our brave brethren of Tyrol and Vorarlberg.

MY LORD, Innsbruck, June 23, 1848.

I HAVE seen a letter dated the 19th instant, from Hungary, written by a person who must be extremely well acquainted with that country, and in which the strongest apprehensions are expressed of the state of the southern parts of the kingdom.

We know here that the wishes of the Ban are to maintain his allegiance to the Emperor and to support the Imperial authority, and that the Ban's determination is not to submit to the authority of the Hungarian Government. It was said, that the attempts made by that Government to force his submission were abandoned, and the question arranged amicably; but there now appears in a paper published by the Minister Pillersdorf, an order issued in the name of the Emperor, commanding the submission of the Croatian authorities to the Hungarian Government. We are told that the Palatine is expected here to-morrow.

I think it right to let your Lordship hear that there are these stories abroad touching Hungarian affairs, and I inclose an address from the Ban to the Croatian regiments in Italy, strongly marking his wishes to be such as I have mentioned above.

TO MY BRAVE BRETHREN IN ARMS AND COUNTRYMEN!

YESTERDAY I, your Ban, was so fortunate as to obtain an audience of our gracious Emperor and Sovereign, when His Majesty was pleased to state to me that he had appointed a mediator in the person of His Imperial Highness the Archduke John, to settle the differences between Hungary and our country, in accordance with the desire we had expressed.

In order to facilitate this important and difficult negotiation, it is above all necessary that order and tranquillity should be maintained in our country.

Unfortunately disorders have already broken out at Carlowitz in Slavonia, but I have already taken the necessary steps to prevent any further acts of violence; and I trust that the sound sense of the nation will listen to my exhortation that they should await peaceably the arrangement to be brought about by the Archduke John.

In this sense do I now address you, my comrades. Do not allow yourselves to be diverted by reports and fears for the safety of your country from the arduous but honourable duty imposed upon you of defending the Throne and the State in Italy. Already does the praise of your heroism and of your perseverance under difficulties resound through all Europe. Do not soil your renown by any act incompatible with your oath of allegiance, or unworthy of yourselves, or your brave forefathers.

There, where you stand, is the beloved Emperor, the whole Monarchy, at stake; and be assured that we still feel ourselves strong enough at home to protect our homes and defend our right and nationality without assistance from you.

No. 32.—Viscount Ponsonby to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. July 4.)

THE Hungarians have lately completely failed in forcing the Croats to submit to their superiority, although they employed the authority of the Austrian Government. The Seven Towns, being a large portion of Transylvania, have protested against being included in the union made between Transylvania and Hungary; and it has lately been seen that the Hungarian Government could not induce certain of its own troops to act against the Croats; and it is asserted with great confidence, that should a struggle take place between them and the Banus, he could easily beat the Hungarians. The disunion of the Hungarians and Croats deprives the former of the command of that territory in which Fiume is situated, and therefore places, to a certain degree, the foreign trade of Hungary in a dependent state, and diminishes its value. The Croats possess an immense sea coast; and the frontier colonies afford, perhaps, the best soldiers of the Austrian armies. Some time ago the Banus summoned a Diet; his legal power to do so was denied. He refused also to acknowledge the Palatine. He came to Innspruck the other day, and being questioned upon the subject he said, "I am here in your power; arrest me, if you please; but what I did was done by the will of our people. Arrest me, if you please; but if you do, the Croats will recall all their soldiers from Italy, and I cannot prevent it."

The Ban was extremely well received by the Tyrolese; they know him to be the friend of the Emperor. I have mentioned the Ban and the Croats, because it appears to me that they may be instrumental in preserving the empire, by aiding at the proper time in the support of the just authority of the Sovereign against the Republican party.

AT the sitting of the 11th instant of the Hungarian Diet, which was opened a few days before at Pesth by the Archduke Palatine, as representative of the Emperor and King, M. Kossuth, the Finance Minister, proposed to the Assembly to authorize the Government to levy 200,000 troops, and to raise 4,200,000*l.*, partly by taxation, and partly by loan; of the men, but 40,000 are to be raised at the present moment, and from 800,000*l.* to 1,000,000*l.* of the money.

He is said to have introduced his motion by a speech of great eloquence, which has not as yet appeared in the German Papers, and to have so completely carried with him his audience, that his proposal was voted by acclamation before he had concluded his speech.

These fresh troops, if they are really levied, will enable the Hungarian Government to meet its internal difficulties without withdrawing from other parts of the Empire Hungarian regiments, and thus facilitate the reinforcements which this Government is sending daily to their Italian army.

MY LORD,

THE Banus of Croatia, Baron Jellachich, arrived here last week, previous to the departure of the Archduke John, for the purpose of endeavouring to arrange amicably with the Hungarian Minister, Count Louis Batthyany, the dispute between their respective countries, which has already led to bloodshed and loss of life.

The Palatine arrived some days later to be present at this conference.

I regret to add that nothing favourable has resulted from this meeting, though at one time it was hoped that an amicable arrangement was likely to be come to, as it was understood that the Hungarian party had consented to one of Baron Jellachich's conditions; namely that the Hungarian and Croatian army should continue under the orders of the Austrian Minister of War, and should not form an entirely separate army under the orders of their own Minister at Pesth. The Banus was anxious that the finances should also be under one and the same Minister at Vienna; a condition which offered, however, greater difficulties in practice. The negotiation was, I understood, broken off on minor questions of international administration, and both parties have returned home with the intention of deciding their disputes by force of arms.

Baron Jellachich, while here, was received with marked favour by the Austrians. The officers of the garrison, with the exception of those belonging to the Hungarian regiments, waited on him in a body to compliment him. He stated in a speech which he made on that occasion, that he had sworn fidelity to the Emperor, and that he would act up to the spirit of that oath, cost what it might; and in this dispute with Hungary, he has certainly supported what may be regarded as Austrian interests.

Baron Jellachich is said to have spoken with great confidence of his success, and though I have no particular information as to the respective military forces, it is generally thought that the Croats are better prepared than their adversaries for an appeal to arms.

THE Hungarian deputation, composed of some of the first men in Hungary and others of consequence, came here to request His Imperial Majesty to take up his residence for a time at Pesth. His Imperial Majesty replied, that he had informed the deputation from the Diet at Vienna, that he would return to the capital, and therefore was unable to comply with the desire of the Hungarians. The deputation then said, that they hoped His Imperial Majesty would honour Pesth with his presence at the solemnity of closing the Diet, which the Emperor promised he would do.

It will be a strong act indeed if the ruling party at Vienna refuse to permit the King of Hungary to visit his kingdom.

THE Emperor refused to receive an address as it was drawn up by the Hungarians, as I am told; it was on account of the mode of expression.

The Deputies, 100 of the Second Chamber, 20 of the First Chamber, are occupied in drawing up a new address.

The point most insisted upon is, that the Emperor shall go to Pesth. I think I can say that the Emperor will not go.

Jellachich is advancing in great force; some of the Hungarian regiments have refused to act against Jellachich. They have said, that they will obey only the Emperor's orders.

Prince Paul Esterhazy has resigned his office. Louis Batthyany says, he holds office only as a titular possession, but does not act as Minister.

THE Hungarian deputation have amended the language of the address to His Majesty, which they at first proposed to make, and which is said to have been very indecorous. They were received by His Majesty, who gave them an answer (of which I cannot learn the precise terms, as there are many differing reports of it) containing generalities, which led to nothing satisfactory to the deputation, and they left Vienna, having hoisted the red flag and wearing red cockades and feathers in their hats.

This deputation was on its journey refused admission into the city of Presburg, on account of the red flag.

It is supposed that Jellachich may be at or very near Pesth in about 8 days.

The ultra-democratic party and clubs had a meeting yesterday; they are to have a larger one to-day, and a larger still to-morrow. The National Guard and troops are held ready to prevent disorder. The party is acting in unison with the same party in Hungary.

THE Hungarian Deputies desired that they should be admitted to the bar of the Reichstag, and that their President or chief, M. Deak, should be allowed to ascend the tribune, and from thence expose to the Assembly the situation and wishes of the Hungarian Diet and nation.

The Reichstag refused the request by a majority of 78 votes, and then it informed (by its President) the deputation, that if they (the Hungarian deputation) thought proper to present a petition to the Reichstag, and place it in the hands of the President, the Reichstag would take it into consideration.

I believe that the deputation will not present any such petition; it would be an act of derogation for a Representative body of an independent State to offer a petition to the Representative body of another State; however, it is presumed that the true end for which the Hungarians sent a deputation was to obtain the means for making an appeal to the people at Vienna, passing by the executive authority and the Emperor. It is possible that, failing as they have done in the first attempt, they may endeavour by a petition to effect their main purpose. The Hungarians desire to get military and pecuniary assistance from the Austrian Government against Jellachich. The Austrian Government will not give either.

WITH reference to your Excellency's despatch of the 20th instant, reporting the disagreements of the Hungarian Diet and the Reichstag, I have to say, that it is much to be wished that the Austrian Government may be able to pursue a course of policy which may keep together and reunite in a closer and firmer manner those discordant elements of the Austrian Empire whose differences seem at present to threaten it with dissolution. But such a result can hardly be accomplished, as some persons about the Court of Vienna appear to think, by military force alone.

MY LORD,

Vienna, October 2, 1848.

YOUR Lordship knows of the murder of General Lamberg at Pesth, and that he went there as Commander-in-chief of all the troops, including those under Ban Jellachich; and that he was also charged with the negotiation for an amicable settlement of affairs with the Hungarian Government. The proceedings of Kossuth on the occasion induced the greater part of the Hungarian men of consideration to fly from Pesth, and we have now in Vienna the last Minister, Louis Batthyany, and a number of others who have sought for safety here and some of whom were proscribed, Louis Batthyany being one.

The Austrian Government is to make the Ban Generalissimo of all the troops. The Hungarian regiments of hussars which had taken part with Kossuth and the Hungarian Government, as it assumed to be, have submitted to his authority. Thus a step which is thought to have been a bad stroke of policy on the part of the Austrian Government has, by the murder of the poor General in Pesth, turned out to be extremely advantageous to the Imperial Government.

It is believed that Jellachich may be soon in possession of Pesth. It is said that Kossuth has fled; that a vast number of the Magyars look to the Banus as their best supporter and guard; and it is hoped that the affairs of Austria and Hungary may be now settled upon a satisfactory basis. Pesth has hitherto been under the influence of the same party whose works have produced mischief in Paris, Frankfort, Berlin, and Vienna, and in all parts of Germany and Italy. MY LORD,

I BELIEVE the following will be, as far as it goes, an account very near the truth of the actual state of the military forces near Pesth.

Kossuth, who is still in Pesth, has the soldiers belonging to some regiments of hussars, who, seduced by the ruling party in that city, abandoned their officers; the number of men may be above 2,000. Their discipline and real power your Lordship will estimate. There is, besides, a very considerable levy of peasants and volunteers, armed more or less well.

Jellachich has under his order 10,000 good troops and a large body of Croats well armed, and with discipline enough to be under direction, though not to be restrained as much as they ought to be, from the commission of acts of pillage.

He has taken his position a short way from Pesth, where he will have received the commission of Generalissimo of all the Imperial forces, as your Lordship will see in the inclosed translation of the Emperor's manifesto.

It is believed that Jellachich will take possession of Ofen, and will summon the inhabitants of Pesth to give submission to the Imperial commands, under pain of the bombardment of that city in case of refusal to submit.

Reinforcements for Jellachich's army have been sent by the Imperial Government, consisting of from 3,000 to 4,000 regular troops. These troops will some of them have already reached Jellachich.

(Inclosure.)—Manifesto appointing Baron Jellachich Royal Commissioner in Hungary.

WE, Ferdinand the First, Constitutional Emperor of Austria, King of Hungary and Bohemia, &c.

To the Barons of the Empire, to the Spiritual and Temporal Dignitaries, Magnates, and Representatives of Hungary and the Principality of Transylvania, assembled in the Diet convoked by us in the free city of Pesth, we send our greeting and good wishes.

To our deep regret and indignation, the House of Representatives has been led by Louis Kossuth and his followers to the most illegal measures; many illegal resolutions in opposition to our royal will have been carried into execution; and lately a resolution was adopted on the 27th September, against the mission of our royal Commissioner, Lieutenant-General Count Francis Lamberg, charged to re-establish peace, before he could even produce our full powers; in consequence of which, this our royal Commissioner was violently attacked in the public streets, and murdered in the most cruel manner. In consequence of which circumstances, we feel ourselves compelled, in conformity with our royal duty, to maintain security and uphold the law, to issue the following orders, and command their execution:

1st. We dissolve hereby the Diet in such a manner that after the publication of this our present manifesto, its sittings are to be immediately concluded.

2nd. We declare all resolutions and ordinances of the present

Diet which have not received our royal sanction, illegal, void, and without effect.

3rd. We place hereby under the command of our Ban of Croatia, Slavonia, and Dalmatia, Lieutenant-General Baron Jellachich, all troops stationed in Hungary and its adjacent kingdoms, and Transylvania, as well as all armed bodies of every description, whether they be national guards or volunteers.

4th. The kingdom of Hungary is placed under martial law, and consequently the authorities whom it may concern are forbidden to hold county, town, or district meetings, until the disturbed peace and order are re-established in that country.

5th. Our Ban of Croatia, &c., Baron Joseph Jellachich, is hereby accredited as our royal Plenipotentiary and Commissioner, and we give him full powers and authority, in order that he may take such measures in the limits of the executive power, with which he is invested in the present extraordinary circumstances, as the representative of our royal Majesty.

In consequence of these our highest full powers, we declare that whatever the Ban of Croatia may order, arrange, conclude, and command, is to be regarded as if ordered, arranged, concluded, and commanded by our supreme royal power; and we consequently hereby graciously order all spiritual, civil, and military authorities, agents, dignitaries of every class and rank of our kingdom of Hungary and Transylvania, and the neighbouring kingdoms, to follow and obey all orders signed by Baron Joseph Jellachich, in his capacity of our royal Commissioner, as they are bound to obey those of our royal Majesty itself.

6th. We especially order our royal Commissioner to take necessary measures against those persons who attacked and murdered our royal Commissioner, as well as against all instigators of and participators in that dreadful crime, and to pursue them with the utmost rigour of the law.

7th. The other current affairs of civil administration will, in the meantime, be carried on by the persons employed in the respective Ministries, according to law.

The mode by which the guarantee and direction of the common interest of the united monarchy are to be permanently based, the perfect equality of the various nationalities for ever secured, and thus the reciprocal relations of the nations and people united under our Crown settled, will be deliberated and decided on by representatives for every part.

MY LORD,

Vienna, October 7, 1848.

I CANNOT give your Lordship details at this moment of the events of yesterday, and I will detain the messenger till to-morrow or next day, in order to report all I can learn of them.

The disturbance* was but little resisted by the military, who were left much without orders, and none of the measures of precaution seem to have been employed which had been so much talked of. General Latour was surprised and murdered in the War Office, and his naked body hung up to a lamp-post. Baron Wessenberg and M. Bach, Minister of Justice, escaped; the first reached the country in safety; the latter was supposed to be in the arsenal, but was not so, and is still safe. The soldiers and some national guards in the arsenal defended it all the day and all the night, but not being succoured by the troops, gave it up by a sort of capitulation to the national guard this morning, and then it was plundered by the people.

The Reichstag was in permanent sitting much of the night, and passed measures which it is said were ratified by the Emperor; namely, the Reichstag named M. Dobblhoff and M. Hornbostl Ministers, and voted that the military should never be allowed to come within a certain distance of the city, and also that an amnesty should be granted to all persons, for all acts, civil or military, connected with the events of yesterday.

The Emperor and those members of the Imperial Family lately here, left Schönbrunn about 7 o'clock this morning, under the protection of 6,000 troops of this garrison and the neighbourhood. It is said, that His Imperial Majesty took the road towards Linz.

I have just heard that His Imperial Majesty, previously to his departure, addressed a strong proclamation to the Reichstag, declaring that he left Schönbrunn, because Vienna was in the hands of a faction, and that he would take measures to preserve order. This proclamation was received in respectful silence by the Reichstag, and a committee appointed to consider what was to be done.

Baron Wessenberg and M. Bach are said to have followed His Imperial Majesty.

Vienna, October 11, 1848.

I STILL detain the messenger, as nothing decisive has occurred;

* It appears from a subsequent paper (Inclosure in No. 58), that this outbreak was occasioned by an attempt of the Government to send Austrian troops against the Hungarians.

but it is hardly probable that the existing state of things can continue much longer.

The Reichstag sent yesterday deputations to Count Auersperg, the commander of the garrison, and to Baron Jellachich, whose headquarters are at Rothen Neusiedl, about an hour's distance from Vienna.

They requested the former to withdraw his troops from the position where he has concentrated the entire garrison in the gardens of the Schwarzenberg Villa and of the Belvidere Palace; and Count Auersperg declined doing so for the present, but said he would comply with their desire as soon as he deemed it safe to do so. He adverted to the murder of Count Latour as an instance of the exasperation against the military, to which M. Pillersdorf, the reporter of this deputation, replied that it was an isolated instance of violence, which the Reichstag deplored as sincerely as Count Auersperg. M. Pillersdorf, in reporting to the Diet this conversation, hoped that he had correctly expressed their feelings, and was answered by cries of "Yes, yes." I enclose in translation, the substance of Baron Jellachich's reply.

Count Auersperg is said to have received reinforcements, which makes his force amount to from 15,000 to 20,000 men. The reports of the force under Baron Jellachich are so contradictory, that I can hardly state their amount; but his answer would seem to argue that he has a considerable force to support him.

The interior of this city is in a state of great agitation; arms have been distributed to every one who chose to take them, and alarms are constantly sounded. Last night at about 12 o'clock the bells were tolled and the "générale" beaten, upon the apprehension of an attack. It turned out that two patrols of national guards had met each other in one of the faubourgs, and having no common pass-word took each other for enemies. Great apprehension is felt by the ruling party in the city, though they talk loud and confidently.

I have just heard that M. Hornbostl has tendered his resignation; and as M. Dobblhoff is unable, from his state of health, to take any part in business, the Minister of Finance, M. Krauss, remains alone.

It is reported that Prince Felix Schwarzenberg has been summoned to the Emperor.

THE motives of his advance are those which he, as a servant and soldier of the State cherishes. As a servant of the State, it is his duty to oppose anarchy; as a soldier, the thunder of the cannon points him out his route. His object is to support the monarchy upon the principle of equal regard to nationalities. Receipts will be given for the provisions of his troops; their quarters will inconvenience no one, for they encamp. He is not pursued by Hungarian troops; upon Austrian soil he only knows Imperial troops. If he be attacked, he will repulse force by force.

 MY LORD, Vienna, October 14, 1848.

NOTHING very material has occurred in the relative positions of the armed force within this city and the united military forces of the Ban of Croatia and Count Auersperg which invest it, since my last despatch to your Lordship. Reinforcements continue to arrive daily from Bohemia, Styria, and Galicia; and the united troops now collected round Vienna cannot I believe be less than 60,000 men, though it is next to impossible, in the mass of contradictions which are daily circulated, to arrive at the exact truth.

The troops of Baron Jellachich have occupied Schönbrunn and the surrounding villages, and have disarmed all the national guards or other armed bodies there; they are reported to have got as many as 4,000 stand of arms. Some slight skirmishes have taken place in consequence of students and national guards venturing beyond the lines, which have always ended in their repulse, and an alarm in the city that the Croats were attacking. Some regiments which arrived from the interior have taken up a position at Nussdorf on the Danube above Vienna, so that the city is nearly invested.

A very violent address from the Diet at Pesth, which I have the honour to inclose in translation, was presented to the Reichstag by an Hungarian deputation, and received with great applause. Your Lordship will perceive that the offer of an Hungarian army to attack the Croatian forces is made, and 40,000 men are even said to be within a few hours of Vienna; a small proportion, however, of that number consists of regular troops; and the Croatian and Imperial troops are considered sufficiently strong both to keep the city in check and to repulse any attack on the part of the Hungarians.

THE Hungarian nation which is engaged in the sacred contest for its freedom and rights against the treason of the reactionary Camarilla and its perjured hirelings, unheard of in the history of the world, is impressed with the warmest feelings of gratitude for the heroic devotion of the noble inhabitants of Vienna, by means of which it has distinguished itself so nobly in preventing the increase of the traitor Jellachich's army.

The Hungarian nation declares before God and the world that it regards the freedom of Austria as of equal value with its own, and will always consider it to be its most sacred duty to assist in the maintenance of it to the utmost of its power, in conformity with the wishes of the Austrian nations.

It is a common danger which menaces the freedom of both nations. Hungary is determined to reject every Treaty with the Camarilla and its perjured hirelings, and acknowledges itself to be the pledged friend, faithful confederate, and brother of the Austrian nations, and declares itself unalterably resolved to consult their mutual interests to the satisfaction of both parties, upon the broadest basis of right, justice, and true fraternity, and for this purpose offers its friendly assistance.

Hungary offers at the same time its warmest thanks to the honourable Diet, for the energetic measures it has taken to prevent the advance of a reactionary soldateska which was appointed to assist the robber hordes of Jellachich.

But, at the same time, the Hungarian Government feels itself bound to acquaint the honourable Diet with the fact that it has received information that, in spite of the above-mentioned measures, the rebel Jellachich has still succeeded in obtaining about 13,000 men, reinforcements from Austria, and that our poor betrayed country is also threatened with an invasion of the army quartered in Galicia.

The Hungarian nation entreats the noble Representatives of Austria, on the other hand, to interfere with decision, and in like manner as we declare every Hungarian a traitor to his country who raises his godless hand against the freedom of Austria, so to declare every Austrian subject to be traitor to his country who gives the slightest assistance to the rebel Jellachich, the perjured instrument which the Camarilla has chosen for the suppression of the freedom of Hungary and Austria. The rebel Jellachich drives his hordes with grape-shot into the combat against liberty. It is very probable that he, when pressed by our brave troops, will throw his robber hordes upon the Austrian territories, and it is possibly his intention to threaten Vienna. The Hungarian nation is firmly convinced that should this occur, he will fall without hope of safety under the avenging sword of the free sons of Austria; but, nevertheless, the Hungarian nation considers it as its holiest duty of gratitude towards Vienna and Austria, in such an event, to pursue Jellachich, and to support the noble Austrian people in the work of his well-merited destruction. On this account the Representatives of the Hungarian nation have given the command to the Hungarian army to follow Jellachich wherever he may have gone. Yet the Hungarian nation declares before God and the world, that in the case of their troops being obliged to pursue the flying foe into Austria, they have no intention thereby of violating Austrian territory, but in this case the Hungarian nation only follows the impulse of gratitude, which makes it a duty of honour for them not to leave the noble inhabitants of Vienna without support against the common enemy.

May the honourable Diet receive this well-meant and sincere declaration with fraternal love. The Hungarian nation declares that the troops will halt and return to Hungary at the same moment when the noble Representatives of brave Austria shall have informed the commanding officers that the disarming of the common enemy has been effected through their own power, and the co-operation of our troops in the common contest for freedom is no longer necessary. The Hungarian Government has given the strictest commands that in the case of the advance of the Hungarian army, that their provisioning, even upon Austrian soil (which to us is sacred), will be sent to them from Hungary, and the noble people of Austria will not thereby incur the slightest burthen.

No. 60.—Viscount Ponsonby to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Oct. 24.)

MY LORD,

Vienna, October 18, 1848.

ALTHOUGH nothing decisive has occurred here since my despatch of yesterday's date, I think it right to detain the messenger no longer.

A camp has been formed within the lines, in the position abandoned by the Imperial troops, to be occupied by a corps mobile of the national guard which has been organized, and the command given to General Bem, a Polish officer who served with great distinction during the campaign of 1831 in Poland, and, as I am informed, commanded the Polish artillery on several occasions. Many other Polish officers have also arrived here to offer their services and advice; and I have reason to believe that one of them who had served in Algiers expressed the opinion that the city and suburbs might be defended, even if attacked by considerable forces, but that all the national guards and armed people would not be able to withstand 5,000 regular troops in the open field. It is, however, certain, that for several days the people have been exhorted in every way to act strictly on the defensive alone. One of the most striking features in the present state of affairs here, is the prominent part which the Poles play. As I have above mentioned, the defence of the city is chiefly under their direction, whilst in the Diet its President is a Pole; and the Representatives of Galicia, in the absence of most of the Bohemian Deputies, constitute the majority. I have heard that one of those Deputies, who belongs to a family which has always been remarkable for its Polish sympathies, returned here a few days ago, and has blamed the conduct of his countrymen in associating themselves with the Magyar cause in opposition to the Slavonic. He added, that he looked on such conduct as a political suicide, in which he would take no part, and that he purposed leaving Vienna.

A deputation, with Robert Blum at their head, has arrived here, to present to the Reichstag and the inhabitants of Vienna, in the name of the small minority of the extreme Left of the Frankfort Assembly, the address which they had proposed to that Assembly, and which had been rejected by a very great majority.

An address to the Emperor was voted yesterday by the Reichstag, of which I have the honour to inclose a copy in translation.

Since writing the above, the reporter of the permanent committee of the Reichstag, M. Schuselka, has made to that Assembly his daily report. He informed them, that the Hungarian army had retired into Hungary. He added, that he did not know what had decided that movement, but that it had been officially announced here by the Hungarian Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, who had added the advice, to endeavour to arrange their quarrel through the mediation of the Archduke John.

I PROPOSE to the honourable Diet, that the following address may be immediately sent to His Majesty :

“That the tranquillity of the town requires no re-establishment, for its existence is only threatened by the concentration of the masses of troops. The Diet therefore demands the withdrawal of the troops in Lower Austria; the reduction of the garrison at Vienna to its minimum; that the army should swear to the Constitution; and finally, that a popular Ministry should be formed.”

MY LORD, Vienna, October 19, 1848.

THE town still continues to be perfectly quiet, though there exists considerable irritation in the minds of the students, in consequence of the retreat of the Hungarian army.

The most contradictory rumours are in circulation as to the strength and position of the Hungarian army. It is said to be quartered close to the frontier, not far from Bruck, and to be 40,000 strong. But these are mere rumours.

I am informed that Prince Windischgrätz, who the day before yesterday was still at Olmütz, is named Generalissimo of the Imperial troops in this neighbourhood; and that Prince Felix Schwarzenberg is to be Minister at War; but neither of these appointments have been officially communicated to me, and I report them to your Lordship as the on dit of the town. The project of the addresses from the Reichstag to the Emperor and to the Austrian nation were read this morning to that Assembly, referred to a Committee, and are to be again discussed this evening. A manifesto from the Emperor, which it is known is to be soon promulgated, is awaited with great impatience.

ON the evening of the 26th, the Prater, and the railway station situated at one extremity of it, were occupied by the Croatian troops under the orders of the Banus Baron Jellachich; this movement was opposed by the party in revolt within the city, and the Croatian troops fired on, in consequence of which they threw shells into the faubourg between the Landstrasse and the Leopoldstadt, and very considerable fires were visible in that quarter from thence during the whole night. No regular attack was contemplated by Prince Windischgrätz; and as the newspapers of Vienna themselves acknowledge, the aggression, not only at the points I have just alluded to, but also on this side of the city, came from the town.

Nearly 100 prisoners, chiefly workmen, were yesterday brought to the head-quarters at Hetzensdorf. They generally excused their conduct, either by denying that they had actually fired, or by alleging that they were compelled by force or necessity to enter into the guard mobile. I may observe, that there exists a system of terrorism within the city, which compels every one excepting Members of the Diet, of the Town Council, or strangers who produce cards of exemption, to take arms; and that system has been carried so far, that armed bodies visit the cafés, even those in the principal streets, seeking for forced recruits, and that the day before yesterday shots were fired in one in the Kohlmarkt. It is said in this latter case the quarrel arose in consequence of an attempt made to compel 2 Frenchmen who were present to take up arms.

The whole of yesterday passed without any renewal of hostilities on either side, and in this neighbourhood the military were withdrawn from the range of the cannon on the lines. The investment has in no respect been relaxed, and the suburbs immediately before the gate of the lines are occupied by military, and such of the inhabitants as have not retreated within the lines are disarmed.

It is said that Prince Windischgrätz intends to make a general attack this day, and this report appears to be justified by the heavy fire of artillery which has been carried on for some time, and which continues at the moment at which I write, 11 o'clock A.M.

THE attack upon the city which I mentioned in my despatch of yesterday, commenced at about 10 o'clock A.M., and continued almost without interruption till nearly midnight. It is said, that Prince Windischgrätz's plan was at first merely to occupy the exterior lines of the faubourgs, but the division of the Croatian army under the command of General Hartlieb, to whom was entrusted the attack on the Leopoldstadt, pushed its success so far as to occupy the faubourg of the Landstrasse, and the strong position of the new Custom House, flanked on two sides by the stream of the Wien and the Danube Canal, and opposite to the glacis. The barricades were carried with slight difficulty, and the national guards, as I am informed, threw away their arms and fled. Baron Jellachich is reported to have addressed the people from an inn in the Landstrasse, where he supped, and to have been loudly cheered. Severe fighting took place at the Southern Railway station, which was only carried after heavy loss on the side of the Polish Regiment of Nassau, and the destruction of the engine manufactory and several locomotives.

Cannon-shot, grenades, and congreve-rockets were thrown into the Wienden faubourg, and at a late hour several shells. Very extensive fires were visible there from the high grounds in the park all night. Indeed as many as 6 fires in various points of the faubourgs were to be seen. The rockets are said to have produced very great effect. The contest was chiefly carried on by the students and lowest class of workmen; and the former are said to have prudently laid aside their distinctive uniform.

The report of the arrival of the Hungarian army appears to be still doubtful. Indeed I learn that there were only 8,000 men on the frontier at Bruck, and that half of that number were only armed with scythes. A steam-boat, which was bringing students to Vienna from Presburg and Pesth, was fired on and sunk by the Croats in the neighbourhood of the Prater. Report says, that 600 persons were on board. A second steam-boat, with a raft in tow, made its retreat on seeing the reception which the first had met with.

A deputation has proceeded to Prince Windischgrätz's headquarters this morning, probably to propose terms of surrender; and if I can learn the result I will add it in a postscript. It would however appear impossible to continue much longer the defence of the city.

MY LORD,

Hietzing, October 29, 1848.

THE suburbs of Vienna were attacked yesterday on all sides, and carried by storm, the artillery opening the way for the troops. The resistance was very great, and the troops behaved with the most brilliant valour and devotion. The Italian grenadiers in particular distinguished themselves. The city has not yet been attacked, but all the commanding positions around it are in possession of the troops. The Belvidere, the terminus of the Baden Railroad, and the Schwarzenberg Gardens, were stormed, and the Leopoldstadt and the Landstrasse. The Wieden suburbs are occupied and in possession of the troops. There has been very considerable loss on both sides, but much less on that of the troops. The people in Vienna have desired to have permission to send a deputation to Prince Windischgrätz, and it is expected to come. The Prince has resolved to leave this day to the Viennese for reflection, in the hope that further bloodshed may be spared; but if they do not submit, he will attack the city to-morrow.

The Prince says, the Hungarians are advancing, and that he intends to attack them at once this day, and that he will give battle with confidence of success. The Prince said, that his position yesterday was a very difficult one, for half of his troops were employed all day in guarding against the Hungarians, to prevent his being exposed to attacks from 2 points by their approach.

The following is from the conversation of general officers and others this morning at head-quarters. The troops fought with exasperation. The troops under the Banus distinguished themselves highly. The chief of his (the Banus) staff, General Zeiber, at the head of his troops, stormed 10 barricades. The Red Caps, a body of 1,200 of the Frontier Guards, cut off the heads of at least 50 students who fell into their hands. Those of the people who were seen firing from the house-windows were put to the sword. Many prisoners were made of the national guards and workmen, who threw down their arms.

Very few shells were thrown, and the artillery was used to clear the passage for the troops in the streets of the suburbs.

The army is enthusiastic for their chief and in their cause.

As the troops obtained possession of the suburbs, numbers of men, women, and children came out of their houses to offer wine and food to the soldiers. They had been, it would seem, kept under the rule of terror by the workmen and democrats.

The Prince is gone to meet the Hungarians, who will probably advance to Himberg, Lanzensdorf, Achau, and perhaps Schwechat. The country is hilly, and said to offer strong positions.

The Prince says, that if the Hungarians are defeated, the Austrian Monarchy is safe, and the Armies of Italy and Vienna will salute each other.

I am not authorized to judge of military matters, but I must express my opinion that Prince Windischgrätz will be successful against the Hungarians. His ability, his courage, and his generous spirit, attach his soldiers to him with enthusiasm, and his humanity entitles him to the gratitude and respect of those whose views he opposes.

I will do myself the honour to write to-morrow to your Lordship.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that the city of Vienna submitted last night to the conditions laid down by Prince Windischgrätz.

I have not as yet received official communication of the above-mentioned intelligence, which, however, I have no doubt is correct, nor have I as yet—the intercourse with the city being still interrupted—obtained printed copies of the proclamations issued upon this subject by the Town Council. I, however, inclose copies of these 2 proclamations, which are circulated here in manuscript;—the one addressed to workpeople who are in arms, and poorer national guards, promising them the same pay which they at present receive, until by the re-establishment of order they may be able to earn their livelihood; the other addressed to the citizens, informing them that a deputation had proceeded to make their submission to Prince Windischgrätz. This latter address is somewhat imperfect, but the sense of it may be perfectly collected.

It is reported that General Bem, with some others, who see no safety in submission, intend to defend themselves in faubourgs of Lerchenfeld and Gumpendorf. Whether this be true or not, there can now be no doubt of the issue.

MY LORD,

Hietzing, October 31, 1848.

THE Hungarian army, which I had the honour to inform your Lordship in my despatch of the 29th instant, was advancing to the relief of the insurgents at Vienna, was attacked yesterday morning by Prince Windischgrätz, in the neighbourhood of Schwechat, the first post from Vienna on the road to Presburg. The reports at head-quarters estimated this army at about 25,000 men. His Highness advanced from Inzersdorf, while a division of Baron Jellachich's corps d'armée moved by the Danube to meet the Hungarians on the opposite side, with the intention, by this combined movement of attacking them on two sides and cutting off their retreat. The Hungarians, however, declined the proffered combat, and in retreating exchanged some discharges of artillery with the Imperial troops. 2 divisions of infantry and one of cavalry, commanded by Prince Francis Lichtenstein, are pursuing them.

It appears that the insurgents within the city were apprized by signals of the advance of the Hungarians, and at the very moment that a deputation of the Town Council (Gemeinde Rath) was at the head-quarters at Hetzensdorf, arranging with General Gordon, who had been named on the side of Prince Windischgrätz, the details of the capitulation which I had the honour to inform your Lordship in my despatch of the 30th instant had been agreed upon, they recommenced hostilities from the Mariahilf and Lerchenfeld lines.

Prince Windischgrätz was in consequence obliged to order an attack on that side by the Division Furstenberg, which occupied the plain without those lines, and a heavy cannonade was kept up there the whole of yesterday afternoon till late at night. Rockets and signal fires were also sent up from the steeple of St. Stephen's, the insurgents being probably ignorant of the defeat of their expected allies. The firing has been renewed this morning.

Since writing the above I have received Prince Windischgrätz's proclamation, announcing his victory over the Hungarians, which I have the honour to inclose in translation. I have, &c.

A CORPS of the Hungarian insurgents has dared to enter on the Austrian territory, and this morning to advance towards Schwechat.

I have attacked it with a part of my army, combined with that of the Banus, and repulsed it with considerable loss. Some divisions are occupied in their pursuit.

This announcement is made, to reassure all well-intentioned persons who may feel apprehensions from the appearance of this corps; it is also meant as a warning for those ill-intentioned who in this thought they found new hopes for their plans, and who in fact were not ashamed treacherously to break the capitulation which had been agreed to.

PRINCE WINDISCHGRATZ.

No. 68.—Viscount Ponsonby to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Nov. 7.)
 MY LORD, Hietzing, November 1, 1848.

I HAD the honour to report to your Lordship in my despatch of yesterday, that Prince Windischgrätz had been obliged to order a regular attack on the Mariahilf lines and faubourgs, in consequence of the resistance persisted in by the insurgents in Vienna, founded on the hopes of relief from the advance of the Hungarian army, notwithstanding their previous submission to his Highness's conditions, which had been agreed to by the Town Council, and which had been published on the morning of the 30th ultimo. That quarter of the city was soon occupied, and white flags were in the afternoon of yesterday hung out from the steeples of the various churches there. The same emblems of submission were also displayed from the walls and gates of the bastion; but, notwithstanding, the Imperial troops were treacherously fired on with grape-shot when advancing on the glacis which separates the town from its faubourgs. I may add, that the bad faith of the insurgents or of their leaders has been most apparent of late. The commander of the national guards, M. Messenhauser, published an order of the day when it was known that the Hungarians were advancing, calling upon every one to renew hostilities, although on the preceding night he had been present at the sitting of the Town Council, and in his capacity of commander of the national guards had admitted that they were short of ammunition, and that a more prolonged resistance was impossible. The attack made upon his troops compelled Prince Windischgrätz to have recourse to extreme measures against the city; and yesterday afternoon a heavy fire of cannon, accompanied by shells and congreve rockets, was directed from the glacis towards the university. About the same time a large fire in the city was visible from hence, which unfortunately proves to have been the Augustines' church and the Imperial library, which adjoin the Palace of the Burg. It was supposed here to have been the work of incendiaries; but I learn from one of my servants, who has just come out here from the city, that it was caused by a shell directed against the insurgents, who were firing from the bastions on the troops advancing on the glacis. The same person reports to me that 2 chimneys of the Embassy were knocked down by a shell, and that it was only by the advance of the troops that the insurgents were prevented from entering my house to fire from its windows. I learn from him also, that the Burg is occupied by the troops, and I believe the rest of the city, with perhaps the exception of the university. Should the students or the foreigners in Vienna make any further resistance, I anticipate a dreadful carnage of them, as the exasperation of the troops at the numerous instances of treachery is very great.

About 5,000 or 6,000 stand of arms and 3 pieces of cannon were delivered up at Schönbrunn yesterday afternoon; and I hear that the surrender of arms is going on at various points within the city.

I think the armed revolt may now be looked upon as overcome; but I fear it has occasioned considerable loss of life and a still greater destruction of property.

The Hungarian army, pursued by the divisions I mentioned, is no longer upon Austrian soil, but I cannot add whether the pursuit is to be continued.

No. 69.—Viscount Ponsonby to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Nov. 9.)

MY LORD,

Hietzing, November 3, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inclose, for your Lordship's information, a copy in translation of the proclamation of Prince Windischgrätz, dated the 1st of November, regulating the application of martial law, which his Highness had already announced in his proclamation of the 23rd of October.

I likewise transmit a copy in translation of a connected narrative of events since his Highness's arrival here on the 23rd ultimo, published, as that narrative states at the commencement, in order that "all friends of truth" may be guarded against "wilful misrepresentations and falsifications of facts, which are at present so much the order of the day." It is satisfactory to me to find that the various reports which I have had the honour to forward to your Lordship on this subject are entirely confirmed by this official statement, of the correctness of which no doubt can be felt.

It has been fully ascertained that the fire which consumed the roof of the Augustine church and a part of that of the Imperial library, was caused by a shell fired from the bastion by the insurgents, with the intention of setting fire to the Burg ; it however fortunately fell short of the palace, and the damage has been, I am happy to add, confined to the roof of the above-mentioned buildings. Several prisoners, and amongst them some deserters, have been brought into head-quarters. The spirit and the discipline of the Imperial troops are all that can be desired.

The same severity respecting ingress and egress from the town is observed ; a measure necessary to apprehend the various leaders of the late insurrection who are known to be concealed there.

The Reichstag, which was about to assemble on the 1st, was closed by order of Prince Felix Schwarzenberg, who added that its sittings were suspended in virtue of the Imperial order convoking them to meet on the 15th at Kremsier.

The Hungarian army has been driven over the frontier, and a large body of Imperial troops is still stationed there to watch their movements. Another division of that army is stated to have been defeated by General Simunich, with a portion of the army of Galicia, at Friestadl on the Waag.

I have, &c.

HAVING caused the imperial and royal troops under my command to enter the capital of Vienna, I may deem it my duty, in connection with my Proclamation of the 23rd October, to make generally known those measures, the execution of which I feel to be indispensably necessary for the re-establishment of public order, which has been shaken to its basis.

The capital had indeed signified its submission on the 30th ultimo ; but the conditions which had in consequence been agreed upon were nevertheless again broken with the most barefaced treachery. I issue, therefore, the following orders without regard to that act :

1. The city of Vienna, its faubourgs and environs within the circle of 2 miles, are declared in a state of siege ; that is, all local authorities during the duration of the same are, according to the regulation of section 9, placed under the military authorities.

2. The Academic Legion and National Guard are dissolved, the latter, however, with the reservation of its re-organization.

3. The general disarmament, if not already fully carried out, is at the expiration of 48 hours after the publication of the present proclamation, to be accomplished by the Town Council. On the expiration of this delay, the second and last demand for the delivering up of arms will be issued; and 12 hours after the posting up of the same a search for arms in the houses will be made; and then all the possessors of arms of any kind will be subject to martial law.

The exceptions to this disarming are, the town and military police and the preventive service, who remain in their present functions, and such public servants who in virtue of their calling wear side-arms with their uniform. Arms which are private property will be put apart with the owner's name on them.

4. All political clubs are closed; all assemblages in the streets of more than 10 persons are forbidden; all hotels and coffee-houses in the inner city to be shut at 11 o'clock, and those in the faubourgs, &c. at 10. The transgressors of this regulation to be arrested and tried by court-martial.

5. The press is provisionally suppressed, in conformity with the order contained in section 4 of the Proclamation of October 23, and the printing, sale, and posting up of placards, prints, and pamphlets only permitted when sanctioned by the military authorities. The same treatment awaits the transgressors of this which is laid down in the previous section.

6. In conformity with the regulation laid down in section 5 of the Proclamation of October 23, all foreigners who cannot produce a legal justification of the reasons of their sojourn, are to be sent away; and all natives who are similarly circumstanced will be treated in the same way. The city police is charged with the execution of this measure, which is to be effected by every householder furnishing a nominal return of his lodgers, pointing out such as belong to the above category. Such householders as omit to report any one of their lodgers, or who fail within a time stated by the police to mention new lodgers, will be arrested and brought before a military tribunal.

7. Whosoever shall be convicted of:

a. Having endeavoured to seduce the Imperial troops from their fidelity;

b. Having by word or deed excited to revolt, or taken part by his acts in consequence of such an appeal;

c. Whosoever at any assemblage does not retire upon the first summons of the public authorities;

d. Whosoever at any tumultuous meeting is taken with arms in his hands, is subject to martial law.

8. All traces of the barricades in the town and the faubourgs are to be immediately removed, and the pavement replaced by the Town Council.

9. During the state of siege, all public authorities remain in the undisturbed exercise of their functions; however, the military authorities have undertaken during this period, the administration of all that is required for the maintenance of order, tranquillity, and safety in the capital and its environs. The Town Council and police, which up to the present time have conducted such affairs, are only to co-operate in such a manner as the military authorities deem expedient.

10. In order to attain the purpose of a state of siege which can be no other than to prepare the passage from anarchy to a well-regulated constitutional state, a mixed central commission, under the presidency of Major-General Gordon, whom I also name military commander of the city, will be formed, and is charged with the supreme direction of such affairs as are consequent upon a state of siege, as well as those of the government of Lower Austria and of the city police.

(Translation.) Head Quarters, Hetzendorf, November 1, 1848.

WILFUL misrepresentations and falsifications of facts are at present so much the order of the day, that all friends of truth will be glad to receive the following faithful narrative of the course of events during the taking of the city of Vienna by the Imperial troops.

On the evening of Monday the 23rd of October, His Highness Field-Marshal Prince Windischgrätz, invested with extraordinary full powers, arrived at Hetzendorf near Vienna. His Highness published a summons to the population of the city, to surrender their arms and submit unconditionally to the Imperial commands; in case of refusal, the town would be compelled by force of arms to submit. The town was given 24 hours for the publication of the conditions imposed, and 48 hours more for their being carried out, viz., till the evening of Thursday the 26th of October. Although this period passed by without compliance, but even on the 26th, during the completion of the investment of the outer environs of the city, the Imperial troops were fired upon without provocation, His Highness the Field-Marshal still allowed the 27th of October to pass over without having recourse to measures of force. Some deputations from the city, which endeavoured to negotiate with the Prince respecting the conditions imposed by him, and to obtain some concessions, failed in their object.

Although, in the meantime, intelligence had been received of the advance of the Hungarian army to the assistance of the Viennese rebels, which compelled the Prince to detach part of his forces against it, the attack was, nevertheless, undertaken on the 28th of October with the remainder of the troops, which had already been destined to act against the city.

Whilst all the approaches to the town were busily occupied with a fire of artillery, it was the intention of the Field-Marshal only to take the suburbs of the Landstrasse and Leopoldstadt on that day. This task was by the evening so fully accomplished, the outer gates of the lines and several barricades having been stormed, and 4 pieces of cannon taken, in spite of a desperate resistance on the part of the insurgents, by the troops, which were pushed forward with equal daring and prudence, that, before night, the troops had gained the glacis in front of the inner town, and the canal of the Danube which separates the town from the Leopoldstadt, and occupied and maintained possession of the Invalid-house, the Mint, the new chief Custom-House, the Haymarket Barracks, and the Summer Palace of Prince Schwarzenberg.

The troops were received in all directions with joy by the peaceable inhabitants of these suburbs, as their preservers and liberators from the terrorism of the anarchical party and their tools, the armed prolétaires.

His Highness the Field-Marshal conceived the hope that the town, after this experience, must have been convinced of the superiority of a well-disciplined force over much more numerous bands of insurgents, and therefore reckoned upon its speedy surrender, and allowed the 29th of October to pass over quietly without having recourse to further measures of force, to give the city time to come to its senses. There actually came on the night of the 29th to the 30th of October a deputation from the city of the Town Council, with the written declaration that they submitted unconditionally, and accepted the state of siege imposed, in accordance with which the city and its suburbs were to be occupied by the troops on the 30th.

A commission was consequently appointed, which was to settle the more minute details respecting the execution of these measures. In the meantime the news of the advance of the Hungarian rebels was confirmed on the morning of the 29th, and the Field-Marshal was obliged to turn his steps against them. He found the enemy in a favourable position behind the Schwechat, 2 miles (9 English) from Vienna, attacked them immediately with the corps of the Banus of Croatia in conjunction with the numerous cavalry of the 3rd corps, drove them back on the same day beyond the Fischa, and caused them to be pursued on the 31st up to the frontier of Hungary.

The Viennese rebels, having observed the approach of their Hungarian allies from the top of the steeple of St. Stephen's, allowed themselves to conceive new hopes, and they treacherously violated the capitulation which had been agreed on. The Commander-in-chief of the national guard, Messenhauser, issued from his lofty observatory 2 proclamations, in which he declared that the Imperial troops were beaten by the Hungarians, and called upon the people to take up arms again.

Hostilities were accordingly recommenced on the part of the town at the very moment at which the capitulation already agreed upon was to be carried into execution.

It was necessary to punish this breach of faith by the renewal of the bombardment against some of the suburbs, already notorious for their hostile dispositions, and this was continued till the evening of the 30th of October.

The town upon this for the second time tendered its submission, which was to be verified on the 31st of October. But early in the morning of that day, deputies from the Town Council made their appearance, and declared that the majority of the citizens, indeed, had the best possible desire to comply with all the conditions of the Field-Marshal, but that against the violence of the democratic clubs, of the Students' Committee, and of their tools, the armed prolétaires, which had so increased as to establish a reign of terror, they were much too powerless to give their desires any effect, and that they accordingly must themselves implore the protection of the Field-Marshal for their persons and property, since the mob had the intention of setting fire to the town and burying themselves under its ruins.

The Field-Marshal now caused, on the afternoon of the 31st, more troops to advance through the suburbs, which, as soon as they appeared on the glacis, were received with a heavy fire from the walls of the inner town, into which the rebels had all retired, and which was now closely surrounded. In the evening the strongly-barricaded palace gate was blown in by cannon and then stormed by 2 battalions, and 8 pieces of cannon were taken. The prolétaires had already set fire to the Imperial library, the roof of which was burnt; the remainder of this building, however, as well as the whole of the palace, was saved by the timely entrance of our troops.

The military has now occupied the whole of the town, the complete subjection of which has been effected by force of arms, after that it had rejected all milder measures with obstinacy and even with a violation of truth and faith.

MY LORD,

Vienna, November 19, 1848.

M. FONTON, the Secretary to the Russian Embassy, called on me this morning, and informed me that His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Russia had sent to Prince Windischgrätz by Baron Lieven the decoration in diamonds of the Order of St. Andrew, and also to Baron Jellachich the Order of Wladimir, an order of merit, and seldom conferred.

The orders above mentioned will be delivered to Prince Windischgrätz and to Baron Jellachich by the Russian General, Baron Lieven, who arrived here this day.

MY LORD,

Vienna, November 19, 1848.

I AM informed that more troops marched this day from hence for Hungary. Many Croats.

Military men say that Comorn may be easily taken in a hard frost. The Hungarian army is said to be about 20,000 strong, one half being hussars.

The Imperialists have very few light cavalry. Their army is estimated at 70,000 men or more. Their artillery is very numerous, and the guns of large calibre.

Baron Jellachich has freely declared that the Austrian Government, if victorious, will not demand from the Hungarians any severer terms than those formerly proposed, namely, the enjoyment, by all the tribes inhabiting Hungary, of equal national rights; that is, the termination of Magyar predominance; the connection of the administration of the Hungarian army with the administration of the Austrian army, so that both shall be under the authority of the Emperor; the connection of the administration of the finances of Hungary with that of the finances of the Imperial Government.

MY LORD,

Vienna, November 20, 1848.

IN an instruction to his Excellency Sir Stratford Canning, of November 7, your Lordship says: "There are some who imagine that the advance of that force in those (the Danubian) provinces is not wholly unconnected with the events which have been passing in Hungary; and that the Emperor has contemplated the possibility of his being asked by the Austrian Government to assist in restoring order in Pesth."

With reference to the above, I venture to trouble your Lordship with a few words.

The Austrian Government, I am pretty sure, has not asked the Emperor of Russia for assistance anywhere, although the most amicable relations exist between the parties; but I have little doubt that, should the Austrians receive a severe check in Hungary, the Emperor of Russia would give the most efficient aid to the Emperor of Austria in that country ; and also, that should there be any attempt in Galicia at insurrection, the Russians would, even without being applied to, march troops into that province to put down the insurrection there.

I will add that I think the Emperor of Russia will give the strongest support to the Austrians, should they be attacked anywhere by an enemy possessing power to put the Emperor of Austria in danger. I allude to Lombardy.

MY LORD,

I HAVE the honour to forward, inclosed, an official letter from his Highness the Prince Schwarzenberg notifying the abdication of the crown by His Imperial Majesty the Emperor in favour of his nephew the Archduke Francis Joseph, the Archduke Francis Charles having on his part renounced his succession to the throne, to which, as heir presumptive, he had the right in conformity with the laws of the Imperial House.

The Act of Abdication was signed by His Imperial Majesty on the 2nd of this month in the palace of the Archbishop of Olmütz.

I had the honour to inform your Lordship of the coming of this event, and it is no surprise.

No. 77.—Viscount Ponsonby to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Dec. 11.)

MY LORD,

Vienna, December 6, 1848.

BARON JELLACHICH has been appointed Governor of Dalmatia and Fiume, and his most intimate friend, Baron Kulmer, made a member of the Cabinet, but without a portfolio.

Kossuth sent a letter, countersigned Pulszky, to be made known to Prince Windischgrätz by Mr. Stiles, the American Chargé d'Affaires, for the purpose of commencing a negotiation for peace. Mr. Stiles communicated this letter to the Prince. The Prince said he could not imagine terms of peace which would not be too personally disagreeable to be accepted by M. Kossuth. It is said, that this reply indicated an intention to make M. Kossuth responsible in his own person for what he has done.

It is reported, that M. Kossuth and M. Pulszky, in order to obtain the aid of Mr. Stiles, wrote to him, saying that if the Americans would mediate between Hungary and Austria, the Hungarians would mediate between America and Austria whenever any dispute should arise between those countries.

Prince Windischgrätz is likely to leave this during the present week, and to proceed into Hungary with the intention to commence active hostilities. It is imagined that Presburg may be the first object of attack. That city can be reached by artillery from this side of the Danube, and being composed in part of wooden houses, may be set on fire; but hopes, as I hear, are entertained that the town will surrender, as it is known that a large portion of the inhabitants are favourable to the Austrians.

Baron Jellachich expresses great impatience to begin the operations of war. Prince Windischgrätz is supposed to wait for the publication of a proclamation from the Emperor to the Hungarians, summoning them once more to submit, while it is yet time. The Prince has obtained the number of horses for draught, &c., which he requires, and his preparations are almost if not quite complete.

It is reported that the Emperor is expected here immediately to review the army, and that may possibly be another cause of delay.

There was this day a grand parade at Schönbrunn for the distribution of medals to the soldiers who had of late distinguished themselves; and the Prince was as usual received with the greatest enthusiasm.

LE Soussigné, Envoyé Plénipotentiaire de la Hongrie près le Pouvoir Central Germanique jusqu'au mois d'Octobre A. C., a reçu tout récemment l'ordre de son Gouvernement—dont il a l'honneur d'y joindre la copie—de se rendre en Angleterre et d'offrir au Cabinet de Sa Majesté Britannique des renseignements précis sur l'état actuel du Royaume d'Hongrie, en espérant que si son Excellence le Ministre des Affaires Etrangères en prendra connaissance, ils se pourront entamer des négociations préliminaires, propres à affermir sur le territoire de la couronne Hongroise l'ordre, et à rétablir la paix violemment ébranlée par des menées insensées, et menacée de faire place à une révolution dont le contre-coup se fera ressentir dans un tiers de l'Europe, si le respect dû aux lois et à la foi jurée ne prévaudra pas sur les tâtonnements maladroits et les expérimentations téméraires d'une politique à la fois révolutionnaire et réactionnaire.

Le Soussigné, en ayant l'honneur de notifier son arrivée à son Excellence le Ministre des Affaires Etrangères, se flatte qu'elle voudra bien lui accorder une entrevue, pour faire communication de son mandat, qui lui a été transmis par le Président du Comité National de Défense, faisant fonction de Gouvernement Provisoire pour la Hongrie, et pour donner tous les renseignements sur les affaires Hongroises, que le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique trouvera bon à lui demander. Il se flatte—tant est juste et simple la cause qu'il sert—qu'il lui sera facile de faire jaillir la lumière de la vérité sur la question Hongroise, dénaturée pendant 9 mois par la malveillance des uns et l'ignorance des autres, et de mettre en relief le besoin urgent de traiter cette question et de la résoudre d'un point de vue Européen.

Le Soussigné croit devoir ajouter à la notification de son arrivée, que pendant l'insurrection dite Rákóczyenne, au commencement du siècle passé, la Grande Bretagne a été intermédiaire entre la Hongrie et l'Autriche; ce fait prouverait à lui-seul à toute évidence, que les relations de la couronne Hongroise avec l'Autriche ont été toujours regardées comme rentrant au cercle du droit international, comme faisant partie des questions à résoudre par la concurrence des grands Pouvoirs.

Budapest, le 12 Novembre, 1848.

CONSIDERANT que la Hongrie, par sa situation géographique, par son étendue, et les richesses de ses produits naturels, est capable d'offrir d'avantages immenses à l'industrie Anglaise si prodigieusement développée, et que l'établissement des relations commerciales entre les 2 pays pourrait être d'une haute importance pour la Grande Bretagne même, je vous invite au nom du Gouvernement Hongrois, à appeler l'attention du Cabinet de Sa Majesté Britannique sur notre pays, et de lui offrir tous les renseignements nécessaires pour la connaissance de notre position actuelle.

Vous démontrerez d'abord, que si la Hongrie venait à retomber dans les liens qui l'unissaient à l'Autriche avant les événements de Mars, l'industrie et le commerce Anglais resteraient à tout jamais exclus des marchés de la Hongrie, que l'Autriche continuerait à monopoliser.

Vous tâcherez de donner au Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique une juste idée du développement des événements politiques dont notre patrie est devenue le théâtre.

Vous démontrerez à cet effet combien nous étions portés à faire à la dynastie Autrichienne toutes les concessions tant soit peu compatibles avec le salut de notre patrie, au préjudice même de notre bon droit fondé dans nos lois, qui garantissent l'indépendance de la Hongrie, et quoique poussés aux extrémités, nous nous sommes bien gardés de nous écarter du terrain légal soutenu par tant de serments des Rois.

Vous exposerez toutes les atrocités que nous avons à subir de la part de la Cour Autrichienne, malgré notre procédé parfaitement loyal.

Si pourtant la grande nation, appréciant ses propres intérêts, se sentait portée à protéger une cause aussi juste que la nôtre, vous êtes autorisé d'entamer au nom du Gouvernement Hongrois, des négociations préliminaires avec le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique. Toutefois ces négociations ne seraient définitivement conclues que par un Traité à faire avec un Envoyé du Gouvernement Britannique pour la Hongrie.

Pour la base statistique de ces négociations vous n'avez qu'à recourir aux tables de commerce officiellement publiées par le Bureau Statistique de l'Autriche : ces tables dissoudront tout ombrage d'une exagération de notre part.

Assurez le Cabinet de Sa Majesté de notre plus parfaite considération, et mettez dans l'accomplissement de votre tâche tout le zèle que nous sommes habitués à trouver en vous.

Le Président du Comité National de Défense,

LOUIS KOSSUTH.

SIR,

I AM directed by Viscount Palmerston to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 11th instant, and in reply I am to say, that Viscount Palmerston is sorry he cannot receive you. The British Government has no knowledge of Hungary except as one of the component parts of the Austrian Empire ; and any communication which you have to make to Her Majesty's Government in regard to the commercial intercourse between Great Britain and Hungary should therefore be made through Baron Koller, the Representative of the Emperor of Austria at this Court.

No. 80.— * * * to Viscount Palmerston.

MILORD,

Le 15 Décembre, 1848.

J'AI reçu la lettre dont votre Seigneurie m'honora le 13 du mois courant.

Il m'était douloureux de voir que son Excellence le Ministre des Affaires Etrangères croit de ne pouvoir pas m'accorder l'entrevue dont je faisais mention dans ma note du 11.

Je ne le cacherai pas que la raison que son Excellence en donne : "The British Government has no knowledge of Hungary except as one of the component parts of the Austrian Empire," m'avait affligé profondément.

Je croyais la thèse reconnue partout, que la Hongrie ne faisait jamais partie de l'Empire d'Autriche. Je le répète : jamais. Pas même avant le mois de Mars année courante.

L'Article 10 de la Diète de 1790-1, qui porte pour titre : "De independentia Regni Hungariæ," &c., dit clairement, "... Sua quoque Majestas Sacratissima benigne agnoscere dignata est: quod licet successio sexus fœminei augustæ Domus Austriacæ per Articulos 1 & 2, 1723, in Regno Hungariæ partibusque eidem adnexis stabilita eundem quem in reliquis regnis juxta stabilitum successionis ordinem inseparabiliter ac indivisibiliter possidendis, Principem concernat: Hungaria nihilominus cum partibus adnexis sit regnum liberum et relate ad totam legalem regiminis formam, huc intellectis quibusvis dicasteriis suis, independens, id est: nulli alteri regno aut populo obnoxium, sed propriam habens consistentiam et constitutionem. . . ." Etre indépendant, avoir sa propre consistance, cela exclue la possibilité de faire partie d'un autre organisme. La couronne d'Hongrie pouvait et peut reposer sur la même tête avec la couronne d'Autriche, sans que la Hongrie fasse partie de l'Empire Autrichien.

Il est de toute impossibilité, Milord, pour l'Envoyé du Gouvernement Hongrois de choisir, pour l'organe de ses communications à faire au Cabinet de Sa Majesté Britannique, M. le Baron Koller, dont les pouvoirs relèvent d'un Ministère qui est en guerre ouverte avec la Hongrie, et qui, en conseillant à Sa Majesté l'Empereur d'Autriche d'écraser la Constitution Hongroise, rêve l'usurpation et la conquête.

Mais il y a des pays qu'on ne conquiert pas; la Hongrie en est de ce nombre. Et le Gouvernement de cette Hongrie se flatta que la Grande Bretagne voudra bien recevoir les renseignements à lui offerts sur l'état actuel des pays appartenant à la couronne Hongroise; que la Grande Bretagne, en voyant que sur tout le territoire dit Autrichien c'est la Hongrie seule qui est restée en-dehors du tourbillon ultra-démocratique; et voyant de près les ressources immenses du royaume, en tirera la conséquence, que la Hongrie est toute qualifiée de servir de noyau autour duquel se groupent et se grouperont encore davantage des provinces, capables à composer un organisme politique assez grand, assez étendu, pour donner des garanties à l'ordre, à la liberté sage et bienfaisante; le Gouvernement de la Hongrie aimait à croire que la Grande Bretagne dans l'intérêt Européen et le sien propre, lui tendra une main bienveillante et ferme, une main qui lui portera aide à l'accomplissement de cette œuvre.

Il ne paraît, Milord, que la question de mon accueil officiel pourrait être ajournée, jusqu'après avoir donné des renseignements sur l'état actuel de la Hongrie, qui pourront servir de mesure aux pas ultérieurs à faire par le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique à l'égard de la Hongrie. C'est avec cet espoir que j'ai l'honneur de notifier à votre Seigneurie que je resterai encore quelque temps à Londres, étant, &c.

S.E. Le Vicomte Palmerston, G.C.B.

IN reply to your letter of the 15th instant, I am directed by Viscount Palmerston to say that Her Majesty's Government can take no cognizance of those internal questions between Hungary and the Austrian dominions to which your letter refers; but that the British Government has no diplomatic relations with Hungary except as a component part of the Austrian Empire, and can receive communications respecting Hungary only through the diplomatic organ of the Emperor of Austria at this Court.

Toutefois, aucune proposition, aucun amendement ne pourra être introduit à l'occasion du budget, dans le but de réduire ni d'augmenter les appointements des fonctionnaires publics et la solde des militaires, déjà fixés par des lois spéciales.

DISCOURS du Président de la République Française, après avoir prêté serment à la Constitution.—Paris, le 20 Décembre, 1848.

CITOYENS REPRESENTANTS,

LES suffrages de la nation et le serment que je viens de prêter commandent ma conduite future. Mon devoir est tracé ; je le remplirai en homme d'honneur.

Je verrai des ennemis de la patrie dans tous ceux qui tenteraient de changer, par des voies illégales, ce que la France entière a établi.

Entre vous et moi, citoyens représentants, il ne saurait y avoir de véritables dissentiments. Nos volontés, nos désirs sont les mêmes.

Je veux, comme vous, rasseoir la société sur ses bases, affermir les institutions démocratiques et rechercher tous les moyens propres à soulager les maux de ce peuple généreux et intelligent qui vient de me donner un témoignage si éclatant de sa confiance.

La majorité que j'ai obtenue, non-seulement me pénètre de reconnaissance, mais elle donnera au Gouvernement nouveau la force morale sans laquelle il n'y a pas d'autorité.

Avec la paix et l'ordre, notre pays peut se relever, guérir ses plaies, ramener les hommes égarés et calmer les passions.

Animé de cet esprit de conciliation, j'ai appelé près de moi des hommes honnêtes, capables, et dévoués au pays, assuré que, malgré les diversités d'origine politique, ils sont d'accord pour concourir avec vous à l'application de la constitution, au perfectionnement des lois, à la gloire de la République.

La nouvelle administration, en entrant aux affaires, doit remercier celle qui la précède des efforts qu'elle a faits pour transmettre le pouvoir intact, pour maintenir la tranquillité publique.

La conduite de l'honorable général Cavaignac a été digne de la loyauté de son caractère et de ce sentiment du devoir qui est la première qualité du chef d'un Etat.

Nous avons, citoyens représentants, une grande mission à remplir, c'est de fonder une République dans l'intérêt de tous et un Gouvernement juste, ferme, qui soit animé d'un sincère amour du progrès, sans être réactionnaire ou utopiste.

Soyons les hommes du pays, non les hommes d'un parti, et, Dieu aidant, nous ferons du moins le bien, si nous ne pouvons faire de grandes choses.

Elysée-National, le 6 Juin, 1849.

MESSIEURS LES REPRESENTANTS,

LA Constitution prescrit au Président de la République de vous présenter chaque année l'exposé de l'état général des affaires du pays.

Je me conforme à cette obligation qui me permet, en vous soumettant la vérité dans toute sa simplicité, les faits dans ce qu'ils ont d'instructif, de vous parler aussi de ma conduite passée et de mes intentions pour l'avenir.

Mon élection à la première magistrature de la République avait fait naître des espérances qui n'ont point encore pu toutes se réaliser.

Jusqu'au jour où vous vous êtes réunis dans cette enceinte, le pouvoir exécutif ne jouissait pas de la plénitude de ses prérogatives constitutionnelles. Dans une telle position, il lui était difficile d'avoir une marche bien assurée.

Néanmoins je suis resté fidèle à mon manifeste.

A quoi en effet me suis-je engagé en acceptant les suffrages de la nation ?

A défendre la société audacieusement attaquée ;

A affermir une République sage, grande, honnête ;

A protéger la famille, la religion, la propriété ;

A provoquer toutes les améliorations et toutes les économies possibles ;

A protéger la presse contre l'arbitraire et la licence ;

A diminuer les abus de la centralisation ;

A effacer les traces de nos discordes civiles ;

Enfin à adopter à l'extérieur une politique sans arrogance comme sans faiblesse.

Le temps et les circonstances ne m'ont point encore permis d'accomplir tous ces engagements, cependant des grands pas ont été faits dans cette voie.

Le premier devoir du Gouvernement était de consacrer tous ses efforts au rétablissement de la confiance qui ne pouvait être complète que sous un pouvoir définitif. Le défaut de sécurité dans le présent, de foi dans l'avenir, détruit le crédit, arrête le travail, diminue les revenus publics et privés, rend les emprunts impossibles et tarit les sources de la richesse.

Avant d'avoir ramené la confiance, on aurait beau recourir à tous les systèmes de crédit, comme aux expédients les plus révolutionnaires, on ne serait pas renaître l'abondance là où la crainte et la défiance du lendemain ont produit la stérilité.

Notre politique étrangère elle-même ne pouvait être à la hauteur de notre puissance passée, qu'autant que nous aurions reconstitué à l'intérieur ce qui fait la force des nations : l'union des citoyens, la prospérité des finances.

Pour atteindre ce but, le Gouvernement n'a eu qu'à suivre une marche ferme et résolue, en montrant à tous, que, sans sortir de la légalité, il emploierait les moyens les plus énergiques pour rassurer la société.

Partout aussi, il s'efforça de rétablir le prestige de l'autorité, en mettant tous ses soins à appeler aux fonctions publiques les hommes qu'il jugeait les plus honnêtes et les plus capables, sans s'arrêter à leur antécédents politiques.

C'est encore afin de ne pas inquiéter les esprits, que le Gouvernement a dû ajourner le projet de rendre la liberté aux victimes de nos discordes civiles. Au seul mot d'amnistie, l'opinion publique s'est émue en sens divers : on a craint le retour de nouveaux troubles ; néanmoins, j'ai usé d'indulgence partout où elle n'a pas eu d'inconvénient.

Les prisons se sont déjà ouvertes à 1,570 transportés de Juin, et bientôt les autres seront mis en liberté sans que la société ait rien à en redouter ; quant à ceux qui, en vertu des décisions des Conseils de Guerre, subissent leurs peines aux bagnes, quelques-uns d'entre eux, pouvant être assimilés aux condamnés politiques, seront placés dans des maisons de détention.

La marche suivie avait en assez peu de temps rétabli la confiance ; les affaires avaient repris un grand essor, les caisses d'épargne se remplissaient. Depuis la fin de Janvier le produit des contributions indirectes et des douanes n'avait pas cessé de s'accroître et s'était rapproché, en Avril, des temps les plus prospères. Le Trésor avait retrouvé le crédit dont il a besoin, et la ville de Paris avait pu contracter un emprunt dont le taux avoisine le pair, négociation qui rappelait l'époque où la confiance était la mieux affermie. Les demandes en autorisation de sociétés anonymes se multipliaient, le nombre des brevets d'invention augmentait de jour en jour ; le prix des offices, le taux de toutes les valeurs qui avaient subi une dépréciation si grande, se relevait graduellement ; enfin dans toutes les villes manufacturières, le travail avait recommencé et les étrangers affluaient de nouveau à Paris : ce mouvement heureux, arrêté un moment par l'agitation électorale, reprendra son cours à l'aide de l'appui que vous prêterez au Gouvernement.

Le poids d'engagements hasardeux contractés par le dernier Gouvernement a nécessité, durant le cours de l'année 1848, une liquidation qui a ajouté à la dette publique 56,501,800 francs de rentes nouvelles.

D'un autre côté, les dépenses extraordinaires que la révolution de Février a entraînées, ont produit un surcroît de charges qui, toute compensation faite, s'est élevé pour l'année 1848 à 265,498,428 francs, et, malgré les ressources additionnelles dues au produit de l'impôt des 45 centimes et aux emprunts négociés, l'exercice laissera un déficit de 72,160,000 francs.

L'année 1849 devait, d'après les combinaisons du budget qui s'y rapportait, laisser un découvert de 25,000,000; mais les faits n'ont pas répondu aux calculs, et des changements considérables se sont accomplis sous l'empire de circonstances imprévues. Des impôts nouveaux dont le produit est évalué à plus de 90,000,000 n'ont pas été votés; d'autre part, non-seulement l'impôt du sel a été réduit des 2 tiers, mais les revenus de la taxe des lettres sont descendus fort au-dessous du chiffre qu'on espérait trouver et le déficit prévu s'élèvera à environ 180,000,000.

Un autre fait inattendu est venu aggraver la situation. L'impôt sur les boissons dont le produit dépasse 100,000,000 demandait à être adouci et simplifié par une forme nouvelle qui le mît en harmonie avec l'esprit de nos institutions; un amendement rattaché au budget de 1849 l'a aboli à partir du 1^{er} Janvier 1850, et en a prescrit le remplacement.

Il est devenu indispensable maintenant de rétablir l'équilibre entre les dépenses et les recettes; on n'y peut parvenir qu'en réduisant les dépenses et en ouvrant de nouvelles sources de revenu.

Cet état de nos finances mérite d'être pris en sérieuse considération. Ce qui doit nous consoler néanmoins et nous encourager, c'est de constater les éléments de force et de richesse que renferme notre pays.

La garde nationale, qui s'est montrée presque partout animée du sentiment de ses devoirs, compte aujourd'hui près de 4,000,000 d'hommes dont 1,200,000 sont armés de fusils ou de mousquetons.

Elle possède 500 canons.

L'organisation de 300 bataillons de gardes nationaux mobilisables est préparée conformément au Décret du 22 Juillet dernier.

Quant à la garde mobile, engagée pour une seule année en 1848, sa réorganisation, au mois de Janvier dernier, fit descendre l'effectif de 12,000 à 6,000 hommes, ce qui a produit une économie de 7,000,000.

L'armée, toujours fidèle à l'honneur et à son devoir, a continué, par son attitude ferme et inébranlable, à contenir les mauvaises passions à l'intérieur et à donner à l'extérieur une juste idée de notre force.

Nous avons maintenant sous les armes un total de 451,000 hommes et de 93,754 chevaux.

Nous possédons 16,495 bouches à feu de toute espèce dont 13,770 en bronze, les bouches à feu de campagne sont au nombre de 5,139.

C'est aussi à notre armée que l'Algérie doit le repos dont elle jouit ; une certaine agitation s'était manifestée chez les Arabes et les Kabyles ; mais des opérations bien combinées et bien exécutées y ont promptement rétabli l'ordre et la sécurité : notre influence s'en est accrue.

Les travaux du port d'Alger et ceux qui ont pour but de créer ou d'améliorer nos voies de communication se poursuivent avec l'activité permise par les allocations budgétaires.

La colonisation privée témoigne par l'état des récoltes de cette année même qu'elle est en voie de progrès, L'installation et le développement des colonies agricoles se continuent avec zèle et persévérance.

Notre flotte, qui protège nos colonies et fait respecter notre pavillon sur toutes les mers, se compose :

De la flotte active à voiles, comprenant 10 vaisseaux de ligne, 8 frégates, 18 corvettes, 24 bricks, 12 transports, et 24 bâtiments légers ;

De la flotte active à vapeur qui est de 14 frégates, 12 corvettes, et 34 avisos.

En dehors de la flotte active, se trouvent les bâtiments en disponibilité de rade et en commission de port. C'est une réserve prête à agir dans le plus bref délai. Cette réserve se compose de 10 vaisseaux, 15 frégates à voiles, 10 frégates à vapeur, 6 corvettes, et 6 avisos également à vapeur.

L'armement de ces bâtiments réclame le concours de 958 officiers de vaisseau de tout grade, les aspirants non compris, et un effectif de marins dont le chiffre ne s'élève pas à moins de 28,500 hommes.

Aucun trouble sérieux ne s'est manifesté au sein de la société coloniale, qui désormais repose sur la solide base de l'égalité civile et politique. Au bienfait de la liberté pour les noirs, est venu s'ajouter la compensation d'une indemnité pour les colons. Une équitable répartition sera, il faut l'espérer, un élément de paix, de travail et de prospérité.

En restant, autant qu'il sera possible, dans les prévisions du budget voté de 1849, le Gouvernement espère continuer à maintenir intact l'établissement naval et colonial, jusqu'à ce qu'il puisse en proposer l'amélioration et le développement à l'Assemblée Législative.

L'agriculture, cette source de toutes les richesses, a reçu tous les encouragements qu'il était possible de lui donner en si peu de temps.

Depuis le 20 Décembre dernier, 21 fermes-écoles ont été créées et forment, avec les 25 déjà existantes, le premier degré de l'enseignement agricole. D'autres seront établies.

Les instituts de la Saulsaie et de Grand-Jouan ont pris rang d'écoles régionales, et fonctionnent aujourd'hui comme établissements de l'Etat, d'après les prescriptions de la Loi du 3 Octobre.

L'Administration s'est fait mettre en possessions des fermes renfermées dans le petit parc de Versailles, destiné à l'institut national agronomique.

122 sociétés d'agriculture et plus de 300 comices ont pris part à la répartition des fonds votés pour l'encouragement de l'agriculture.

Par Arrêté du 25 Avril, 1849, une commission d'hommes spéciaux et dévoués s'est mise à l'étude de la question des colonies agricoles. Le désir du Gouvernement était de trouver le moyen le plus efficace de venir au secours des classes laborieuses en ramenant les ouvriers des villes aux travaux de la campagne, et, d'après l'exemple des autres pays dont les documents ont été réunis, d'utiliser, au profit des pauvres, la mise en valeur des terres incultes.

L'organisation des haras nationaux a été profondément modifiée par l'Arrêté du 11 Décembre, 1848.

L'industrie chevaline est en progrès; elle a partout repris sa marche, et toutes les institutions qui en découlent et qui s'étaient crues menacées sont revenues à leur niveau.

Le bon emploi du crédit de 500,000 francs alloué pour la remonte des établissements n'a pas été étranger à ce résultat. Jamais la remonte n'a été ni aussi considérable ni aussi brillante que cette année.

La situation des subsistances est satisfaisante; la récolte de 1848, bien que moins abondante que celle qui l'a précédée, offre cependant des ressources supérieures aux besoins du pays.

Les renseignements parvenus sur l'état des récoltes en terre sont très-favorables: c'est une consolation, au milieu de toutes nos épreuves, de voir l'abondance des produits promettre à nos populations le bon marché des denrées alimentaires.

L'exposition des produits de l'industrie, qui exerce une influence heureuse sur le maniement des affaires, s'est ouverte le 4 Juin: le nombre des exposants inscrits s'était élevé à 3,919; il dépasse, cette année, le chiffre de 4,000.

L'exécution de la loi sur les associations ouvrières se poursuit et touche à son terme. Sur 600 demandes parvenues au Département du Commerce, il ne reste aujourd'hui à statuer que sur 80. Des 3,000,000 votés, il a été alloué 2,292,000 francs à 47 associations.

Le commerce extérieur de la France s'était élevé, en 1847, à la somme totale de 2,614,000, 000 dont 1,343,000,000 à l'importation et 1,271,000,000 à l'exportation.

Rudement éprouvée par les événements politiques, l'année 1848 a vu, comme on pouvait s'y attendre, décroître considérablement le commerce Français. On n'en saurait indiquer exactement la valeur, l'Administration des douanes n'étant pas encore en mesure d'en déterminer le chiffre ; mais on ne peut douter que ce chiffre se trouvera réduit dans une proportion très-notable. La mise en consommation des matières nécessaires à l'industrie, en effet, a beaucoup perdu : celle des fontes est tombée de 95,941 tonnes à 45,553 ; la houille, de 2,173,000 tonnes à 1,796,000 ; la laine, de 138,000 quintaux à 80,962 ; la soie, de 15,000 à 7,688, &c.

Un élément, au reste, permettra de juger assez exactement des variations qu'a subies notre commerce extérieur en 1848 : c'est la recette des douanes.

En 1847, elle avait donné en moyenne mensuelle environ 11,000,000.

Durant les mois de Janvier et Février 1848, elle produit une moyenne de 8,700,000 francs. A partir de Mars, et pour chacun des 3 mois suivants, elle va s'affaiblissant, et ne donne plus, en moyenne, qu'environ 5,000,000 ; durant les mois de Juillet, Août, et Septembre, la moyenne se relève un peu au-dessus de 8,000,000 ; enfin, pour les mois d'Octobre, Novembre, et Décembre, elle atteint le chiffre de 9,000,000, c'est-à-dire près du double de ce qu'avaient produit les mois les plus agités de l'exercice.

Il était facile de voir que dans le cours du dernier trimestre, et à mesure que le pays approchait du moment où le pouvoir allait se trouver régulièrement et définitivement constitué, la marche des affaires commerciales s'améliorait en même temps que se raffermissait la confiance publique.

Cette influence s'est fait principalement sentir sur nos exportations. Presque tous les articles avaient, durant le 1er semestre, éprouvé de fortes pertes ; à l'aide de l'élévation et de l'extension des primes (Décret du 10 Juin, 1848), elles reprennent une activité qui se fait particulièrement remarquer vers la fin de l'année. A cette époque, la diminution disparaît pour la majeure partie des articles ; pour certains même, comme les vins, les eaux-de-vie, les soieries et les toiles, il y a, comparativement à 1847, quelque accroissement.

Si en Janvier et Février on trouve des différences en moins assez sensibles, comparativement aux mois correspondants de 1848, l'avantage en Mars et Avril passe, pour la plupart des marchandises importées et exportées, du côté de 1849. Ainsi, pour citer quelques-uns de ces articles qui alimentent plus spécialement le travail industriel, le coton, au 30 Avril, donne 21,000,000 de kil. au lieu de 13 ; la houille, 567,000 tonnes au lieu de 447,000 ; la laine, 45,765 quintaux au lieu de 21,480 ; le sucre brut, 26,000,000 de kil. au lieu de 16 ; l'indigo, 394,000 kil. au lieu de 289,000 ; le bois d'acajou, 700,000 kil. au lieu de 505,000, et enfin la recette des douanes au 30 Avril, 1849, s'élève à 39,000,000 de francs au lieu de 26,787,000 qu'elle avait donnés à pareille époque de 1848 ; et ce qui prouve que l'amélioration s'est continuée en Mai, malgré les agitations qui ont affecté ce mois, c'est qu'il a donné 5,500,000 de plus que celui de 1847, et que Paris a vu, comparativement aussi à Mai 1848, s'élever de 6,000,000 le chiffre de ses exportations.

Le décret qui avait temporairement élevé le taux des primes de sortie ayant cessé d'être en vigueur à partir du 1er Janvier, 1849, on eût pu croire que nos exportations allaient, à dater de ce moment, se ralentir, et que cette mesure législative aurait, sous ce rapport, escompté en 1848 les bénéfices de 1849 ; il n'en a rien été : nos tissus de toute sorte montraient, au 31 Mai dernier, un accroissement très-marqué, et il en était de même de nos sucres raffinés, de nos peaux ouvrées, de nos verreries, &c.

En résumé, la situation du commerce Français, vivement compromise pendant une grande partie de l'année 1848, s'est un peu améliorée vers la fin de cet exercice et a pris une marche positivement ascendante depuis le commencement de 1849. C'est un résultat qui, en assurant au présent des avantages certains, semble être aussi une garantie de sécurité pour l'avenir.

La question de la réforme pénitentiaire, la question du travail dans les prisons, se rattachent aux intérêts de l'industrie. Chacun des systèmes a été particulièrement étudié ; le rétablissement de la discipline est l'objet d'efforts persévérants, et une idée préoccupe surtout l'Administration, celle de la part qu'il conviendrait peut-être d'accorder à l'agriculture dans la réorganisation des travaux des condamnés.

Actuellement on compte en France plus de 1,300 établissements publics pour les malades, les vieillards, les enfants, &c. dont les revenus annuels dépassent la somme de 53,000,000 francs.

Il faut y ajouter près de 8,000 bureaux de bienfaisance pour la distribution de secours à domicile, qui possèdent environ 13,500,000 francs de revenus ordinaires.

Enfin d'autres services charitables, relatifs aux monts-de-piété, aux enfants trouvés, aux aliénés indigents, aux sourds-muets et aux aveugles, emploient au soulagement des infortunes des sommes qui s'élèvent à près de 50,000,000 francs. C'est donc environ 116,000,000 par an qui sont consacrés à l'assistance publique, sans compter les charités privées, dont il est impossible de calculer l'importance, même approximativement.

Mais ces secours, tout immenses qu'ils paraissent, sont encore trop faibles si on les compare à la masse des besoins. Le Gouvernement le sait, et il a la ferme volonté de pourvoir à cette insuffisance.

Les mesures qui peuvent intéresser la santé publique ont été prises sur tous les points de la France. Des comités d'hygiène et de salubrité ont été institués; leur organisation promet, dans un avenir prochain, d'heureux résultats, et dès aujourd'hui assure d'utiles secours aux populations envahies par le choléra.

Les crédits votés par l'Assemblée Nationale ont permis de venir en aide aux communes atteintes et dont les ressources étaient insuffisantes pour procurer aux familles pauvres les secours dont elles avaient besoin en présence de l'épidémie.

Malgré l'avantage qu'il y aurait eu à augmenter les travaux publics, afin d'employer tous les bras oisifs, l'état de nos finances engagea l'Assemblée constituante à décréter des réductions considérables, qui ont porté sur l'achèvement des routes, l'entretien et les dotations spéciales affectées aux réparations des principales rivières et des ports maritimes.

Nos 4,800 kilomètres de canaux ont eu à supporter des réductions analogues.

Les 2 nouveaux canaux même, commencés suivant un décret de l'Assemblée, le premier entre Nogent et Marcilly, le second dérivé de la Sauldre pour l'assainissement de la Sologne, ont été interrompus faute de crédits, quoique le but eût été d'offrir aux ouvriers un salaire assuré.

Cependant, 2 des lignes les plus importantes n'ont pas été abandonnées et touchent presque à leur fin: ce sont le canal de la Marne au Rhin et le canal latéral à la Garonne.

Quant aux chemins de fer exécutés par l'Etat, on avait déjà dépensé, au 31 Décembre, 1847, pour les lignes construites, près de 800,000,000.

D'après les évaluations des ingénieurs, il restait encore à dépenser, pour les terminer, une somme de 330,000,000. La crise financière a forcé de réduire successivement cette somme jusqu'à 46,000,000.

Le réseau du Nord a été accru, au mois de Mars, d'une section comprise entre Creil et Noyon.

Le chemin qui borde la rive gauche de la Loire a été prolongé jusqu'à Saumur.

Dans les chemins du Centre, on s'est avancé jusqu'à Nérondes.

Sur la grande ligne entre Paris et Marseille, la section de Marseille à Avignon est ouverte. L'Etat administre provisoirement cette ligne, dont la compagnie concessionnaire a été légalement dépossédée.

D'Avignon à Lyon, aucun travail n'a été entrepris. Entre Lyon et Paris, l'Etat a repris la concession qu'il avait faite le 20 Décembre, 1845.

De Paris à Tonnerre et de Dijon à Châlons-sur-Saône, la voie de fer va être ouverte dans quelques semaines. Pour combler les lacunes de Tonnerre à Dijon et de Châlons à Lyon, il faut encore près de 2 ans de travaux non interrompus.

Les contrées de l'Ouest n'ont obtenu qu'un seul tracé, celui qui joindra la capitale avec la ville de Rennes. La tête de cette ligne était l'un des deux chemins de Versailles; la Loi du 21 Avril dernier rattache au chemin de la rive gauche les travaux complètement terminés entre Versailles et Chartres. Le transport des voyageurs commencera au 10 Juillet, et dans 8 mois le point extrême pourra être porté à la Loupe, et ouvrir ainsi un accès à la population du département de l'Orne.

L'exploitation des mines et celle des usines métallurgiques ont, malgré la crise commerciale de 1848, fait quelques progrès.

45 concessions nouvelles de mines ont été données, c'est-à-dire autant que dans les 3 années précédentes réunies. Depuis le 1er Janvier, 1849, jusqu'au 19 Mai, 10 autres concessions ont été accordées.

Les permissions d'usines ont suivi le même progrès. En 1847 il en avait été accordé 36; pour 1848 on en compte 55; enfin 19 depuis le 1er Janvier.

La carte géologique proprement dite est achevée et publiée.

Le crédit proposé au budget de l'exercice 1849 pour l'organisation d'un service hydraulique ayant pour but le dessèchement des terres insalubres n'ayant pas été admis, l'Administration a dû nécessairement se borner à organiser un service spécial dans un certain nombre de départements où les Conseils Généraux avaient donné leur approbation à cette mesure.

L'industrie des bâtiments civils, qui occupe un grand nombre d'ouvriers et d'artistes, a souffert de notre état de crise.

L'Assemblée Nationale s'est bornée à voter les crédits nécessaires à l'achèvement des constructions déjà entreprises depuis plusieurs années: aussi les travaux ont-ils été repris à la Sainte-Chapelle, à l'Ecole des Mines, à la Bibliothèque Sainte-Geneviève, à l'Ecole Polytechnique, à l'Ecole Vétérinaire de Lyon, &c.

Le Gouvernement a pensé qu'il serait digne de la République d'achever le palais du Louvre, où seraient réunis toutes nos richesses littéraires et artistiques; il en a fait la demande à l'Assemblée Nationale. Cette demande a été l'objet des études d'une commission qui n'a pas achevé son travail. Cette question importante sera de nouveau soumise à l'Assemblée.

Dès le début de son administration, le Ministre de l'Instruction Publique a institué 2 commissions pour préparer 2 projets de lois sur l'enseignement primaire et sur l'enseignement secondaire, ayant pour but principal l'application immédiate et sincère du principe de liberté inscrit dans la Constitution. Le résultat de leurs laborieuses délibérations sera sans retard présenté à l'Assemblée.

Un projet de loi sur l'établissement de cours d'administration pratique dans chaque faculté de département a été présenté à l'Assemblée Nationale. Elle n'a rien décidé. La question sera de nouveau posée devant l'Assemblée Législative.

Deux arrêtés du Pouvoir Exécutif, en date du 30 Mai et du 16 Août, avaient placé dans les attributions du Ministère de l'Instruction Publique les établissements d'enseignement en Algérie, et Alger était devenu le siège une académie. Une commission, présidée par l'un de nos généraux les plus expérimentés, a été chargée d'étudier le moyen de répandre la connaissance de la langue Arabe parmi les Européens, celle de la langue Française parmi les indigènes.

L'Administration des cultes n'a rencontré que des encouragements et des approbations dans le rapport de la commission du budget.

Des négociations ont été entamées avec la cour de Rome pour l'érection de 3 sièges épiscopaux dans nos possessions coloniales. Cette mesure sera le complément de l'émancipation des noirs et achèvera d'assimiler les colonies à la métropole.

La rénovation des facultés de théologie catholique, conformément au vœu de l'Assemblée Nationale, a également excité les préoccupations du Gouvernement. Une commission a élaboré un projet sur cette délicate question, qui touche aux intérêts les plus élevés de la religion, et, à ce titre, ne peut être utilement résolue sans la participation du pouvoir spirituel.

Des allocations considérables, en permettant d'élever le traitement des instituteurs et d'apporter une première amélioration à la position des desservants, témoignaient chez l'Assemblée de la ferme volonté de répondre aux besoins religieux et intellectuels des populations. Cette pensée de haute politique, d'équité, et de religion sera comprise et continuée sans doute par l'Assemblée Législative.

Il y a aujourd'hui en France 68 établissements d'instruction supérieure et 6,269 étudiants.

En dehors de l'école normale, qui reçoit 115 élèves, on compte 1,220 établissements d'instruction secondaire et 105,065 élèves. Il existe 56 lycées, 309 collèges communaux et 955 établissements particuliers.

Les écoles primaires reçoivent 2,176,079 garçons et 1,354,056 filles, ce qui donne un total de 3,530,135 élèves.

Ces détails sommaires vous prouveront, Messieurs, que l'Administration s'est acquittée avec zèle de ses devoirs. La révolution lui a imprimé une impulsion nouvelle; et dans les diverses branches qui la composent, elle ne s'est pas bornée au simple accomplissement de ses fonctions, mais elle a cherché les moyens de répondre à l'attente publique, en préparant tous les projets d'amélioration qui seront soumis à l'Assemblée Législative.

Il est dans la destinée de la France d'ébranler le monde lorsqu'elle se remue, de le calmer lorsqu'elle se modère. Aussi l'Europe nous rend-elle responsable de son repos ou de son agitation. Cette responsabilité nous impose de grands devoirs; elle domine notre situation.

Après Février, le contre-coup de notre révolution se fit sentir depuis la Baltique jusqu'à la Méditerranée, et les hommes qui me précédèrent à la tête des affaires ne voulurent pas lancer la France dans une guerre dont on ne pouvait prévoir le terme: ils eurent raison.

L'état de la civilisation en Europe ne permet de livrer son pays aux hasards d'une collision générale qu'autant qu'on a pour soi, d'une manière évidente, le droit et la nécessité. Un intérêt secondaire, une raison plus ou moins spécieuse d'influence politique, ne suffisent pas: il faut qu'une nation comme la nôtre, si elle s'engage dans une lutte colossale, puisse justifier, à la face du monde, ou la grandeur de ses succès ou la grandeur de ses revers.

Lorsque je parvins au pouvoir, de graves questions s'agitaient sur divers points de l'Europe. Au delà du Rhin comme au delà des Alpes, depuis le Danemark jusqu'en Sicile, il y avait pour nous un intérêt à sauvegarder, une influence à exercer. Mais cet intérêt et cette influence méritaient-ils, pour être énergiquement soutenus, qu'on courût les chances d'une conflagration Européenne? voilà la question: ainsi posée, elle est facile à résoudre.

Sous ce point de vue, dans toutes les affaires extérieures qui ont été le sujet des négociations que nous allons passer en revue, la France a fait ce qu'il était possible de faire pour l'intérêt de ses alliés, sans cependant recourir aux armes, cette dernière raison des Gouvernements.

La Sicile, il y a près d'un an, s'était insurgée contre le Roi de Naples. L'Angleterre et la France intervinrent avec leur flotte pour arrêter des hostilités qui prenaient le caractère du plus cruel acharnement, et il faut le dire, quoique l'Angleterre eût plus d'intérêt dans cette question que la France elle-même, les 2 Amiraux s'unirent d'un commun accord pour obtenir du Roi Ferdinand en faveur des Siciliens une amnistie complète et une constitution qui garantissait leur indépendance législative et administrative. Ils refusèrent. Les Amiraux quittèrent la Sicile, forcés d'abandonner le rôle de médiateurs, et bientôt la guerre recommença. Un peu plus tard, ce même peuple qui avait repoussé des conditions favorables était obligé de se rendre à discrétion.

Au nord de l'Italie, une guerre sérieuse avait éclaté, et un moment, lorsque l'armée Piémontaise poussa ses succès jusqu'au Mincio, l'on avait pu croire que la Lombardie recouvrerait son indépendance. La désunion fit promptement évanouir cet espoir, et le Roi de Piémont fut obligé de se retirer dans ses Etats.

A l'époque de mon élection, la médiation de la France et de l'Angleterre avait été acceptée par les parties belligérantes. Il ne s'agissait plus que d'obtenir pour le Piémont les conditions les moins désavantageuses. Notre rôle était indiqué, commandé même. S'y refuser, c'était allumer une guerre Européenne. Quoique l'Autriche n'eût envoyé aucun négociateur à Bruxelles, lieu indiqué de la conférence, le Gouvernement Français conseilla au Piémont de résister au mouvement qui l'entraînait à la guerre et de ne pas recommencer une lutte trop inégale.

Ce conseil ne fut pas suivi, vous le savez. Et après une nouvelle défaite, le Roi de Sardaigne conclut directement avec l'Autriche un nouvel armistice.

Quoique la France ne fût pas responsable de cette conduite, elle ne pouvait pas permettre que le Piémont fût écrasé, et du haut de la tribune, le Gouvernement déclara qu'il maintiendrait l'intégrité du territoire d'un pays qui couvre une partie de nos frontières. D'un côté, il s'est efforcé de modérer les exigences de l'Autriche demandant une indemnité de guerre qui parut exorbitante; de l'autre, il a engagé le Piémont à faire de justes sacrifices pour obtenir une paix honorable. Nous avons tout lieu de croire que nous réussirons dans cette œuvre de conciliation.

Tandis qu'au nord de l'Italie se passaient ces événements, de nouvelles commotions venaient au centre de la Péninsule compliquer la question.

En Toscane, le Grand-Duc avait quitté ses Etats. A Rome s'était accomplie une révolution qui avait vivement ému le monde catholique et libéral : en effet, depuis 2 ans on était habitué à voir sur le saint-siège un pontife qui prenait l'initiative des réformes utiles, et dont le nom, répété dans des hymnes de reconnaissance, d'un bout de l'Italie à l'autre, était le symbole de la liberté et le gage de toutes les espérances, lorsque tout à coup l'on apprit avec étonnement que ce Souverain, naguère l'idole de son peuple, avait été contraint de s'enfuir furtivement de sa capitale.

Aussi, les actes d'agression qui obligèrent Pie IX à quitter Rome parurent-ils aux yeux de l'Europe être l'œuvre d'une conjuration, bien plus que le mouvement spontané d'un peuple qui ne pouvait être passé en un instant de l'enthousiasme le plus vif à l'ingratitude la plus affligeante.

Les Puissances Catholiques envoyèrent des Ambassadeurs à Gaëte pour s'occuper des graves intérêts de la Papauté. La France devait y être représentée; elle écouta tout sans engager son action, mais après la défaite de Novare les affaires prirent une tournure plus décidée: l'Autriche, de concert avec Naples, répondant à l'appel du Saint-Père, notifie au Gouvernement Français qu'il eût à prendre un parti, car ces Puissances étaient décidées à marcher sur Rome pour y rétablir purement et simplement l'autorité du Pape.

Mis en demeure de nous expliquer, nous n'avions que trois moyens à adopter :

Ou nous opposer par les armes à toute espèce d'intervention, et, en ce cas, nous rompons avec toute l'Europe catholique pour le seul intérêt de la République Romaine, que nous n'avions pas reconnue;

Ou laisser les 3 Puissances coalisées rétablir à leur gré et sans ménagement l'autorité papale;

Ou bien, enfin, exercer de notre propre mouvement une action directe et indépendante.

Il nous semblait facile de faire comprendre aux Romains que, pressés de toutes parts, ils n'avaient de chances de salut qu'en nous; que si notre présence avait pour résultat le retour de Pie IX, ce souverain, fidèle à lui-même, ramènerait avec lui la réconciliation et la liberté; qu'une fois à Rome, nous garantissons l'intégrité du territoire, en ôtant tout prétexte à l'Autriche d'entrer en Romagne. Nous pouvions même espérer que notre drapeau, arboré sans contestation au centre de l'Italie, aurait étendu son influence protectrice sur la Péninsule tout entière, dont aucune des douleurs ne peut nous trouver indifférents.

L'expédition de Civita-Vecchia fut donc résolue de concert avec l'Assemblée Nationale, qui vota les crédits nécessaires. Elle avait toutes les chances de succès: les renseignements reçus s'accordaient à dire qu'à Rome, excepté un petit nombre d'hommes qui s'étaient emparés du pouvoir, la majorité de la population attendait notre arrivée avec impatience; la simple raison devait faire croire qu'il en était ainsi, car, entre notre intervention et celle des autres Puissances, le choix ne pouvait pas être douteux.

Un concours de circonstances malheureuses en décida autrement: notre corps expéditionnaire, peu nombreux, car une résistance sérieuse n'était pas prévue, débarqua à Civita-Vecchia, et le Gouvernement est instruit que s'il eût pu arriver à Rome le même jour, on lui en aurait ouvert les portes avec joie. Mais pendant que le Général Oudinot notifiait son arrivée au Gouvernement de Rome, Garibaldi y entra à la tête d'une troupe formée des réfugiés de toutes les parties de l'Italie, et même du reste de l'Europe, et sa présence, on le conçoit, accrut subitement la force du parti de la résistance.

Le 30 Avril, 6,000 de nos soldats se présentèrent sous les murs de Rome. Ils furent reçus à coups de fusils; quelques-uns même, attirés dans un piège, furent faits prisonniers. Nous devons tous gémir du sang répandu dans cette triste journée. Cette lutte inattendue, sans rien changer au but final de notre entreprise, a paralysé nos intentions bienfaisantes et rendu vains les efforts de nos négociateurs.

Au nord de l'Allemagne, l'insurrection avait compromis l'indépendance d'un Etat, l'un des plus anciens et des plus fidèles alliés de la France. Le Danemark avait vu les populations des Duchés de Holstein et de Schleswig se révolter contre lui, tout en reconnaissant cependant la souveraineté du prince qui régnait en ce moment. Le Gouvernement central de l'Allemagne crut devoir décréter l'incorporation du Schleswig à la confédération, parce qu'une grande partie du peuple était de race Allemande.

Cette mesure est devenue la cause d'une guerre acharnée. L'Angleterre a offert sa médiation, qui a été acceptée. La France, la Russie, la Suède, se sont montrées disposées à appuyer le Danemark.

Des négociations ouvertes depuis plusieurs mois ont amené à cette conclusion que le Schleswig formerait, sous la souveraineté du Roi de Danemark, un état particulier. Mais, ce principe admis, on n'a pu s'entendre sur les conséquences qu'il fallait en tirer, et les hostilités ont recommencé. Les efforts des Puissances que je viens de nommer tendent en ce moment à la conclusion d'un nouvel armistice, préliminaire d'un arrangement définitif.

Le reste de l'Allemagne est agité par de graves perturbations. Les efforts faits par l'Assemblée de Francfort en faveur de l'unité Allemande ont provoqué la résistance de plusieurs des états fédérés, et amené un conflit qui, se rapprochant de nos frontières, doit attirer notre surveillance. L'empire d'Autriche, engagé dans une lutte acharnée avec la Hongrie, s'est cru autorisé à appeler le secours de la Russie. L'intervention de cette Puissance, la marche de ses armées vers l'Occident, ne pouvaient qu'exciter à un haut degré la sollicitude du Gouvernement, qui a déjà échangé à ce sujet des notes diplomatiques.

Ainsi, partout en Europe, il y a des causes de collision que nous avons cherché à apaiser, tout en conservant notre indépendance d'action et notre caractère propre.

Dans toutes ces questions, nous avons toujours été d'accord avec l'Angleterre, qui nous a offert un concours auquel nous devons être sensibles.

La Russie a reconnu la République.

Le Gouvernement a conclu avec l'Espagne et la Belgique des Traités de Postes qui facilitent les communications internationales.

En Amérique l'Etat de Montevideo s'est singulièrement modifié ; d'après les renseignements de l'Amiral, qui commande dans ces parages nos forces navales, la population Française a émigré d'une des rives du Rio de la Plata à l'autre. Ce déplacement de la population Française doit nécessairement à l'avenir être pris en considération.

Enfin, Messieurs les Représentants, si toutes nos négociations n'ont pas obtenu le succès que nous devons en attendre, soyez persuadés que le seul mobile qui anime le Gouvernement de la République, c'est le sentiment de l'honneur et de l'intérêt de la France.

Tel est, Messieurs, l'exposé sommaire de l'état actuel des affaires de la République. Vous voyez que nos préoccupations sont graves, nos difficultés grandes, et qu'il nous reste aujourd'hui, au dedans comme au dehors, bien des questions importantes à résoudre. Fort de votre appui et de celui de la nation, j'espère néanmoins m'élever à la hauteur de la tâche, en suivant une marche nette et précise.

Cette marche consiste, d'une côté, à prendre hardiment l'initiative de toutes les améliorations, de toutes les réformes qui peuvent contribuer au bien-être de tous, et, de l'autre, à réprimer, par la sévérité de lois devenues nécessaires, les tentatives de désordre et d'anarchie qui prolongent le malaise général. Je ne bercerai pas le peuple d'illusions et d'utopies qui n'exaltent les imaginations que pour aboutir à la déception et à la misère. Partout où j'apercevrai une idée féconde en résultats pratiques, je la ferai étudier, et, si elle est applicable, je vous proposerai de l'appliquer.

La principale mission d'un Gouvernement Républicain, surtout, c'est d'éclairer le peuple par la manifestation de la vérité, de dissiper l'éclat trompeur que l'intérêt personnel des partis fait briller à ses yeux. Un fait malheureux se retrouve à chaque page de l'histoire : c'est que plus les maux d'une société sont réels et patents, plus une minorité aveugle se lance dans le mysticisme des théories.

Au commencement du XVII^e siècle, ce n'était pas pour le triomphe des idées insensées de quelques fanatiques, prenant la Bible pour texte et pour excuse de leurs folies, que le peuple Anglais luttait pendant 20 ans, mais pour la suprématie de sa religion et le triomphe de sa liberté.

De même, après 89, ce n'était pas pour les idées de Babœuf ou de tel autre sectaire que la société fut bouleversée, mais pour l'abolition des privilèges, pour la division de la propriété, pour l'égalité devant la loi, pour l'admission de tous aux emplois.

Eh bien ! encore aujourd'hui ce n'est pas pour l'application de théories inapplicables ou d'avantages imaginaires que la révolution s'est accomplie, mais pour avoir un Gouvernement qui, résultat de la volonté de tous, soit plus intelligent des besoins du peuple et puisse conduire, sans préoccupations dynastiques, les destinées du pays.

Notre devoir est donc de faire la part entre les idées fausses et les idées vraies qui jaillissent d'une révolution ; puis, cette séparation faite, il faut se mettre à la tête des unes et combattre courageusement les autres. La vérité se trouvera en faisant appel à toutes les intelligences, en ne repoussant rien avant de l'avoir approfondi, en adoptant tout ce qui aura été soumis à l'examen des hommes compétents et qui aura subi l'épreuve de la discussion.

D'après ce que je viens d'exposer, 2 sortes de lois seront présentées à votre approbation, les unes pour rassurer la société et réprimer les excès, les autres pour introduire partout des améliorations réelles ; parmi celles-ci j'indiquerai les suivantes :

Loi sur les institutions de secours et de prévoyance, afin d'assurer aux classes laborieuses un refuge contre les conséquences de la suspension des travaux, des infirmités, et de la vieillesse ;

Loi sur la réforme du régime hypothécaire : il faut qu'une institution nouvelle vienne féconder l'agriculture, en lui apportant d'utiles ressources, en facilitant ses emprunts ; elle préludera à la formation d'établissements de crédit à l'instar de ceux qui existent dans les divers états d'Europe ;

Loi sur l'abolition de la prestation en nature ;

Loi sur la subvention en faveur des associations ouvrières et des comices agricoles ;

Loi sur la défense gratuite des indigents, qui n'est pas suffisamment assurée dans notre législation. La justice, qui est une dette de l'Etat, et qui par conséquent est gratuite, se trouve environnée de formalités onéreuses, qui en rendent l'accès difficile aux citoyens pauvres et ignorants. Leurs droits et leurs intérêts ne sont pas assez protégés ; sous l'empire de notre constitution démocratique, cette anomalie doit disparaître.

Enfin, une loi est préparée ayant pour but d'améliorer la pension de retraite des sous-officiers et soldats, et d'introduire dans la loi sur le recrutement de l'armée les modifications dont l'expérience a démontré l'utilité.

Indépendamment de ces projets, vous aurez à vous occuper des lois organiques que la dernière Assemblée n'a pas eu le temps d'élaborer et qui sont le complément nécessaire de la Constitution.

Ce qui précède suffit, Messieurs, je l'espère, pour vous prouver que mes intentions sont conformes aux vôtres. Vous voulez comme moi travailler au bien-être de ce peuple qui nous a élus, à la gloire, à la prospérité de la Patrie ; comme moi, vous pensez que les meil-leurs moyens d'y parvenir ne sont pas la violence et la ruse, mais la fermeté et la justice. La France se confie au patriotisme des membres de l'Assemblée; elle espère que la vérité, dévoilée au grand jour de la tribune, confondra le mensonge et désarmera l'erreur. De son côté le Pouvoir Exécutif fera son devoir.

J'appelle sous le drapeau de la République et sur le terrain de la Constitution tous les hommes dévoués au salut du pays; je compte sur leur concours et sur leurs lumières pour m'éclairer, sur ma conscience pour me conduire, sur la protection de Dieu pour accomplir ma mission.

Recevez, Messieurs, l'assurance de ma haute estime.

LOUIS NAPOLEON BONAPARTE.

MESSAGE of the President of The United States to Congress, relative to an Invasion and commencement of Hostilities by Mexico.—Washington, May 11, 1846.

FELLOW CITIZENS OF THE SENATE, AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

THE existing state of the relations between The United States and Mexico renders it proper that I should bring the subject to the consideration of Congress. In my message at the commencement of your present session, the state of these relations, the causes which led to the suspension of diplomatic intercourse between the 2 countries in March, 1845, and the long-continued and unredressed wrongs and injuries committed by the Mexican Government on citizens of The United States, in their persons and property, were briefly set forth.

As the facts and opinions which were then laid before you were carefully considered, I cannot better express my present convictions of the condition of affairs up to that time, than by referring you to that communication.

The strong desire to establish peace with Mexico on liberal and honourable terms, and the readiness of this Government to regulate and adjust our boundary, and other causes of difference with that Power, on such fair and equitable principles as would lead to permanent relations of the most friendly nature, induced me in September last to seek the re-opening of diplomatic relations between the 2 countries. Every measure adopted on our part had for its object the furtherance of these desired results. In communicating to Congress a succinct statement of the injuries which we had suffered from Mexico, and which have been accumulating during a period of more than 20 years, every expression that could tend to inflame the people of Mexico, or defeat or delay a pacific result, was carefully avoided. An envoy of The United States repaired to Mexico, with full powers to adjust every existing difference. But though present on the Mexican soil, by agreement between the 2 Governments, invested with full powers, and bearing evidence of the most friendly dispositions, his mission has been unavailing. The Mexican Government not only refused to receive him, or listen to his propositions, but, after a long-continued series of menaces, have at last invaded our territory, and shed the blood of our fellow-citizens on our own soil.

It now becomes my duty to state more in detail the origin, progress, and failure of that mission. In pursuance of the instructions given in September last, an inquiry was made, on the 13th of October, 1845, in the most friendly terms, through our Consul in Mexico, of the Minister for Foreign Affairs, whether the Mexican Government "would receive an envoy from The United States intrusted with full powers to adjust all the questions in dispute between the 2 Governments;" with the assurance that "should the answer be in the affirmative, such an envoy would be immediately dispatched to Mexico." The Mexican Minister, on the 15th of October, gave an affirmative answer to this inquiry, requesting, at the same time, that our naval force at Vera Cruz might be withdrawn, lest its continued presence might assume the appearance of menace and coercion pending the negotiations. This force was immediately withdrawn. On the 10th of November, 1845, Mr. John Slidell, of Louisiana, was commissioned by me as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of The United States to Mexico, and was entrusted with full powers to adjust both the questions of the Texas boundary and of indemnification to our citizens. The redress of the wrongs of our citizens naturally and inseparably blended itself with the question of boundary. The settlement of the one question, in any correct view of the subject, involves that of the other. I could not, for a moment, entertain the idea that the claims of our much-injured and long-suffering citizens, many of which had existed for more than 20 years, should be postponed, or separated from the settlement of the boundary question.

Mr. Slidell arrived at Vera Cruz on the 30th of November, and was courteously received by the authorities of that city. But the Government of General Herrera was then tottering to its fall. The revolutionary party had seized upon the Texas question to effect or hasten its overthrow. Its determination to restore friendly relations with The United States, and to receive our Minister, to negotiate for the settlement of this question, was violently assailed, and was made the great theme of denunciation against it. The Government of General Herrera, there is good reason to believe, was sincerely desirous to receive our Minister; but it yielded to the storm raised by its enemies, and on the 21st of December refused to accredit Mr. Slidell upon the most frivolous pretexts. These are so fully and ably exposed in the note of Mr. Slidell, of the 24th of December last, to the Mexican Minister of Foreign Relations, herewith transmitted, that I deem it unnecessary to enter into further detail on this portion of the subject.

Five days after the date of Mr. Slidell's note, General Herrera yielded the Government to General Paredes, without a struggle, and on the 30th of December resigned the Presidency. This revolution was accomplished solely by the army, the people having taken little part in the contest; and thus the supreme power in Mexico passed into the hands of a military leader.

Determined to leave no effort untried to effect an amicable adjustment with Mexico, I directed Mr. Slidell to present his credentials to the Government of General Paredes, and ask to be officially received by him. There would have been less ground for taking this step had General Paredes come into power by a regular constitutional succession. In that event his administration would have been considered but a mere constitutional continuance of the Government of General Herrera, and the refusal of the latter to receive our Minister would have been deemed conclusive, unless an intimation had been given by General Paredes of his desire to reverse the decision of his predecessor. But the Government of General Paredes owes its existence to a military revolution, by which the subsisting constitutional authorities had been subverted. The form of Government was entirely changed, as well as all the high functionaries by whom it was administered.

Under these circumstances, Mr. Slidell, in obedience to my direction, addressed a note to the Mexican Minister of Foreign Relations, under date of the 1st of March last, asking to be received by that Government in the diplomatic character to which he had been appointed. This minister, in his reply under date of the 12th of March, reiterated the arguments of his predecessor, and, in terms that may be considered as giving just grounds of offence to the Government and people of The United States, denied the application of Mr. Slidell. Nothing, therefore, remained for our envoy but to demand his passports, and return to his own country.

Thus the Government of Mexico, though solemnly pledged by official acts in October last to receive and accredit an American envoy, violated their plighted faith, and refused the offer of a peaceful adjustment of our difficulties. Not only was the offer rejected, but the indignity of its rejection was enhanced by the manifest breach of faith in refusing to admit the envoy, who came because they had bound themselves to receive him. Nor can it be said, that the offer was fruitless from the want of opportunity of discussing it—our envoy was present on their own soil. Nor can it be ascribed to a want of sufficient powers—our envoy had full powers to adjust every question of difference. Nor was there room for complaint that our propositions for settlement were unreasonable—permission was not even given our envoy to make any proposition whatever. Nor can it be objected that we, on our part, would not listen to any reasonable terms of their suggestion—the Mexican Government refused all negotiation, and have made no proposition of any kind.

In my message at the commencement of the present session, I informed you, that, upon the earnest appeal both of the Congress and Convention of Texas, I had ordered an efficient military force to take a position “between the Nueces and the Del Norte.” This had become necessary, to meet a threatened invasion of Texas by the Mexican forces, for which extensive military preparations had been made. The invasion was threatened solely because Texas had determined, in accordance with a solemn resolution of the Congress of The United States, to annex herself to our Union; and, under these circumstances, it was plainly our duty to extend our protection over her citizens and soil.

This force was concentrated at Corpus Christi, and remained there, until after I had received such information from Mexico as rendered it probable, if not certain, that the Mexican Government would refuse to receive our envoy.

Meantime Texas, by the final action of our Congress, had become an integral part of our Union. The Congress of Texas, by its Act of December 19, 1836, had declared the Rio del Norte to be the boundary of that Republic. Its jurisdiction had been extended and exercised beyond the Nueces. The country between that river and the Del Norte had been represented in the Congress and in the Convention of Texas; had thus taken part in the act of annexation itself; and is now included within one of our congressional districts. Our own Congress had, moreover, with great unanimity, by the Act approved December 31, 1845, recognized the country beyond the Nueces as a part of our territory, by including it within our own revenue system; and a revenue officer, to reside within that district, has been appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. It became, therefore, of urgent necessity to provide for the defence of that portion of our country. Accordingly, on the 13th of January last, instructions were issued to the general in command of these troops to occupy the left bank of the Del Norte. This river, which is the south-western boundary of the State of Texas, is an exposed frontier; from this quarter invasion was threatened; upon it, and in its immediate vicinity, in the judgment of high military experience, are the proper stations for the protecting forces of the Government. In addition to this important consideration, several others occurred to induce this movement. Among these are the facilities afforded by the ports at Brazos Santiago and the mouth of the Del Norte, for the reception of supplies by sea; the stronger and more healthful military positions; the convenience for obtaining a ready and more abundant supply of provisions, water, fuel, and forage; and the advantages which are afforded by the Del Norte in forwarding supplies to such posts as may be established in the interior and upon the Indian frontier.

The movement of the troops to the Del Norte was made by the commanding general, under positive instructions to abstain from all aggressive acts towards Mexico or Mexican citizens, and to regard the relations between that Republic and The United States as peaceful, unless she should declare war, or commit acts of hostility indicative of a state of war. He was specially directed to protect private property, and respect personal rights.

The army moved from Corpus Christi on the 11th of March, and on the 28th of that month arrived on the left bank of the Del Norte, opposite to Matamoras, where it encamped on a commanding position, which has since been strengthened by the erection of field works. A depôt has also been established at Point Isabel, near the Brazos Santiago, 30 miles in rear of the encampment. The selection of his position was necessarily confided to the judgment of the general in command.

The Mexican forces at Matamoras assumed a belligerent attitude, and, on the 12th of April, General Ampudia, then in command, notified General Taylor to break up his camp within 24 hours, and to retire beyond the Nueces River, and, in the event of his failure to comply with these demands, announced that arms, and arms alone, must decide the question. But no open act of hostility was committed until the 24th of April. On that day, General Arista, who had succeeded to the command of the Mexican forces, communicated to General Taylor that "he considered hostilities commenced, and should prosecute them." A party of dragoons, of 63 men and officers, were on the same day dispatched from the American camp up the Rio del Norte, on its left bank, to ascertain whether the Mexican troops had crossed, or were preparing to cross the river, "became engaged with a large body of these troops, and, after a short affair, in which some 16 were killed and wounded, appear to have been surrounded and compelled to surrender."

The grievous wrongs perpetrated by Mexico upon our citizens throughout a long period of years remain unredressed; and solemn Treaties, pledging her public faith for this redress, have been disregarded. A Government either unable or unwilling to enforce the execution of such Treaties, fails to perform one of its plainest duties.

Our commerce with Mexico has been almost annihilated. It was formerly highly beneficial to both nations; but our merchants have been deterred from prosecuting it by the system of outrage and extortion which the Mexican authorities have pursued against them, whilst their appeals through their own Government for indemnity have been made in vain. Our forbearance has gone to such an extreme as to be mistaken in its character. Had we acted with vigour in repelling the insults and redressing the injuries inflicted by Mexico at the commencement, we should doubtless have escaped all the difficulties in which we are now involved.

Instead of this, however, we have been exerting our best efforts to propitiate her good-will. Upon the pretext that Texas, a nation as independent as herself, thought proper to unite its destinies with our own, she has affected to believe that we have severed her rightful territory, and in official proclamations and manifestoes has repeatedly threatened to make war upon us, for the purpose of reconquering Texas. In the meantime, we have tried every effort at reconciliation. The cup of forbearance had been exhausted, even before the recent information from the frontier of the Del Norte. But now, after reiterated menaces, Mexico has passed the boundary of The United States, has invaded our territory, and shed American blood upon the American soil. She has proclaimed that hostilities have commenced, and that the 2 nations are now at war.

As war exists, and, notwithstanding all our efforts to avoid it, exists by the act of Mexico herself, we are called upon by every consideration of duty and patriotism to vindicate with decision the honour, the rights, and the interests of our country.

Anticipating the possibility of a crisis like that which has arrived, instructions were given in August last, "as a precautionary measure" against invasion, or threatened invasion, authorizing General Taylor, if the emergency required, to accept volunteers, not from Texas only, but from the States of Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, and Kentucky; and corresponding letters were addressed to the respective Governors of those States. These instructions were repeated; and, in January last, soon after the incorporation of "Texas into our union of States," General Taylor was further "authorized by the President to make a requisition upon the executive of that State for such of its militia force as may be needed to repel invasion, or to secure the country against apprehended invasion." On the 2nd day of March he was again reminded, "in the event of the approach of any considerable Mexican force, promptly and efficiently to use the authority with which he was clothed to call to him such auxiliary force as he might need." War actually existing, and our territory having been invaded, General Taylor, pursuant to authority vested in him by my direction, has called on the Governor of Texas for 4 regiments of State troops—2 to be mounted, and 2 to serve on foot; and on the Governor of Louisiana for 4 regiments of infantry, to be sent to him as soon as practicable.

In further vindication of our rights, and defence of our territory, I invoke the prompt action of Congress to recognize the existence of the war, and to place at the disposition of the Executive the means of prosecuting the war with vigour, and thus hastening the restoration of peace. To this end I recommend that authority should be given to call into the public service a large body of volunteers, to serve for not less than 6 or 12 months, unless sooner discharged. A volunteer force is beyond question more efficient than any other description of citizen soldiers; and it is not to be doubted that a number far beyond that required would readily rush to the field upon the call of their country. I further recommend that a liberal provision be made for sustaining our entire military force and furnishing it with supplies and munitions of war.

The most energetic and prompt measures, and the immediate appearance in arms of a large and overpowering force, are recommended to Congress as the most certain and efficient means of bringing the existing collision with Mexico to a speedy and successful termination.

In making these recommendations, I deem it proper to declare that it is my anxious desire not only to terminate hostilities speedily, but to bring all matters in dispute between this Government and Mexico to an early and amicable adjustment; and, in this view, I shall be prepared to renew negotiations, whenever Mexico shall be ready to receive propositions, or to make propositions of her own.

I transmit herewith a copy of the correspondence between our envoy to Mexico and the Mexican Minister for Foreign Affairs; and so much of the correspondence between that envoy and the Secretary of State, and between the Secretary of War and the General in command on the Del Norte, as is necessary to a full understanding of the subject.

JAMES K. POLK.

TREATY of Friendship, Commerce, and Navigation, between Sardinia and New Granada.—Signed at Turin, August 18, 1847.

[Ratifications exchanged at Turin, February 17, 1849.]
(Translation.)

In the name of the Most Holy Trinity.

COMMERCIAL relations having for a considerable time been established between the dominions of His Majesty the King of Sardinia and the Republic of New Granada, it has been thought advisable, for the more effectually securing and promoting the aforesaid relations, to strengthen them by means of a Treaty of Peace, Commerce, and Navigation.

For this purpose His Majesty the King of Sardinia has conferred full powers upon his Excellency Count D. Clement Solar della Margarita, Knight Grand Cross, decorated with the Grand Cordon of the religious and military Order of Saint Maurice and Saint Lazarus, Grand Cross of Saint Gregory the Great, Knight of the Pontifical Order of Christ, Grand Cross of the Royal Order of St. Stephen of Hungary, Knight of the Russian Order of St. Alexander Newsky, Grand Cross of the Order of Isabella the Catholic of Spain, and of the Order of Merit of St. Joseph of Tuscany, Master and Grand Cross of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, Senator Grand Cross of the Holy Angelic Imperial Constantinian Order of St. George of Parma, Grand Cross of the Belgic Order of Leopold, of the Greek Order of the Saviour, of the Danish Order of Danebrog and the Swedish Order of the Polar Star, Knight of the Order of San Januarius of the 2 Sicilies, and of the Brazilian Order of Christ, Knight Grand Cross of the Prussian Order of the Red Eagle, of the Bavarian Order of the Crown, and of the Orders of Merit of Oldenburg and the Ottoman Porte, his Minister and Chief Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Superintendent-General of the Posts, and Crown Notary;

And the President of the Republic of New Granada upon Signor D. Eladio de Urisarri, Diplomatic Agent at Rome and Chargé d'Affaires to the Government of His Majesty the King of Sardinia; who, after exchanging their respective full powers, and finding them in good and due form, have agreed upon the following Articles:

ART. I. There shall be perpetual and sincere peace between the King of Sardinia, his heirs and successors on the one part, and the Republic of New Granada on the other part, and between the subjects of Sardinia and the citizens of the above-named Republic.

II. Granadians in the States of His Majesty the King of Sardinia, and the subjects of His Majesty in New Granada shall have reciprocally the same liberty and security as natives themselves for entering with their ships and cargoes into all places, ports, and rivers which are or shall hereafter be open to foreign commerce. In order that when trading to ports and harbours there may be a perfect and reciprocal equality, the citizens or subjects of both the Contracting Powers shall be treated respectively as the citizens or subjects of the most favoured nation; but, as regards the trade along the coast, commonly called the coasting trade, that remains exclusively reserved by both parties in favour of natives.

III. The citizens or subjects of each of the Contracting Parties shall enjoy the power of residing and travelling reciprocally in the territories of the other, of trading therein, either by wholesale or retail, of renting and occupying the houses, warehouses, and shops they may require, of exporting goods and money, and receiving consignments as well from the interior as from abroad, without the aforesaid citizens or subjects being liable for any of such operations to any other duties than such as are imposed upon natives. In all the purchases and sales they may effect, they shall be at liberty to determine and fix the price of the goods, merchandise, and other objects, whether the same be imported or are productions of the country, whether they are sold for internal consumption or are intended to be exported, provided always that the laws and regulations of the country be strictly adhered to.

They shall also enjoy a like liberty for regulating their own affairs, and as regards the purchase or sale of goods, as well as the lading, unlading, or dispatching of their vessels, they may either themselves render in their declarations to the Custom-House, or do so by means of such substitutes as they may think best, conforming themselves in all cases to the laws of the country. They shall likewise have the power of discharging all the duties entrusted to them by their fellow-countrymen, or by any foreigners or natives, in the manner and form established by the laws of the country, nor shall they be subject to other or higher taxes, contributions, or imposts than those to which the natives or the citizens or subjects of the most favoured nation are liable.

IV. The citizens or subjects of either of the Contracting Parties shall enjoy in the territory of the other the most complete protection and security in their persons and property, provided they respectively subject themselves to the laws of the 2 countries. They shall be exempted from all personal service, in the army, navy, national guard, or militia; as well as from all war taxes, forced loans, requisitions, or military service of every description: moreover, the property, movable or immovable, of the respective citizens or subjects shall not be subject to other taxes, contributions, or imposts, than such as are imposed upon the citizens or subjects of the most favoured nation.

V. Neither the citizens nor subjects of either of the Contracting Parties can be subjected to any sequestration; nor can their ships, crews, merchandise, or commercial effects, be put in requisition for any military expedition, nor for any public object of whatsoever description, without the parties interested receiving such indemnity as shall have been previously agreed upon.

VI. The subjects or citizens of each of the Contracting Parties shall have, in the dominions of the other, the right of possessing immovable property as well as of disposing of the same, and all other property belonging to them, in any way they may deem advisable. In the same manner the citizens or subjects of either of the Contracting Parties who may inherit, either by will or ab intestato, property situated in the dominions of the other, may take possession of the same without any impediment, and dispose thereof at their pleasure without paying other or higher duties, whether of succession or of any other kind, than those to which the natives of the country in which the aforesaid property may be, would be liable.

VII. If, which God forbid! the peace between the 2 Contracting Parties should be interrupted, the term of 6 months shall be allowed to merchants resident on the coast, and of one year to those living in the interior, for the purpose of putting their affairs and concerns in due order, and for transporting their effects whithersoever they may think fit; and at the same time, they shall be furnished with the necessary safe conducts for arriving at the port they may have chosen for their embarkation, provided the same be not occupied or besieged by the enemy, and that, for this or any other reason, their departure from that port is incompatible either with their own safety or that of the State; in which case the embarkation must be effected wherever it may be practicable. Such other citizens or subjects who may have some fixed and permanent establishment in the respective States, or who may be in the exercise of a profession or trade, may retain their establishment, and continue in the exercise of their profession or trade without any interruption, either in the enjoyment of their full and entire liberty, or in that of their property, provided they do not commit any offence against the laws of the country.

VIII. In no case shall different or higher duties be imposed upon the importation into the 2 countries, respectively, of any article being the natural or industrial product of New Granada and of the States of Sardinia, than such as are or shall be paid for similar articles by the most favoured nation. The same principle shall be observed for exportation. No prohibition or restriction whatsoever shall be placed upon the importation or exportation of any article in the reciprocal trade of the 2 Contracting Parties, nor shall any formalities be required for the purpose of ascertaining the origin of the goods, and the place of their shipment, unless the same prohibition, restriction, and formality be also extended to every other nation.

IX. All the products of the soil and of the manufactures of one of the 2 States, or of any other State whatsoever, the importation of which is not absolutely prohibited, shall pay in the ports of the other the same import duties, whether they be introduced on board Sardinian ships or on those of New Granada. In like manner, the products exported shall pay the same duties, and shall enjoy the same privileges and special favours as are or shall be reserved for exportations made in national vessels.

X. The ships of both the Contracting Powers may freely enter and quit the ports of New Granada and Sardinia without being subject to different or higher duties of tonnage, anchorage, lighthouse, pilotage, quarantine, or others, than those which are levied upon national vessels.

XI. The ships of both the Contracting Parties may unload part of their cargo in the port at which they arrive, and then leave the same with the remainder, in order to proceed to other ports of the same State, either for the purpose of completely unloading the vessel, or of taking on board a return freight, without being required to pay in each port higher or different duties than are paid by national vessels in similar cases.

XII. All vessels sailing under the Sardinian flag, or under that of New Granada, and which are provided with a licence and other ship's papers required by the Government of the 2 countries as proof of the nationality of merchant vessels, and whose captains, together with two-thirds of the crew are subjects or citizens of the State under whose flag they sail, shall be considered as Granadian vessels in Sardinia, and as Sardinian vessels in New Granada.

XIII. The ships of war of either of the 2 Contracting Parties are at liberty to enter, anchor, and undergo repairs in any ports belonging to the other, to which access is granted to the most favoured nation, and they shall be subject to the same regulations and enjoy the same privileges.

XIV. Whenever one of the 2 Contracting Parties is at war with any other State, no citizen or subject of the other Contracting Party shall accept a commission or letter of marque for the purpose of aiding or co-operating in a hostile manner against the aforesaid belligerent party, under pain of being treated as a pirate.

XV. It is expressly stipulated, that neither of the 2 Contracting Parties shall order or authorize any act of reprisal, nor declare war against the other on account of any injury or damage complained of, until the party that considers itself aggrieved shall have laid before the other a statement of such injuries or damages, accompanied by sufficient proof in evidence, demanding justice or satisfaction, and this demand has either been denied or deferred without sufficient reason having been assigned.

XVI. In their mutual relations, the 2 Contracting Parties adopt the principle that "the flag covers the cargo;" and, consequently, if one of the 2 Parties should remain neutral while the other is at war with a third Power, the goods covered by the neutral flag shall be considered neutral, although belonging to the enemies of the other Contracting Party. They equally agree that the freedom of the flag secures that of the person, and that, therefore, the citizens or subjects belonging to one hostile Power, found on board a neutral ship, cannot be made prisoners unless they be military, in the active service of the said Power. Upon this principle, as well as from that of the identity of the flag with the goods, it follows, that the neutral goods found on board of an enemy's ship shall be considered as enemy's property, unless the same shall have been laden on board the said ship previously to the declaration of war, or before intelligence of it shall have arrived at the port whence the vessel cleared out; and it is, moreover, agreed, that after 4 months have elapsed from the date of the said declaration, ignorance thereof cannot be pleaded. The Contracting Parties will not apply the principle agreed upon in this Article to any other Powers than those which recognise it.

XVII. Should one of the 2 Contracting Powers be at war with another Power, nation, or State, the citizens or subjects of the other one may continue their navigation and commerce with the States of the same,—such towns as are actually blockaded being excepted. It being, however, well understood, that such liberty of commerce and navigation does not include articles considered as contraband of war, viz.: fire-arms, side-arms, projectiles, gunpowder, military instruments, implements, and weapons, and all other instruments, of whatsoever description they may be, which are manufactured for warlike purposes.

In no case can a merchant-vessel, belonging to the citizens or subjects of one of the 2 countries, and bound for a port which is blockaded by the other State, be sequestered, captured, or condemned, unless the existence of the blockade shall have been previously notified to it by one of the ships belonging to the blockading squadron, and, in order that the said merchant-vessel may not plead ignorance of the fact, and that it may be lawful to capture the said vessel which, notwithstanding the notification made to it in due form, again presents itself before the said port during the blockade thereof, the commander of the ship-of-war must, the first time he meets with the merchantman, write down in his ship's papers the day, place, or latitude and longitude in which he visited the same, and notified to it the fact of the blockade.

XVIII. It shall not be permitted in the territory of one of the 2 Contracting Powers to make enrolments or agreements, to organize troops, or to build, arm, or man vessels of war or privateers, in order to carry on hostile proceedings against the territories, citizens, or merchants of the other Contracting Party.

XIX. Consulates may be established in both countries for the protection of commerce; but the Consuls shall not enter upon the exercise of their duties, nor into the enjoyment of the rights, privileges, and immunities which appertain to them, until they have obtained the authorization of the territorial Government, to which shall be reserved the right of determining into what places it deems fit to admit Consuls, both the States undertaking not to impose, in this particular, any restrictions or prohibitions which are not common to all other nations.

XX. In order to prevent every cause of dispute or misunderstanding, and with the view of fixing, in the clearest manner, the character, functions, attributes, powers, and immunities of the Consuls, of whatsoever class they may be, both the Contracting Parties recognise, in conformity with the general principles of the rights of nations, that Consuls, to whatsoever class they may belong, are but mere commercial agents, and, consequently, have no right—unless specially commissioned (which in such case must be fully proved) and possessed of the immunities conferred upon ministers or diplomatic agents by international law,—to treat and discuss, with the Government of the State in which they reside, the political questions which may possibly arise. They shall, however, enjoy in their persons, in the exercise of their functions, and in the protection it is their duty to afford to their fellow-countrymen in their mercantile affairs, the consideration and privileges granted to the Consuls of other nations, the strictest equality and reciprocity being observed in this respect.

XXI. If the respective Consuls engage in commercial speculations they shall be obliged to submit themselves in such transactions to the same laws, usages, and customs to which the private individuals of their own nation, and the subjects of those other Governments with whom exist Treaties of Friendship, Commerce, and Navigation, may be subjected.

XXII. The 2 Contracting Parties agree that, besides the preceding stipulations, diplomatic agents, citizens of every class, and the ships and merchandise of one of the two States, shall fully enjoy, in the territory of the other, the privileges, prerogatives, and immunities already conceded, or which shall hereafter be conceded, to the most favoured nation; gratuitously, if the concession shall be gratuitous, or by a like compensation or other equivalent, should the concession be conditional.

XXIII. The Republic of New Granada in furtherance of the wish of His Majesty the King of Sardinia, consents to extend all the stipulations of the present Treaty to the sovereign principality of Monaco placed under the protection of His Sardinian Majesty, on condition of reciprocity on the part of the said principality.

XXIV. The present Treaty shall remain in force for 10 years, reckoned from the day on which the exchange of the ratifications shall be effected; but if within 1 year previous to the expiration of the said term, neither of the Contracting Parties shall have officially announced to the other the intention of causing its operation to cease, it shall continue to remain in force for both Parties for one year after the above-mentioned declaration shall have been made, whatever be the time in which it has taken place.

Whenever one of the Contracting Parties shall think that one or more of the stipulations of the present Treaty have been violated to its prejudice, it must, first of all, lay its complaint before the other party, together with an exposition of the facts necessary to justify it, accompanied by the necessary documents and proofs in support thereof; and in no way shall it authorise acts of reprisal, or declare war, before the reparation demanded shall have been either denied or refused.

The present Treaty shall be approved and ratified by each of the 2 Contracting Parties according to their respective formalities, and the ratifications shall be exchanged in the city of Turin within the space of 18 months.

In faith of which the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Treaty, affixing thereunto their seals.

Done at Turin, in duplicate original, on the 18th August, in the year of the Lord, 1847.

ADDITIONAL ARTICLE.—Differential Duties.

His Sardinian Majesty considering it advisable, for particular reasons, to levy for the present, on foreign flags, differential duties upon cereals, olive oil, and wines imported from the Black Sea, from the ports of the Adriatic Sea, and from those of the Mediterranean, as far as Cape Trafalgar, notwithstanding Articles IV and IX of the present Treaty, it is specially understood and agreed between the 2 Contracting Parties, that the Republic of New Granada shall be at full liberty to fix equivalent differential duties upon the same articles of the same countries to be paid by the Sardinian flag in case the collection of the aforesaid differential duties should continue to be effected by His Majesty the King of Sardinia at the charge of the Republic of New Granada, beyond the term of 4 years, reckoning from the day of the exchange of the ratifications of the Treaty and the Additional Article. But these equivalent differential duties, of whatsoever kind they may be, upon the said articles of commerce, shall cease to be demanded from the moment when the Government of the Republic of New Granada shall be officially informed of the cessation of the differential duties on the part of His Sardinian Majesty.

The present Additional Article shall have the same force and value as if it had been inserted, word for word, in the Treaty now signed; and it shall be ratified at the same time.

In faith of which we, the Undersigned, in virtue of our full powers, have signed the present Article, and have affixed thereunto our respective seals.

TREATY of Commerce and Navigation, between Rome and Sardinia.—Signed at Rome, July 3, 1847.

[Ratifications exchanged at Rome, July 30, 1847.]

In the name of the Most Holy Trinity.

HIS HOLINESS the reigning High Pontiff, and His Majesty the King of Sardinia, being desirous of establishing between each other every work from which their beloved subjects may expect to derive advantage, have directed their anxious attention to the consolidating, extending, and increasing commercial relations between the 2 States, and in consequence have thought it advisable to enter into a Treaty, by virtue of which not only the interests, as connected with such objects, of their respective subjects may be secured, but that there may also be obtained the equally desirable end of rendering still more intimate those ties of harmony and friendly relations which have always existed between the 2 Governments.

For which purpose they have been pleased to nominate reciprocally as their Plenipotentiaries :

His Holiness, the most Eminent and most Reverend Cardinal Pasquale Gizzi, with the title of S. Pudenziana, Knight Grand Cordon of Orders of Saints Maurice and Lazarus, Grand Cross of the Order of Leopold of Belgium, and Secretary of State of his said Holiness ;

And His Majesty the King of Sardinia : the Marquis Domenico Pareto, Knight of the Order of Saints Maurice and Lazarus, decorated with the Ottoman Order of Merit, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of His Majesty at the Holy See :

Who, after having exchanged their respective full powers, and found the same in good and due form, have agreed upon the following Articles :

ART. I. There shall be between the dominions of the High Contracting Parties free reciprocity of commerce and navigation. Their respective subjects may freely travel, reside, and trade in any part whatsoever of the States belonging to either of the Contracting Powers, for which purpose they shall enjoy the same security and protection as are enjoyed by the inhabitants of the country in which they reside, upon the condition, however, of their submitting themselves to the laws which are, or shall be, there in force.

Upon no pretence shall the said subjects be compelled to pay any other taxes or imposts than such as are paid, or shall hereafter be paid, by the most favoured nations.

They shall be free from all military service, either by sea or land, from forced loans, and from every extraordinary contribution, provided the same, be not general or established by law.

Their dwellings, warehouses, and all that forms part thereof, and which may belong to them for the purposes of commerce or of residence shall be respected, and shall not be subjected to domiciliary visits or vexatious search; their books, commercial letters, or accounts shall be free from arbitrary examination and inspection; such a step being only allowed to be taken in pursuance of a legal sentence of the competent tribunals.

The High Contracting Parties mutually promise to guarantee, upon all occasions, to the subjects of either of the 2 Powers who shall be residing in the dominions of the other, the preservation of their property and personal security in the same manner as it is guaranteed to their own subjects or to the subjects and citizens of the most favoured nations.

II. All kinds of goods or articles of commerce, being the growth or manufacture of the States of the Holy See, or of any other country, and which may legally be imported, on board of Sardinian vessels, into the ports of the kingdom of Sardinia, may, in like manner, be imported, on board ships belonging to the Pontifical State, without being required to pay any other or higher duties, of any denomination whatever, whether collected in the name and for the benefit of the State, for local authorities, or for any private establishment, than such as are paid by those imported on board Sardinian vessels; the same regulation being reciprocally established with respect to goods imported in Sardinian vessels in the ports of the States of the Holy See.

III. Pontifical vessels, either laden or in ballast, frequenting the ports of the kingdom of Sardinia, and, reciprocally, the vessels of the latter which are either laden or in ballast frequenting the ports of the States of the Holy See, shall be treated, upon their entry into, or clearing out from, the said ports, as well as during the time they remain therein, on the same footing as national vessels, as regards all dues for tonnage, pilotage, harbour, lighthouse, quarantine, dock licence, or duties of any other denomination whatever, which are collected in the name and for the benefit of the State, the local authorities, or any establishment whatsoever.

IV. For the better understanding of the 2 preceding Articles, it is agreed that the concession therein made shall be the same, whether the vessels of the 2 nations come direct from their own ports respectively or from foreign ports.

V. Every kind of merchandise and article of trade which can be legally exported from the ports of the Pontifical State on board of national vessels may be equally exported on board of Sardinian vessels, without being required to pay other or higher duties, of any denomination whatever, whether collected in the name and for the benefit of the State, the local authorities, or any private establishment, than such as are paid upon being exported on board Pontifical vessels; and the same regulation is reciprocally established in favour of Pontifical vessels exporting goods from the ports of the dominions of His Majesty the King of Sardinia.

VI. In the States of the Holy See, there shall not be imposed upon articles being the growth or manufacture of the kingdom of Sardinia, any other or higher duties than such as are levied upon similar articles coming from other countries; and the same regulation shall be observed in Sardinia with respect to articles being the growth or manufacture of the States of the Holy See. In like manner no obstacles or prohibitions, except such as are applicable to every other nation, shall be opposed to the importation or exportation of any article being the product of the soil or of the manufacture, either of the States of the Holy See or of the kingdom of Sardinia, upon their entrance into, or departure from, the ports of either country.

VII. It remains expressly agreed that the preceding Articles do not in any way apply to the coast navigation or coasting trade of either of the 2 countries; which navigation and trade the High Contracting Parties reserve exclusively to themselves in their respective countries.

VIII. In consequence of the preceding Articles, His Majesty the King of Sardinia declares that all the differential duties of the one-third part of the excise-tax (immissione), and which duties were established in his States by the Edict of the 17th of January, 1825, upon brandies, wine, grain, oil, chestnuts, chestnut-flour, wheat, and oats, rice, and pulse (legumi infranti), as well as upon oil for exportation, and every other differential duty which, under other regulations, may be imposed, upon articles either imported or exported, in favour of his own flag and to the prejudice of that of the Pontifical State, are and do remain abolished so long as the present Treaty lasts.

And, on its part, the Holy See, in consideration of the renunciation by His Majesty the King of Sardinia of the above-named differential duties in favour of the Pontifical flag, declares that, during the present Treaty, the tax, to which the undermentioned articles are at present subjected, shall be reduced in favour of the Sardinian flag, in the following manner, namely:

Carbonate of lead (white lead) and dry dross of lead, 25 per cent. for every 100 lbs. ; green plants of whatsoever kind, flower seeds, and meadow seeds, and others of the oleaginous kind, 30 per cent. ; and slates or schists of one-third of the present tax for every 100 lbs.

The reciprocity established by this Treaty does not extend to the rewards which may be given by the 2 High Contracting Powers respectively, to their own subjects, for the encouragement of the building of ships of their own flag.

IX. For the purpose of avoiding any mistake respecting the principles upon which the conditions are based that establish the nationality of vessels, it is agreed that such shall be considered as Sardinian ships as shall have been built in the States of His Sardinian Majesty, or which, having been taken from the enemy, either by His Majesty's ships-of-war, or by those of his subjects, furnished with letters of marque, have been regularly condemned as good and lawful prizes, as well as all ships that have been condemned by any competent Court, for having contravened the laws against the Slave Trade, provided that the said vessels be owned, navigated, and registered conformably to the laws of the kingdom of Sardinia, that they are the entire property of one or more Sardinian subjects, and that the captain and the two-thirds of the crew are Sardinian subjects. The same principles shall be observed for establishing the nationality of Pontifical vessels.

X. In case of a vessel belonging to one of the 2 High Contracting Parties being shipwrecked within their respective dominions, not only shall every kind of assistance be rendered to the persons who are shipwrecked, but also the ships, portions of the wreck, rigging, and whatever else forms part of them, the papers found on board, together with such articles and goods as, having been thrown into the sea, shall have been recovered therefrom, shall in nowise be taken or retained, under any pretext whatsoever. The said ships, effects, and goods shall, on the contrary, be kept for, and restored to, their lawful owners, on payment of the expense of salvage and preservation, as well as Custom-House and quarantine duties, and all other duties which, in similar cases, are paid by a national vessel. The above regulation shall apply to the proceeds of the sale of the articles before mentioned, should circumstances require them to be immediately sold.

In the case above-mentioned, the respective Consuls, Vice-Consuls, or Commercial Agents, shall be authorized to interpose and lend their assistance to their fellow-countrymen. In the event, however, of legal claims arising respecting the shipwreck, and the effects and merchandise on board the vessel so wrecked, such claims shall be referred to the decision of the competent tribunals of the country.

XI. Merchants and traders who are the subjects of one country, shall, in the States and ports of the other, participate in all the advantages of commerce and navigation which are, at present, enjoyed therein by foreigners of any other nation. If, at any future time, one of the 2 High Contracting Parties should grant to another nation any special favour as regards commerce and navigation, that favour shall be immediately extended to the other party, who shall enjoy the same gratuitously, if the concession was so conferred, or upon granting the same compensation or an equivalent one, should the concession have been made conditionally.

XII. The ships of one of the 2 nations which shall be off the coasts belonging to the territories of the other, but without the intention of entering into port, or, having entered it, do not unload either the whole or part of their cargo, shall enjoy the same privileges, advantages, and treatment as the ships of the most favoured nation.

XIII. Pontifical trading vessels compelled to take shelter in any of the ports of the kingdom of Sardinia, as well as those belonging to Sardinia which are under the necessity of running into any of the ports of the Pontifical State, shall be considered and treated, in all respects, as national vessels; provided, however, that they do not engage in any trading operations, that their sole object be that of repairing damages or of escaping from the fury of the tempest, and that, in every respect, the causes which have determined their so running into port are real and patent.

In all that relates to the assigning of berths to the ships, to their loading and unloading in the ports, basins, creeks, gulfs, and rivers of the 2 States, no distinction of any kind shall be made between those of the one and those of the other Power.

XIV. The 2 High Contracting Parties mutually recognise the right of sending and nominating Consuls, Vice-Consuls, or Commercial Agents in the ports of the commercial towns of the respective States, whenever they may consider it advisable.

XV. The Consuls, of whatever class they may be, who are duly nominated by their respective Governments, cannot enter upon the exercise of their functions without being furnished with an exequatur from the Government in whose dominions they are about to reside.

XVI. With the view of preventing every cause of disagreement or misunderstanding, and for the purpose of clearly defining the character, functions, attributes, powers and privileges of the Consuls, to whichever class they may belong, both the High Contracting Parties recognise, in conformity with the general principles of the law of nations, that Consuls, to whichever class they may belong, are but mere commercial agents, and consequently have no right, unless specially commissioned (which in such case they must prove) and possessed of the privileges conferred upon Diplomatic Agents by international law, to treat and discuss, with the Government of the State in which they reside, any political questions that may possibly arise. They shall, however, enjoy in their persons, as well as in the exercise of their functions, and in the protection it is their duty to afford their fellow-countrymen in their mercantile affairs, the consideration and privileges granted to the Consuls of other nations; the strictest equality and reciprocity being observed in this respect.

XVII. If the respective Consuls engage in commercial speculations, they shall be obliged to submit themselves in such transactions to the laws, usages, and customs to which the private individuals of their own nation and the subjects of those other Governments with whom there exist Treaties of Friendship, Commerce, and Navigation may be subjected.

XVIII. It is expressly agreed, that if one of the 2 High Contracting Parties should appoint as its Consul, destined to reside in a commercial port belonging to the other, a subject of the latter, the said Consul, notwithstanding his quality of foreign Agent, shall continue to be considered as the subject or citizen of the nation to which he belongs, and shall, in consequence, be subject to the laws and regulations to which the inhabitants of the place where he resides are subject; it being, however, understood that such obligation does not, in any way, affect his Consular functions and the inviolability of his papers.

XIX. Without prejudice to what has been provided in the preceding Article, both the High Contracting Powers agree to recognise reciprocally in the Consuls, whether subjects or citizens, whom one or other of them may have appointed, all the distinctions which the Government so appointing may have been pleased to confer upon them, due respect being had to the laws in force in both countries.

XX. The said Consuls, Vice-Consuls, and Commercial Agents shall be authorized to require from the local authorities the search for, arrest, and detention of deserters from the ships-of-war and merchant-vessels belonging to their respective nations. For this purpose they will communicate in writing with the tribunals, judges, and the competent officials, handing in a copy of the ship's register and other documents sufficient to prove that the individuals claimed formed part of the crew, in which case the extradition cannot be refused. The said deserters when arrested shall be immediately placed at the disposal of the Consuls, Vice-Consuls, and Commercial Agents, and may be confined in the prisons of the country at the requisition and expense of the party claiming them, in order to their being delivered up to the vessel to which they belong, or sent back to their country on board a ship, which must also be a national one, within the exact period of 3 months, reckoning from the day of their arrest; at the expiration of which period, if they have not been sent to their country they shall be set at liberty; nor can they be imprisoned a second time for the same cause. But if the deserter or deserters so claimed should have committed any crime, their release shall be suspended until such time as the judge who has tried the case shall have pronounced his sentence and the same has been duly executed.

XXI. Consuls shall have the power of directing the measures necessary to be taken for assisting and saving the vessels belonging to their respective nation which shall have been shipwrecked, or be in danger thereof, without the local authority being allowed to interfere, any further than the proper regulations and the preservation of order requires. Consuls are also empowered to average the losses of the said ships, provided that there be no inhabitants of the country interested therein, or that there be no stipulations to the contrary between the owners, charterers, and insurers of such vessels.

XXII. Although the said Consuls do not exercise any jurisdiction as provided by Article XVI, they can notwithstanding be chosen as arbitrators and friendly referees in such mercantile questions as may arise between individuals of their own nation, or between one of the latter and others of the country in which the Consul resides, it being always understood that the parties interested are willing to submit themselves voluntarily to their decisions.

XXIII. XXIV. The present Treaty shall remain in force for 10 years commencing from the time of the exchange of the ratifications and beyond that term until the expiration of 12 months after one of the Contracting Parties shall have given notice to the other one of their intention to put an end to it, each one of the High Contracting Parties reserving to itself the right of giving a similar notice to the other at the end of the first 9 years; and it is agreed between them, that at the expiration of 12 months after a like notice from one of the High Contracting Parties shall have been received by the other one, the present Treaty, and all the stipulations contained therein, shall cease to be obligatory for both parties.

XXV. The present Treaty shall be approved and ratified by His Holiness the reigning High Pontiff and His Majesty the King of Sardinia, and the ratifications shall be exchanged in Rome within 5 weeks from the date of signature, and sooner, if possible.

Upon a Bill objected to in its entirety being received back by the Congress, the same shall be taken into consideration; and if the objections be declared to be well-founded, the Bill shall not be proceeded with, but shall be placed in the archives; if however they be declared unfounded, the progress of the Bill shall remain suspended until the next meeting of the Congress.

LIX. Should the objections of the Executive Power be restricted to proposing some amendments in the Bill, and the Congress consider them as unadvisable, in that case also the progress of the Bill shall remain suspended until a definitive decision be given in the next meeting of the Congress; but if the Chamber accede to the amendments proposed by the Executive, the Bill shall then be sent up to the latter, who, under these circumstances, cannot refuse its assent.

LX. The Congress, at its next meeting, shall again take into consideration the objections of the Executive; and should it once more, by the vote of three-fourths of the totality of its members, declare all of them to be unfounded, the Bill shall be sent up to the Executive to receive its sanction, which can no longer be refused.

LXI. Bills or projects of any other legislative acts which are sent up to the Executive for its sanction shall be so sent in duplicate, both copies being signed by the President and the Secretaries of the Chamber; these projects shall be either sanctioned or objected to, and returned to the Chamber within 8 days after they have been received; which term having expired, the Bills that have not beer

One of the 2 copies of each Bill must be returned with either the sanction or the observations of the Executive, and the other shall be placed in the archives of the respective Ministry.

Upon an accusation being admitted, the Congress shall, of itself, institute the proceedings at law, by means of a commission from out of its own body; and shall pronounce the sentence in public session, which sentence shall be restricted to depriving the accused of his office. Two-thirds of the votes present are necessary for the pronouncing of the sentence.

CV. Parties condemned by the Congress may be amenable to the judgment and sentence of the competent tribunal, if the offences of which they are accused are defined by the law, and are such as are visited with a severer kind of punishment.

CVI. The law shall regulate the mode of conducting the trials which are proceeded with at the instance of the Congress as well as the formalities to be observed therein.

CHAPTER XII.—Various Arrangements.

CVII. No Costa Rican shall be put upon trial except before the competent tribunals and courts of justice established by this Constitution or by the law; nor condemned without being heard and convicted; nor can he be subjected to any other punishment than such as has been provided by law previously to the commission of the crime.

CVIII. No Costa Rican can be arrested or sent to prison, except by the authority appointed by law, and in the cases, and in the manner provided by the same.

CIX. No Costa Rican is obliged to give evidence in any criminal suit, either against himself, his wife, immediate relatives, or brothers, whether in blood or affinity.

CX. No crime shall be punishable by confiscation; but this does not include the seizures and fines imposed by the law.

CXI. The penalty of death shall be applicable in the following cases only:

1. In that of premeditated and undoubted murder;
2. For an attempt against public order, the committing of which has been the cause of the death of one or more individuals; but in this case the ringleaders and principal offenders in the disturbance can alone be subjected to that penalty.

CXII. With the exception of the taxes established by law, no Costa Rican shall be deprived of his property without his free consent; unless public necessity, recognised as such by the law shall require it, and previous indemnification, as adjudged by competent persons, be made.

CXIII. All Costa Ricans have the right to publish their thoughts by means of the press, without the necessity of any previous censorship; but the articles must bear the signature of the parties, who shall remain liable to the responsibility and penalties provided by law for the abuses of such right, which abuses are to be proved as such by the juror or jurors established by the law for that purpose.

CXIV. All Costa Ricans have the power of claiming their rights at the hands of the public authority, provided this be done with proper respect, and in a temperate manner; but no individual or particular association can so act in the name of the people, or arrogate such a power to themselves. Those who contravene this regulation shall be tried conformably to the laws.

CXV. No house can be entered by force, nor searched, nor can any papers or private correspondence be intercepted or examined unless by the authority and in the cases prescribed by law.

CXVI. The settlement of entailed estates is forbidden; nor shall there be in Costa Rica any inalienable landed property.

CXVII. All Costa Ricans shall be equal in the eye of the law.

CHAPTER XIII.—Of the Constitutional Oath.

CXVIII. No public employé shall enter upon his office without taking an oath "to defend and maintain the Constitution of the Republic, and to fulfil faithfully and exactly the duties of their employment."

CHAPTER XIV.—Of the Reform of the Constitution.

CXIX. This Constitution can be reformed by the Congress at any time, upon the demand being made by a majority of the Representatives present at the session, and upon the decree of three-fourths of the said Representatives.

CXX. Before being approved by the Chamber, the Articles reformed or added must undergo 3 different discussions, each one of them upon a separate day; and they shall be considered as law upon receiving the sanction of the Executive Power; but if the latter should make objections, the Congress shall take them into consideration; if they are regarded as valid, then the Bill must be deposited in the archives; and if they are not considered as well-founded by three-fourths of the Representatives, recourse must then be had to what has been provided in Articles LVIII, LIX, and LX.

CXXI. The present reforms being presented and approved, are ipso facto sanctioned; and the Executive Power will cause the same to be printed, circulated, and published throughout the Republic.

CXXII. The Constitution decreed on the 21st of January, 1847, is reformed, and all laws and regulations opposed to the present one are hereby repealed and annulled.

TREATY of Friendship and Commerce, between Peru and Bolivia.—Signed at Lima, December 11, 1848.

In the name of God.

THE Governments of Peru and Bolivia being desirous of exchanging and carrying into effect the Treaty of Friendship and Commerce concluded at Arequipa, on the 3rd November, 1847,* by the Ministers Plenipotentiary; that is to say:—D. Domingo Elias, on the part of Peru, and D. Miguel Maria Aguirre, on the part of Bolivia; and it not being possible to execute the same without making therein the modifications and suppressions proposed by the Peruvian Government and Congress, and to which the Bolivian Government and Congress have given their consent; the said Governments have agreed to proceed to the drawing up of a new Treaty, together with its stipulations, which shall contain the same Articles as those of the Treaty of Arequipa, with the modifications and suppressions approved of by the legislative bodies of both Republics.

With this intention, the Government of Peru has authorized Señor Don Cipriano C. Zegarra, its Chargé d'Affaires at that of Bolivia, and the latter, Señor D. D. Casimiro Olañeta, Minister for Foreign Affairs, who, after having presented their respective full powers, and found the same in good and due form, have proceeded to copy and reconstruct the Articles of the Treaty of Arequipa, in the following terms:

ART. I. There shall be re-established between the Republics of Peru and Bolivia the same harmony and friendship which formerly existed, the 2 Governments burying in profound oblivion, as an homage to the peace so much needed by both States, and in consideration of the explanations and reparations they have mutually given through the medium of their respective Ministers Plenipotentiary, every cause of complaint or of offence which the one or the other, or each one in its turn, considered it had a right to bring forward.

II. The question propounded by the Government of Peru as to the duty of Bolivia to take upon itself some portion of the expenses which the Peruvian Government incurred in the campaigns of 1823 and 1824, with the object of achieving the general independence, having remained pending since the year 1825, and Bolivia having refused to comply with that demand, alleging that, in its turn, it had been at an enormous expense for the support of the armies of independence which fought in Huaqui, Vilcapuquio, and Viloma, as well as for the support of the Peruvian army which in 1823 occupied, by the orders of General Santa Cruz, the departments of La Paz, Oruro, and Cochabamba, both the Contracting Parties now agree to refer the matter in dispute to arbitration, the umpire in this case to be one of the Governments either of New Granada or of Venezuela. Both parties to employ their best efforts to prevail upon one of the said Governments to undertake this office for the peace of the 2 Contracting Republics.

III. A commission shall be appointed by both Governments charged with constructing a topographical map of their frontiers, for the purpose of restoring to either State the lands which have become intermingled with the actual frontiers, re-establishing their ancient landmarks with the view of avoiding doubts and confusion in future, both States engaging to preserve the territory which has always belonged to them, and not to demand or solicit any territory from the other either by way of transfer, compensation, or any other reason whatsoever.

IV. As each of the Contracting Governments can, under favour of the peace about to be established, freely devote itself to introducing the internal regulations required for the welfare and prosperity of its respective Republic, so both Governments engage not to put into circulation, after the exchange of the ratifications of this Treaty, any light coin (feble), or such the standard of which does not amount to 10 dineros, 20 granos.

V. Neither of the Governments of Peru and Bolivia shall permit those who, on account of their political opinions, or of the acts resulting from them, have found an asylum in their territory, to attack the public security of the country to which they belong, by giving encouragement to seditious movements from the place where they reside; in such case the Government who shall discover such machinations, shall require, supporting such requisition with the necessary vouchers, that the parties offending be removed from their frontiers to some place chosen by them in the interior of the Republic where they have taken refuge, but which must not be at a less distance than that of 80 leagues from the said frontiers.

VI. Neither of the 2 Contracting Parties shall give an asylum in its territory to notorious robbers, blood-thirsty assassins, incendiaries, and coiners. Criminals of this description, who shall seek such refuge, shall be given up to the country in which the crime was perpetrated, upon being claimed by the Minister of Foreign Affairs, such requisition being accompanied by an authenticated proof of the definitive sentence pronounced against the party.

VII. Deserters from Peru to Bolivia, and from Bolivia to Peru shall be protected; but each State shall return the arms, horses, and equipments which such deserters brought with them, and the said arms, &c., must be delivered up to the first magistrate of the frontier of the State to which the parties belong.

VIII. Neither of the 2 States shall employ in the service of its flag the deserters mentioned in the preceding Article.

IX. Individuals belonging to the Peruvian army who have enrolled themselves in that of Bolivia, and Bolivians who, in like manner, have entered the Peruvian service, may be restored to their country, as soon as they legally express their wish to be so.

X. Foreign merchandise, imported through the port of Arica for consumption in Bolivia, shall not pay any transit duty in Peru, and shall be only liable to the port dues, namely, those of anchorage, wharfage, lighthouse, and warehousing.

XI. Neither shall any transit duty be paid in the above-mentioned port of Arica, on account of any production of Bolivian industry which is to be exported beyond seas; the port duties, however, excepted, which must be paid as agreed upon in the foregoing Article.

XII. As a compensation for the concessions granted by Peru to the Bolivian trade, as stipulated in the 2 preceding Articles, Bolivia, in its turn, concedes: 1. That the horses, mules, asses, and cattle, coming from another Republic, as well as whatsoever other articles of merchandise proceed from the like origin, which pass through its territory for consumption in Peru, shall pay no transit duty whatever except the toll already established, or which shall hereafter be imposed upon bridges or roads, and which shall be paid in the same form and proportion as it is paid by Bolivians. 2. That foreign spirits introduced through the aforesaid port of Arica for consumption in Bolivia shall be liable, on their introduction, to the payment of the duties at present imposed, or which may hereafter be imposed, by the regulations of the Peruvian Republic, upon the same spirits when sent for consumption in that State. 3. That the duties upon cotton and woollen goods, which enter through Arica and pass into Bolivia, shall not exceed, as regards those paid in the port of Cobija, 15 per cent.

XIII. Bolivia also concedes that the products of Peruvian industry which enter its territory across the land frontiers, shall pay no duty whatever of consumption, be their denomination what it may. Toll dues must, however, be excepted, which must be paid in the same manner as they are paid by Bolivians.

XIV. The stipulation in the preceding Article as regards Peruvian products which enter Bolivia over the land frontiers, is reciprocal in all and each of its parts for Bolivian products introduced into Peru for consumption in that Republic.

XV. Peruvians passing through or resident in Bolivia, shall enjoy the same civil rights as the Constitution and laws of the Republic grant to Bolivians. In like manner, Bolivians passing through or resident in Peru, shall enjoy the same civil rights as the Constitution and its accessory laws grant to Peruvians.

XVI. No Peruvian passing through or resident in Bolivia shall be compelled to serve in the National Guard or in the standing army; nor shall he be required to pay the extraordinary contributions imposed upon the natives; nor shall his cattle be put in requisition for any public service. These stipulations are reciprocal, in all and each of their parts in Peru, for Bolivians passing through or resident in its territory.

XVII. The Peruvian Government shall maintain a Consulate in La Paz, together with an agency in Oruro, under the direction of a Consul or Vice-Consul, for the purpose of superintending the fulfilment of the commercial stipulations contained in this Treaty. That of Bolivia shall have a like establishment in Tacna, and a Consul or Vice-Consul in Arica, for the same purpose. These Consular Agents shall enjoy in the country in which they exercise their functions, all the immunities and exemptions which are granted to functionaries of equal rank accredited to it by the most favoured nation.

XVIII. The permits (guias) issued by the Custom-House of Arica for Bolivia shall be viséd by the Bolivian Consul resident in Arica; and the return-permits (tornaguías) delivered by the Custom Houses of La Paz and Oruro shall, in like manner, be viséd by the respective Peruvian Consular Agent. Packages leaving Arica for Bolivia must be carefully sent through Tacna to Palca, and thence by the road through Tacora to Santiago de Machaca, if they proceed to Paz; and in case they should be sent through Oruro, they shall proceed from Tacora to Cosapilla and Pichaguas; for if they should be sent by a different one they would be liable to be seized, the said seizure being executed in conformity with the laws of the country in whose territory it has been made. The other precautions which may be necessary for avoiding the smuggling so prejudicial to each one, or to both of the Contracting Parties, shall be arranged by separate Conventions.

XIX. For the protection and development of the reciprocal industry of the 2 nations, both agree to establish, each within its own territory, and at the latest within 2 years after the ratifications and exchange thereof of the present Treaty, a line of posts, with regular buildings, provided with the necessary aids for refreshment and locomotion; the Contracting Parties, moreover, agree to establish between Tacna and La Paz a weekly mail for the purpose of facilitating commercial communications.

XX. Respectable and wealthy persons, travelling from Peru to Bolivia and from Bolivia to Peru, shall pay 2 dollars as the whole passport duty.

XXI. Muleteers and their helpers, mechanics and other persons of the working class, shall pay only 2 reals for passport duty.

XXII. Indigenous natives of Peru and Bolivia who contribute to the taxes, are exempted from all passport duty.

XXIII. The violation of this Treaty by one or more individuals cannot alter it; but the infractors shall be liable to prosecution and the punishment provided by the law, the Government, as soon as the offence has been proved, withdrawing its protection from the delinquent; if, unfortunately, an infraction of one or more articles should be committed by one of the 2 Governments, explanation and reparation shall be amicably and privately applied for, without proceeding to any public declaration or other hostile measures, or considering the Treaty as broken in consequence of such act. If no friendly arrangement should be effected, recourse to arms must not be had on that account, except when satisfaction for the wrong done is denied, and the infraction persisted in.

XXIV. If, after employing all amicable means, no reconciliation should take place, but both Republics should become involved in a war, even in this case, it shall be established that the citizens of the one passing through, or resident in, the territory of the other, shall not be obliged to quit the country, except for the reasons and in the manner provided by the laws for the citizens of the Republic itself in which they reside, or through which they are passing; that no impediment whatever shall be opposed to its trade, and that no interruption shall take place in the mercantile relations between the towns and the inhabitants of both Republics, those territories alone which are the actual theatre of military operations being excluded from such freedom and commerce. In the same manner, it shall be lawful for the citizens of both Republics, even in the time of war, to traffic and carry on trade with other neutral Powers, whether friends or enemies, without becoming subject to confiscation or military seizure, with the exception of articles contraband of war, destined for one of the belligerents to the injury of the other one.

XXV. The present Treaty shall last for the term of 8 years reckoned from the day on which the change of ratifications is effected; and, at the end of the said term, it shall be understood as renewed for 8 years more, provided that one of the Contracting Parties should not, 1 year before, have notified to the other one, his intention of putting an end to it.

XXVI. The present Treaty shall be ratified, and the ratifications exchanged in the capital, within 80 days, reckoned from the date hereof, or sooner, if possible. Upon the exchange being effected, both Governments shall publish it as a law of the State.

In witness whereof, we, the undersigned, Ministers Plenipotentiary, have signed the present Treaty, affixing thereto the seal of our respective Republic.

RAMON CASTILLA, President of the Republic of Peru, &c.

Inasmuch as there was signed between Peru and Bolivia in the city of Sucre, by the respective Plenipotentiaries, a Treaty in perfect conformity with that concluded at Arequipa, between the same Republics, on the 3rd November, 1847, and containing the additions and modifications made by the Government and Congress of Bolivia, which Treaty is literally as follows :

TREATY of Commerce and Navigation, between Sardinia and the 2 Sicilies.—Naples, February 7, 1846.

[Ratifications exchanged at Naples, February 23, 1846.]
(Translation.)

HIS Majesty the King of Sardinia and His Majesty the King of the Kingdom of the 2 Sicilies, animated by an equal desire of extending, increasing, and consolidating the commercial relations between their respective States, and of affording every possible facility and encouragement to such of their subjects as participate in those relations; and being convinced that nothing can more contribute to the accomplishment of their mutual wishes for such an object, as the reciprocal abolition of all navigation and Custom-House differential duties, and of all exclusively commercial rights and privileges hitherto enjoyed by the subjects of one of the 2 parties, in preference to those of the other, in their respective States, have nominated Plenipotentiaries for concluding a Treaty to the above effect; that is to say:

His Majesty the King of Sardinia; Count D. Ermolao Asinari di S. Marzano, Commander of the Royal Religious and Military Orders of Saints Maurice and Lazarus, and of the Austrian Order of the Iron Crown, Knight of the Imperial Austrian Order of Leopold, and of the Spanish Order of Charles III, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of His Majesty, at the Court of His Majesty the King of the Kingdom of the 2 Sicilies; and His Majesty the King of the Kingdom of the 2 Sicilies; D. Giustino Fortunato, Knight Grand Cross of the Royal Military Constantinian Order of St. George and of that of Francis I, decorated with the Imperial Russian Order of the White Eagle, and His Majesty's Secretary of State; D. Michael Gravina e Requesnez, Prince of Comitini, Knight Grand Cross of the Royal Order of Francis I, Knight of the Insignia of the Imperial Russian Order of the White Eagle, Gentleman of the Chamber, and His Majesty's Secretary of State; and D. Antonio Spinelli, of the Princes of Scalea, Commander of the Royal Order of Francis I, Knight of the First Class of the Imperial Russian Order of St. Anne, Gentleman of the Chamber to His Majesty, Member of the General Council, and Chief Superintendent of the Archives of the Kingdom;

Who, after having exchanged their respective full powers, and found the same in good and due form, have agreed upon and concluded the following Articles:

ART. I. There shall be a free reciprocity of commerce and navigation between the dominions of the High Contracting Parties.

Their respective subjects may freely travel, reside, or trade, in any part whatsoever of the States belonging to each of them; and, for that purpose, they shall enjoy the same security and protection as are enjoyed by the inhabitants of the country wherein they are residing, on condition, however, of submitting themselves to the laws and regulations which are or shall be there in force.

The said subjects shall not be liable, under any pretext, to pay any other taxes or imposts than such as are or shall be paid by the most favoured nations.

They shall be exempted from all military service, whether by sea or land, from all forced loans and extraordinary contributions, provided the same be not general or established by law.

Their dwelling-houses, warehouses, and whatever forms part thereof or belongs to them, for the purposes of trade or of residence, shall be respected; they shall not be subjected to vexatious search or domiciliary visits; their books, commercial letters, and accounts shall be free from all arbitrary examination or inspection, which procedure can only be practised in pursuance of a legal sentence pronounced by the competent tribunals.

The High Contracting Parties mutually engage to guarantee, upon all occasions, to the subjects of the one Party, residing in the dominions of the other, the security of their persons and property, in the same manner as these latter are guaranteed to their own subjects, or to the subjects or citizens of the most favoured nations.

II. The subjects of His Majesty the King of Sardinia shall not be liable, in the dominions of the King of the kingdom of the 2 Sicilies, to a more rigorous system of examination and search, on the part of the Custom-House officers, than are the subjects of His Majesty the King of the 2 Sicilies.

And, in like manner, the subjects of His Majesty the King of the kingdom of the 2 Sicilies shall not be liable, in the dominions of His Majesty the King of Sardinia, to a more rigorous system of examination and search, than the subjects of His Majesty the King of Sardinia.

III. The subjects of one of the 2 High Contracting Parties may, in the dominions of the other, freely conduct their business themselves, or intrust it to the management of those whom they may think fit to appoint as their attorneys, factors, or agents, nor shall they be hindered in their selection of persons to act in the above capacity, nor required to pay any salary or remuneration to any person not chosen by themselves.

Both buyer and seller shall, in all cases, be at perfect liberty to treat together, and to fix the price to be paid for any article or goods whatsoever that may have been imported into the States of one or other Contracting Party, or exported therefrom, excepting, generally, as regards transactions in which the laws and usages of the country require the employment of special agents.

IV. The products of the soil or of the manufactures of one of the 2 countries imported from one into the other, either by land or by sea, shall be taxed in the same manner as the like products are taxed which are imported from any other country whatsoever, nor shall they be subject to any other or higher Custom-House tax.

His Majesty the King of Sardinia and His Majesty the King of the kingdom of the 2 Sicilies engage not to grant to the subjects or citizens of any other Power, in the matter of commerce and navigation, any privilege, favour, or immunity, without extending it, at the same time, to the commerce and navigation of the other country, and this, gratuitously, if the concession so made was gratuitous, or by means of a compensation, to be determined by common consent, and equal, as nearly as possible, both in value and in effect, should the concession have been made for a consideration.

V. All the productions of the soil and of the manufactures of the 2 countries, or of their respective dominions, which, coming from one of them, can be legally imported, deposited, and warehoused in the other, shall be subject to the same duties, and enjoy the same privileges, whether imported, deposited, or warehoused, by means of Sardinian ships or by those of the 2 Sicilies, in the ports of the States of the 2 High Contracting Parties.

In like manner, all the productions which may be legally exported or re-exported from one of the 2 countries into the other one, shall be subject to the same duties, and shall enjoy the same privileges, reductions, benefits, concessions, and restitutions, whether they be exported or re-exported on board vessels belonging to either Power.

VI. Sardinian ships arriving in the ports of the dominions of His Majesty the King of the 2 Sicilies, and reciprocally, Sicilian vessels, entering the ports of His Majesty the King of Sardinia, shall be treated, in the 2 countries, upon their arrival, during their stay, and at their departure, on the same footing as national vessels, in all that regards tonnage, pilotage, harbour, lighthouse, quarantine, dock, and licence duties or dues, together with such others as are imposed upon the vessel itself, under whatsoever denomination, and whether the aforesaid duties be paid for the benefit of the State, the city, or any private establishment whatever; provided always that such vessels come direct from one of the ports of the kingdom of the 2 Sicilies into one of the ports of His Majesty the King of Sardinia, or from one of the ports of the Sardinian States, into one of the ports of the kingdom of the 2 Sicilies, if freighted, or by any other kind of route, (viaggia) if with cargo.

VII. The nationality of the respective ships shall be mutually recognised and admitted, conformably to the special laws and regulations of each State, by means of licences and ship certificates, granted by the competent authorities to the captains or the owners.

VIII. As a consequence of the preceding stipulations, every premium, remission, or reimbursement of duties existing in the kingdom of Sardinia, to the injury of the commerce and navigation of the 2 Sicilies, is and remains abolished ;

And it is expressly understood that no premium, remission, or reimbursement of duties can, while the present Treaty lasts, be granted, in the kingdom of Sardinia, to the injury of the commerce and navigation of the kingdom of the 2 Sicilies ;

And, reciprocally, every premium, remission, or reimbursement of duties existing in the States of His Majesty the King of the kingdom of the 2 Sicilies, to the prejudice of Sardinian commerce and navigation, is and remains abolished, it being likewise expressly understood, that no premium, remission, or reimbursement of duty can, during the continuance of the present Treaty, be granted, in the kingdom of the 2 Sicilies, to the injury of Sardinian commerce and navigation.

In consequence whereof, His Majesty the King of Sardinia declares that by virtue of the conditions stipulated in Article V, all the differential duties of the one-third part of the tax upon imports, established in his States, by the Decree of the 17th January, 1825, upon brandies, wine, and grain, oils, chestnuts and chestnut flour, wheat, and oats ; upon rice and bruised pulse, as well as upon oil for exportation, and every other differential duty which may, in like manner, be established, together with other provisions respecting imports and exports, in favour of the national flag, and to the prejudice of that of the kingdom of the 2 Sicilies, are and remain abolished during the entire continuance of the present Treaty.

And, on his side, His Majesty the King of the kingdom of the 2 Sicilies, declares that, so long as the present Treaty lasts, the reduction of 10 per cent. enjoyed by his own royal flag upon the duties accruing from the Custom House tariffs, shall be also extended to the productions of the soil and manufactures of the States of His Sardinian Majesty, which shall be imported into his royal dominions from those of His Sardinian Majesty, on board Sardinian trading vessels.

The reciprocity established by this Article is not extended to the premiums which the High Contracting Parties may respectively bestow upon their own subjects for the encouragement of the building of national vessels.

IX. And it is further agreed that Sardinian cheeses, brought from those dominions into the kingdom of the 2 Sicilies, on board vessels belonging to either country, shall be assimilated to cheeses of every kind brought from every other most favoured foreign country, and, therefore, be liable to the same duties which are or may, in future, be imposed upon the same, and that, by way of an equivalent for such assimilation, in favour of the vessels of the kingdom of the 2 Sicilies, employed in the coral fishery in Sardinian waters, there shall not, from the day of the ratification of the present Treaty, nor during the continuance thereof, be collected other or higher duties than those to which Sardinian vessels engaged in the same trade are or in future may be liable, whether the collection be for the benefit of the Government, the Communes, or any other establishment whatsoever.

X. The stipulations of the present Treaty shall not, in any way, apply to coast navigation or the coasting trade, which is carried on from one part to another in each of the 2 countries for the conveyance of persons, goods, and other merchandise, on board of either steam or sailing vessels, such a description of transport being exclusively reserved for national vessels.

But, notwithstanding the above, the vessels of each of the High Contracting Parties may take on board, or may unlade a part of their cargo, in a port belonging to the States of the other, and, afterwards, complete their cargo, or may unlade the remainder in one or more ports of the same States, without paying any duty different from that paid by vessels belonging to the country itself, or by those of the most favoured nations.

XI. In case of a vessel belonging to one of the High Contracting Parties, being wrecked anywhere within the respective dominions, not only shall every kind of assistance be given to the persons wrecked, but the vessels themselves, and the remains of them, their fittings and all objects belonging to them, the letters found on board, as well as all effects and goods which may have been thrown overboard, or which may have been saved, shall not be seized or retained under any pretext whatever.

The said vessels, effects, and merchandise, shall, on the contrary, be kept and restored upon payment of the expenses of salvage and preservation, as well as of the same duties of customs, quarantine, and others, as in like cases would be paid by a national one. The same applies to the proceeds from the sale of the said effects, should circumstances require their being immediately disposed of.

In the above-mentioned case the respective Consuls, Vice-Consuls, or Commercial Agents, shall be authorized to interfere, for the purpose of affording the assistance of which their countrymen may stand in need. But in the event of there arising legal claims respecting the wreck, and the effects and goods on board the wrecked vessel, such claims shall be referred to the decision of the competent tribunals of the country.

XII. The Consuls, Vice-Consuls, and Commercial Agents of each of the 2 High Contracting Parties, shall enjoy in the States of the other one the same privileges and powers as are possessed by those of the most favoured nations; but should the Consuls and Agents be disposed to engage in any commercial transactions, they shall be subject to the same laws and usages as those to which their own countrymen are subject, in the place where they reside.

The Consuls, Vice-Consuls, and Commercial Agents of each of the 2 countries may, as such, act as arbitrators in civil questions or disputes arising out of contracts made elsewhere between captains and crews of vessels belonging to their own nation, provided that the subjects of the Power within whose territory they reside are not interested therein; nor can the local authorities interfere or take any part only in such matters, except only in cases in which public order or the tranquillity of the country should be disturbed by the conduct of the captain and the crew. This kind of award, however, cannot deprive the litigants of the right of appealing, on their return home, to the judicial authorities of their own country.

XIII. The Consuls, Vice-Consuls, and Commercial Agents of each of the 2 High Contracting Powers resident in the States of the other, shall receive from the local authorities all the assistance that can be lawfully afforded them for the delivering up of deserters from the ships-of-war or merchant vessels belonging to their respective countries.

XIV. His Majesty the King of the kingdom of the 2 Sicilies, in furtherance of the desire expressed by His Majesty the King of Sardinia, agrees to extend all the stipulations of the present Treaty to the sovereign principality of Monaco, placed under the protection of His Sardinian Majesty, upon the understanding of a perfect reciprocity on the part of the said principality.

XV. The present Treaty shall remain in force for 10 years, commencing from the exchange of the ratifications, and beyond that term until 12 months after one of the High Contracting Parties shall have made known to the other one its intention of causing the operation thereof to cease; each of the High Contracting Parties reserving to itself the right of giving a similar notification to the other at the end of the first 9 years; and it is agreed between them that, at the termination of 12 months after such notification from one of the High Contracting Parties shall have been received by the other one, the present Treaty, and all the stipulations it contains, shall cease to be obligatory upon the 2 Parties.

XVI. The present Treaty of Navigation and Commerce shall be ratified, and the ratifications thereof exchanged in Naples, on the expiration of 2 months from the day of signature, or sooner, if possible.

In faith whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same, and affixed thereunto the seals of their arms.

TREATY between Prussia, &c., and Luxembourg, respecting the continuance of the Accession of the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg to the Customs' System of Prussia and the other Zollverein States.—The Hague, April 2, 1847.

[Ratifications exchanged at the Hague, July 15, 1847.]
(Translation.)

INASMUCH as the continuance of the Treaty entered into on the 8th February, 1842,* with His Majesty the King of the Netherlands, Grand Duke of Luxembourg, respecting the accession of the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg to the Customs' system of Prussia, and of the other Zollverein States expired in March last, 1846; and it is the intention of the Contracting Parties, in consequence of the favourable effect produced by the said Customs' accession upon the trade and commerce of their subjects, to prolong the same, and only, in one single instance, to make alterations for the new period of time; so, for this object, they have named Plenipotentiaries, that is to say: on the one part, His Majesty the King of Prussia, for himself and on behalf of those who, by virtue of the Treaty of 22nd and 30th March, and 11th May, 1833,† 12th May and 10th December, 1835,‡ 2nd January, 1836,§ and 8th May, 1841,|| became members of the existing Customs and Trade Union, namely, the Crowns of Bavaria, Saxony, and Wirtemberg, the Grand Duchy of Baden, the Electorate of Hesse, the Grand Duchy of Hesse, representing at the same time the Landgravian Hessian Hombourg, the States forming the Thuringian Customs and Trade Union, namely, the Grand Duchy of Saxony, the Grand Duchies of Saxe-Meiningen, Saxe-Altenburg, and Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, and the Principalities of Schwarzburg-Rudolstadt and Schwarzburg-Sonderhausen, Reuss-Greiz, Reuss-Schleitz, and Reuss-Lobenstein, and Ebersdorf, the Duchy of Brunswick, the Duchy of Nassau, and the Free Town of Frankfort; his Chamberlain, Ambassador Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at the Royal Court of the Netherlands, Hans Carl Albrecht, Count of Königsmark, &c.; and on the other part, His Majesty the King of the Netherlands, Grand Duke of Luxembourg, his Chamberlain and Grand Chancellor for the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg, Frederick George Prosper, Baron of Blochausen, &c.;

Who, after preliminary negotiations, have, reserving always the ratification, agreed upon the following Articles:

shall, with the following changes, be prolonged to the end of December, 1853.

II. In consideration of the difficulties arising from the introduction of a new system of coinage, measures, and weights, the States of the Zollverein declare themselves willing that, notwithstanding the agreement come to in Article XI of the Treaty of the 8th February, 1842, the decimal system (for weights and measures), as well as the current French coinage introduced into the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg, shall be maintained there during the continuance of the present Treaty.

III. Inasmuch as on account of local or other considerations, it has appeared expedient and admissible, in consequence of the experience acquired during the continuance of the Treaty of February 8, 1842, to effect an alteration as regards the arrangements which, had been made in conformity with Article XVI of that Treaty, concerning the regulations for the administrations of the Customs in the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg, therefore such modifications as were considered adapted for the purpose have been determined upon by a further special agreement.

IV. Should no notice of cessation of this Treaty be given at latest, 2 years before its expiration, the same shall be considered prolonged for 12 years, and so on from 12 years to 12 years.

The same shall, as soon as possible, be laid before the contracting Governments, and the ratifications thereof with the greatest expedition, but at latest within 2 months, be exchanged at Berlin.

In testimony whereof the Plenipotentiaries of both the Contracting Parties have signed the present Treaty, and affixed thereunto the seal of their arms.

(Received January 3, 1848.)

MY LORD,

IN my despatch of yesterday I reported to your Lordship the substance of what Prince Metternich told me last night respecting the events in Modena and Parma. His Highness has this morning sent me the inclosed copy of Count Ficquelmont's circular to the Austrian Ministers at Rome, at Naples, at Florence, and at Turin, in which your Lordship will see the precise view taken by the Austrian Government of the motives and causes which operated in these proceedings.

Milan, le 21 Décembre, 1847.

MONSEIGNEUR le Duc de Modène a dans ce moment la plus grande partie de ses troupes employées au-delà des Appennins pour l'occupation de ses territoires de Massa, Carrara, et de Fivizzano. Il lui en reste très-peu pour les garnisons de Modène et de Reggio. Des émissaires des contrées voisines ne cessent d'exciter la population de ces 2 villes au mouvement.

Le Cabinet de est parfaitement instruit des motifs aussi fondés que simples et naturels qui ont dicté à Mgr. le Duc de Modène la réponse que Son Altesse Royale a faite aux Envoyés des 3 Cours de Sardaigne, de Toscane, et de Rome, chargés d'inviter Son Altesse Royale à accéder au Traité de la ligue douanière signé entre ces 3 Cours à Turin. Le parti qui veut se servir de cette ligue comme d'un moyen politique dans des vues étrangères au commerce, s'est servi de cette circonstance pour exciter les sujets du Duc de Modène contre lui, et les entraîner à des voies de fait. Ainsi des démonstrations publiques eurent lieu au théâtre de Reggio, accompagnées de toutes les vociférations de l'époque; elles furent suivies d'un attroupement populaire, qui parcourait les rues proférant les mêmes cris; cet attroupement, loin d'obéir à la sommation faite par les autorités de se dissoudre, se grossissant au contraire davantage, rendit nécessaire l'usage de la force armée.

Des manifestations de la même nature eurent lieu à Modène, indiquant la même tendance, sans qu'il eût été toutefois nécessaire d'employer la force armée; mais la fermentation de l'opinion causée par le départ des 3 Envoyés était de nature à faire craindre un ébranlement plus fort.

Le décès de Sa Majesté Madame l'Archiduchesse Duchesse de Parme vint ajouter à cette disposition des esprits un nouvel élément d'excitation, la tranquillité de Parme était menacée par quelques factieux qui crurent pouvoir profiter du tems qu'il fallait au nouveau Souverain pour prendre possession de ses nouveaux Etats et tenter par un coup de main de se rendre maître du Gouvernement. Cette tentative eut effectivement lieu.

Toute cette situation menaçante pour la sûreté de l'Etat de Modène décida Son Altesse Royale le Duc à demander à M. lo

Maréchal Comte de Radetzky de mettre quelques compagnies d'infanterie à sa disposition pour renforcer la garnison des 2 villes de Modène et de Reggio.

Les voies de fait qui avaient eu lieu étant un des cas prévus pour lesquels M. le Maréchal Radetzky se trouvait autorisé à porter secours à l'Etat voisin, 2 bataillons et 2 escadrons de cavalerie reçurent l'ordre de marcher vers ces 2 villes. Ces troupes doivent y être arrivées hier et aujourd'hui. Elles quitteront le territoire de Modène dès le moment que le calme y sera rétabli.

Un escadron de hussards a été envoyé à Parme pour y faire un service d'honneur près du corps de la défunte Souveraine, et pour en escorter le convoi, Sa Majesté par acte de sa dernière volonté ayant demandé d'être transportée à Vienne.

Comme il est possible que plusieurs feuilles publiques voudront donner à ces dispositions un caractère différent de celui qu'elles ont réellement, je crois devoir les faire connaître à votre . . . afin de la mettre à même d'en instruire le Cabinet de . . . et rectifier ainsi les faux bruits que la malveillance se plairait à répandre.

(Received January 3, 1848.)

MY LORD,

Milan, December 27, 1847.

I HAVE to express my regret at having forwarded to your Lordship, in my despatch of the 22nd instant, information not quite correct in its details, with regard to the arrangement carried into effect between the Austrian and Papal Governments for the military occupation of Ferrara.

I now inclose a copy and translation of an article that was published yesterday evening in the Milan official Gazette, from which it appears that on the morning of the 23rd instant the Austrian troops withdrew from the main guard, and from the 4 gates of the town of Ferrara, all which posts were occupied by the Papal troops, with the exception of one gate, that of the Po, which is occupied only by Papal Custom House officers. The Austrians retain the barracks hitherto occupied by them in the town, and thus Ferrara, in regard to quarters occupied, and posts held, by the Austrian troops, is replaced in the situation it was in previously to July last, the number alone of Austrian troops being augmented.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

CLINTON G. DAWKINS.

P.S.—The Prince of Lucca did not accompany his father on his way to Parma, but has returned to Turin.

(Inclosure.)—Article from the "Gazzetta Privilegiata di Milano" of December 28, respecting the reoccupation of Ferrara by Papal Troops. (Translation.)

ACCOUNTS received to-day from Ferrara announce the manner in which, in conformity with the Convention concluded between the Court of Rome and his Excellency the Ambassador Count Lutzow, for the purposes of settling the differences which had arisen, the order of service of the troops of the 2 parties in that garrison has been re-established and placed on its original footing.

With this object the Government of His Holiness had directed his Eminence the Cardinal Legate Ciacchi, who was absent on leave, to repair to Ferrara, and had made dispositions in order that 300 men, quartered in Bologna, should proceed to the above-mentioned city.

Agreeably to the measures agreed upon by the Cardinal Legate and the Lieutenant-General Count Auersperg, commanding the Austrian troops, the regular relief (or delivery, consegna) of the main guard took place on the 23rd instant, at 9 o'clock A.M., with all due formality, and without any inconvenience, in the presence of the superior officers of the Austrian troops, and of those of his Holiness, who were commanded to be present, and also of a great concourse of people.

At the same time the 4 guards were withdrawn from the gates of the town, which were occupied by the Papal troops, with the exception, however, of the gate of the Po, which, with a view to the necessary communication of the Austrian troops with the River Po, remains neutral, and is only occupied by the Papal Custom House guards.

The service of the garrison is divided.

The Austrian troops retaining their quarters in the barracks which they have always occupied in the town, will carry on the service in the citadel; the Papal troops will carry it on in the town.

The measures taken by his Eminence the Cardinal Legate prove that the harmony which never ceased to exist between the 2 Governments, and which was only temporarily interrupted in Ferrara, has been again re-established in that town.

MY LORD,

Florence, December 28, 1847.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 19th instant, inclosing one from Mr. Petre respecting the intention of the Austrian troops to evacuate the city of Ferrara, I have the honour to inform your Lordship that that event took place on the 23rd instant.

No. 10.—Sir G. Hamilton to Viscount Palmerston.

Florence, December 28, 1847.

COUNT FICQUELMONT has addressed, from Milan, a despatch to Baron Snitzer, the Austrian Chargé d'Affaires at Florence, to be communicated to the Tuscan Government, in which he observes that the Austrian force which has entered the State of Modena at the express desire of the Duke, will only remain within the territory of that Duchy as long as His Royal Highness may think the presence of these troops expedient.

The despatch further states that the seditious conduct of the people at Reggio indicated particularly a few nights ago at the theatre, the excitement at Modena caused by the departure of the Diplomatic Agents who failed in their mission about the Customs League, combined with the attempt to invest the Podestà or chief of the municipal department of Parma with the sole authority after the death of the Archduchess Maria Louisa, have for the present rendered this military measure on the part of the Duke of Modena essential to the internal peace of his territory, more especially at a time when the Modenese troops have been dispersed, in order to garrison Fivizzano, Massa, and Carrara.

In addition to the 2 battalions of Austrian infantry mentioned in my despatch of the 25th instant, 2 squadrons of cavalry have also entered the State of Modena, and a detachment of Hungarian cavalry has been sent to Parma as a guard of honour to assist in the transport of the remains of her late Majesty the Duchess of Parma, in conformity with her last request to be taken to Vienna.

The Chevalier Gaetano Georgini, Superintendent of Public Instruction at Florence, has been sent to Parma on a complimentary mission to the new Sovereign of that State, and it is generally believed that he is also instructed to make some arrangement with regard to Pontremoli and the Tuscan Lunigiana.

The Tuscan Government has as yet shown no evidence of any determination on this matter, or of any intention to execute the recent Treaty with the Duke of Lucca, concluded on the 9th of December, 1847, which binds the Grand Duke of Tuscany to cede Pontremoli to the Duke of Parma, as well as that of November, 1844, which last Treaty now comes fully into operation.

It was settled at the Congress of Vienna, that the Duke of Modena should take Fivizzano, Seravezza, Barga, and Pietra Santa. Guastalla was to remain with the Duchy of Parma, and Pontremoli continued to be united to Tuscany; but it is so clearly to the advantage of the Grand Duke of Tuscany to retain Pietra Santa, Seravezza, and Barga, that if His Imperial Highness' interests are now to be regarded, the Tuscan Government must prefer the abandonment of Pontremoli to relinquishing those territories which adjoin the State of Lucca, and of which he has so long enjoyed possession, with an expectation founded on the Treaty of 1844 that he was not to be at any time deprived of them.

A meeting took place at the Café del Ferruccio on Sunday evening, got up not without some opposition on the part of many persons who disapproved of the proceeding. The object of this movement was to excite the people of Florence to make a demonstration before the Pitti Palace, for the purpose of obliging the Grand Duke to form a camp of defence and observation at Pistoia, in case the Austrians should invade Tuscany. Violent speeches were uttered, and a desire expressed that 20,000 men should be immediately armed and marched off to that city. During this clamour, the Marquis Ridolfi repaired to the scene of commotion and harangued the mob, in order to point out the impropriety of subjecting the legitimate Government of the country to popular dictation, by calling for measures of defence when no enemy menaced Tuscany. The Marquis observed in his address, that he did not speak as Minister of the Interior, but as a citizen.

I have the honour to inform your Lordship that the Chevalier Martini, who negotiated at Turin the Customs Union, has been appointed Tuscan Minister at that Court.

GEORGE B. HAMILTON.

No. 12.—Consul-General Dawkins to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received January 10, 1848.)

MY LORD,

Milan, December 31, 1847.

YOUR Lordship is aware that when the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom was constituted, the late Emperor Francis directed, in the year 1815, the organization of 2 kinds of Representative Assemblies, of which the higher are called Central Congregations, one for each of the 2 Governments of Milan and Venice; the second, Provincial Congregations, one for each of the 17 provinces of the kingdom. These assemblies are composed of half nobles and half commoners, the delegate of the Province being the President of the Provincial Congregation, the Governor of Milan (or Venice), the President of the Central Congregation. The members are elected by the Communal Councils and the Royal Burghs, the Government having a right of veto upon the election. The Central Congregation is invited to communicate the wishes of the nation to the sovereign, who, however, reserves to himself the power of granting or refusing its requests at pleasure. The President has the power of naming committees of the deputies to report on matters of difficulty.

Availing themselves of the power thus conferred upon them, a power which they have hitherto allowed to remain nearly dormant, a step has been taken by the Central Congregation of Milan, that has caused considerable excitement among the public. At the instance, namely, of one of the members, Signor Nazari, Deputy for the Province of Bergamo, the Central Congregation have demanded the appointment of a committee to report upon the present state of the country, and the causes of the existing discontent, which demand has been complied with by the Government. I inclose a copy of Signor Nazari's petition, or demand, addressed to the Central Congregation, and I beg to call your Lordship's attention to the language of this paper. Signor Nazari has hitherto taken no prominent part in the affairs of this country, but has always been considered an independent and moderate man. As soon, however, as the step he had taken became known, a great number of the inhabitants of Milan went to his house to leave their cards, as a mark of their approval of his conduct. The Government are much annoyed at the proceeding of Signor Nazari, and especially at the publicity it has acquired. In the meantime, the Provincial Congregation of Milan, not slow to follow the example set to them, have drawn up and presented to the Central Congregation a paper purporting to contain a sketch of the principal grievances and demands of the inhabitants of the province. The substance of these demands is, I understand, as follows :—

That the affairs of the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom should be henceforward administered by the Viceroy, assisted by Italian counsellors alone, it being a great subject of complaint that the entire management of Italian affairs has hitherto been absorbed by the Aulic Council at Vienna,

That the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom should provide for its own expenses, and should contribute, in a fair proportion with the other provinces, to the general expenses of the empire; that the taxes should be adapted to the character of the inhabitants and to the productions of the country, and should be under the control of the authorities of the kingdom, who should have power to reduce or augment them, and that the accounts should be made public.

That publicity should be given to the accounts of the public debt, and that the country should be assured that the provisions of the Article of the Treaty of Vienna regarding the Monte Napoleon, are complied with.

That the Customs system should be made suitable to the country, with a view to an eventual union with the Italian Customs League.

That the regulations for the conscription should be modified, and a reduction made in the term of service, which is now 8 years.

That there should be greater publicity in the courts of law, and that greater security should be afforded against the arbitrary measures of the police authorities.

These demands are now before the committee appointed to receive them; and were they of an ordinary nature, brought forward in other times, they would probably remain for years consigned to the consideration of the committee, and to that of the authorities at Vienna, to whom they would be subsequently referred. Under present circumstances, however, the usual dilatory method of proceeding can hardly be followed; and although no one seems to imagine the possibility of a compliance with these demands, the step which has been taken may perhaps be the means of accelerating those measures, be they what they may, which are generally supposed to be under the consideration of the Government at Vienna.

I have been informed that a paper has been presented to the Central Congregation of Venice, calling upon it to follow the example of that of Milan, but as I am about shortly to proceed to Venice, I hope to be able to furnish your Lordship with further information on the subject.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

CLINTON G. DAWKINS.

(Inclosure.)—Petition of Signor Nazari to the Central Congregation of Milan.

TO THE CENTRAL CONGREGATION OF LOMBARDY.

No great power of observation is required to be aware how public opinion for some time past has pronounced itself, I will not say in a hostile manner, but certainly in a far from ambiguous spirit of discontent, against the Government. This spirit pervades all classes of society, more or less, and shows itself whenever an opportunity offers, as the authorities well know whenever they have thought fit to have recourse to severe and unusual measures, in order to prevent it from degenerating into disorderly demonstrations.

But from whence arises this agitation, which goes on fermenting? which increases in proportion to the measures adopted for its suppression. Whence the bad feeling which has sprung up between those who govern and those who are governed? Have these last perhaps reasonable grounds of complaint. And if they have, who ought to lay their respectful complaints before him who alone can render them satisfied and contented?

I, for my part, do not see that any persons are better fitted than we are to explain the desires of the country—we, who in our capacity of private individuals are able to judge of the good and the evil which results from good and bad institutions;—we, who placed by Providence in a state of moral independence, can the more frankly make known our sentiments. None, finally, are more legally qualified than this Central Congregation to lay before the Throne the wishes of faithful subjects, because it is to them alone that the sovereign clemency has granted the precious prerogative of making known our wants.

This being admitted, as I think it would be highly desirable to devise some means for re-establishing between those who rule and those who are governed, that good understanding by which alone public tranquillity is guaranteed, and to remove all, even the most remote, danger of a collision, which would be most hurtful to the country, I have determined to record in this protocol this petition or motion, whichever it may be considered, by which I ask and propose to the Central Congregation that it may be pleased to name a commission, chosen from among its members and composed of as many deputies as there are provinces of Lombardy, in order that the present condition of the country may be maturely examined into, and the causes of the discontent referred to may be made the subject of a detailed report to the Central Congregation itself, for its subsequent consideration.

This step is recommended to me by a desire for the public good, by the attachment I bear to my Sovereign, and by the sense of my duties; for as a citizen I ardently love my country, as a subject I desire that my Sovereign may be adored and beloved everywhere and by everybody; and as a deputy I should consider myself as wanting to my calling and to my oath, if I remained silent when my conscience calls upon me to speak.

MY LORD, Florence, January 4, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith Mr. Petro's despatch from Rome relating to the new organization of the ministerial departments consequent upon the institution of the Consulta di Stato.

I take this opportunity of informing your Lordship that I have learnt through Her Majesty's Consul at Ancona, that the French Government has sent a Consul and Vice-Consul to reside at Ferrara.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

GEORGE B. HAMILTON.

(Inclosure.)—Mr. Petre to Sir George Hamilton.

SIR, Rome, December 31, 1847.

I HAVE the honour to report to you, for the information of Viscount Palmerston, that His Holiness yesterday issued a decree—Motuproprio—for the reorganization of the Council of Ministers, rendered necessary by the institutions of the Consulta di Stato and of the Roman Municipality.

The whole administration of the State will be divided henceforth into 9 ministries:—1. Foreign Affairs; 2. Internal Affairs; 3. Public Instruction; 4. Grace and Justice; 5. Finances; 6. Commerce, Fine Arts, Industry, and Agriculture; 7. Public Works; 8. Arms; 9. Police.

The heads of the above-named departments will compose the Council of Ministers, presided over by the Secretary of State, Minister for Foreign Affairs, necessarily a Cardinal, having under him a prelate with the title of substitute.

To the Council will belong a body of 24 auditors—Uditori—one-half to be ecclesiastics, and all to be named by the Sovereign.

The Cardinal-President will appoint them to the several departments; they are to serve gratuitously, and after 4 years' meritorious service they will have a right to promotion to any vacant office suitable to their age, experience, and ability.

The separation of the Ministries of Foreign and Internal Affairs, and the independence and responsibility of each department to the Council, diminish the power and influence of the Cardinal Secretary of State in Civil Affairs, and may lead to the permanent foundation of a well-defined system of administration in harmony with the new institutions of the Consulta di Stato and of the Roman municipality.

In ecclesiastical affairs the Cardinal Secretary of State will retain all his power and influence, and treat concerning them directly with the Sovereign.

I have, &c.

Sir George Hamilton.

WILLIAM PETRE.

No. 22.—Consul-General Dawkins to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received January 13.)

MY LORD,

Milan, January 6, 1848.

IN my despatch of the 31st ultimo, I transmitted a paper which had been circulated in Milan, inviting the inhabitants to abstain from smoking, and I mentioned that some persons had already been insulted for not conforming to this invitation. I regret much to say that still more serious consequences have ensued.

It appears to have been generally understood that the 1st of January was the day upon which all persons were to abstain from the use of cigars. The 1st however was a very rainy day, and scarcely anybody appearing in the streets, nothing took place. The following day, Sunday, the 2nd, the whole population crowded the principal thoroughfares, and at first hardly any one was seen smoking. Later in the day, however, several smokers appeared, both civilians and soldiers; the former were, for the most part, compelled by the crowd to throw away their cigars, and many of the latter were hissed and hooted. Disturbances being apprehended, strong bodies of infantry and police, and smaller parties of dragoons and mounted gendarmes patrolled the streets. A great crowd assembled opposite the main guard, and becoming very abusive, were driven back by the troops, in doing which the Podestà, or Mayor of Milan, who was present with the view of quieting the people, was struck with the stock of a musket, but no serious affray took place.

On Monday, the 3rd, crowds began to assemble in the principal streets, and almost all persons, including soldiers, seen smoking, were insulted, and in some instances maltreated. Early in the afternoon a proclamation was issued by the police warning the people against these proceedings, and against assembling in crowds, under penalty of being instantly dispersed by the armed force. Towards evening, however, the crowds re-assembled and were dispersed by the troops, in doing which some persons were wounded. No shots were fired by the troops, but I am credibly informed that 2 shots were fired from a house near one of the gates of the town at some soldiers, who entered and ravaged the house, not sparing the inmates.

On Tuesday, the 4th, bodies of troops continued to patrol the streets, but all the soldiers, except those on duty, were confined to barracks. It is greatly to be lamented that this measure was not adopted sooner, for on the previous day, the 3rd, a great number of soldiers off duty, in parties of from 15 to 30 each, paraded the principal streets, each man with a cigar in his mouth, and between these bodies of men and the populace several collisions occurred, in which I regret to say little moderation was shown by the former, while many of the latter were wounded, and some lost their lives. It was natural that the soldiers, finding that when alone or in small parties they were liable to insult and attack, should unite together for protection; but in this case it had too much the appearance of wanton provocation, while it has afforded a pretext to the ill-disposed to assert that they were sent out on purpose to endeavour to bring on a collision. I lament to say very great irritation has been produced among the people in consequence of this proceeding, and although all reasonable persons admit the attempt to prevent others from smoking to have been unjustifiable and deserving of punishment, and indeed to have been the original cause of all the misfortunes that have ensued, the conduct of the military authorities in thus allowing bodies of armed men, without officers to control them, to parade the town in the midst of an unarmed population, is highly censured.

The number of persons killed in these affrays is stated to be 5, and about 30 wounded, but as many persons have not proclaimed their wounds, it is not possible to learn the exact amount. Unfortunately, as too often happens in such cases, many of the victims were perfectly innocent, having been led into the crowds by accident or curiosity. One attempt was made by the populace to cut the bridles of a patrol of cavalry, in a narrow street, but for the most part the people were without any arms.

Since the morning of the 4th the troops have remained in barracks, excepting the patrols on duty, and I trust I may not have to report any further excesses; but such is the feeling of exasperation at this moment, that the slightest collision may produce the most serious consequences.

I have the honour to inclose copies of the proclamations issued by the Municipality and the Viceroy. Your Lordship will perceive that the proclamation of the Municipality, who are desirous of conciliating and keeping well with the people, alludes to the original act of intimidation as being the act of persons desirous of recalling into vigour a law that had been allowed to fall into disuse. In explanation of this, it is necessary to state that a law is in existence, but has long ceased to be observed, forbidding all smoking in the streets. The idea, however, of persons having united for the purpose of enforcing this obsolete regulation is an afterthought unworthy of being put forward.

In the meantime the promoters of the plan to give up smoking are, I understand, not a little alarmed at the turn the affair has taken. It is curious how readily this idea, which certainly did not originate with them, has been caught up by the middle and lower classes. Accounts have been received here of a simultaneous movement to the same effect at Como, Brescia, Cremona, Mantua, and other towns in Lombardy, attended, however, as far as I have learnt, with no serious results.

Deputations from the principal Milanese families have waited upon the Viceroy and the Governor, deprecating the conduct of the soldiery; and it is owing to their representations, I believe, that the troops remain confined to barracks.

Various arrests have been made by the police, and, among other measures, the club to which the young men of the chief families of Milan belong has been dissolved by order of the Government. The principal Milanese have determined to put on mourning in memory of those persons who have lost their lives, and to abstain from going to the theatre for 3 days.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

THE MUNICIPALITY OF THE ROYAL CITY OF MILAN.

CITIZENS!

NOT long since your magistrates addressed you with words of gladness, they now speak to you in tones of sorrow. Painful scenes have saddened our streets; alarm has invaded the unarmed people; many families are in mourning.

Your representatives have not failed in efforts to arrest, as far as was in their power, the arm of rigour, but the efforts of their goodwill would not have the desired effect without your co-operation in the holy object of peace and tranquillity.

Some persons thought they ought to take on themselves the duty of censors, in order to enforce a law against smoking in the streets, which has gradually fallen into disuse. Such a matter is for the attention of those who are constituted to guard the laws, and impose no obligation on those who do not think themselves bound to observe them.

Citizens! respect for the laws and for the free exercise of those individual rights not limited by the laws, constitute the guarantee of civil society. Let those sacred principles be respected by you, and may no one allow himself to disown authority, or to molest any one in the exercise of his rights.

If your magistrates have, as they flatter themselves they have, that influence over your minds which is given only by the trust you put in them, show it by attending to this invitation. Those who now address you are citizens from your own body, who partake every interest with you. Hear them, and thereby give them the best earnest of your kind feeling towards them, which will serve to keep alive more brightly that fire of the love of good which guides them, and induces them to take every measure for the welfare of all.

The Viceroy of the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom to the Inhabitants of the Royal City of Milan.

THE ever-deplorable events which have taken place within these last days in Milan, have produced grievous feelings of sorrow on my mind, and have inflicted a deep wound on my heart.

After so many undoubted proofs of attachment to His Majesty's person and Government on the part of the inhabitants of these provinces, even in difficult times, it was quite unexpected by me to see a part of this population, so pacific and respectful to authority, allow themselves these few days to be carried out of their ordinary behaviour by the impulse of a few bad men, who, hostile by disposition to every sort of authority and order, are delighted in disseminating discontent, and in promoting its unhappy consequences.

The regular march of every administration may always demand progressive improvement. Turbulent manifestations could have no other result than to retard the supreme decision in such improvements, and would disappoint my best founded hopes, because I could not then bring before His Majesty's throne those wishes which would not have in their favour the support of that moderation which is so desirable.

In the meantime, while it is my anxious wish to watch over the personal safety of all the inhabitants of this city, it is also my strict duty not to allow any combination of private wishes to presume to interfere with individual liberty, secured as that is by our wise laws.

Beloved Milanese! I have before this received proofs of your attachment to me also, and I now confide in your well-known prudence and moderation. Be then tranquil; trust in him who is placed over you for the direction and careful guidance of your affairs, and you will shortly know that the benevolence of the sovereign is able to provide for the public good.

No. 23.—The Hon. R. Bingham to Visc^t. Palmerston.—(Rec. Jan. 14.)

MY LORD,

Turin, January 8, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that a deputation from Genoa, consisting of the Marquis Doria, the Marquis Balbi, and other influential persons, arrived yesterday afternoon in Turin, charged with a petition, with many thousand signatures affixed to it, praying for the expulsion of the Jesuits from Genoa, and the establishment of a civic guard there.

No. 30.—Sir G. Hamilton to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Jan. 18.)

MY LORD,

Florence, January 9, 1848.

SINCE I last had the honour of addressing your Lordship, the public tranquillity has again been seriously disturbed at Leghorn.

A clandestine publication of the most mischievous and seditious tendency, and of which I herewith transmit a copy in original and translation, was circulated by some factious individuals, and gave rise by its inflammatory language to scenes of the greatest disorder.

On the evening of the 6th instant, a considerable crowd collected before the Governor's house, and were clamorous for arms, many of them tried to force their way to the Governor's apartments, but were prevented by the civic guard on duty.

On a squadron of dragoons appearing, they were insulted by the people. The Governor, General Sproni, then appeared on the balcony, but the people would not listen to him, and he was treated with contempt. He desired them to send a deputation to state their grievances, and the people responded by naming Dr. Guerazzi, as their sole deputy. Dr. Guerazzi refused to obey the summons of the people, until his presence was requested by the Governor; and when at length he did appear, and came forward on the terrace, he asked the thousands assembled what they wanted; they replied, as one man, "arms." He said "Livornese! if you want arms you apply in the wrong quarter, for the Governor has no money or authority to buy arms. You want arms, and you are right, for the enemy threatens you, but you must apply at Florence."

A deputation was then nominated to convey the complaints of the people to the Grand Duke, and Guerazzi having called upon the assembly to disperse quietly, they did so immediately.

As soon as this state of things was known at Florence, the Government sent an extraordinary commission to Leghorn, at the head of which is the Marquis Ridolfi, Minister of the Interior, in order that they might examine into, and report upon, what had occurred, and the Grand Duke also sent all the disposable troops remaining in Florence, by railroad to Leghorn, and has published a proclamation, of which I have likewise the honour to transmit a copy in original and translation.

Since I began this despatch, I have received a letter from Her Majesty's Consul at Leghorn, informing me that the aspect of affairs in that town is by no means satisfactory. The Lieutenant-Colonel of the first battalion of the civic guard has sent in his resignation in consequence of the late events, and it is supposed that his example will be followed by other officers. The Lieutenant who commanded the dragoons on Thursday night is reported to have said to the crowd, "we are here because we have been ordered out, but you may rest assured that we are determined not to act offensively towards you." The Consul adds, that the general impression appears to be, that the troops have been allowed so completely to fraternize with the people that they would not, if called upon, act against them.

It is satisfactory to learn, that at Florence, Sienna, and other places in Tuscany, the well-disposed inhabitants have sent loyal addresses to the Grand Duke in consequence of the recent proceedings at Leghorn.

TUSCANS!

(Translation.)

BEFORE your conscience in the sight of the world, in the presence of history to watch your actions, to hand them down to the memory of posterity, or to the derision of scorn, you offered your lives and fortunes spontaneously to assist your brethren of Fivizzano and Pontremoli.

Fivizzano was abandoned ; Pontremoli is to be abandoned ! Perjurers ! Why have you sworn ? Boasters, why have you boasted ? Cowards, why have you pretended to be brave ? Away, complaining slaves, learn to sleep quietly in the bed of your dishonour.

All the passes which descend into this country being occupied by the enemy, you are placed, as wrote an Italian, like beasts in an inclosure, a target for sportsmen.

The enemy despises you, and notwithstanding, adopts the most base and disgusting artfulness, in order that when he is upon you he may find the hearts of all debased, the hands disarmed, and that his coming in may be a military march.

The German will come, because by occupying Tuscany, he may cut off the continuity of the Italian States bound in the League, that he may separate Piedmont from Rome, isolate Charles Albert, strike fear among nations, and delay for an age the epoch of regeneration.

And our statesmen, our Ministers, trust to protestations of good alliance with the German, and to their own assurances that he will not intervene ; as if we did not know of what is capable the faith of an interested enemy, as if in the Cabinets the unjust doctrine of "acts accomplished" had not been annulled, which means injury to the weak who allows himself to be conquered, to the simpleton, who is deceived. He who is dead, is dead ; throw a little holy water on his bier, and sing a requiem over him !

Oh statesmen, oh Ministers, ye are traitors ! What signifies it to us whether you are so by perverseness or by folly, the consequence is alike ; you betray your country.

Out of our way, traitors and cowards ! vanish Arcadians, sophists, and doctrinaires ! the destinies of a people are a volume too great and heavy in the hands of eunuchs and pigmies.

The country is in danger ! Now then, as the time is coming, do you know how to save the country ? Oh Tuscans, we will tell you. Let those be called who fear not to die, and who have a heart full of sacred love of country ; and let them be placed, whether consenting or repugnant, at the helm of the State, in accord with the Prince ; let the country be declared in danger ; let public prayers be offered up to God not to abandon our cause ; let there be established permanently sitting commissions ; let public loans be opened ; let people be sent to provide arms with the celerity of thought ; let 300,000 pikes, armed with iron, and 2 of lances, be fabricated ; let furnaces be prepared for casting cannon, take copper and brass from the houses and the bells of churches, leaving only one for divine service, with a vow to return them still handsomer when security to the country ; let the names of the volunteer to march against the enemy be inscribed upon the altars ; let the women be requested to prepare bandages, ligatures, and lint for the wounded, and they will do it, for they have more courage than men ; let the horses be collected from the luxurious rich for the transport of cannon ; let the servile be frightened with their roar the first time, and woe betide them the second.

With these and similar preparations the country is safe, and at all events, those who cannot conquer will die honoured, and leave an imperishable name, a legacy of reference for our children, an example of glory for the imitation of posterity.

Tuscans ! the country is in danger ; this cry, shall it be vain ? Shall the impious sect of traitors smother it ? We know it ; let it at least serve as a protest to make known that all Tuscans are not base, ignorant, and stupid, and the infamy will fall on him to whom it is due.

Infamy to traitors !

TUSCANS !

January 7, 1848.

SOME enemies of order and public quiet, abusing, yesterday, at Leghorn, the patience of the Government, dared by the most odious publication and subsequent tumult, to compromise the majesty of the Throne, the security of the country, the local tranquillity, attempting the ways of disorder and anarchy.

Brave and faithful Tuscans, this is the moment I call you round me to give me a proof of that reciprocity of love of which you have already had on my part undoubted testimonies, of which I shall always offer you by my acts the most explicit guarantees.

No, fear not : be faithful and closely bound up with your Prince, as loving children to their common father, and be persuaded that no external danger hangs over you ; no difficulty which I do not feel able to overcome.

I am resolutely firm in my intention to fulfil the reforms commenced, and it is your duty fully to trust yourselves to my solicitude for your good.

But neither my work nor your hopes could be happily completed, without concord, without peace, without mutual confidence, and unless the law has full power among us.

The disturbance at Leghorn calls at this moment all my attention, and, strong in my right, and still more anxious for your welfare, I will re-establish tranquillity in that important city ; and in order to obtain this object I place my trust in the arms of the citizens, and trust more to them than to myself the safety of the common country.

(Extract.) Turin, January 13, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inclose herewith to your Lordship a report which I have received from Mr. Consul Brown relative to the late occurrences at Genoa.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

RICH. BINGHAM.

(Inclosure.)—Mr. Consul Brown to the Hon. R. Bingham.

SIR,

Genoa, January 11, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that I witnessed the great procession which took place here of perhaps 40,000 or 50,000 persons, on the 10th December; it occupied the whole day; there was not the slightest disturbance; though not one soldier, not one policeman appeared. Its professed object was to commemorate the centenary of the Austrians being driven out of Genoa. Since this, nothing of any importance had taken place until the 3rd of this month; on that night, several (from 4,000 to 6,000) persons marched about the town, crying "Away with the Jesuits!"—"We want a civic guard!" While doing this near the Jesuits' church, the noise of a cart approaching caused a panic; the cry was, "The cavalry are coming!" and all the populace took to flight. This occasioned confusion, and several people were injured, many hats, cloaks, &c., were lost; the chief mischief occurred from the construction of the street which formed the principal line of egress to the crowd: one part of the street is 4 or 5 feet lower than the main path on which carriages go, and there is nothing but a weak wooden rail to separate the two. By the pressure of the mob, this rail was broken down, and row after row of the people fell one over the other; hence many contusions took place. But the really bad result was this—that the runaways having been laughed at, determined the next night to attack the Jesuits' college. The new Governor, hearing this, sent for the so-called Doria Committee, who then, to stave off mischief, opened a public subscription to intreat the King to dismiss the Jesuits from the Sardinian States, and to grant a civic guard. This subscription or petition received in a few hours 20,000 signatures. On the 6th a deputation, bearing this, started for Turin, from whence they returned discontented.

Yesterday a proclamation was issued by the Governor. I send you a copy. The expression "Le demande sediziose," is too strong; in short, not founded in fact. This proclamation has caused great irritation, and has in many places been torn down.

The Jesuits have given up the keys of the church, and as a body they have left the place; 2 only remain in the palace, prepared to give up the keys of it when called upon so to do. The Municipality have withdrawn from them the ordinary allowance of 40,000 francs per annum, so that, for the time at least, they are not intrusted of the youth of Genoa.

This morning, 500 of the Queen's regiment have arrived at St. Pier d'Arena as a reinforcement, and will, I presume, come in to-morrow.

It has just come to my knowledge that the Père Giordano, the head of the Jesuits, was insulted in passing St. Pier d'Arena, and the windows of his carriage broken by stones thrown; and that subsequently a knife was drawn upon him (harmless, however) when at Savona. Though a Jesuit, he is very generally respected, and is a man of considerable acquirements and irreproachable carriage.

I am, &c.

No. 33.—Viscount Palmerston to Viscount Ponsonby.

MY LORD,

Foreign Office, January 22, 1848.

WITH reference to your Excellency's despatch of the 26th of December last, reporting the termination of the affair of Ferrara, I have to inform your Excellency that Her Majesty's Government have learnt with very great pleasure that this question has been amicably settled, in a manner satisfactory both to the Emperor and to the Pope.

PALMERSTON.

No. 34.—Sir G. Hamilton to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Jan. 24.)

Florence, January 14, 1848.

IN my despatch dated the 9th instant I had the honour to transmit to your Lordship a manifesto which had excited a violent commotion at Leghorn, directed against the Government for their supposed abandonment both of Fivizzano and Pontremoli.

This disturbance at Leghorn has elicited throughout all Tuscany general disapprobation, and called forth loyal addresses to the Grand Duke in support of public order throughout the country.

Encouraged by this manifestation, the Government sent the Marquis Ridolfi to Leghorn with full powers to take whatever measures he might deem necessary to restore public tranquillity in that city.

In the meantime the Grand Duke refused to recognize a deputation of the rebellious faction, which, by the advice of Guerazzi, had come to Florence to make a demand for arms, on the pretext of an expected invasion by Austria.

The news of this rejection created fresh tumult at Leghorn.

The Marquis Ridolfi was received in silence by the multitudes who were expecting his arrival, when he entered the Piazza at Leghorn; but soon after a deputation came to him from the "Veneziani" or Porters, a formidable and numerous body at the port of that city, with an offer of their services to aid in repressing the insubordination, and making arrests.

This assistance was immediately accepted, and on the following day a strong force of the civic guard accompanied the soldiers of the line to the house of Signor Guerazzi, who, with others found in the same place and in the neighbourhood, were at once arrested.

14 persons altogether, including Guerazzi, were then embarked in a Government steamer, and dispatched to Portoferraio, in the Island of Elba. I am informed that if the authorities had been earlier in their proceedings, 40 or 50 more would have been taken, who contrived to escape.

The energy displayed, for the first time, by the Government, is generally hailed as a symptom of a better prospect in political affairs, by all those who honestly prefer the reformation of abuses to the subversion of all authority.

One of the first reforms petitioned for from the commencement, both at Florence and Leghorn, has been the destruction of the monopoly enjoyed by the "Faquini" of both cities who originally came from the Venetian States.

On this occasion they denounced the state of insubordination at Leghorn as unendurable, and they have probably indulged in a feeling of revenge, having had an opportunity of arresting and opposing those who have not been friendly to their interests.

I have not heard of any opposition being made by the Pontremolesi, when their territory was given up to the Duke of Parma on the 8th instant.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

GEORGE B. HAMILTON.

No. 35.—The Earl of Minto to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Jan. 25.)
 MY LORD, Rome, January 13, 1848.

THE new year opened here inauspiciously with 24 hours of uneasiness and ill-humour, produced by ill-advised proceedings on the part of the public authorities against an imaginary danger.

In the middle of the night of Friday, the 31st of last month, the citizens of the civic guard were suddenly called out of bed to reinforce the different posts throughout the town, to the no little consternation of the inhabitants, who supposed that a revolution must have broken out.

In the morning it was found that the troops were posted in the court of the Pontifical Palace of the Quirinal, that the gates of the palace were closed, and that cavalry were drawn up in front of them; and the public then learned with surprise that this alarm and preparation had originated in information conveyed to the Governor, of an intended assemblage of the people before the Quirinal Palace to offer their new year's salutations to the Pope, which was to be made the occasion for popular violence or disorder.

The people, greatly incensed by this impeachment of their loyalty and by the easy credit which had been given to the notion of their insubordination and disorderly disposition, were with difficulty prevented from proceeding to the Quirinal to vindicate themselves and complain of their calumniators.

They were however at length induced to resort to the more regular intervention of their own chief magistrate, the Senator, and proceeding to Prince Corsini's, made known their wishes through a deputation.

The Senator at once consented to undertake their vindication; went to the Quirinal, soon satisfied the Pope of the deception which had been practised upon him; and when he left the palace, was able to assure the crowd who had followed him there, that the next day they should be satisfied with abundant proofs of the Pope's entire confidence in the people. This occurred late in the evening of Saturday, and the people then quietly dispersed.

During the whole of this day the Cardinal Secretary of State and the Pope had been kept in alarm by repeated communications from the Governor, the Chief of the Police, and the Commander of the Carabinieri, with information of tens of thousands of the populace marching upon the Quirinal; and they were at one time even made to believe that all the Piazza before the palace was actually occupied by a vast mob—there being in truth no one there.

The next day, Sunday, the people manifesting some impatience for the promised satisfaction, the Princes Borghese and Doria waited upon the Pope, who desired them to announce his intention of visiting all the quarters of the town, and of showing himself unguarded amongst his subjects. This he did, was everywhere enthusiastically cheered, and good humour was again restored.

The credulity and incapacity exhibited on this occasion by the Government has still further discredited it in public opinion, and has greatly increased the desire for a more efficient administration, which cannot be much longer resisted.

There is a strong belief, little short of conviction with all classes, that a deliberate plot had been formed to bring about a bloody collision between the populace and the troops; leading to disorders and insurrection sufficient to constrain the Government to seek a foreign support.

It is said, with truth, that had it merely been desired that the new year's salutations on the Quirinal should not take place, a simple intimation the day before of the Pope's wishes would have sufficed, and would have been respected on this as on all former occasions; that no such notice was given; that the procession was to have been suddenly arrested on its march by an armed force with orders to disperse it, which must have led to the most serious disasters; and that this is what would have occurred but for the timely exertions and influence of some private individuals who had prevented the meeting from taking place.

The false intelligence conveyed to the Quirinal through the whole of Saturday, in order to maintain the belief of a popular insurrection, and a display of hostile array against the people, calculated to irritate and provoke them, is also taken as evidence of a traitorous design.

It is difficult to say how much of these proceedings may be explained by the negligence, want of capacity, and mismanagement, pervading every department of the Roman Administration; but the existence of a design, by any means to bring about a rupture between the Government and the people is, I think, beyond all doubt.

For some time past every effort has been made in various quarters, and not altogether without success, to inspire the Pope with distrust of the moderate party, on whom the security of his Government and possibly of the Papal power itself really depends; and he is continually pressed, and occasionally induced, to adopt measures and assume a tone and language calculated to give offence and to shake the public confidence in his sincerity. On the other hand it has been observed that a good deal of active agitation of the ultra-Liberals is on foot among the lowest classes; that many strangers have joined them; and the suspicion of some early attempt to get up insurrectionary movements has lately prevailed amongst the well-informed.

From other parts of Italy the expectation of disturbance at Rome on the new year had been announced here, and it now appears that the 2nd and 3rd of January were signalized by disorder at Milan and Genoa as well as here; just as the occupation of Ferrara was contemporaneous with the disturbances at Rome in July.

I believe that much of all this arises from the restless eagerness of the Young Italy faction; but I also believe that there is in other quarters a great readiness to encourage whatever disorder may lead to an application for foreign protection.

The chief of the police and the commander of the Carabinieri have been dismissed; but the governor (a Corsican) retains his post, and it is said now pays his court to the ultra-movement party.

The events of the 1st and 2nd are likely, I think, on the whole, to produce a good effect in somewhat opening the eyes of the Pope to the treachery by which he is surrounded. He is at least perfectly aware of the deception then practised upon him ; and in my subsequent conversation with him, as well as with the Cardinal Secretary of State, they both appeared to me to feel that a retrograde influence, both foreign and domestic, was at work to disunite the people and the Government.

MINTO.

No. 36.—The Earl of Minto to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Jan. 25.)

MY LORD,

Rome, January 15, 1848.

I INCLOSE the copy and translation of an address to the Consulta di Stato, which was presented a few days ago.

This address was got up in the "Circolo Romano," a political society exercising great influence here and having amongst its members those who hold the highest station in rank or talent. The address, which is the composition of an individual who can scarcely claim to be one of the moderate party, is injudiciously drawn, particularly towards the close, which has a tone of menace.

For this reason some refused to sign it, and others only consented from deeming it absolutely necessary to bring an expression of public feeling to bear upon the Government, although not couched in terms which they could quite approve.

The object of this proceeding was to represent the disorganised condition of the Roman army, and the abuses prevailing in the administration of that branch of the service, and to require that the defensive force of the country should be made more efficient. This is a subject which has very much engaged the attention of the public here, in consequence of the great military preparations of Austria in Lombardy.

This address, placed in the hands of the President of the Consulta by a deputation consisting of the Prince Teano, the Duke of Lanti, and Angelo Brunetti (Ciceroacchio), was delivered to the Cardinal Secretary of State, who, finding that the mal-administration complained of really existed, consented to receive the address, without looking too nicely into any expressions which might give offence.

The proceeding itself has an importance not otherwise belonging to it, as the first example of a public appeal to the Consulta di Stato.

The nominal strength of the Papal army, in regular and police force, is I believe between 18,000 and 20,000 men. Its actual strength does not exceed 12,000 or 13,000, of which about 3,000 Swiss alone are good for anything.

The civic guard of the Roman States consists of about 118,000 men, but a very small proportion of these are yet armed or thoroughly organised.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

MINTO.

GENTLEMEN,

(Translation.)

A SUPPRESSED agitation, continually on the increase, has for some days prevailed in this city.

The idea that in one moment we may lose, not only all the good derived from the reforms granted by our excellent Prince, but also all freedom of action and all progressive development of the national prosperity, has taken so strong a hold of the public mind, that a popular demonstration is to be dreaded, energetic, universal, and perhaps incurable.

In order to prevent these movements which might become violent; to preserve legal forms in making known to our Sovereign the wishes of the people; we, who ourselves belong to that people, and who are well acquainted with its thoughts, and who have so deep an interest in the maintenance of the peace, and in watching over the security and the dignity of our country, have recourse to you, oh! illustrious counsellors, to make known to you the real sentiments of Rome, and to conjure you to make yourselves the interpreters to the Throne of our wishes, and to become the mediators of peace and of the public weal.

When the independence of a State is threatened by a powerful enemy, it becomes the supreme law, the sacred right of a people, to provide the means of insuring its own safety.

The aggressive designs of Austria against Italy are no longer a secret to anybody. Arrogating to herself the right of occupying by a military force those States which may call for her assistance, without demanding the consent of the other Italian Governments, without even sufficient grounds to serve as a pretext for occupation, Austria is seeking to make herself the mistress of our destinies. Modena is already invaded; the people of Parma, menaced by Austrian arms, ready to rush in at the first sign from the Duke, is reduced to silence. The Neapolitan Government replies to the supplications and to the cheers of its people, with imprisonment, because it is aware that German bayonets are at its service. Ferrara, in spite of repeated promises, is not yet free from Croats; Vienna is still sending fresh regiments towards Italy, and is placing her army upon a war footing. is augmenting the pay by a third, preparing siege-artillery, and is making ready all the appliances of war necessary for entering into campaign.

In the midst of these signs prognosticating invasion, while the public papers in Germany speak openly of war; while the partisans of the ancient system of oppression are again raising their heads, and are conspiring against the people; those Italian Governments, which with admirable concert, united together to march in the track of reform, should now lay aside every thought but that of the defence of our common country and of Italian independence. It would now be stupidity to repose upon the faith of Treaties, ignorance of history to rely upon the force of reason, and insanity to put faith in the power of protests.

Italy, awakened by the sound of foreign arms, has perceived her danger, and from every side rises a sudden exclamation calling upon Princes to protect her threatened independence. Tuscany is already engaged in re-organizing her troops, in arming in haste her civic guard, and is preparing for her defence; while Piedmont is refusing furlough to her soldiers, calling out her contingents, and is arming her fortresses. And we, who are the first mark for the anger of the enemies of our country, because we were the first to give the signal of its resurrection, must not now be the last to prepare for the defence of our Prince, of our laws, and of our country. But our army, although composed of so many brave and excellent soldiers, considered individually, is nevertheless become a feeble and inert body, for want of a regulating mind, for want of harmony in its movements. For the purpose of subjecting it to the tyrannical ambition of a few, it was sought for a long time to convert it into an instrument of persecution and oppression; and yet in respect of generous sentiments, courage, and sense, it was worthy of being a well-organized army, to which the State could with safety confide the defence of the lives and substance of its citizens. Let it also have new life infused into it by fresh and wise arrangements. Let it return to a strict system of discipline, to an upright administration, and let it recover, with its dignity, a sense of its duties. Let its equipments, at present poor and neglected, be renewed; let its forces, now dispersed, be concentrated; let preparations be augmented and hurried forward; but, above all, let our army be provided with commanders, active and brought up to arms, of tried valour, and deservedly inspiring confidence by the constancy of their opinions in favour of progress and Italian civilization.

This is at present the demand of the Roman people, and to its demand must be added those of the provinces and the wishes of the entire body of officers. It is well known to you that more than 200 signatures of officers were affixed to an address by which the remodelling of the Pontifical army was respectfully required; and this address, in which we all heartily concur, was presented to the authorities by the worthy Colonel Hovast, who witnessed first its acceptance and then rejection, probably because it is not thought desirable that a single ray of light should penetrate into that dark abyss termed Military Administration.

And in order that its just demands should reach the throne of its Sovereign, the people of Rome confides them to you, oh! faithful and loyal counsellors of the Government, to you who come from the provinces, who having constantly resided in the midst of the people, are acquainted with all its grievances, with all its wishes, to you who were summoned here to propose an effectual remedy and complete redress.

You will say in our name, that we place in the hands of our Prince that which is dearest to us in the world,—the independence of our country. You will say to him that this people is prepared for any sacrifice, that all the youth is ardently desirous to hurry to the spot where a patriotic defence may require its presence.

The generous offers of the municipalities and the voluntary subscriptions sufficiently prove the spirit by which the multitude is animated. Why has it been sought to stifle this noble and patriotic sentiment; why were even the donations made for the purchase of cannon refused; and the very cannon offered by Milan and Genoa?

The confidence of the people must no longer be trifled with; the Pontifical army must be made to acquire that strength and brilliancy which it deserves, and which circumstances require. The civic guard must be more actively and expeditiously organized throughout the State. But should the counsels prevail of those who term our fears visions, and who would lull us asleep, oh! illustrious counsellors, you would then say respectfully, that the people is determined to make use of that impulse which calls in to its aid every means, when there is a question of defending Prince, laws, substance, liberty, in short all that constitutes a country.

That if, in the midst of the efforts required to arm a multitude, and in the universal excitement which is necessary to induce a people to make every possible sacrifice, prudence should not always be able to assign limits to the public enthusiasm, and the voice of moderate men should no longer be listened to, then let the blame and the penalty fall upon those who deceive Governments and betray the people, by concealing from the former the real state of things, and by driving the latter, as a last resource, into illegal measures upon seeing their unjust demands despised.

MY LORD,

Rome, January 16, 1848.

HAVING learned that the Pope had again appeared to hesitate in announcing his consent, which was understood to have been obtained, to the demand of the Consulta di Stato that they should have the power of making their proceedings public, and that he had declined to give his decision till he should receive an answer to a reference that had been made to Turin for the opinion of the King of Sardinia, I felt the proper decision of this question to be so important that I requested Mr. Abercromby to write immediately to the Count St. Marsan, making him aware of the absolute necessity for the concession, if a good understanding was to be maintained between the Government, the Consulta, and the public. The objection to this concession seems to have been revived in a quarter where I should not have expected it, the Government of Florence; and the demand appears to have been represented by M. Martini as evidence of the expediency of establishing a concert between the Courts of Florence, Rome, and Turin, for an uniformity of proceeding, which should impose a limit to concession, but which is quite impracticable in 3 States differing so entirely in their institutions, in their circumstances, and in the character of the people.

The Ministers of Tuscany and Sardinia here have also been induced to write strongly to their respective Courts, representing the evil consequences which must ensue from a denial of the demand made by the Consulta, and I have, through a private channel, conveyed my own very decided opinion to the Marquis Ridolfi, at Florence, so that I trust that any disposition which may have existed to counsel the Pope to withhold his consent may be overcome. There can be no doubt that the publicity of the proceedings of the Consulta di Stato is the basis upon which every hope of improvement in the Government of this country must rest; if this is refused, the most important members of that body will withdraw from it, and all confidence in the Government will be at an end.

MY LORD,

Rome, January 16, 1848.

THE decision and vigour manifested by the Marquis Ridolfi and the Tuscan Government, in dealing with the turbulence of Leghorn, has given the greatest satisfaction here, even in quarters where I could scarcely have hoped to find it.

I have endeavoured to turn this to some account here, as evidence of the energy which a Government may safely exhibit, when it has the confidence of the public, which is far from being the case at Rome.

In the course of a few days, the successor to Cardinal Ferretti, as Secretary of State, will be announced, and it is possible that this may be followed by further changes in the administration. In Cardinal Ferretti the Pope will lose a thoroughly honest and attached friend and Minister; but his previous habits and pursuits had not been such as to familiarize him with the conduct of public affairs, and this disadvantage no one felt so strongly as himself. It was indeed with great difficulty that he has been prevailed upon to retain his post so long.

3 H

The death of Cardinal Massimo, a few days ago, made a vacancy in a department of the public works, which it was hoped might be given to a layman; the public expectation has however been disappointed by the choice of an ecclesiastic of the retrograde party and without talents to recommend him.

This is the more distasteful as in this case a Minister eminently qualified for that office was at hand.

The appointment, however, is announced as only provisional; but even as such it has a good deal lowered the hopes of much improvement in the composition of the Ministry, which I nevertheless still believe that the Pope intends to effect.

Milan, January 18, 1848.

HIS Majesty the Emperor being determined, according to his rights and duties, to defend the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom, as well as every other part of his dominions, against all attacks of an enemy, either from without or from within, has allowed me, through the Court Marshal intrusted with the order, to make known to all the troops of the army stationed in Italy, this his determination, persuaded that his will will meet with the firmest support in the valour and fidelity of the army. Soldiers! you have heard the words of the Emperor, I am proud to make them known to you; against your fidelity and your valour the efforts of fanaticism and of the infidel spirit of innovation will be broken like brittle glass against a solid rock. The sword which I have borne with honour in so many battles during 65 years, is still eager for action. I will know how to make use of it to defend the tranquillity of a country a short time since most happy, and which a mad faction now seeks to plunge into misery. Soldiers! our Emperor relies upon you, your old general trusts in you: let this suffice.

Let them not oblige us to unfold the banner of the double-headed eagle; the strength of its talons is yet unimpaired. Let our motto be; Defence, and tranquillity to faithful and friendly citizens, and destruction to the enemy who shall dare with a treacherous hand to disturb the peace and welfare of nations.

The present order of the day will be notified to all the corps in their respective languages.

(Received January 28.)

MY LORD,

Venice, January 18, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint your Lordship that the example of the Central Congregation of Milan has been followed by that of Venice, who have demanded the appointment of a committee to take into consideration the state of the country, with a view to the removal of the causes of the existing discontent. Though the Venetian provinces, as I have already stated, have hitherto been much more tranquil than the provinces of Lombardy, they appear now disposed to make common cause with the latter, and it is surprising to perceive the change that a short time has brought about. When I left Venice, early in November last, everything was perfectly quiet, and although some little excitement had been produced by the speeches delivered by a few persons during the sitting of the Scientific Congress, society was upon its accustomed footing. Now, however, it is quite different; the Venetians have adopted the system of the Milanese, and there is hardly a Venetian house into which an Austrian is admitted. This determination has been come to very unwillingly by many, but they act under a system of intimidation that is carried on to a degree scarcely credible. Persons supposed to have a leaning towards the Government are held up to public execration, and their names are written upon the walls as traitors to their country. In the meantime, excepting constant interrogations by the police, nothing appears to be done by the Government, and it is really deplorable to see the dilatory manner in which affairs are carried on. The want of some all-controlling hand is most severely felt, and is admitted by the local authorities themselves, who bitterly complain of the delays of the Government at Vienna, from whence they can get no answers to their repeated representations. This is most evident at the present moment at Milan, where decisive measures are called for, but where no person seems to know who is the head of the Government. The Viceroy, the Governor, Count Spaur, the Commander-in-chief, Marshal Radetzky, Count Ficquelmont, and the Director-General of Police, each exercise authority, while no one appears responsible for the measures that are adopted. The only thing that is actually in progress is the augmentation of the army; and notwithstanding the unfavourable season of the year, troops are arriving almost daily in these provinces. I fear these troops arrive, for the most part, with a hostile feeling towards the inhabitants generally, which will acquire strength from contact with the regiments already quartered here, between whom and the people the feeling of irritation is very great. At Milan, as I have already said, this feeling especially exists; but I do not think that anything in the shape of an open provocation is meditated at present by the Milanese. On the contrary, they appear anxious, as long as possible, to keep their demonstrations within bounds, so as not to afford any pretext for interference to the Government, and thereby perhaps still more to embarrass it. Should, however, a collision ensue between the troops and the people, and a very slight thing may bring it on, the consequences, I fear, would be extremely serious.

I may here mention another demonstration made by the Milanese, of which no one seemed to be aware until it actually occurred. It has been the custom on Sundays and holidays for the inhabitants to assemble on a part of the boulevard called the "Corso Francesco," which on those occasions is thronged with carriages and persons on foot. On Sunday the 9th, being the first holiday after the unfortunate events that occurred on the 3rd, the Corso Francesco was deserted, while that part of the boulevard in the neighbourhood of the gate leading to Rome was densely crowded. The Milanese have now selected this spot as their place of resort, and have christened it "Corso Pio Nono," not choosing any longer to frequent the Corso Francesco, so called after the Emperor Francis. The remarkable unanimity which has prevailed in the demonstrations hitherto made, has caused the authorities to be persuaded of the existence of a secret directing committee, and they are unremitting in their endeavours to discover its members. Although, however, well acquainted with various persons avowedly hostile to them, and who certainly exercise great influence, the Government have not hitherto, I believe, succeeded in detecting the members of any regularly organized society; nor do I think that as yet any such exists in these provinces, to the extent at least imagined by the authorities.

A disturbance took place a few days ago at Treviso, in which I understand the military were the aggressors. Strict inquiries are being instituted by the military authorities, who, after what has occurred at Milan, cannot be too rigorous in enforcing discipline. At Padua, also, disturbances have taken place, originating with the students. Some of the latter have in consequence been sent off to serve in regiments in the interior, to which regiments I am informed they were nominally attached by the conscription, though they would never have been required to join, had they tranquilly pursued their studies.

 MY LORD, Rome, January 18, 1848.

THE Consulta di Stato yesterday agreed to a report recommending a reorganization and increase of the army, the speedy completion of the arming of the civic guard, and the organization and arming of the reserve of the civic guard.

This last, from the composition of the reserve, is a measure of questionable policy, unless for defence against a foreign enemy, for which it is better adapted than what is called the active civic guard, composed of persons above the class of peasants.

The menacing attitude of Austria, and the impression everywhere produced by the massacres at Milan and Pavia, have led to an impatient desire for defensive preparation.

 MY LORD, Rome, January 18, 1848.

I WAS this morning informed that Count Lützow yesterday endeavoured to sound Cardinal Ferretti as to the reception which an application for the passage of Austrian troops through the Papal territory, for the succour of the King of Naples, might obtain from the Pope.

The Cardinal replied, a peremptory refusal; that the proposal was one not to be entertained. That any forcible attempt to execute it would be resisted. That he himself was about to proceed to the frontier, which he would defend in person to the last drop of his blood.

Count Lützow, not satisfied with this reply, insisted upon seeing the Pope himself, from whom he received an answer, though couched in more courteous terms, equally firm and explicit.

Your Lordship will understand that no formal application was made for the passage of the Austrian troops; Count Lützow only desiring to be informed how such a demand would be received.

(Received January 30.)

MY LORD,

Turin, January 22, 1848.

ON my return to Turin I took an early opportunity of calling upon Count St. Marsan.

I found the mind of the Count much engrossed by the turn which affairs in Italy have lately taken, and not altogether free from apprehension that Austria meditates striking some sudden and unexpected blow against the States of those Sovereigns of this peninsula who have voluntarily granted administrative reform.

Count St. Marsan does not anticipate that Austria will attempt to execute any such project against the States of His Sardinian Majesty, but he evidently did not feel confident that Tuscany was completely safe from such a danger.

The Sardinian Minister for Foreign Affairs argued that the military preparations now making by Austria in Lombardy, the conduct of her public men, and the language held by those in the official employ of the Austrian Government in various parts of Italy, were all circumstances which induced him to suspect that Austria entertained more serious intentions than she openly avowed.

He remarked that supposing the projects which he suspected Austria to entertain to be well founded, she might by a sudden move enter Tuscany, and before any assistance could be afforded to the Grand Duke and his people, she might be able to effect her object of striking a blow at the Liberal party in that country. He admitted that any prolonged occupation of Tuscany by Austrian troops was not likely to occur; but he seemed to fear that in the hope of being able to make an example of some of the leaders of the liberal movement in Italy, the Cabinet of Vienna might not be unwilling to have recourse to some measure such as he had described.

I replied, that certainly there were circumstances connected with the policy which Austria has of late been pursuing, which it would be difficult to explain otherwise than by their being the prelude to some act by which she hoped effectually to stop the progress of liberal opinions and to check the opposition to Austrian interests and principles which at present pervades Italy. But that when I admitted that grounds so far existed for the apprehensions he entertained, I must also add, that there appeared to me to be on the other hand so many cogent reasons to prevent Austria from following the course he had indicated, that I could not believe the danger to be so pressing as he imagined. It was impossible now, whatever may have been the case formerly, that the Cabinet of Vienna should be ignorant of the true state of public feeling in Italy; they must be aware, however easy it might be for them to make a sudden irruption into the territory of the Grand Duke of Tuscany, that the passage of a single company of Austrian infantry across the frontiers, either of Tuscany or of the Papal States, would be the signal for a general rising throughout the whole of Italy; that no Government in Italy would be able to control or suppress such a movement; and that anarchy and confusion must inevitably follow such an insurrection.

Such being the conviction to which the Austrian Cabinet, however unwillingly, must have come, the adoption of such a measure as he feared could alone be explained by the determination of Austria to run all risks rather than forego the hazardous policy of attempting to put down by force the liberals of Italy.

That Austria, single-handed, should, in the present internal condition of the Austrian Empire, voluntarily create such difficulties for herself in Italy, appeared to me to be improbable, and therefore I could not seriously believe that she would act in a manner so contrary to her true interests.

RA. ABERCROMBY.

No. 45.—The Hon. R. Abercromby to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received January 30.)

MY LORD,

Turin, January 24, 1848.

By a Royal Decree published this evening in the "Piedmontese Gazette," His Majesty the King of Sardinia directs that the extraordinary members of the Council of State, indicated by the IIIrd Article of the Royal Edict of the 8th of August, 1831, are to assemble in general extraordinary session at Turin, on the 15th of next March, to deliberate upon certain important questions of finance.

The convocation of the Council of State, with the addition of the extraordinary provincial members, to take into consideration in an extraordinary session, certain questions of finance, is the accomplishment, for the first time, of an engagement taken by His Sardinian Majesty, at the moment when His Majesty created the Council of State in 1831.

It is a measure that has long been desired by the country, and more especially since the commencement of the internal reforms of this kingdom, and its adoption now, will, I feel confident, be received by the public as an additional proof, if such be wanting, of His Majesty's sincere and honest desire to fulfil the hopes and expectations which his recent declarations were calculated to raise.

The Royal Decree of 1831, by which the Council of State was created, and by which the faculty of appointing extraordinary counsellors to meet in a general extraordinary session was also accorded, limited the deliberation of the Council so augmented to questions of finance alone, and consequently the present decree of convocation does not extend the discussion of the Council of State in the approaching extraordinary session, beyond the limits originally prescribed.

The point, however, to which the public attaches the most importance is, that the extraordinary members being selected in order to represent the interests of their respective provinces, an approach is thereby made towards the application of a more representative system in the administration of the affairs of this country.

The elevation of his Excellency the President Borelli, and of the Marquis Alfieri di Sostegno, to the posts of Cabinet Ministers, and the resignation of the bishopric of Pignerol by M. Charvaz, having occasioned three vacancies amongst the extraordinary members of the Council of State, His Sardinian Majesty has been pleased to supply their places as follows :

Monsignor Luigi Nazari di Callabiana, Bishop of Casal, vice Monsignor Charvaz.

For the division of Turin,

Prince Emanuele dal Pozzo della Cisterna, vice his Excellency the Marquis Alfieri di Sostegno.

For the division of Cuneo,

Marquis Stanislao Cordero di Pamparato, vice his Excellency Count Borelli.

The Bishop of Casal is a liberal, and replaces the ex-Bishop of Pignerol, a man noted for his illiberal and bigoted views on all subjects, temporal as well as ecclesiastical.

The Prince della Cisterna was seriously compromised in the affairs of 1821, and was for many years unable to return to this country in consequence of his liberal opinions.

The Marquis di Pamparato is said to be a calm and sensible man ; he is, however, better known as a personal friend of the King, and enjoying much of his Sovereign's confidence and favour.

SIR,

Foreign Office, February 1, 1848.

WITH reference to your despatch of the 22nd ultimo, reporting the apprehension entertained by Count St. Marsan that Austria meditates striking a blow against those States of Italy who have voluntarily granted administrative reforms, I have to instruct you to say to Count St. Marsan that the Austrian Government positively disclaims all intention of interfering by the force of arms in the affairs of any of the States of Italy ; and that Her Majesty's Government, for many reasons which it is unnecessary to detail, are inclined to think that in this disclaimer the Austrian Government is sincere. At the same time it behoves the Government of Italy to be on their guard, and not to allow themselves to place too much confidence in mere verbal assurances.

It is, however, to be borne in mind, on the other hand, that it may be the policy of the Cabinet of Vienna to instruct its agents in Italy to hold language calculated to inspire the notion that Austria is about to interfere, because the Austrian Government may hope to be thus able, by intimidation alone, to check, in some degree, the progress of events which are at variance with its policy and wishes.

 MY LORD, Florence, January 24, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Lordship a despatch from Mr. Petre, at Rome, stating that a layman has been appointed Minister of War, and that the new Council of State has, in answer to the popular appeal for arming and organizing a greater military force, voted for that measure, but under present financial circumstances the Roman Government will probably pause before carrying such a plan into execution, not being able to count upon the services of a native force for repressing internal disturbance.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

GEORGE B. HAMILTON.

(Inclosure.)—Mr. Petre to Sir George Hamilton.

SIR, Rome, January 18, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to report to you, for the information of Viscount Palmerston, that the long-looked for appointment of a layman to the post of Minister of War ("Ministro delli Armi") was officially announced yesterday evening in the new journal "Gazetta di Roma," which is henceforth to be the sole official paper, the "Diario di Roma" and the "Notizie del Giorno" ceasing to appear. Lieutenant-General Prince Gabrielli is the officer chosen by His Holiness. The nomination of a layman to an office which has ever been held by ecclesiastics, and which gives him a seat in the Council of Ministers, has caused much satisfaction; and the principle once admitted, that a layman can take part in the general administration of the country, it is hoped that other departments, especially the judicial, will not in future be closed against them; the more so, as His Holiness, in his decree of the 30th ultimo, on the reorganization of the Council of Ministers, no longer apparently limits his choice to a single class of his subjects; for, with the exception of the high office of Secretary of State, Minister for Foreign Affairs, President of the Council of Ministers, always to be filled by a Cardinal, having under him a prelate with the title of Substitute, His Holiness does not state to what class the appointment to the other ministerial offices may in future be given.

The complaints against the expenditure of the Military department are loud and well founded. With the exception of the Finance department, there is perhaps none so costly and ill organized. Putting aside the Swiss troops in the service of His Holiness, there is, I believe, no armed force on which, in case of emergency—and such may arise to-morrow—the Government could place reliance for the preservation of tranquillity.

The Consulta di Stato, on being requested to give its opinion as to the new-ordering of the army, decided by a majority of 20 against 3, to propose—1st, An augmentation of the forces ; 2nd, The inviting of some Italian officer of high character ; 3rd, The mobilization of a part of the civic guard ; 4th, The organization of a reserve :—thus joining in the cry of the Italian press, to put the country into a state of defence, and to be ready to march to the frontiers. The almost hopeless state of the finances will at least make the Government pause before it listens to such counsel. I have, &c.

Sir George Hamilton.

WILLIAM PETRE.

No. 49.—The Earl of Minto to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Feb. 2.)
(Extract.) Rome, January 23, 1848.

I HAD to-day some conversation with the Pope on the affairs of his own Government.

The subject was introduced by himself, in consequence I imagine of a communication which I had conveyed to him a few days ago, of the steps I had taken to let the King of Sardinia know my opinion of the great mischief and danger likely to ensue from a rejection of the demand of the Consulta di Stato here for the publicity of their proceedings, upon which subject I knew a reference had been made to Turin for advice.

I had said in my message that I wished him to be informed of my proceeding, because it would serve to prove to him how strongly I was convinced of the necessity for this concession, if any terms were to be kept with the Consulta di Stato. I received a very gracious and flattering answer to this message, and I presume that he had it in mind to-day when he turned the conversation on his own affairs.

He said that he felt the necessity for free and constant intercourse with the Consulta and the Government, and that he desired that the influence of the Consulta should be felt in every branch of the Government.

I said this gave me great pleasure, and that he knew I looked upon the Consulta as the chief strength and only secure support of his Government. He said yes ; but that still there was a peculiarity in the nature of this Government which did not admit of so free an expansion of liberal institutions as were admissible in others. I said that in one important feature this Government was not only unlike, but the reverse of all others. That elsewhere the Church was subordinate to the State, and here the State was subject to the Church ; but that after all, this need not necessarily affect the character or action of the Government.

I said I looked upon the Church (represented by the Pope) as the Sovereign of this country. It matters not who or what is Sovereign, the duties of sovereignty are the same in whatever hands. In most countries the civil and ecclesiastical administration is distinct. The State manages its affairs. Ecclesiastical affairs are conducted by ecclesiastics; and if the Queen interferes with them in England, it is only as head of the Church.

Why should not the same separation exist here? the Pope retaining his position as head of the State. In other States we say that it is the duty of the Sovereign to govern for the benefit of the people, not for his own advantage. And so it is the duty of the Sovereign Church to have in view the public prosperity, and not the separate interest of the Church, in its civil administration. And there can be no reason why it should not introduce in its dominions any institutions or form of constitution calculated to produce good government.

The Pope assured me that Cardinal Bofondi is of thoroughly liberal opinions.

(Extract.) Vienna, January 29, 1848.

I SPOKE to the Prince about the state of Milan, &c. He repeated the declaration, often made before, "that the Emperor was resolved not to lose his Italian territories." He said, "a hundred thousand troops are now charged with their defence, and as many more will be employed if necessary." He added, Austria will not attack anybody. His Highness said that the commercial men and the middle class of the inhabitants of Milan are disgusted with the conduct of "Young Italy," and are calling upon the Government to protect them against the continuation of the losses they are now suffering by that conduct.

The above assertion is corroborated by many persons now in Vienna who belong to Milan.

It does not appear to me improbable that the Austrian Government will adopt severe measures against some of the nobles of Lombardy, who are said to support with their influence and with money the enemies of the Imperial Government.

My reports to your Lordship of my opinion that the Austrian Government would not employ force to impede the progress of the Italian Governments in making such changes as the latter might think advantageous for their own people, have been hitherto borne out by facts. The leading men in the Austrian councils are now convinced that the Pope and the Grand Duke of Tuscany have no power, and are mere instruments (political) in the hands of a party whose chief object is the destruction of the Austrian power. If those Sovereigns should be openly coerced by the party alluded to, Austria may think it right to take new measures. It is believed here that the Italian party is intimately united with the Swiss radical chiefs, and with the Polish exiles at Paris. Many grounds are stated for that belief, and it will influence the Government in its conduct.

There was published this day in the "Austrian Observer," a curious article, which I have had translated and now inclose, thinking it may be worth your Lordship's pains to read it. I know that Mazzini's letter is held to be authentic. I have, &c.

No. 58.—The Hon. R Abercromby to Viscount Palmerston.
(Received February 8.)

MY LORD,

Turin, February 2, 1848.

THE commercial steam-boat the Capri arrived yesterday at Genoa from Naples, bringing copy of a decree issued by His Sicilian Majesty on the 29th of January, notifying the bases upon which the project for the new Neapolitan Constitution, which His Sicilian Majesty by the same decree grants to his people, is to be framed.

I have the honour herewith to transmit to your Lordship a translation of this important document, by which your Lordship will perceive, amongst other points, that His Sicilian Majesty establishes 2 chambers, the responsibility of the Ministers, and the liberty of the press, subject to a law of repression for certain cases enumerated in the article itself.

The decree is countersigned by the new President of the Council of Ministers, the Duke of Serracapriola, late Neapolitan Ambassador at Paris, and it would appear from an expression contained in the preamble of this decree, that a complete change of Ministers has taken place.

It is much to be regretted, for the sake of Italy in general, that His Sicilian Majesty should, by his ill-timed resistance, have forced on matters to the point to which they have now arrived. Had he some weeks ago placed the institutions of his country in harmony with those of Piedmont, Tuscany, and the Papal States, such concessions would have been gratefully accepted; now, he has, by his present act, outstripped the measures of reform granted by the 3 Sovereigns of the States above named, and without obtaining for his own country the advantages resulting from an uniformity of institutions with the other Italian States, he has greatly endangered the tranquillity of those states themselves.

By the wise and moderate measures adopted by the Courts of Turin, Florence, and Rome, the people of Italy were placed in a condition gradually to prepare themselves for the future exercise of constitutional institutions, but I am afraid that if they are suddenly to be entrusted with the management of such privileges, they will be found to be inexperienced and unprepared for the temperate and judicious administration of affairs.

Time, and the habit of applying practically the liberal reforms granted by the 3 Sovereigns, would have formed individuals in each State capable of conducting public business under a constitutional form of Government, but at the present moment, I much fear there will be great difficulty in finding persons fit to engage in such an undertaking.

The tranquillity of the town of Naples does not appear to have been seriously disturbed previous to the publication of the Royal Decree of the 29th of January.

HAVING understood that the wish of our most beloved subjects is to have guarantees and institutions in conformity with the actual state of civilization, we declare that it is our will to comply with the desires which have been manifested to us by granting a constitution, and to that effect we have commanded our new Ministry of State to present to us, within the space of 10 days, a project to be approved of on the following bases :

The legislative power will be exercised by us and by 2 Chambers, one of Peers, and the other of Deputies, the first will be composed of persons named by us, the second of Deputies, to be chosen by electors, on the basis of a census to be hereafter determined.

The only dominant religion of the State will be the Catholic Apostolic and Roman, and no other form of worship will be tolerated.

The person of the King will always be sacred, inviolable, and not liable to responsibility.

The Ministers will always be responsible for all the acts of the Government.

The land and sea forces will always be under the command of the King.

The national guard will be organized in an uniform manner throughout the kingdom, as it is in the capital.

The new Neapolitan Ministry is composed as follows :—

Duke of Serra Capriola, Foreign Affairs and President of the Council; Dr. Cesidio Bonanni, Grace and Justice, charged with Ecclesiastical Affairs; Prince Dentice, Finance; Dr. Carlo Cianciulli, Interior; Prince Torella, Public Works; Dr. Gaetano Scovazzo, Commerce and Agriculture, charged with Public Instruction; Prince Cassaro, President of the Consulta; Dr. Pietro d'Urso, Procurator-General of the Court of Accounts of Naples.

From what I can learn of the characters of the new Ministers they are all persons of liberal but moderate opinions. It would appear that previously to accepting office they positively required that His Sicilian Majesty should grant a Constitution to his subjects.

In the decree containing the bases upon which the Constitution is to be framed, and which I have already had the honour to transmit to you in my despatch of yesterday, your Lordship will no doubt have remarked some contradictions which prove the precipitancy with which that decree has been drawn up, and which are not unlikely, if maintained in the project of the Constitution, to lead to future criticism and discussion.

The King of Naples has unfortunately placed himself in such a position towards his subjects that nothing but the most perfect honesty in the execution of the spirit, as well as of the letter, of the concessions which he has made will, it is to be feared, now satisfy their wishes; and any attempt to render the provisions of the forthcoming Constitution less binding upon the Sovereign than was anticipated, would be attended with very serious consequences.

The 2 Articles of the decree, the one establishing the responsibility of the Ministers for all the acts of the Government, the other declaring that the military and naval forces of the kingdom are to be always dependent upon the king, are evidently so in opposition the one to the other, that they create precisely a question of this nature. And if, when the details of the Constitution are made public, they should be found to contain this or other contradictions of the same nature, there is great risk that the confidence in the sincerity of His Sicilian Majesty's liberal intentions will be seriously shaken, and that the desired good understanding between the King and his subjects will not have been established.

Foreign Office, February 11, 1848.

WITH reference to your despatch of the 3rd instant, reporting what passed between you and the Count St. Marsan, relative to the probable consequences in Sardinia, of the events which have lately occurred in the kingdom of the 2 Sicilies, I have to inform you that Her Majesty's Government entirely approve the language held and the advice given by you. The course recommended by you to the Sardinian Government is the only one by which the Sardinian Government can now maintain harmony between the Crown and the people, and by which the independence of the State and its freedom from foreign interference can be preserved.

PALMERSTON.

No. 65.—Viscount Palmerston to Viscount Ponsonby.

MY LORD,

Foreign Office, February 11, 1848.

THE great importance of the events which have lately happened, and which are now passing in Italy, renders Her Majesty's Government desirous of again communicating with the Cabinet of Vienna upon matters possessing so high a degree of interest both to Austria and to Great Britain: to Great Britain because she was one of the Contracting Parties to the Treaties of 1814 and 1815, and is a Power anxiously solicitous for the maintenance of the Peace of Europe; to Austria for the like reasons, and also because she possesses territories in Italy.

The Austrian Cabinet cannot doubt the friendly feeling of Great Britain towards Austria; alliances of ancient date have long formed a bond of union between the 2 countries, and even if those ties could be forgotten, the vast importance of Austria as an essential element in the balance of power in Europe, must always inspire the British Government with the sincerest wishes for her welfare and prosperity.

Her Majesty's Government therefore could never desire to see the Cabinet of Vienna shape the course of its policy in any other manner than that which might be best calculated on each occasion to promote the permanent and well-understood interests of the Austrian Empire.

It has consequently been to Her Majesty's Government a source of the most unmixed satisfaction to receive the assurances which from time to time have been conveyed to them from the Cabinet of Vienna, that it was the firm determination of that Cabinet strictly to pursue, in regard to the affairs of Italy, that system of conduct which is at once the wisest and the most just; and that although the Austrian Government deemed a large augmentation of its military force in its Italian provinces to be required by the present state of affairs therein, yet this augmentation was to be considered as a strictly defensive measure, and was not to be construed as any indication of an intention to overstep the frontiers of the Austrian territory, or to interfere by military force in the affairs of any other Italian State.

This official declaration of the views and intentions of Austria was in strict conformity with those stipulations of the Treaty of 1814, which provided for the independent sovereignty of the several States of Italy, and was in perfect accordance with the principles of international justice.

Her Majesty's Government are convinced that the progress of events in Italy can only have confirmed the Cabinet of Vienna in these wise and prudent resolutions, the firm adherence to which has hitherto tended so much to maintain unimpaired the internal peace of the Italian States, and to prevent causes of serious misunderstanding between the Powers of Europe; and Her Majesty's Government trust that whatever may be the result of the events which have lately happened in the Kingdom of Naples, and whatever influence those events may exercise upon the internal affairs of any other Italian States, the Cabinet of Vienna will still persevere in the same prudent course, and will confine its military force within the limits of His Imperial Majesty's Italian possessions.

Your Excellency will read this despatch to Prince Metternich and give him officially a copy of it. I am, &c.

Viscount Ponsonby.

PALMERSTON.

*No. 66.—Viscount Palmerston to the Hon. R. Abercromby.

SIR,

Foreign Office, February 12, 1848.

The present circumstances of Italy are so critical, and the interests of Europe are so much concerned in the peaceable termination of the endeavours now making to improve the political condition of the Italian people, that I have thought it necessary to put you in possession of the views of Her Majesty's Government upon this important subject.

The relative situation of the sovereigns of Italy and their subjects at the present moment is one of which advantage may be taken by the enemies of both parties. It is not difficult to convey to the sovereigns false reports of projected insurrections, and to create in their minds an unfounded belief of the existence of revolutionary plots. On the other hand, the same agency may be employed to represent to the people that their sovereigns are insincere in their promises of concessions, so that the people being thus stimulated to use force for the purpose of securing political reforms, the very act to which they may be delusively led on, may be converted into a pretext for depriving them of the objects of their legitimate expectations. But it will be your duty to counteract, as far as possible, these sinister efforts, and you are with that view instructed to represent to the Minister of Sardinia that the power of directing the progress of reform is still within the hands of the sovereigns, but that it is now too late for them to attempt to arrest further progress of improvement. That the example of the events which have recently happened in the Kingdom of the 2 Sicilies shows that unwise resistance to moderate petitions is sure to lead, ere long, to the necessity of yielding to irresistible demands. That it is better for a government to frame its measures of improvement with timely deliberation, and to grant them, with the grace of spontaneous concession, than to be compelled to adopt on the sudden, changes perhaps insufficiently matured, and which, being extorted by the pressure of imperious circumstances, invert the natural order of things, and being somewhat of the nature of a capitulation of the sovereign to the subject, may not always be a sure foundation for permanent harmony between the Crown and the people.

To the popular leaders with whom you may have intercourse, you should use language of the same tendency, and arguments drawn from the same circumstances. You should tell them that though force may carry its purpose for the moment, and may wring from the Crown in one day, concessions which might otherwise have been the fruit of a much longer time, yet it leaves after it ill-will and resentment; and that Sovereigns who have been so coerced, may be suspected of constantly looking out for an opportunity of shaking off the yoke which they may thus have been obliged to bear. That mutual distrust will be created between the governors and the governed, that this distrust will from time to time break out into overt acts on each side, intended perhaps defensively by those by whom they are done, but regarded as offensive by the other party. That open discord will thence ensue, and foreign interference may be the ultimate result.

Applying these views to the present state of things in Italy, it may safely be foretold that when a representative Government is established at Naples, the people of the Roman States, of Piedmont, and of Tuscany, will not easily be satisfied with a less measure of organic change; and it will be for the true and permanent interest of the Sovereigns of each of those States, rather to regulate the mode in which the wishes of their subjects can most safely be gratified, than to attempt to stop and force back the tide of public opinion.

What particular measure it would be wisest for each of those Sovereigns to adopt it is not for the British Government to say; nor is it our wish or intention to obtrude upon those Governments unasked any advice or opinion on such matters. But if you should be consulted on these things by the Minister of Sardinia, you will not fail to give him the best assistance in your power, and you may assure him that the sincere and heartfelt wish of the British Government is, that the arrangements which may finally be made by the Governments of Italy may be such as may best contribute to the honour and security of the Sovereigns, to the happiness and welfare of the people, to the general progress of civilization, and to the maintenance of the peace of Europe.

You will observe to him that Bavaria, Wurtemberg, Saxony, Baden, most of the Saxon Duchies, and some other German States, have Representative Constitutions, and that there seems to be no reason why institutions which have worked well in Germany should not answer equally well in Italy.

Turin, February 7, 1848.

THE vote of the municipality of Turin, which I have had the honour to report to your Lordship, led yesterday to summonses being issued for the assembling, this morning, at the King's Palace, at 8 o'clock, of an Extraordinary Council, to take into consideration the nature of the reply that is to be returned to the address which the Syndics of Turin are appointed to present to His Sardinian Majesty, in an audience granted to them for that purpose, at half-past 2 to-day.

The Council has now been sitting for nearly 4 hours, and has not yet broken up.

I shall keep this despatch open to the latest possible moment, in the hope that in a postscript I may be able to add the decision taken by His Sardinian Majesty in Council.

The opinion is so universally now in favour of granting a Constitution, that I cannot doubt that in the course of the day an announcement to that effect will be made public.

By a timely decision His Sardinian Majesty may still be able to direct and model the details of the future Constitution of this country, so as to avoid falling into the error of exaggerated democratic principles; an evil that would inevitably occur, should His Sardinian Majesty allow his subjects to force from him unwilling concessions.

No. 70.—The Earl of Minto to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Feb. 13.)

MY LORD,

Rome, January 28, 1848.

I HAVE received your Lordship's despatch of the 16th of December, directing me to proceed to Naples, in the event of my receiving an intimation of the King's desire to see me.

No such wish has, however, been expressed by His Majesty.

The events which have now occurred may possibly induce him to desire my assistance, and I shall be prepared to attend to any summons I may receive.

I much fear, however, that the time is past when his subjects will be satisfied with such terms as might have been accepted a few days ago. The demand for a Constitution is now warmly urged at Naples, and, if persisted in, cannot I suspect be successfully resisted.

Every exertion has been made by myself and others here to induce the popular party at Naples to limit their views to reformed institutions, in harmony with those of the neighbouring States; but as the Royal cause becomes hourly weaker, it is scarcely to be expected that they will abate much of their demands.

No. 71.—Lord Napier to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. February 13.)
 MY LORD, Naples, January 29, 1848.

IN conformity with an universal desire inspired by the concession made this morning to the Neapolitan people, His Majesty the King rode at mid-day through the city. On leaving the gate of the palace a great multitude surrounded their Sovereign, kissing his hands and his stirrups, addressing him in the most affectionate language, and giving many touching demonstrations of gratitude and devotion. The King was deeply moved by these marks of attachment, spoke to his good people in a gracious manner, and shed tears, in which he was joined by all around him.

In passing along the great street of Toledo a magnificent spectacle of enthusiasm suddenly offered itself, for the whole way was lined with ranks of carriages and crowds of the humbler orders, who, with flags and ribbands of the patriotic colours, and loyal cries, saluted the approach of His Majesty in a fashion of which he had hitherto no experience, and the Neapolitan capital has not offered an example since the events of 1820.

On returning to the palace, the King passed in review his troops, who were present in great numbers, and withdrew with acclamations equal to those which signalized his first appearance.

At a later hour he drove out with Her Majesty the Queen in an open carriage, when he was not molested by any concourse, but spontaneously stopped on several occasions and addressed some encouraging or admonitory words to the civic guards, or to persons in a private station who were known to him.

His Majesty did not appear at the Opera House this evening, having been much fatigued by his previous exertions; but the audience, availing themselves of certain sentiments in the piece which bore a patriotic meaning, displayed their feelings in a transport of agitation and joy which might well seem singular to those who have been long accustomed to the disciplined applause on the Neapolitan theatre.

A disorder among the poorest classes in the course of the afternoon was subdued by the national guards without the loss of life, though a disposition to pillage was manifested, and some shots had to be fired before the population dispersed.

No fears are entertained for the maintenance of tranquillity in the capital, the civic force having displayed the greatest activity and good will in the exercise of their functions.

THE new Administration has already experienced some modification, and seems menaced with further change.

Prince Cassaro, President of the Consulta Generale, offered his resignation. His Majesty refused, in the first instance, to accept it, but allowed him to retire on a subsequent occasion.

M. Cianciulli having resigned the portfolio of the Interior, it has been bestowed on M. Bozzelli. M. Bozzelli is by profession a barrister, and has obtained great fame for ability and eloquence.

MY LORD, Naples, January 31, 1848.

I AM enabled to state to your Lordship, on good authority, that the Envoys of Austria and Russia, and the Chargé d'Affaires of Prussia, addressed a collective note to the Neapolitan Government, one or two days previously to His Sicilian Majesty's gracious announcement that he would bestow a Representative Constitution on his people.

In that note His Sicilian Majesty was encouraged to persevere in opposing the wishes of the nation, and it is asserted that the Representatives of the Northern Powers even protested against the concession of a Representative Constitution to the Kingdom of Naples, as being opposed to some secret convention or agreement contracted between their respective Governments and the Sicilian Crown.

The King of Naples is stated to have pleaded the irresistible exigency of his position, and to have produced in his vindication a kind of certificate, confirmed by the principal military officers of the kingdom, to the effect that the armed force was not sufficient to maintain the peace of the provinces, or even to secure the fidelity of the capital.

NAPIER.

No. 74.—The Hon. R. Abercromby to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received February 14.)

(Extract.)

Turin, February 7, 1848, at night.

THE Council did not break up to-day until half-past 4.

His Sardinian Majesty then received the Syndics of Turin, who presented to him the address voted by the municipality.

His Sardinian Majesty received the Syndics in his usual kind and gracious manner, limiting, however, his reply to the subject matter of the address, to the expression, "Je verrai."

In answer to the request of the Marquis Colli, the first Syndic, to know whether he had His Majesty's permission to quote this reply, in case he should be questioned upon the subject of the result of his audience, His Majesty told him he might do so.

Another meeting of the members of the Council took place this evening, but not, I am given to understand, in presence of the King.

The results of this evening's consultation will be submitted to His Majesty in Council to-morrow, when it is probable that a final decision will be taken.

His Majesty took occasion, during his conversation with the Syndics, to mark his disapprobation of the crowd assembled in front of the Palace; he desired that they would make known his feeling upon this point; and, he added, that so long as such a system was persevered in he would grant nothing.

From the windows of the Palace it was impossible for His Majesty to judge of the character of the crowd assembled in the square, which at no period of the day, however, exceeded, upon a rough calculation, 700 or 800 people; and it was therefore not unnatural that His Majesty should express his disapprobation of a scene which bore, when witnessed from a distance, somewhat the aspect of wishing to control the free deliberations of the Council.

It is but just, however, to those persons who formed this assembly to state, that it was composed of most orderly, well-dressed, and quiet individuals, evidently brought there simply by curiosity, and by a desire to learn as quickly as possible the decision of the Council, and not for any bad purposes; no cry was raised, nor was any act committed during the whole day that tended in the smallest degree to trouble the public peace, nor indeed to give expression to any shade of public opinion.

Although intense interest is felt by all classes of the inhabitants of Turin, with regard to the issue of the questions now under the consideration of His Majesty and of his Council, I must say that the demeanour of the people has been, and continues to be, most exemplary. The town is perfectly quiet, there is no singing or parading about the streets; and to a stranger unacquainted with the important events now going on here, nothing appears to excite particular attention.

No doubt this is to be attributed in a great measure to the successful system of organization established by the leaders of the popular party, which from that very cause is a matter of a serious nature, which ought not to be overlooked by the Government when deciding upon the policy to be adopted by the King.

If, as is generally expected, the principle of a Constitutional form of Government is granted by His Majesty, I have the hope that public opinion will repose with confidence upon the sacredness of such an engagement, and that time will be allowed to the King and to his Government to discuss and mature the details of a Constitution, so as to afford the possibility of composing a measure adapted to the habits and demands of the people, without incurring the risk of having subsequently to correct imperfections, the result of inconsiderate haste.

A representative form of Government in this country is so completely different from everything that has ever yet existed, that it will be impossible to frame in a few days a Constitution applicable in all respects to the real interests of the kingdom.

I have reason to believe that neither the Marquis Villamarina, nor Count Solar de la Marguerite, although both are Ministers of State, were called by the King to assist at the deliberations of the Council held this day.

February 8, half-past 2 P.M.

The Council broke up to-day about noon; nothing positive is yet known, but the report is, that a Constitution somewhat similar to the French Charter, is about to be conceded by the King.

MY LORD,

Turin, February 9, 1848.

YESTERDAY evening I received a note from Count St. Marsan, transmitting to me a printed copy of a proclamation signed by the King, and containing various articles which are to form the bases of the fundamental statute of this country.

Your Lordship will perceive that a complete representative system of Government is granted by the King; 2 Chambers, the first composed of members named by the Sovereign, and for life; the second elective; annual sessions of the Chambers, reassembly of them in 4 months after a dissolution; money bills to originate in the second Chamber; and liberty of the press, subject to a law of repression.

I transmit herewith to your Lordship copy of Count St. Marsan's note, together with a printed copy of His Sardinian Majesty's proclamation, a translation of the same into English, and a copy of a note I have addressed to Count Saint Marsan in reply to his communication.

Le Soussigné, &c., d'ordre du Roi, a l'honneur de donner communication à Mr. Abercromby, &c., de la proclamation ci-jointe que Sa Majesté a signée ce matin, en le priant de la porter à la haute connaissance de son auguste Souveraine.

Le Roi a ordonné en même temps au Soussigné de déclarer en son nom, que l'octroi du statut qui forme l'objet principal de la proclamation, est le résultat de sa libre et entière volonté, et que le bien de ses sujets qui a toujours déterminé par le passé jusqu'à la moindre de ses actions, est uniquement ce qui l'a porté à donner cette nouvelle preuve de confiance en les appelant à prendre une part active dans la discussion des affaires publiques.

Le Roi désire en outre que Sa Majesté la Reine d'Angleterre reçoive ici l'assurance que le respect des traités formera à l'avenir, ainsi qu'il l'a fait par le passé, la base de sa politique, et qu'il nourrit le plus vif espoir que le concours de ses sujets dans l'œuvre difficile de l'administration intérieure, loin de nuire aux bons rapports avec les Puissances étrangères, contribuera au contraire à consolider davantage les liens d'amitié qui ont existé jusqu'à présent entre les 2 pays, et que le Roi se flatte de voir encore se resserrer à l'avenir.

CHARLES ALBERT, &c.

Turin, February 8, 1848.

THE people whom we have by the will of the Divine Providence governed with the love of a father during the last 17 years, have always understood our affection, and the way in which we sought to understand their wants; and it has always been our intention that the Prince and the nation should be bound together by the closest ties, for the good of the country.

That this union is becoming every day closer, we perceive by the manner in which our subjects have received the recent reforms, which our desire for their welfare had recommended to us as likely to improve the different branches of the administration, and to prepare them for the discussion of public affairs.

Now that the times are favourable for still greater things, and amidst the changes which have occurred in Italy, we do not hesitate in giving them the greatest possible proof of the faith we have in their attachment and good sense.

The political institutions which are to be the completion of the reforms granted by us, are now being leisurely prepared and matured in our councils, and they will contribute to consolidate the benefit of these reforms in a manner in accordance with the circumstances of the country.

But it is now our pleasure to declare that we have, by the advice of our Ministers and of the principal Councillors of our Crown, resolved and determined to adopt the following bases for a fundamental statute, to establish in our States a complete representative system of Government :

ART. I. The Catholic, Apostolic, and Roman religion is the only religion of the State. The other forms of worship now existing are tolerated according to the laws.

II. The person of the King is inviolable. His Ministers are responsible.

III. The executive power belongs to the King alone. He is the supreme head of the State. He commands all the land and sea forces ; he declares war, concludes treaties of peace, alliance, and commerce ; appoints to all the offices, and gives all the orders necessary for the execution of the laws, without suspending or dispensing with their observance.

IV. The King sanctions the laws and promulgates them.

V. All justice emanates from the King, and is administered in his name. He can pardon and commute penalties.

VI. The legislative power will be exercised collectively by the King and by 2 Chambers.

VII. The first will be composed of members named for life by the King ; the second of members elected on the basis of a census to be hereafter determined.

VIII. The proposition of laws will be made by the King and by each Chamber ; but all laws relative to the impositions of tributes must be first brought forward in the Elective Chamber.

IX. The King convokes the 2 Chambers every year ; he prorogues their sessions, and can dissolve the Elective Chamber, but in that case he must convoke another within the term of 4 months.

X. No tax can be imposed or levied without the consent of the Chambers and the sanction of the King.

XI. The press will be free, but liable to repressive laws.

XII. Individual liberty will be guaranteed.

XIII. The judges, with the exception of those of mandaments, will be irremovable when they shall have exercised their duties during a period to be hereafter determined.

XIV. We reserve to ourselves to establish a communal militia composed of persons paying taxes to an amount to be determined.

This militia will be at the disposal of the administrative authorities and dependent upon the Minister of the Interior.

The King will be able to suspend or to dissolve it where he shall think it proper.

The fundamental statute which is now being prepared in conformity with these bases, according to our command, will come into operation at the same time as the new regulations of communal administration (July 1, 1848).

While we are thus providing for emergencies of the highest political importance, we are unwilling further to delay to comply with a desire which we have nourished for some time, by reducing, from the 1st of July next, the price of salt to 30 centimes the kilogramme, which measure will chiefly benefit the poorer classes, being assured that we shall find in the more wealthy, that compensation in the public revenue which is rendered necessary by the wants of the State.

May God protect the new era which is now beginning for our people, and until they are able to make use of the greater degree of liberty which they have acquired, and of which they are and will be worthy, we expect on their part the exact observance of the laws in vigour, and the undisturbed tranquillity which is so necessary to bring to a conclusion the work of the internal organization of the State.

CHARLES ALBERT.

Turin, February 8, 1848.

THE Undersigned, &c., hastens to acknowledge the receipt of the note which Count St. Marsan, &c., has just done him the honour to address to him by command of His Sardinian Majesty, inclosing printed copy of a proclamation signed this morning by His Sardinian Majesty, and which Count St. Marsan requests the Undersigned to convey to the knowledge of Her Britannic Majesty and of her Government.

The Undersigned need not assure Count St. Marsan that he will, without a moment's delay, transmit to his Government these most important communications.

The declarations which Count St. Marsan is directed to make in the name of His Sardinian Majesty, and which are contained in his note of this day, will be received, the Undersigned is convinced, by Her Majesty and by the British Government, with feelings of the greatest satisfaction; and the institutions with which His Sardinian Majesty has now, by a voluntary act on his part, endowed his country, will afford an additional proof to Her Majesty the Queen and to the Cabinet of London of the wise and enlightened views which direct the policy of His Sardinian Majesty, and which so pre-eminently mark His Majesty's paternal and solicitous care for the welfare and glory of his country and of his subjects.

The sentiments of sincere friendship and interest which England has, on all occasions through a series of many centuries, constantly shown for the prosperity of the House of Savoy and of its subjects, are a sufficient guarantee that they will not be found wanting in the present instance, and that the great and important changes which His Sardinian Majesty has spontaneously brought about for the benefit of his people in the fundamental institutions of this country, will meet with the sincere sympathy of the British Government.

In transmitting this reply to the communication of Count St. Marsan, the Undersigned avails himself of the opportunity to express his conviction that it will continue to be the anxious desire of Her Majesty the Queen and of her Government to maintain and to improve those intimate relations of friendship and interest which have ever marked the intercourse between the Crowns of Great Britain and Sardinia.

The Undersigned, &c.

Count St. Marsan.

MY LORD,

YOUR Excellency's despatches to that of the 7th instant inclusive have been received and laid before the Queen.

With reference to your Excellency's despatch of the 7th instant, as regards the policy of Austria in Italy, I have to instruct your Excellency to express to the Austrian Government the great and extreme satisfaction with which Her Majesty's Government have learnt the wise and just determination adopted by the Austrian Cabinet. It is entirely in conformity with the principles which have all along been announced by Prince Metternich as those by which it was his intention to be guided in regard to events now passing in Italy; and though public rumour, in some degree countenanced by the violent proclamation of Count Radetzky, anticipated some change of policy on the part of the Austrian Government, Her Majesty's Government were never disposed to give credit to those sinister reports.

MY LORD,

Florence, February 8, 1848.

ON the 5th instant the Grand Duke of Tuscany sent for the chief officers of the civic guard of Florence, and informed them that however anxious he was to carry out his proposed reforms to their fullest extent (and which, in point of fact, will amount by the character of the municipal representation to all but a Constitution in name), he must nevertheless warn them to urge upon their followers the expediency of abstaining from political demonstrations with the intention of demanding a Constitution which he should be obliged to refuse, in order not to compromise his old friends (the Austrians), and his new (the Pope).

The interview then terminated. In the meantime, the "Alba" has become, since the news from Naples, louder than ever, in advocating a Constitution for Tuscany, and in demanding the general arming of the country to resist the supposed aggressive policy of the Court of Vienna.

Although your Lordship will probably have had more precise information, I think it right to state I have been informed, on good authority, that a Treaty of Alliance, offensive and defensive, has been entered into recently between the Courts of Austria, Parma, and Modena.

No. 80.—Viscount Palmerston to the Hon. R. Abercromby.

SIR,

Foreign Office, February 16, 1848.

WITH reference to your despatch of the 9th instant, I have to inform you that Her Majesty's Government approve entirely your answer to Count St. Marsan's communication of the Articles on which the future Constitution of the Sardinian territories is to be founded, and I have to instruct you to congratulate the Sardinian Government upon the wise and generous act of the King, which reflects equal honour upon his enlightened judgment and upon his paternal affection for his people.

Her Majesty's Government sincerely rejoice at a measure which, by tending to give greater development to those intellectual qualities and attainments for which the people who inhabit the territories which compose the Sardinian dominions have always been remarkable, will contribute greatly to add to the power and resources of the State; and while by these means the happiness and welfare of the King's subjects will be promoted, the dignity and importance of the Sardinian Monarchy, as an European Power, will thereby also be increased.

Her Majesty's Government further trust that similarity of institutions will still further cement the sympathies already existing between the people of the 2 countries, and may thus strengthen the bonds of alliance which have so long united the 2 Crowns.

I am, &c.

No. 85.—The Hon. R. Abercromby to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received February 19.)

Turin, February 14, 1848.

THE Royal proclamation of the 8th instant, containing the leading principles of the future fundamental statute of Piedmont, has been received throughout the provinces of the kingdom with feelings of unmixed satisfaction, and of gratitude towards His Sardinian Majesty, for the liberal institutions with which he is about to endow his country.

At Genoa, where there exists a stronger inclination in favour of democratic principles, than in any other part of the Sardinian States, the King's proclamation was received with the greatest enthusiasm ; and from the various accounts that have reached me from thence, the leading principles of the new statute, as made known by the proclamation of the 8th instant, appear to have generally satisfied the desires and expectations of the public.

The immediate organization of a civic guard throughout the country is a question upon which public opinion continues to express itself with energy ; and the Government have therefore wisely lost no time in naming a general officer president, and 6 individuals members of a commission for this purpose.

The members of this commission have been selected from amongst military men of known reputation, assisted by civilians possessing legal knowledge, and by others whose political opinions are sure to meet with the approbation of the public. In this last category may be placed the Marquis Robert Azeglio.

The most perfect order and tranquillity reign throughout the country, and I trust that nothing will occur to disturb the existing calmness of the whole population.

On Sunday, the 27th February, there is to be a great public fête to celebrate the granting of the statute, from which, however, I do not anticipate that any danger to the public peace is likely to arise ; and that event over, I confidently look to a return, on the part of the people, to their regular and ordinary system of life.

The party, composed of individuals whose opinions were known to have been most opposed to liberal principles, has accepted the changes instituted by the proclamation of the 8th instant, with greater readiness and frankness than was to have been expected.

MY LORD,

Florence, February 12, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inclose in original and translation a Motu proprio which appeared in the "Gazette" yesterday evening, declaring the Grand Duke of Tuscany's intention to grant such a Constitution to his people, as the desires of his subjects and the necessity of the times required in Italy.

Although it was fully expected that the Grand Duke must ultimately grant a Constitution, yet the proclamation above mentioned, took the majority of his subjects by surprise.

(Inclosure.)—Motuproprio proclaiming the Grand Duke of Tuscany's intention to grant a Representative Government.

WE, LEOPOLD II, &c.

February 11, 1848.

BY our Motuproprio of January the 31st, we designed to bestow upon the country committed to our care, a national representation, which, whilst it might correspond to the public wishes and wants of the times, would preserve to the Tuscan family that political administrative principle to which she is indebted for her prosperity, and which may offer to her those guarantees which are able to insure to her a happy futurity.

This idea had already passed through the mind of our immortal grandfather. The epoch and events did not permit it to take effect until now, but we are happy to remind our people of this our civil glory, and at the same time it is grateful to us to find the opportunity of bestowing upon our country this national representation, to which our studies, and every anterior foresight have been directed.

Tuscans! Your confidence in me shall not be deceived at this solemn moment, and whilst I feel my love for you increase.

Be not seduced by impatient suggestions, and wait tranquilly a few days in order that the projects may be completed which are to insure your destinies.

I wish to give you those privileges for which you are fully ripe, and which the wisdom of your conduct merits.

Give me the glory of being the author of a great institution essentially Tuscan, and at the same time accommodated to the general interests of Italy.

MY LORD. Florence, February 12, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inclose herewith a despatch I have received from Mr. Petre, at Rome, giving an account of the agitation that has prevailed in that city, and of the mob having deputed the senator, Prince Corsini, to wait upon the Pope to represent to him the wishes and wants of the Romans.

His Holiness has promised to secularize a great many officers, and Cardinal Bofondi, and many other Ministers, have in consequence tendered their resignation. I have, &c.

GEORGE B. HAMILTON.

(Inclosure.)—Mr. Petre to Sir George Hamilton.

Rome, February 9, 1848.

IN my despatch of the 18th ultimo I mentioned that the Consulta di Stato had proposed to the Government: 1st, an augmentation of the forces; 2ndly, the inviting of some Italian officer of high character; 3rdly, the mobilization of the civic guard; and 4thly, the organization of a reserve.

The rumour spreading abroad during the last few days, that the Council of Ministers did not intend to pay any attention to these proposals, crowds of people began to assemble yesterday, about 1 o'clock, in the Corso, calling out for the arming of the reserve of the civic guard,—that is, of servants, daily labourers, journeymen, &c. “Down with the Ministers!” “No more priests!” “No more moderation!” and the like. After much noise and declamation, it was resolved that a certain number should proceed to the residence of Prince Corsini, the Senator, and request him to represent the wants and wishes of the Romans to His Holiness.

During this time, persuaded by the moderate party, Prince Aldobrandini, Colonel of the 4th battalion of the civic guards, the Count Posolini, Deputy of the Province of Ravenna, and the Advocate Bendetti, Deputy of that of Cevita Vecchia, had gone to the Quirinal, and requested an audience of His Holiness, who expressed his surprise at hearing of the agitation which prevailed, and of the murmurs of the last few days; and, after some conversation, authorized these gentlemen to make known to the public that the Ministry should be changed, that more laymen should be admitted into the Council, and into other offices of the State, as indeed he had already planned; but that he could not make any promise as to the general arming of the country without mature consideration. This answer somewhat calmed the people; it being moreover understood that the Senator was to have an audience of His Holiness in the evening.

Before night-fall, thousands in regular order, and amongst them hundreds of civic guards, not in uniform, but wearing their military great coats, began to collect on their way to the Piazza del Popolo, where they said they would await the answer of His Holiness, to be delivered to them by the Senator.

Ciceroacchio here told them that if the answer were unfavourable, they must take the affairs into their own hands.

It was nearly 8 o'clock before the Senator arrived, after a long audience of the Pope. He was received with a very boisterous enthusiasm by the impatient crowd; and immediately announced that His Holiness had already resolved on the secularization of the greater part of the Ministerial and other offices; that it was, and had been previously, his intention to invite to Rome some Italian officers of distinction; and that he would propose Treaties of defence to other Italian States. This announcement appeared to satisfy the majority; and it was soon after resolved to accompany the Senator to his house in the quarter of the Trastevere. The procession, the most numerous as yet seen, many hundreds carrying torches, on passing the Austrian Embassy, preserved a deep silence, and the torches were reversed; on passing the Jesuits' house, some verses of the "De Profundis" were sung. Arrived at the residence of the Senator, the crowd quietly dispersed, and I have not heard of a single act of violence nor of any disorder committed. But the appearance, the language, and the clamours of the vast crowd, were more threatening and violent than on any former occasion. Many were armed with pistols and daggers, principally from the Romagna, and some from other parts of Italy.

The town to-day is perfectly tranquil. Cardinal Bofondi, and I believe all the Ministers, have offered their resignation to His Holiness. In the evening a Council is to be held, and some Roman gentlemen are requested to attend.

No. 95.—Sir G. Hamilton to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Feb. 28.)

MY LORD,

Florence, February 17, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit 3 despatches from Mr. Petre, at Rome, which respectively relate to the proclamation of the Pope appealing to the affection and loyalty of all his subjects, and addressed to all the Roman Catholics of every country, to rally round him in support of his throne; to the recent change of Ministry and appointment of 3 laymen; and to an address by the Pope from the Quirinal Palace, which he delivered to a numerous body of all classes, who assembled there for the purpose of testifying their joy at the proclamation.

Notwithstanding the favourable opinion evinced in general by this multitude, seditious cries were uttered on that occasion in the Pope's presence, and several arrests then took place.

The press at Florence is loud in the expression of a hope that the Pope will grant a Constitution at Rome similar to that of Piedmont and Naples, though the words of the proclamation imply that the Roman Pontiff ought not to be called on to make such a concession.

The Tuscan Constitution was officially announced as ready for publication in yesterday's Gazette, but is purposely delayed until to-day, that this important Act may be proclaimed at the same time all over Tuscany.

I hope by to-morrow's post to be able to furnish your Lordship with a copy.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, for the information of Viscount Palmerston, printed copies, together with a translation, of a proclamation from His Holiness to the Romans, touching the proceedings mentioned in my last despatch. It was posted up by torchlight, about 8 o'clock yesterday evening, and excited a great sensation and enthusiasm, but it was resolved to put off all further signs of joy to the following day.

 ROMANS! (Translation.)

THE Pontiff who has now for nearly 2 years received so many signs of love and fidelity from you is not deaf to your wishes—to your fears. We do not cease from continually meditating on the means of most usefully unfolding, and of carrying out to perfection, saving our duties toward the church, those civil institutions which we have founded, not forced by any necessity, but induced by our desire for the happiness of our people, and by esteem for their noble qualities. We have likewise turned our thoughts to the remodelling of the army, even before the public voice called for it; and we have endeavoured to procure officers from abroad to assist those who honourably serve the Papal Government. The better to widen the province of those who can by talent and experience contribute to the public improvement, we had equally planned the adding to the number of laymen in our Council of Ministers. If the concordant will of the Sovereigns to whom Italy owes recent reforms be a security for the preservation of these benefits received with so much applause and with so much gratitude, we cherish it, maintaining and strengthening the most friendly relations with them. Nothing, in fine, which can tend to the tranquillity and to the dignity of the State shall be ever neglected, Romans and Papal subjects, by your Father and Sovereign, who has given the most certain proofs of his care for you, and is ready to give still further, if he shall be found worthy to obtain from God that he instil into your hearts and into those of all Italians the peaceful spirit of his wisdom; and is likewise ready to resist by virtue of the institutions already given all turbulent attacks, as he would be ready to resist demands not consistent with his duties and with your happiness. Hear then the paternal voice which gives you confidence, and be not moved by that cry which issues from unknown mouths to agitate the people of Italy by the fear of a foreign war, assisted and prepared by internal conspiracies, or by the malevolent inertness of rulers. This is deceit; it is to drive you on by terror to seek the public safety in confusion: to confound by tumult the counsels of those who govern you: and by disorder to prepare pretexts for a war which no other motive could rouse up against us. What danger, indeed, can hang over Italy so long as a bond of gratitude and of trust, not corrupted by any violence, unites together the strength of the people with the wisdom of their Sovereigns, with the holiness of right? But we chiefly, we, the Head and the Supreme Pontiff of the most holy Catholic religion, should we not, it may be, have, if unjustly assailed, innumerable sons to defend us, who would support as their father's house the centre of catholic unity? A great gift of heaven is this amongst the many by which it has favoured Italy: that hardly 3,000,000 of our subjects should have 200,000,000 of brothers of every nation and of every language. This was in far other times, and in the overthrow of the whole Roman world, the safety of Rome. For this the ruin of Italy was never total. This will ever be her safeguard so long as this Apostolic See shall remain in its centre. Oh, bless, therefore, great God, Italy, and ever preserve to her this greatest of all gifts, faith! Bless her with the benediction which your Vicar, prostrate on earth, humbly begs of you. Bless her with the benediction which the saints to whom she gave birth implore of you for her, the queen of saints who protects her, the apostles of whom she preserves the glorious relics, your Son made man, who sent his representative on earth to reside in this Rome.

Datum Romæ apud Sanctam Mariam Majorem die 10 Februarii, anni 1848, Pontificatus nostri anno secundo.

PIUS PP. IX.

(Inclosure 3.)—Mr. Petre to Sir George Hamilton.

Rome, February 12, 1848.

THE people began to collect in numbers yesterday about 2 o'clock, in the Piazza del Popolo, whence to proceed along the Corso to the Quirinal Palace to thank His Holiness for his proclamation of the previous evening.

In the procession were officers of the line and of the civic guards, soldiers of both services, gendarmes, and various classes of the population, all mingled together, in number from 2,000 to 3,000, and walking in regular order, arm-in-arm; wearing, some the Papal colours, some the Italian tricolour, and accompanied by flags of every description. Many priests, one carrying the banner of the University, and surrounded by the students, joined in the procession. The cries of "Viva Pio Nono! solo!" the last word uttered by few. "Evviva i nostri fratelli Italiani! l'indipendenza dell' Italia! e Siciliani;" &c., were answered and cheered by countless spectators from the windows, decorated with flags, inscriptions, and banners. Some few cries of "la costituzione!" were heard. A vast crowd was already collected in front of the Quirinal, and on the arrival of the procession, His Holiness appeared in the balcony, accompanied by the staff of the civic guard and of the line, whom he had previously addressed in animated terms, reminding them of the fidelity they owed to their Sovereign and to the supreme head of the Church.

After the usual prayer, before the benediction in Latin, His Holiness paused, and then spoke, in his usual manly tone of voice, and in the most animated but affectionate manner, nearly as follows: People of Rome!

Before the benediction of God descends upon you, upon the whole State, and I will likewise repeat on the whole of Italy, I pray that you be united in heart, and that your demands may not be contrary to the sanctity of this State of the Church. Certain cries, however, which come not from the people, but from a few, I cannot, I ought not, I will not permit. I pray, therefore, God to bless you, under the express conditions that you are faithful to the Pontiff and to the church. With these premises I bless you, I bless you with all the expansion of my soul. Remember the promises you have made, and be faithful to God, to religion, and to the Holy See. '

The more than usual enthusiasm which broke forth at the close of every sentence of the above short address, produced the deepest impression, contrasted as it was by the deathlike silence which prevailed during the utterance.

The appearance, the conduct, and the manner of the crowds assembled in various parts of the town, were widely different, it was generally remarked, from what was witnessed but three days previously.

SIR,

Rome, February 13, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint you, for the information of Viscount Palmerston, that His Holiness has accepted the resignation of Cardinal Riario Sforza, Camerlengo of the Church, as Minister of Commerce, of the Fine Arts, of Industry, and of Agriculture; of Monsignore Savelli, Minister of Police; and of Monsignore Rusconi, Minister of Public Works: and has, by letters of his Eminence the Secretary of State, appointed in their stead, Count Pasolini, Counsellor of State for the Province of Ravenna, Minister of Commerce, &c.; the Advocate Sturbinetti, one of the Conservators of the Senate, Minister of Public Works; and Don Michelangelo Caetani, Prince of Teano, son of the Duke of Sermoneta, of one of the most ancient families in Rome, Minister of Police.

The above appointments were officially announced in the "Gazetta di Roma" of yesterday evening.

Some arrests have been made of frequenters of a political café in the Corso, Caffé delle Belle Arti, natives of the Romagna; of one from Leghorn; and of a Roman: the last, I understand, for a seditious cry, "Down with the sacerdotal Government," or some such, immediately under the balcony of the Quirinal Palace, in the presence of His Holiness, on the 11th instant, and to which he alluded in his address to the people, as reported in my last despatch.

 MY LORD, Florence, February 18, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith to your Lordship the copy of a note which I received yesterday from the Minister for Foreign Affairs, inclosing the new Constitution for the Tuscan States; and I also inclose my reply to the same.

Of the three Constitutions which have lately appeared in Italy, the one which Tuscany has obtained appears most complete and ably drawn up, although perhaps it is the most liberal, as, according to the XXXth and XXXIst Articles, the suffrage may almost be considered to be universal.

The first Chamber is called the Senate, and is not hereditary; but in other respects this new Constitution bears considerable resemblance to the Constitution of Great Britain. It is evident that great pains have been bestowed on the formation of it.

The rejoicings in Florence yesterday were of the most enthusiastic kind: in the evening the Grand Ducal Palace, the Cathedral, and the whole city, were brilliantly illuminated.

Monseigneur le Grand Duc de Toscane désire que ses sentiments susdits soient portés à la connaissance de Sa Majesté la Reine de la Grande Bretagne, conjointement à l'assurance que les rapports de parfaite amitié existants si heureusement entre les 2 Cours et leurs Gouvernements, seront non seulement maintenus avec soin, mais cultivés et resserrés à l'avenir avec tout l'empressement par le concours de ses peuples.

In accordance with the desire intimated in his Excellency's communication, the Undersigned will lose no time in conveying this intelligence officially to Her Majesty's Government.

The Undersigned also takes this opportunity of expressing his sincere hope that this liberal measure of state policy adopted by the Grand Duke of Tuscany, so important to the future fate of this country and to the whole of Italy, may not fail to contribute to the happiness of the Sovereign, the loyalty of his subjects, and the peace and prosperity of Tuscany.

 MY LORD, Florence, February 19, 1848.

THE Austrian Chargé d'Affaires at this Court informed the Minister for Foreign Affairs that he could not suffer the arms of the Austrian Mission to remain outside Baron de Neumann's residence during the night of the illuminations and boisterous rejoicings for the publication of the Constitution which took place on the 17th instant, unless the Tuscan Government would answer for their not being exposed to insult on that occasion. To this intimation, which was sent in writing, a reply was made, which Baron Snitzer thought ambiguous, and was not satisfied with.

The Austrian arms were therefore removed for the night, which passed over tranquilly, and were replaced on the following morning.

I am informed that Baron Snitzer added in his communication, that he had no instructions from his Court how to act under the circumstances of the political change which has created so much sensation: but that the Tuscan Government must consider the Austrian Legation entirely foreign to the whole proceedings, and unable to recognize them or to take any part in the demonstrations.

In consequence, the general order to illuminate the public buildings and palaces was not observed at the Austrian Minister's house.

No. 98.—The Hon. R. Abercromby to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received February 28.)

MY LORD,

Turin, February 20, 1848.

ALTHOUGH it is more than probable that Her Majesty's Ambassador at the Court of Vienna will have before this transmitted to your Lordship the text of the Treaty* between Austria and Modena, signed at Vienna on the 24th of December last, I nevertheless forward herewith to your Lordship a printed copy of it in Italian as it appeared in the "Gazzetta Piemontese" of yesterday, and I add also a translation of the same into English.

A Treaty of the same tenor and to the same effect has also been concluded between His Majesty the Emperor of Austria and His Royal Highness the Infanta Duke of Parma.

The provisions of these Treaties have for object to secure for the Dukes of Parma and Modena, the military protection of Austria in all cases of attack from without; and of Austrian military assistance on a requisition from either of the above-mentioned Dukes, in cases of internal disturbances, should the forces of either of the Dukes be insufficient to maintain order within their respective territories.

There is, however, a declaration contained in the beginning of the IInd Article of this Treaty now inclosed, which is deserving of particular notice.

It is therein declared "that the States of the Duke of Modena entering thus within the line of defence of the Italian provinces of His Majesty the Emperor of Austria," the right of marching Imperial troops into the territory of Modena, and of occupying the fortresses of that duchy, is acquired by His Imperial Majesty, whenever the interests of a common defence, or, "military precautions," may require it.

It is clear that the practical result of the stipulations of this Article will be to alter considerably the position of Austria, so far as regards her military frontier in Italy: and that she has, in the guise of an ally of Modena, in reality advanced her own military posts from the banks of the Po to the frontiers of the Papal and Tuscan States.

The advantages thus gained by Austria, far exceed those which the Duke of Modena acquires under this Treaty.

The assistance and protection of Austria could never have failed him upon application for it, in the event of the emergencies occurring as specified in Articles I and III of this Treaty, whereas Austria secures for herself, by the wide and ambiguous expression of "military precautions," the right at once to occupy the territory and fortresses of Modena, whenever she may think fit; or that she may meditate assuming a threatening, if not a hostile, attitude towards the States of the Church, as well as towards those of the Grand Duke of Tuscany.

Your Lordship will also observe, that Article IV of this Treaty prevents the Duke of Modena from concluding with another Power a military Convention of any kind, without the previous consent of His Majesty the Emperor of Austria.

It is difficult not to feel that the ground thus taken by Austria is calculated to alarm those States which are now brought into immediate contact with her; and it would hardly be a matter of surprise, if, in consequence, they should be of opinion, that for their own safety, it was necessary to enter into engagements for their mutual protection and support. As yet, I am not aware that any steps in that direction have been taken, but the spirit of the provisions of this Treaty will not be overlooked by the rest of Italy; and I much fear that fresh matter will be found in them to feed the feeling of antipathy already existing against Austria.

I MENTIONED to Baron Schleinitz the report which had been transmitted to your Lordship by Lord Napier as to the collective note presented by the Ministers of Austria and Russia and the Chargé d'Affaires of Prussia, encouraging the King of Naples to persevere in withholding the grant of a Constitution from his people.

Baron Schleinitz replied that he had no authority to speak upon this subject, but he would say that although he had not seen the document alluded to, he knew it was not a collective note but rather a memorandum which had been drawn up in obedience to the King's request, which was against the concession of a Constitutional form of Government; that in the part the Prussian Chargé d'Affaires had taken on this occasion he had acted entirely without instructions.

I INCLOSE herewith a proclamation issued at Milan on the 22nd instant, containing a series of articles empowering the police authorities to proceed in a summary manner to the trial and punishment of all offenders against public order, or persons guilty of any political demonstration.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

RA. ABERCROMBY.

(Inclosure.)—Proclamation issued at Milan.

February 22, 1848.

IN his proclamation of the 9th of January last, His Majesty has deigned to express the painful sensation which has been produced on him by the disturbed state of his Lombardo-Venetian kingdom by means of some restless persons, who instigated from abroad, and influenced by interested views, endeavour to overturn the present legal order of things, declaring at the same time that it is his firm resolution to maintain the safety and internal and external tranquillity of his said kingdom with all those means which Providence has conferred on him, mindful of his duties as a Sovereign, the first of which is to watch over the prosperity of the State, and the protection of his faithful subjects. It being now necessary that both the judicial power and the police authorities be provided with those greater powers which the necessities of the moment and the importance of these offices demand, His Majesty has commanded, that for all those acts which disturb the public tranquillity, and are punishable by the laws now in force, there shall be summary process according to the regulations published contemporaneously with the present, in another notification of this day's date.

In addition to the offences against order and tranquillity contemplated in Part 1 and 2 of the Penal Code, there are other acts which, though in themselves innocent, may acquire a dangerous character in times of political agitation, like the present. In such case it is, and always has been, the duty of the police to interfere, either for the prevention of such acts, or for their repression. In order to furnish it with the means requisite for effecting this duty, and to guarantee it from the charge of arbitrary acts, the following regulations are published.

Whenever an act, innocent in itself, as, for example, the wearing or exhibition of certain colours, the carrying of certain distinctions or marks, the singing or declaiming of certain songs or poems, the applauding or hissing of certain passages of a dramatic or mimetic piece, the assembling at any given place of meeting, the dissuading from holding intercourse with certain persons, the making collections, or getting subscriptions, or any similar matter, shall assume the character of a political demonstration, contrary to the lawful order now existing, the political authority of the province pronounces its prohibition.

The same shall take place for those meetings in public or private places in which a tendency is manifested hostile to the said order, where it is a recognized rule that only such persons are admitted as belong to a given party, and others of the opposite party excluded.

The same shall take place if any one, with intentions subversive of order, shall endeavour to limit the individual liberty of others by threats, ridicule, reproof, or abuse.

The prohibition of such acts may be ordered by the police authorities according to circumstances; either (a) by an injunction to be made only to the offending party, or (b) by publishing the prohibition throughout a place, district, or province, as binding on all.

In both cases a penalty shall be added to the prohibition.

In the first case (a), the threatened penalty consists—

1. In a fine which may amount to 10,000 Austrian lire, for the benefit of the poor-house or other charitable institution of the place.

2. In banishment from the place where the offence has been committed, without any limitation as to the plan of ulterior residence.

3. In restricting the residence of the offending party to a given place within the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom, or beyond the same.

4. In arresting the party, as determined by § 89 of the Part II of the Penal Code.

5. With regard to persons not Austrian subjects, without reference to the period of their residence in the Austrian States, in banishment from all the provinces of the monarchy.

Which of these penalties should be adopted in each case must depend on the circumstances, and on the more or less danger to be apprehended from the offender: wherefore, without wishing to fix a graduated scale, the decision is left to the police authorities.

In the second case (b) the general prohibition is sanctioned by reference to the penal measure contained in § 89 of Part I of the Penal Code. The police authorities are, however, authorized in special cases to substitute for the penalties awarded in the paragraph mentioned, those given at the Articles I, II, and III.

With regard to the prohibitions indicated under letter (a) they shall begin to take effect as to liability to punishment immediately after the signature of the minute that intimation has been given, which shall be drawn up in each case of such prohibition, and shall be retained by the provincial police authorities; with regard to prohibitions indicated under letter (b) they shall take effect 24 hours after the prohibition shall have been publicly posted up in the places appointed for the same.

The penal process shall be the same as in police offences, which are not included among serious political transgressions. The provincial police authority pronounces the decision, against which there may be an appeal to the office of Government, but not later than 24 hours after intimation of the same.

The appeal shall not preclude the provincial police authority from proceeding, while awaiting its decision, to take those measures which may be thought requisite to prevent the guilty party from again committing the same offence, or escaping the execution of the penalty.

In commanding the publication of the present rigorous measures, which are rendered necessary by the urgency of the circumstances, His Majesty trusts that the quiet inhabitants of the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom will see in them nothing more than another paternal provision for the repression of a spirit of infatuation which has insinuated itself from without, and is fomented by a few turbulent, or imprudent, or perverse men, and which seriously menaces the moral tranquillity and physical well-being of the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom. Such measures cannot render doubtful the paternal feelings of His Majesty towards his subjects of the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom, because their severity can only reach those who, after the publication of the present, shall not lay aside their guilty movements against social order and the State, instead of placing their confidence in the paternal heart of His Majesty, always inclined to promote the welfare of his subjects.

IL CONTE DI SPAUR, Governor.

No. 101.—Consul-General Dawkins to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received February 29.)

Milan, February 20, 1848.

THE intelligence of a Constitution granted in Piedmont, following so rapidly the news from Naples, together with the accounts from Tuscany and Rome, have added considerably to the feeling of excitement and irritation prevailing in these provinces, and I am sorry to say this feeling is becoming every day more and more apparent. Disturbances have occurred at Pavia and Padua, where the hot blood of the students has brought them into collision with the military, who on their part are now little disposed to bear with moderation anything like an affront. At Padua the disturbance was serious; several students were wounded and one killed, and I believe one or two soldiers likewise lost their lives. The majority of the students both at Pavia and Padua have gone to their homes, and some of the professors of the latter university have resigned their appointments. Much excitement has been caused in the Venetian provinces by this affair, and the Podestà and Delegate of Venice have proceeded to Vienna to urge upon the Government the necessity of taking some steps to calm the public mind. The different versions of the origin of these disorders vary so completely, each side throwing the blame of the provocation on the other, that it is almost impossible, short of being an eye-witness, to arrive at a true knowledge of the facts.

Certainly, in most of the towns, every opportunity is taken of insulting and maltreating the soldiers whenever they are met with singly or in small bodies. Two or three affrays have taken place at Milan. In one case, a young officer was attacked at night by three persons armed with sticks, but although severely beaten he succeeded in wounding one of them, who was captured. In another case, a man fired a pistol at two officers walking along in the streets in the evening. In both these instances the provocation does not appear to have been given by the officers, but here again the two versions differ completely. The military, naturally irritated and exasperated by such treatment, are led perhaps to assume an air of defiance, and thus where each party is almost equally ready to resent anything like an affront, constant collisions, increasing in bitterness, and leading to the most serious results, may be looked for. Nor is it easy to foresee a termination to this state of things, which in the meantime is producing the most disastrous effects on the prosperity of the country. The tradesmen and shopkeepers in the large towns, particularly Venice and Milan, complain bitterly. The great houses are shut, and society is at an end.

But what in the midst of all this, are the steps taking by the Government? Nothing can be worse than the proceedings of the local authorities, or more calculated to estrange the feelings of those who are still disposed to support them. A want of union; weakness on some occasions; the most arbitrary exercise of power on others; disagreement between the civil and military functionaries; the apparent assumption of great powers by the latter; and, worst of all, delay, are too evident. I have already mentioned to your Lordship the arrest of various individuals both here and at Venice. Proceedings have been instituted against the two gentlemen, Messrs. Manin and Tommasco, arrested at Venice; and although there is every reason to believe the accusation against them cannot be supported, still they will have had the form of a trial. But the persons arrested here were sent off without any trial or form of proceeding whatever; and although they are not confined in prison, but are allowed to go at large, under the surveillance of the police, at their respective places of banishment, Linz and Laybach, the conduct of the Government towards them is severely arraigned. There is no doubt that some, if not all of these persons, were amongst the most determined opponents of the Government, and that their language has been most violent. But it is to be lamented that the Government does not, for its own sake at least, make known the grounds upon which it has acted. Several persons having notice that a similar fate awaited them, have escaped across the frontier. The only foreigners hitherto ordered to leave the country are the Marchioness Azeglio, the wife of the celebrated writer, and the Prince Pio, a Spanish nobleman, and his family.

The Government is unremitting in its endeavours to discover the members of the secret committee, of the existence of which it is convinced. Nothing, however, as far as I can learn, that has been found among the papers of those who have been arrested, or of those who have fled from arrest, has afforded any positive proof of who are the members of this society, nor indeed of its existence. That some directing power does exist, is undoubted, and it is extraordinary with what rapidity and unanimity its decisions are adopted, which could not be the case were it not seconded, in a great measure, by the general feeling. The word is passed that on the following day the theatre is to be deserted, or to be crowded, or mass to be attended in a certain church, or a certain part of the Corso to be frequented, and it is done. The chief members of this direction are well known, but there is no proof of their being such, and hence the greater exasperation of the authorities, who are led to the adoption of extreme measures in the hopes of making the desired discovery. These measures have certainly intimidated to a great extent, but they have also irritated very much, and they are contrasted with the language of the Viceroy in his proclamations, which I have already had the honour to forward to your Lordship, wherein His Imperial Highness alludes to his well-founded hopes ("le mie più fondate speranze") that measures of reform and concession might be shortly expected from Vienna. The absence of any sign of such measures has very much injured the position of the Viceroy.

In the meantime, the most exaggerated and mischievous reports are circulated, and find ready credence in the minds of the people, who are incessantly worked upon by the emissaries of the disaffected party. The press of the neighbouring States is not backward in propagating these stories. An article which appeared a few days ago in a Roman paper, announcing that 400 Austrian soldiers had crossed the Ticino, and had been repulsed by a body of 250 Piedmontese, was eagerly caught up and believed, so much so that the Government here was obliged to publish a contradiction. Additional proclamations have been issued by the police, forbidding all kinds of demonstrations, and the wearing of any distinctive badge or article of dress. In short, the Government seem determined to keep down, by sheer force, all expression of political feeling. They say, I am told, that the present is not the moment to grant favours; that such a proceeding would look like yielding to intimidation; and that in the present state of Italy no concessions whatever would have prevented the turbulent and disaffected in these provinces from stirring up troubles and disorder. They say, "How can we make concessions to people who openly declare that nothing will satisfy them, and that they will never rest until they have got rid of the Austrians?" That such language, on the part of many people here, is very common, and that it is little calculated to induce concessions, is true; but I venture humbly to express my opinion to your Lordship, that no time is to be lost in removing from the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom all those causes of discontent which may have been ascertained to be well founded, and in granting whatever concessions Austria may be prevailed upon to make in accordance with the spirit of the age.

Your Lordship will doubtless have received from Her Majesty's Embassy at Vienna, a copy of the Treaty concluded between the Emperor of Austria and the Dukes of Modena and Parma, on the 24th December last, but I nevertheless inclose a copy of this document, as it appeared in the Milan official Gazette of the 18th instant. The Duke of Parma has required the presence of additional Austrian troops in Parma, and a battalion of infantry has accordingly proceeded thither from Piacenza.

I understand that the force assembling in these provinces will exceed, on paper, 100,000 men, of which I am assured more than 90,000 may be reckoned upon as effective, or "disponibles." In this force is to be included the artillery, which will consist of 20 batteries, or 120 guns. Great exertions are making to provide this arm with good and serviceable horses.

No. 102.—Consul-General Dawkins to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received February 29.)

MY LORD,

Milan, February 22, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inclose copies of 2 proclamations issued this day by the Government, the one conferring upon the police the power of judging by summary process all minor offences against the public tranquillity, and punishing them by fine, banishment, or imprisonment, according to the discretion of the police, in cases of Austrian subjects, and by sending out of the empire in cases of foreigners; the other inclosing an Imperial Decree, bearing date Vienna, 24th November, 1847, authorizing the trial by special commission ("giudizio statario") of all cases of high treason, insurrection, resistance to the armed force, and the more serious offences against the public peace.

According to this decree, the trial is to take place immediately upon the commission being made acquainted with the offence, is to be proceeded with uninterruptedly, and to be concluded in 14 days. In cases where it is not possible to conclude the trial within this period, the ordinary tribunal takes cognizance of the cause.

Those guilty of high treason, or of instigating others thereto, of insurrection or rebellion when combining the intention of high treason, those who with the like intent forcibly oppose the armed force or the public functionaries, or those who with arms in their hands take part in a popular riot, and refuse to withdraw when summoned to do so, incur the penalty of death without appeal. Only in cases where the tribunal considers that there are very strong extenuating circumstances, or that sufficient example has been given by the execution of one or more of the chief culprits, it may refer the sentence to the supreme authority.

This decree is to come into operation 14 days after its publication in the Gazette of the city in which the Government resides.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

SOVEREIGN RESOLUTION.

WITH the object of maintaining public tranquillity in the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom, I have resolved to ordain that, in the cases herein mentioned of high treason, disturbance of public order, insurrection, and rebellion, and for serious offences against the public peace, there shall be established a Special Commission (Giudizio Statario) according to the following rules :

§ 1. The Special Commission shall act against

a. Any person who, after the publication of the present law in the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom, shall provoke, instigate, or attempt to seduce others, although ineffectually, to the offence of high treason contemplated by § 52, letter b, of the first part of the Penal Code, or to the offence of insurrection, or that of rebellion (§§ 61 and 66 of the first part of the Penal Code), when the intent of high treason is joined thereto.

b. Against any person who, with the same intent, or during an insurrection or rebellion arising from any cause whatever, shall oppose the armed force by acts, or commit violence against public functionaries, or against persons exercising any office of magistracy, or against a guard.

c. Against any person who, with arms in his hands, shall take part in any popular commotion or mutiny, and when summoned by authority or by armed force to withdraw, shall not promptly obey, and who shall be arrested during the insurrection or rebellion with arms or other deadly instruments.

d. Against any person who shall excite a popular commotion, either by public speeches calculated to inspire hatred to the form of Government, the administration of the State, or the Constitution of the country, or by any other means for the same purpose (§ 57 of the first part of the Penal Code), or who shall take an active part in a popular commotion excited by such means.

e. Against any person guilty of grave offences against the public peace.

§ 2. In all those cases the Special Commission shall be held by the ordinary criminal tribunal of the place where the offence shall have been committed, and it shall be formed so soon as information of the case shall be received, without waiting for an order from superior authority, and without the necessity of a previous publication.

In order to discuss the case whether or not the Special Commission is applicable, not less than 4 judges must be present, together with the President. The selection of the judges is referred to the President of the Tribunal, or to the person who acts for him.

§ 3. All those persons who are taken in the fact, or against whom there is sufficient legal evidence to give well-grounded expectation that legal proof of their guilt will be speedily produced, shall be brought before the Commission, without regard to their usual residence, or the place where they were arrested.

§ 4. The Criminal Tribunal is authorised to form the Special Commission even against military persons, or persons subject to military jurisdiction, if they shall be arrested by the civil authority. But it is incumbent on the tribunal to give immediate notice of the same to the nearest military command, stating the name, birthplace, and military rank of the accused. The tribunal is also authorised to summon directly witnesses subject to military jurisdiction, but it must give information of that also to the nearest military command.

§ 6. The inquiry must, as a general rule, be limited to the fact for which the Special Commission was instituted, and therefore no question shall be made of accessory circumstances which are not of essential influence in the determination of the punishment, nor of any other offences which may be alleged against the accused. In the case where the accused may be liable for some other offences to a greater punishment than that on account of which he may be brought before the Special Commission, and where those offences are connected, in that single case the Special Commission shall inquire into both; in any other case, the process relative to the second offence shall be conducted before the same* Criminal Tribunal in the ordinary manner.

§ 7. The discovery of accomplices shall not be neglected, but the passing and execution of the sentence may not be delayed on this account, unless so far as there may be well-grounded expectations of finding out important circumstances regarding the designs or the extent of the enterprise, or of discovering and convicting the principal author.

§ 8. The term within which the Special Commission must complete the trial, and pass sentence, is fixed to 14 days, dating from that in which the inquiry began. If the guilt of the accused cannot be proved by the Special Commission within that period, the inquiry shall be continued before the same Criminal Tribunal in the ordinary manner.

§ 9. Against persons found guilty of one of the offences enumerated in § 1, under letters a, b, and c, the pain of death is awarded, provided it be in concurrence with the conditions of §§ 430 and 431 of part I of the Penal Code. The sentence of death is as a general rule (§ 11) pronounced, published, and executed in the manner prescribed by the Special Commission.

§ 11. In the single case where the Criminal Tribunal, in consequence of important extenuating circumstances, thinks proper to implore the sovereign favour for pardon of the punishment of death; or where, from the pain of death having been already inflicted against one or more of the chief offenders, an example of salutary terror has been already made sufficient to re-establish tranquillity, shall the sentence be submitted to superior and supreme authority, which shall proceed according to the ordinary rules.

§ 12. Against other individuals whose guilt has been proved by trial before the Special Commission, but to whom § 9 is not applicable, the award of punishment shall be determined by the general rules of the Penal Code, relating to the offence for which the trial has been held; with regard to the notification and execution of the sentence, the provisions of §§ 9 and 10 shall apply to these cases also.

§ 13. Against persons brought before the Special Commission for grave offences against the public peace, sentence shall be passed according to the rules of the Penal Code for such offences, and it shall be forthwith executed. No appeal shall lie against such sentence, nor shall petition for pardon be permitted.

§ 14. A minute shall be made of the acts of the Special Commission according to the rules of § 513 of the first part of the Penal Code; and with regard to the trial, in cases in which the sentence shall have been carried into effect without being first submitted to superior authority, the minute shall be transmitted to the superior Criminal Tribunal within 3 days at furthest after the closure of the Special Commission.

§ 15. With regard to those accused persons against whom there shall not be evidence sufficiently stringent to bring the Special Commission to bear against them, the same Criminal Tribunal which shall have opened the Special Commission, shall proceed against them according to the ordinary forms, but without regard to their usual domicile, or to the place of their arrest.

§ 16. The present law shall take effect after 14 days from the date of its first insertion in the Gazette of the city in which the Government is resident.

FERDINAND.

No. 111.—Sir G. Hamilton to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. March 7.)
MY LORD, Florence, February 28, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith a despatch I have received from Mr. Petre, at Rome, stating that the committee of prelates and cardinals was still sitting for the purpose of considering the best mode of proposing such changes in the institutions as would be most expedient under present circumstances.

Those persons who are conversant here with Roman affairs, believe that it will be difficult to form a Senate or Upper Chamber composed of so many cardinals who are not natives of the Roman states, and to whom it is therefore inexpedient to give a preponderating influence in temporal matters concerning a country to which they do not belong.

It seems probable that the jurisdiction of foreign prelates will be confined to spiritual matters alone, and that in temporal affairs the legislature will receive the assistance only of lay noblemen and cardinals who are not foreigners.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

GEORGE B. HAMILTON.

(Inclosure.)—Mr. Petre to Sir George Hamilton.

SIR,

Rome, February 23, 1848.

SINCE my despatch of the 13th instant, Rome has been quiet. Some strangers have, in addition to the arrests therein mentioned, been ordered to leave Rome. A little more attention has been paid to the conduct and discipline of the civic guards; and on Sunday, the 20th, they mustered in the court of the Belvedere of the Vatican, in the presence of His Holiness, who, addressing them, said that in them he saw order and peace, the enemies of anarchy, the friends of the Holy See and of the Pontiff.

A commission of ecclesiastics, cardinals, and prelates, has been appointed by His Holiness to take into consideration the better regulating of the institutions already granted, and to propose such system of Government as is compatible with the authority of the Pontiff and with the wants of the day. Some plan of a representative system of Government is, in consequence of this announcement, confidently expected, and the newly-formed Ministry is looked on as one of transition; for the recent events in Naples, Tuscany, and Piedmont, have rendered a modification of the very foundation of the Government inevitable, and hence the naming of a Ministry able to reconstruct the executive power, and to adapt it to the organic change now loudly called for.

The municipal council of Bologna has already addressed His Holiness on the subject, calling on him to yield to the desires and hopes of his subjects, and to grant them a form of Government which other Sovereigns of Italy, first roused by his voice, have assured to theirs.

The municipal councils of other provinces and towns of the Papal States are preparing to follow the example of Bologna; some indeed have already done so, and in terms, I hear, not so respectful. The council and Senate of Rome, for fear rather of some declaration from the more violent politicians, members of the Roman Club, Circolo Romano, will present an address to His Holiness on the same subject in a day or two.

I hear from fair authority that in most of the provinces and towns, Bologna excepted, but especially in Ancona, Forli, Ravenna, police authority can hardly be said to exist; it certainly does not attempt to repress lawlessness and crime.

I have, &c.

Sir George Hamilton.

WILLIAM PETRE.

No. 112.—Count Dietrichstein to Viscount Palmerston.

Chandos House, le 7 Mars, 1848.

LE COMTE DIETRICHSTEIN présente ses complimens à son Excellence le Vicomte Palmerston, et a l'honneur de lui transmettre la copie d'une dépêche qu'il a été chargé de lui communiquer.

(Inclosure.)—Prince Metternich to Count Dietrichstein.

M. LE COMTE,

Vienne, le 23 Février, 1848.

LORD PONSONBY m'a donné le 19 de ce mois connaissance de la dépêche ci-annexée en copie du Principal Secrétaire d'Etat.

En rédigeant la dépêche du 11 Février, Lord Palmerston n'a point pu mettre en doute, la satisfaction que nous ferait éprouver l'assurance qui y est consignée des sentiments d'amitié et de pleine confiance que nourrit à notre égard le Gouvernement Britannique. L'intérêt qu'il est juste d'attacher à l'existence et un constant échange de ces sentiments entre les 2 Cours, a indubitablement une portée qui n'est point restreinte à leurs intérêts directs; ces sentiments ont la valeur d'un gage pour l'ordre public et le maintien de la paix politique.

que sa Seigneurie caractérise comme étant à la fois le plus sage, le plus juste, et le plus conforme aux stipulations des Traités de 1814, comme aux principes de la justice internationale. L'expression de ce sentiment de Lord Palmerston me ramène forcément, Monsieur l'Ambassadeur, au contenu de la dépêche circulaire que j'ai adressée le 2 Août de l'année dernière aux Cours de Grande Bretagne, de France, de Prusse, et de Russie. L'objet de cette dépêche n'a été autre que celui de prendre envers les 4 Cours, une initiative à l'égard du principe sur lequel nous entendions nous placer en face du mouvement intense qui s'était fait jour dans la Péninsule Italienne, et de réunir ces Cours à la nôtre sur la base du principe du respect dû aux traités existants et aux délimitations territoriales placées sous leur égide. Les 4 Cours ont accueilli la déclaration que la circulaire portait au nom de notre Cabinet ; et celle qu'en retour chacune des Cours a consignée dans sa réplique à notre office, a pleinement répondu à notre attente.

Si, dans sa dépêche du 12 Août de la même année à l'Ambassadeur Britannique près notre Cour, Lord Palmerston a manifesté sa satisfaction de ce que rien ne semblait l'autoriser à admettre la chance d'événements qui seraient de nature à appeler à leur défense les gardiens des traités, sa Seigneurie n'a point pu mettre en doute que sa confiance à cet égard ne se rencontrât avec nos vœux.

Et si, dans la même dépêche, le Principal Secrétaire d'Etat a ajouté l'observation, qu'à côté du droit de la propre conservation appartenant à tout Etat indépendant, il existe encore un droit, qui également repose sur le principe de la souveraineté, nommément celui du pouvoir légal, d'aviser à telles réformes qu'il regarde comme devant assurer le bien-être du peuple placé sous son autorité, ce principe, Monsieur l'Ambassadeur, comme tout autre règle consacrée par le droit public, a dans tous le temps et dans toutes les occasions été admis et appliqué par notre Cour. Notre sentiment sur la valeur morale et pratique du principe de la liberté du mouvement intérieur de tout Etat souverain et indépendant, en-deçà des limites que tracent à cette liberté les règles de la vie internationale et le respect dû aux droits des autres Etats souverains ; notre sentiment, à cet égard, est tellement prononcé, que nous regardons toute initiative prise par un Gouvernement étranger envers un Etat indépendant—soit que cette initiative ait lieu dans le but de se prononcer contre la législation, les formes gouvernementales et le mode administratif existant dans un Etat tiers, soit qu'elle ait lieu dans le sens d'un appel à des réformes ; comme étant placée en-dehors des facultés légales de l'étranger. A cet égard notre Cour peut défier l'impartiale histoire de produire une circonstance quelconque, dans laquelle elle aurait manqué au respect qu'elle professe pour les droits de l'indépendance, ce premier des droits de tout Etat souverain.

Le respect pour les principes ne préjuge cependant pas la liberté des impressions, et le droit du jugement que possède tout Gouvernement comme tout individu ; et le jugement que j'ai consigné dans la circulaire du 2 Août, 1847, dans les termes suivans : "les États Italiens sont aujourd'hui agités par un esprit de subversion, dont les conséquences ne sont que trop faciles à prévoir, la position géographique de notre empire nous impose le devoir de fixer avec une attention redoublée nos regards sur la marche que suivront les événements dans ces États," ce jugement n'a, à notre vif regret, reçu que trop tôt la moins suspecte des justifications : celle par les événements.

Si la marche des événements dans les divers États de la Péninsule n'a ainsi point donné un démenti à la prévision que j'ai consignée dans ma dépêche du 2 Août, 1847, il en a été de même de l'attitude qu'à cette époque j'ai annoncée aux 4 Cours, comme étant celle que notre Gouvernement était décidé à assumer en face du mouvement révolutionnaire dans la Péninsule.

La dépêche de Lord Palmerston à Lord Ponsonby du 11 Février, tout en rendant justice à la marche suivie par notre Cabinet, en face d'une situation des choses d'une nature aussi pénible et aussi dangereuse dans ses conséquences que l'est celle dans laquelle se trouve évidemment placée aujourd'hui toute la Péninsule Italienne, cette dépêche ne renferme pas moins une réserve, "à l'égard de la position que la révolution vient de faire au Royaume des 2 Siciles, et de l'influence que cette position peut exercer sur d'autres États d'Italie." Je vous avouerai, Monsieur l'Ambassadeur, que j'ai de la peine à m'expliquer cette réserve appliquée à notre Cour ; elle me paraît manquer d'objet, non seulement, vu la nature des positions, mais également eu égard au contenu de la circulaire de notre Cabinet en date du 2 Août, 1847.

Ce à quoi seul il nous est dès-lors permis de nous attacher dans la dernière communication du Cabinet Anglais, c'est aux assurances du vif et constant intérêt que Sa Majesté Britannique prend à l'alliance entre les 2 empires, et aux vœux qu'exprime la dépêche du Principal Secrétaire d'Etat en faveur de la salubre influence de notre Cour sur la conservation de la paix et de l'équilibre politique.

Le Gouvernement Anglais peut se tenir pour assuré qu'il trouvera toujours l'Empereur notre auguste maître disposé à réunir ses efforts pour le soutien d'une aussi grande cause, à ceux des autres Puissances de l'Europe.

Veuillez, M. l'Ambassadeur, porter la présente dépêche à la connaissance de Lord Palmerston, et lui en confier une copie.

Recevez, &c.

M. le Comte Dietrichstein.

METTERNICH.

No. 113.—Count Nesselrode to Baron Brunnow.—(Communicated to Viscount Palmerston by Baron Brunnow, March 7.)

St. Pétersbourg, le 12¹/₂ Février, 1848.

LA situation de l'Italie prend chaque jour un aspect plus grave, plus menaçant pour la paix générale. La Sicile est en pleine insurrection, se refuse aux concessions qu'on lui fait, et caresse ouvertement l'idée d'une existence politique indépendante. A Naples, le Roi s'est vu forcé de promettre à ses sujets une constitution sur le modèle Français. Selon toutes probabilités, cet exemple va fructifier au centre et au nord de l'Italie, et la fièvre révolutionnaire, se propageant de proche en proche jusqu'aux possessions Autrichiennes, le Cabinet de Vienne sera tôt ou tard forcé de sortir de son inaction pour résister à un mouvement qui, quelque forme et quelque nom qu'il assume, est en réalité dirigé contre l'Autriche, et renferme pour elle une question de vie ou de mort.

Dans de pareilles circonstances votre Excellence comprendra combien il nous est essentiel de savoir à quoi nous en tenir au juste sur les vues du Gouvernement Anglais.

Notre intention n'est certes pas de mettre à sa charge tous les faux bruits, toutes les fausses inductions qu'on a cru pouvoir tirer en Italie de son langage diplomatique ou de celui de ses agents. Sa politique, nous en sommes convaincus, a été étrangement dénaturée par l'ignorante crédulité des uns et les calculs intéressés des autres. Mais toujours est-il que l'impression générale répandue dans les esprits est celle qu'il existe de sa part un vif sentiment de sympathie pour le succès des tendances libérales, et que le soin extrême qu'il a mis à se prononcer d'avance contre toute intervention Autrichienne a fini par accréditer l'idée qu'il appuie de ses désirs, les efforts que tenterait l'Italie pour rejeter au delà des Alpes ce qu'on est convenu d'appeler le joug Autrichien ; que le Gouvernement Anglais le veuille ou non, les Siciliens et les Lombards se prévalent de son attitude et de la présence de son pavillon, pour s'encourager dans leurs rêves d'indépendance particulière. Partout ailleurs il est regardé comme le protecteur bienveillant de toute révolution ayant pour but l'introduction en Italie des institutions Représentatives. Que le Gouvernement Anglais ait sympathisé avec le système d'améliorations progressives introduit récemment dans leurs Etats par quelques uns des Princes de la Péninsule, c'est une chose que nous concevons ; et nous-mêmes, M. le Baron, nous sommes les premiers à reconnaître qu'en Sicile, à Rome, par exemple, plus d'une réforme de ce genre pouvait être nécessaire. L'Autriche n'a jamais pensé autrement. Mais il n'en est pas moins vrai que, par suite de l'extrême surexcitation amenée par la manière dont on a trop imprudemment inauguré ce système d'améliorations administratives, qui dit aujourd'hui réformes sousentend révolutions, et qu'encourager les premières c'est ouvrir la porte aux secondes. L'exemple de Naples est là pour prouver qu'en Italie comme ailleurs, le mot spécieux de progrès se traduit, dans la pensée de ceux qui le prennent pour devise, par celui de constitution. Or, quelque naturelle que puisse être chez les hommes d'Etat Anglais leur prédilection pour ce qui se rapproche des formes de gouvernement qui sont propres à leur pays, nous avouons ne pas comprendre quel peut être leur intérêt politique à propager sur le continent le régime Constitutionnel. Nous ne craignons pas de le dire : ils agissent, sans le vouloir, dans l'unique intérêt de la France, dont les idées démocratiques, par la nature du sol où elles tombent, ont bien plus d'écho dans les esprits, bien plus d'affinité avec les mœurs, que n'en peuvent avoir les idées Anglaises. C'est en favorisant l'introduction de ces institutions et le triomphe de ces idées en Espagne et en Grèce, que l'Angleterre y a déjà augmenté la puissance morale du Gouvernement Français ; et c'est pour lui qu'elle travaille en Suisse, en laissant révolutionner par degrés les cantons conservateurs et renforcer le pouvoir central aux dépens des souverainetés particulières. Même chose aura lieu en Italie. D'ici à peu, grâce aux changements qui sont à la veille de s'y effectuer comme ils ont déjà eu lieu dans les autres pays, la France aura conquis par la paix plus que ne lui donnerait la guerre. Elle se verra de tous côtés entourée d'un rempart de petits Etats constitutionnels organisés sur le type Français, vivant de son esprit, agissant sous son influence ; et si plus tard cette France, non plus celle de Louis-Philippe, mais celle qui lui succédera, quand le système de compression adopté par ce Souverain aura cessé de la contenir, obéit aux instincts d'ambition qui tendent à la faire déborder hors de ses limites, le Gouvernement Anglais regrettera trop tard d'avoir affaibli d'avance le ressort des résistances qu'on aurait pu opposer aux Français, paralysé la puissance Autrichienne qui leur servait de contrepoids, et miné ainsi par la base le système défensif fondé autrefois par lui-même de concert avec l'Europe, au prix de tant de calamités, de labeurs et de sacrifices.

Il est peut-être aujourd'hui trop tard pour arrêter l'impulsion qui emporte l'Italie vers des institutions de ce genre ; mais il n'en est que plus urgent d'empêcher au moins que les changements qui auront lieu dans la constitution intérieure de ses divers Etats, n'atteignent aussi la circonscription territoriale qui leur a été fixée par les Traités et la personne des Princes qui les gouvernent. Que l'Angleterre veuille donc bien faire connaître hautement ses intentions. Admettra-t-elle que ce que l'esprit révolutionnaire a déjà obtenu au Nord, par la séparation des deux parties qui constituaient l'ancien Royaume des Pays-Bas, il puisse l'obtenir au Midi moyennant un démembrement du Royaume actuel des 2 Siciles ? Vera-t-elle d'un œil indifférent l'Autriche dépouillée en Lombardie, soit par un soulèvement intérieur, soit par les attaques du dehors, des provinces qui lui sont assurées par des transactions solennelles? Nous sommes persuadés que non; mais il importe au maintien de la paix que l'opinion faussée des Italiens soit redressée sur ce double article.

Quant à l'Empereur, M. le Baron, s'il se voit dans la position de faire abstraction, en les déplorant, des révolutions intérieures qui peuvent avoir lieu dans la Péninsule, il est d'autre part, fermement résolu, en ce qui concerne l'état de possession assigné aux divers Etats Italiens par les actes dont il est garant, à ne transiger en rien sur la marche que lui prescrivent ses devoirs et ses intérêts politiques. En Sicile il ne reconnaitra aucun changement qui, sous quelque forme ou quelque prétexte que ce soit, équivaldrait à la rupture ou à l'affaiblissement des liens qui unissent les 2 grandes portions du royaume, dont l'indivisible souveraineté appartient à la dynastie actuelle. En Lombardie, son appui moral est d'avance acquis à l'Autriche dans les mesures qu'elle prendra pour s'en conserver la possession; et si les attaques qu'elle aurait essuyées d'un point quelconque de l'Italie, étaient soutenues du dehors par quelque Puissance étrangère, notre auguste maître n'hésiterait pas à regarder une pareille agression comme un cas de guerre Européenne, et à employer dès-lors toutes ses forces disponibles à la défense du Gouvernement Autrichien.

Vous voudrez bien, M. le Baron, communiquer la présente dépêche au Cabinet Anglais, et nous rendre compte des explications que vous obtiendrez en retour.

Baron Brunnow.

LAST night there was an attack made on the Jesuit's college: all the windows were broken, the papers torn and thrown out, and the inhabitants, 19 in number, expelled. To appease the people, the Governor this morning issued a notification that the Jesuits are no longer there. They were taken to the Darsina, and I have reason to believe that they were allowed temporary shelter on board the San Michele, until their further destination be determined upon at Turin.

No. 122.—Count Dietrichstein to Viscount Palmerston.

Chandos House, le 10 Mars, 1848.

LE Comte Dietrichstein présente ses compliments à son Excellence Monsieur le Vicomte Palmerston, et s'empresse de lui transmettre ci-joint les copies des 2 dépêches dont il a eu l'honneur de lui donner lecture aujourd'hui.

(Inclosure 1.)—Prince Metternich to Count Dietrichstein.

Vienne, le 27 Février, 1848.

J'AI répondu par ma dépêche du 23 Février à celle que Lord Palmerston a adressée à Lord Ponsonby le 11 de ce mois. Nous avons regardé comme établi et comme épuisé, par ma dépêche du 2 Août de l'année dernière, ce qui concerne la marche politique et l'attitude de notre Cour à l'égard des Etats Italiens. Cette marche ne diffère pas, ni sous le point de vue des principes, ni sous celui de leur application, de celle qui sert et qui toujours a servi de norme à la politique de la Cour Impériale dans les questions Italiennes, comme dans toutes celles qui dans notre ère si riche en événements ont eu droit à fixer son attention particulière.

La matière dans son ensemble est-elle épuisée par les manifestations politiques consignées dans mes dépêches du 2 Août, 1847, et du 23 Février dernier? Tel ne saurait point être le cas. La situation dans laquelle se trouve aujourd'hui placée la Péninsule Italienne, y compris le Royaume Lombard-Vénitien, cette importante partie de notre empire, fait un appel à des réflexions qui dépassent l'intérêt qu'offrent les seules circonscriptions territoriales et les seules considérations politiques.

Les prévisions que dans mon expédition du 2 Août, 1847, j'ai regardé comme un devoir d'énoncer envers les Cours de France, de Grande Bretagne, de Prusse et de Russie, se sont bien vite réalisées. Les Etats Italiens ont parcouru en moins de 6 mois l'espace qui s'est trouvé placé entre les institutions et l'ordre gouvernemental qui les avait régi, et des institutions nouvelles. La disparition aussi subite de tout un ordre de choses légalement existant et l'établissement d'un ordre de choses nouveau, a un nom, et ce nom est celui de " Révolution." Que le revirement soit amené par l'autorité suprême elle-même, ou qu'il lui ait été imposé, le mode ne change rien à la valeur de la chose, et il en est également ainsi de la vérité, que toutes les institutions nouvelles ont, pour se consolider, besoin du concours et de l'épreuve du temps. L'espace qui sépare la chute d'un ordre de choses ancien de la consolidation de celui qui le remplace, est forcément livré au mouvement. Mettre en doute ces vérités, ce serait nier celle de l'histoire, et nous ne savons point nous rendre coupables d'une faute pareille.

C'est en face de ce mouvement que se trouve placé aujourd'hui le Royaume Lombard-Vénitien. Toute révolution agit dans les directions intérieures et politiques. La première de ces directions tombe à la charge de l'Etat, dans lequel un changement complet de l'ordre des choses ci-devant existant a eu lieu; l'autre échappe à l'action et à la raison gouvernementale; elle est soumise à des influences étrangères, et c'est à l'égard de celles-ci, que dans le cas présent nous nous sentons le besoin de nous expliquer sans réserve envers le Cabinet Britannique.

Ce que veut l'Empereur notre auguste maître, et ce qu'il ne veut pas et ne peut pas vouloir, n'est un secret pour personne. L'Empereur entend conserver l'intégrité de son empire, et gouverner ses peuples dans les limites de son droit et de ses devoirs. Plus il se reconnaît celui de veiller à la paix politique générale, moins il entend se mêler des affaires intérieures d'autres Etats Souverains et indépendans, et moins il pourrait reconnaître à ces Etats le droit de se mêler des affaires intérieures de son empire. L'Empereur comprend la guerre politique ouverte; il ne comprend pas celle sourde; il comprend l'influence naturelle que la situation dans laquelle se trouvent placés les Etats Italiens doit inévitablement exercer sur ses propres domaines; ce qu'il n'entend point admettre c'est de la propagande gouvernementale, de quelque côté qu'elle puisse venir.

l'essence de la politique Autrichienne. Cette tradition y semble cependant perdue. Dans quelle circonstance, dans le cours des dernières années, l'Autriche a-t-elle, en effet, trouvé placée la puissance Anglaise sur une ligne, je ne dis pas conservatrice pour notre puissance, mais simplement favorable à la cause de la paix intérieure de notre empire?

Par la circulaire du 2 Août, 1847, notre Cour a manifesté son attitude politique en face des graves événements qui à cette époque déjà s'étaient fait jour dans quelques Etats de la Péninsule Italienne. Le Gouvernement Britannique ne nous a pas moins adressé des appels et des demandes répétées sur la fixité de notre attitude déjà clairement établie. Ces interpellations, sur quel point de départ ont-elles put être fondées? Il n'y a de possible que celui du doute; mais dans quelle direction s'est trouvé placé ce sentiment? Nous nous plaisons à récuser jusqu'à l'idée blessante d'un manque de confiance dans les intentions de Sa Majesté Impériale exprimées dans notre circulaire susmentionnée; nous ne regardons dès-lors comme admissible que le manque de confiance dans nos facultés de soutenir la situation. Mais comment, dès-lors, pourrions-nous nous expliquer, Monsieur l'Ambassadeur, des encouragements donnés à la méfiance des Gouvernements Italiens par des organes officiels du Gouvernement Britannique? Comment nous expliquer, en particulier, la récente réunion d'une escadre dans l'Adriatique, et le manque de toute explication de la part du Gouvernement Britannique, propre à démentir l'opinion généralement répandue, que l'objet de l'apparition de l'escadre susmentionnée serait celui de surveiller les mouvements de l'Autriche?

Régler la position de notre puissance dans la situation actuelle de l'Italie, est une fort sérieuse tâche. Ce n'est pas de la part d'une Puissance amie qu'elle devrait être aggravée.

Veillez, &c.

M. le Comte Dietrichstein.

METTERNICH.

(Inclosure 2.)—Prince Metternich to Count Dietrichstein.

M. LE COMTE.

Vienne, le 4 Mars, 1848.

CE n'est pas à vous que je pourrais éprouver le besoin de faire sentir la gravité de la situation du moment, ou de vous apprendre l'impression sous laquelle le Cabinet Impérial se trouve placé à l'égard de cette situation. Vous n'avez pour vous assurer de nos sentiments à ce sujet qu'à vous placer en face des faits et des pensées d'ordre, de repos public et de paix politique, sur lesquelles repose notre marche morale et matérielle.

Lord Ponsonby est venu me trouver à la suite des faits monstrueux qui viennent de compléter les 3 journées de Février, pour me demander compte de ma manière de voir sur l'événement. Voici, en peu de mots, la substance de ma réponse à Monsieur l'Ambassadeur :

descence de la révolution en France place dans ce moment le Roi Charles Albert, tourner aujourd'hui en une action de sa part.

Veillez porter à la connaissance de Lord Palmerston la présente dépêche, et lui en remettre une copie. Recevez, &c.

BLOOMFIELD.

No. 124.—Count St. Marsan to Count Revel.—Communicated to Viscount Palmerston by Count Revel, March 11.)

M. LE COMTE,

Turin, le 2 Mars, 1848.

Je crois à propos de vous expédier un courrier de Cabinet, afin de vous fournir ainsi le moyen de m'informer immédiatement des communications qui pourront vous être faites par le Cabinet Britannique en présence des graves conjonctures qu'a fait naître la nouvelle révolution qui vient d'éclater à Paris, et en face des événements politiques qui en seront l'inévitable conséquence.

Je vous invite, M. le Comte, à vouloir bien, aussitôt que vous aurez reçu cette dépêche, vous rendre auprès de Lord Palmerston, afin de l'entretenir de la gravité de notre situation actuelle.

Ce Ministre a trop de pénétration et une connaissance trop juste de la situation générale actuelle, pour que vous ayez besoin d'entrer dans beaucoup de développement afin de lui présenter la nôtre sous le véritable aspect que va lui donner la complication qui vient de surgir. Mais en réclamant l'intérêt et les conseils du Gouvernement Britannique dans cette circonstance, vous voudrez bien exprimer dans les termes les mieux sentis et les plus sincères, l'entière confiance que le Roi notre Souverain continue à placer dans le soutien et l'appui qu'il a constamment trouvés auprès de l'Angleterre.

La nouvelle de la Révolution Parisienne est arrivée ici le jour même de la grande fête nationale offerte au Roi pour lui témoigner la vive gratitude qu'ont excitée les bienfaits dont il a comblé le pays. Les démonstrations de profonde reconnaissance et de respectueuse affection dont Sa Majesté a été l'objet, nous font espérer que nous pourrions traverser heureusement les événements que prépare la complication actuelle ; toutefois l'orage gronde trop près de nous pour que nous n'ayons pas le devoir d'aviser à des éventualités dont il n'est pas donné à l'homme de prévoir toute l'étendue. Le Roi a en conséquence résolu de compléter ses armements, et il vient de donner dans ce but des dispositions qui seront exécutées immédiatement.

Au moyen de ces mesures, et fort de l'affection et du dévouement de ses peuples, le Roi, je le répète, a la confiance que notre pays sera préservé de fâcheux événements ; mais cette confiance, Sa Majesté la fonde surtout, et je vous charge expressément de la déclarer à Lord Palmerston, sur la vieille et sincère amitié de l'Angleterre, qui ne lui a jamais fait défaut, et sur laquelle le passé est pour elle un gage certain qu'elle peut compter dans les conjonctures actuelles.

M. le Comte Revel.

No. 129.—Viscount Palmerston to the Hon. R. Abercromby.
(Extract.) Foreign Office, March 13, 1848.

THE great object of Her Majesty's Government is the maintenance of peace in Europe, and they are deeply sensible of the dangers with which that peace is threatened in many different ways, by the possible consequences of recent events in France.

Her Majesty's Government have felt great pleasure in learning that the Sardinian Government have determined to pursue that which is the best and wisest course in the present state of things; that they have resolved to give no cause of offence either to France or to Austria; to abstain from any interference in the internal affairs of either, and to maintain a strict and rigid neutrality.

Her Majesty's Government have full confidence in the present pacific intentions of the Provisional Government of France, and are convinced that it is the sincere desire of that Government to abstain from any invasion of neighbouring States.

No. 130.—Viscount Palmerston to Viscount Ponsonby.

MY LORD,

Foreign Office, March 13, 1848.

I HEREWITH transmit to your Excellency, for your information, copies of despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Turin, and from Her Majesty's Consul-General at Milan, on the affairs of North Italy. I likewise transmit to your Excellency the copy of an instruction which I have addressed to Mr. Abercromby on the same subject.

I have to instruct your Excellency urgently and earnestly to entreat Prince Metternich to relax the severity of the system now established in Austrian Italy, and to make to the people such organic concessions as may rally round the Government the good will and support of all reasonable men, and of all the owners of property and lovers of order, so as to place in a small minority those men whose views may point to revolution and disorder. No. 132.—Lord Napier to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. March 14.)

MY LORD,

Naples, February 24, 1848.

His Majesty the King took his oath this morning to observe the Constitution.

The solemnity was performed in the church of San Francesco di Paola, in front of the Palace, which is peculiarly adapted by its position and imposing size for such high ceremonies and public acts.

After mass had been said, the oath was administered to His Sicilian Majesty, who pronounced it in a voice audible to the vast assemblage which filled the sacred building.

It was then successively sworn by His Royal Highness the Count of Aquila, in the name of the Royal Family; by the President of the Council, on the part of the Ministers of State; by Prince Bisiquano, for the officers of the Court; and by the generals of the army and navy.

His Majesty the King afterwards passed the troops in review in the great square, and delivered the oath to the colonels of the respective regiments, who repeated it to the ranks, by whom it was responded to aloud.

A colonel administered the constitutional oath to the Swiss, before the residence of Her Majesty's Legation. He made a long speech on horseback to his countrymen, explanatory of their new functions and delicate position, as stipendiaries of the Neapolitan people.

(Extract.) Florence, March 10, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith the accompanying despatch from Mr. Petre, at Rome, regarding an address of the Senate and Council to the Pope, urging him to grant a Constitution in harmony with the exigencies of the age, to which address the Sovereign of the Roman State has returned a favourable reply.

Since then intelligence has reached Florence of the appointment of Ministers entirely secular.

The names mentioned in a Roman paper, the "Italico," are Signori Recchi, Aldobrandini, Pasolini, Minghetti, Simonetti. Count Mamiani and Pietro Ferretti are to be named Presidents, it is said, of the 2 provinces where they are now Legates.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

GEORGE B. HAMILTON.

(Inclosure.)—Mr. Petre to Sir George Hamilton.

SIR,

Rome, March 7, 1848.

ROME is quiet. The reports and confirmation of the reports of the events so rapidly succeeding each other in Paris, naturally produced considerable agitation at Rome. On Sunday, the 5th, various processions with tricoloured flags were formed, and paraded the streets in celebration of the events, but they passed off orderly and in good humour. The great majority of the population is well-disposed; but the agitators, few indeed in number, are unceasing in their efforts to excite disorder.

The Senate and Council of the city of Rome yesterday presented an address to His Holiness, drawn up in the most respectful and legal terms, praying His Holiness to complete those reforms of which he first gave the example to the Princes of Italy, and that his Government be henceforth established on a Representative system suitable to the wants and civilization of the present time, and declaring that this their wish is not contrary to the obedience which they have sworn to the Apostolic faith, which they maintain and love; that through him they look to the formation of an Italian League to preserve and defend internal security and the national dignity.

His Holiness replied that all knew that he was indefatigably employed in preparing that form of Government which they asked for and which the people required, but that every one must know the difficulty to be encountered by him who united in his own person two exalted dignities; that what in a secular Government could be effected in one night, could not, in the Papal Government, be effected without mature consideration, difficult as it was to trace out the line which must distinguish the one power from the other; nevertheless he hoped to be able in a few days to announce the new form of Government, which would give general content, but more especially to the Senate, who better understood the circumstances and position of the country.

MY LORD, Florence, March 13, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Lordship the accompanying "Florence Gazette," of the 11th instant, containing a motuproprio issued by the Tuscan Government, by which it is intended to refer all the police regulations of the Grand Duchy to the jurisdiction of the Minister of the Interior, as well as to divide Tuscany into 7 departments, to be presided over by as many prefects.

These departments are again to be subdivided into districts ("circondarij"), over which will be established sub-prefects.

In every department there is to be a council to provide for the interests of the department, and in most of the districts there will be a Court or Tribunal of First Instance.

A Court of Appeal in Florence will have under its jurisdiction the Departments of Florence, Siena, Arezzo, Pistoja, and Grosseto, and a similar Court of Appeal in Lucca will embrace the Departments of Lucca, Pisa, and the Governments of Leghorn and Portoferraio.

Delegates, with a police authority, will reside in these different towns, and another territorial division, composed of parishes ("comunità"), will be presided over by pretors.

Each "comunità" is to retain as before its Gonfaloniere, and the city of Leghorn with its "comunità," as well as the Island or Elba, will continue to form a separate civil and military Government.

These new dispositions are to take effect on the 20th of the present month.

VI. The island of Elba, also, with its communes, shall form a civil and military Government.

VII. At Florence the General Board of Registry shall alone be retained.

VIII. The departments shall be divided, for governing and judicial purposes, into circles and pretorships, and for administrative and electoral purposes, into districts and communes.

XIII. The territories to be assigned to each department, for administrative purposes, shall be divided into districts and communes in the manner determined in the Electoral Law, but for governing and judicial purposes, they shall be divided into circles and pretorships in the manner determined in the following table :

XIV. In every department there shall reside a prefect. In every circle which is not the residence of a Prefecture, there shall be a sub-prefect.

XV. Every circle shall form the jurisdiction of a collegial tribunal of first instance, except the circle of Pistoja, which shall have 2 collegial tribunals of first instance, one situate at Pistoja, and the other, which shall be established under the proclamation of this day's date, situate at Pescia. A collegial tribunal of the first instance shall be situate also in the 2 Governments of Leghorn and Portoferraio. In every pretorship there shall be a pretor, and in every district a minister of the census. Every commune shall have its magistrato (gonfaloniere.)

XIX. The delegates of Government of Lucca, of Arezzo, and of Pistoja, shall exercise their functions in the 2 pretorships established in those cities. All the other delegates of Government shall exercise their functions within the limits of the pretorship in which they reside.

XX. The prefectures shall be divided into 2 classes, the delegations of Government into 3 classes, the pretorships into 5 classes, and the offices of the census into 3 classes.

XXI. The prefectures of Florence, Lucca, Pisa, and Siena, shall belong to the 1st class of prefectures ; and those of Arezzo, Pistoja, and Grosseto, shall belong to the 2nd class of prefectures.

NAPIER.

No. 145.—Lord Napier to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. March 24.)

MY LORD,

Naples, March 11, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to submit to your Lordship herewith, copy and translation of the provisional electoral law issued by the Neapolitan Government, for the regulation of the approaching elections.

The basis of this law may be shortly stated as follows :

A deputy will be elected for every 40,000 souls.

The election will take place at the capital town of every district.

Should there be an excess over and above the number of 40,000, of more than 20,000, that excess shall be held sufficient to elect an additional deputy.

By the last census the gross population of the kingdom of Naples is rated at 6,517,628.

There will be 164 deputies.

The right of voting is conceded.

To those who possess a clear income rated to the land-tax of 24 ducats per annum (4*l.*), derived from freehold property, or land held under perpetual or ordinary lease.

To those deriving the same amount of income, from a vested interest in the public funds, held for 2 years past, and rendered inalienable for 5 prospective years, the legal term of the duration of Parliament.

To husbands in enjoyment of the same income by marriage settlement, and to fathers who are trustees of that value for their children, being under age.

The qualification necessary to become a deputy is fixed at an income of 240 ducats (40*l.*), enjoyed or held on the same conditions.

This qualification is reduced to half in favour of members of the learned bodies.

In the poorer districts of the country, some modifications of the Statute will be admitted.

Property situated in various parts of the kingdom, but amounting to the sum required, will entitle the possessor to vote in any one district containing a portion of the said property, which he may select; but whatever amount of property he may possess in different districts, he may never enjoy but one vote in a district chosen at his discretion; the right of voting in two or more districts being absolutely prohibited.

The electoral lists of voters, and persons qualified to sit, are to be framed by a board composed of the Syndic and 4 councillors in every commune.

The electors of the different communes will, on the appointed day, assemble at the chief town of their respective districts, where under the control of the Syndic and 4 councillors of the said chief town, the election of the deputies will take place.

Every elector will have a number of votes equal to the number of deputies eligible for the district.

The voting will proceed by ballot.

The election may not last more than 3 days.

The Parliament is convoked for the 1st of May.

The members of the House of Peers will be named by the King during the period of the election of deputies. I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

NAPIER.

(Inclosure.)—Provisional Electoral Law of Naples.

WE FERNANDO II, &c.

HAVING taken into consideration the Article LXII of the Constitution, by which it is decreed that for the first convocation of the legislative Chambers there shall be published a provisional electoral law, which shall not become definitive until it has been examined and discussed by the Chambers themselves at the commencement of their first session;

Having taken into consideration the Articles LXIII and LIV of the said Constitution, by which it is decreed that the number of the Deputies shall always correspond with the amount of the population, according to the latest census; and that every quantum of 40,000 souls is to return 1 Deputy; and that in case of there being a deficiency or excess of population within the limits of the electoral colleges, the necessary proceedings are to be established by law;

Having taken into consideration Articles LVI, No. 1, and LVII, No. 1, of the said Constitution, by which all possessed of a taxable income derived from landed property, the amount of which shall subsequently be determined by the said electoral law, are declared electors or eligible ;

Considering that it is necessary to fix, for a given period on the one hand, the computation of the population who are to send Deputies to the Chamber ; and on the other, the central places where the elections are to take place ;

Considering that the establishment of places of election in the provincial chief towns alone would be inconvenient to those whose habitations are far distant from them, and that the capital towns of the districts offer greater facilities for assembling the electors ;

Considering that in each district, when 1 Deputy has been elected for each quantum of 40,000 souls, if there shall be found remaining an excess of population above 20,000, that number of persons must be considered qualified to return another Deputy ;

Considering that in determining the amount of taxable income derived from landed property requisite to constitute an elector, or one eligible as a candidate, it is just to keep in view the manner in which the landed property is distributed, and the nature of the direct contributions which actually exist in the kingdom ;

Considering that in the valuation of this income it is expedient to give equivalents to it, so that the number of those eligible may not be too confined, and likewise to afford the electors a sufficient latitude, so as to be able to include amongst their representatives those who, from their integrity or intelligence, peculiarly merit their confidence according to the scope and spirit of the Constitution ;

On the proposition of our Minister Secretary of State of the Interior, having consulted our Council of Ministers Secretaries of State, have resolved to sanction, and do sanction the following law :

General Provisions.

ART. I. The elections shall be held in the chief towns of the districts, and in each of them shall be elected a number of Deputies, which, according to the last census of the amount of the population, and according to the rule hereinbefore established concerning excess or deficiency in the same, remains fixed as follows :

[Here follows the names of the districts into which the provinces are divided, with the population of each, and the number of Deputies—

Total of the population	6,517,628
Total of the Deputies	164]

II. The amount of income derived from landed property necessary for being comprised in the lists for the elections, of which mention will subsequently be made when treating of the election of Deputies, is fixed at 24 ducats a-year for the electors, and at 240 ducats for persons eligible.

Among incomes derived from landed property are comprised those from properties given on perpetual lease, both by the lessee and the holder of the lease, and those which are derived usu fructi nomine from a farm, the freehold of which belongs to another.

III. The following shall be considered as equivalents for the income derived from landed property treated of in the preceding Article:—An income of equal value inscribed for 2 years in the great book of the public debt, and for that purpose therein deposited on trust security during the entire period of 5 years, the duration of the session of Parliament. Interest to that amount received by a citizen from a capital of which he has been in possession for 2 years, and which is guaranteed by a valid mortgage. Those who have inherited their funded property or their capital at interest, are exempted from the obligation of having been 2 years in possession.

IV. The income derived from the dower of the wife shall, if they live together, qualify the husband to be included in the list of voters or eligible persons, whether it be his sole possession or used to make up the amount required. The same applies to the income derived from the property of children, of which the father has the legal administration during their minority, as also to any amount of money which a widow, not re-married, may make over either to one of her sons, or to the husband of her only daughter.

V. The half of the several incomes treated of in the 3 preceding Articles shall entitle to be comprised in the list of eligible persons those who, having taken a degree in the Royal University, shall have exercised the corresponding profession for the space of 5 years, as well as the proprietors of a manufactory in operation, situated in a building for which a rent of 200 ducats per annum is paid, according to a legal contract.

VI. When in any district there shall not be a sufficient number of fortunes of the nature required to form the class of persons eligible to sit in Parliament, supplementary lists shall be drawn up, in which shall be comprised those who have the largest fortunes of the neighbourhood, even if they are not of the amount strictly required by the present law.

VII. Provided the computation of the census of incomes, whether derived from money in the funds or from landed property, be confined to the territory of the kingdom, it shall not prevent any citizen from being comprised in the lists of electors or eligible persons, if he draws his qualification from a different place from that which he really inhabits.

But in this case it is forbidden for any one to exercise the elective franchise in 2 different colleges. A double vote is most strictly prohibited.

VIII. Those who inhabit one district and derive their qualifications from property situated in others, must declare to the competent authorities to which college they intend to belong, whether as elector or eligible, so that they may be included in the list of that district.

The definitive electoral law shall decide how long before the convocation of the electoral colleges such declaration shall be valid.

IX. It is declared that the titular professors of the Royal Military College, as well as the professors of the College of Marine Cadets, enjoy the same electoral privileges as do the professors of the Royal University, according to Articles LVI and LVII of the Constitution.

Of the Formation of the Electoral Lists.

X. In each commune there shall be an electoral Giunta, composed of the syndic and of 4 decurions, appointed by the Decurionate, by which the lists of electors and eligible persons shall be drawn up.

XI. On the day subsequent to the publication of the present law the syndic shall assemble the Decurionate for the purpose of appointing the 4 decurions who are to form part of the electoral Giunta ; and on the same day the Giunta shall proceed to draw up the list, which must imperatively be finished within the space of 8 days.

In the case of the eletti of the city of Naples, who represent the syndic in the quarters of the city respectively under their superintendence, the Decurionate shall appoint 4 distinguished citizens for each quarter, who with the eletto shall represent the electoral Giunta treated of in the present law.

XII. The electoral Giunta shall consult the registers of the land-tax, in order to be able to include in the lists the names of those who possess the amount of income derived from landed property required by the present law ; and on the same day on which they commence drawing up the electoral lists, they shall affix a notice on the door of the town-hall, calling on the inhabitants to produce documents qualifying them to be included in the number of voters, or of persons eligible as candidates.

These documents shall be exempt from all stamp-duties.

XIII. With respect to the qualification required of voters or candidates, the Giunta will keep in mind, in the formation of the lists, the rules laid down on this subject both in this law and in Articles LVI and LVII of the Constitution.

XIV. At the expiration of the 8 days of which mention is made in Article XI, the lists, signed by all the members of the Giunta, shall be affixed on the door of the town-hall, so that the public may have full liberty to inspect them.

XV. During the 5 days following, it shall be lawful for any citizen to protest before the Giunta, either against his not having been himself included in the list of voters, or against the admission of any one not possessing the qualification required by law.

During the same period of 5 days, the Giunta must decide upon the reclamations brought before them, and when substantiated, must revise the lists accordingly.

XVI. At the expiration of those 5 days, the lists are to be declared closed, and are to be drawn up in duplicate, whereof one copy is to remain in the chancery of the municipality, and the other to be sent to the electoral Giunta of the chief town of the district where the electoral college is to assemble.

XVII. Those who may consider that their reclamations have been unjustly rejected in their own commune, may, during 3 days after the closing of the lists, appeal to the electoral Giunta of the chief town of the district, which, together with 2 other decurions called in for that purpose, shall, during that period of 3 days decide upon such claims, and if they be deemed well-founded shall amend the lists accordingly.

Should the reclamations be rejected by the Giunta of the chief town, it shall be lawful to refer finally to the Civil Court of the province, from whose decision there shall be no appeal.

XVIII. The electoral Giunta of each commune represents the authority before which the declarations are to be laid which we treated of in Article VIII of this law.

XIX. The definitive electoral law shall establish how, after the lists have been declared permanent, those variations shall be made which time and circumstances may render indispensable.

Of the Electoral Colleges.

XX. The aggregate number of electors comprised in the lists of the various communes of a district shall compose the electoral college.

XXI. Each electoral college shall meet in the capital of the district on the day fixed by the decree of convocation, and can only take cognizance of the election of the deputies: any other act shall be declared void.

XXII. On the same day, the syndic of the district shall assemble the electoral college in the town-hall, or in some other appropriate house, that they may proceed to the election entrusted to them.

The lists of all the electors and eligible persons of the districts shall be exposed in the assembly-room for public inspection.

XXIII. The syndic of the capital of the district shall provisionally assume the functions of president of the college; the 4 decurions which compose with him the electoral commission of that capital of the district shall act as secretaries.

XXIV. The president's chair shall be placed on a raised platform at the head of the assembly-room, and tables with writing materials shall be placed before him, and on a lower platform for the 4 secretaries.

A copy of the Constitution, one of the Electoral Law, one of the list of all the electors and of the eligible persons of the district, and a ballot-box with two keys, one of which is to be kept by the president, and the other by the scrutators, of which mention will subsequently be made, shall be placed upon those tables.

The tables of the secretaries shall be placed in such a manner that each of the electors may have access to them, and go round freely.

XXV. No person shall be allowed to appear armed in the place where the electoral college sits; a detachment of national guards only shall be stationed near the assembly-room, under the orders of the president of the college.

XXVI. First of all, the provisional president of the college shall call over the names of the electors present, who shall immediately proceed to the election of the real president.

XXVII. Each elector approaching the tables of the secretaries shall write or shall cause to be written by one of the secretaries themselves, upon an appropriate ticket, the name of that elector to whom he intends giving his vote for the presidency. Having done which, folding up the ticket, he shall himself put it into the ballot-box. The tickets shall be placed, ready prepared, of the same form and dimension, upon the tables of the secretaries.

XXVIII. The voting being over, one of the secretaries, assisted by two scrutators chosen amongst the oldest of the electors, shall open the ballot-box, and unfolding one after another the tickets therein contained, shall first ascertain whether they correspond with the number of voters present, then shall read aloud the name of the candidate which is written on each ticket, and shall pass it to the president, after that the other secretaries have taken note of it in the proper registers.

That candidate who shall have acquired the plurality of votes shall be definitively proclaimed president of the college, and he, occupying the seat assigned to him, shall cause the election of the permanent secretaries to be immediately made, after the same manner.

XXIX. If the first time the ballot-box is sent round, there should be no plurality of votes in favour of any candidate, it shall be sent round again, until the necessary plurality shall be obtained.

In case of parity of votes, the oldest candidate shall be chosen; and in case of parity of age, the names shall be replaced in the ballot-box, and the first drawn out by lot shall be elected.

XXX. The election of President and Secretaries being over, that of the Deputies shall take place, according to the rules prescribed in the 3 preceding Articles.

XXXI. For the election of Deputies, each voter shall write upon his ticket the names of as many eligible persons as there are Deputies to be elected by the district.

A scrutiny having been made, assisted by the scrutators, the President shall proclaim, with a loud voice, the names of those who have obtained the majority of suffrages, and declare them duly elected to serve as deputies in Parliament. The tickets shall then be burned in the presence of the college, and the secretaries shall draw up a minute of the election which has taken place, in 3 copies, whereof 1 shall be consigned to the deputy elected, in lieu of a warrant of election, 1 shall be officially sent to the Minister Secretary of State of the Interior, and the other shall be deposited in the archives of the capital town of the district.

The minute shall be signed by the President and 4 secretaries.

The length of the proceedings of the college shall not exceed 3 days.

XXXII. We reserve to ourselves the right to make modifications in this our provisional electoral law, so as to suit it to the wants and especial condition of our dominions on the other side of the Faro, as soon as we shall have given effect to the dispositions of Article LXXXVII of the Constitution.

XXXIII. Our Minister Secretary of State of the Interior, and all our Ministers Secretaries of State, each in their respective offices, are charged with the execution of the present law.

We will and command that this our law, signed by us, ratified by our Minister Secretary of State of Grace and Justice, sealed with our great seal, and countersigned by our Minister Secretary of State, President of the Council of Ministers, and registered and deposited in the archives of the Presidency of Ministers, shall be published with the customary solemnities throughout all our royal dominions, by means of the corresponding authorities, who are to take particular note of it, and insure its fulfilment.

Our Minister Secretary of State, President of the Council of Ministers, is particularly charged with the superintendence of its publication.

No. 147.—The Hon. R. Abercromby to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received March 25.)

Turin, March 20, 1848.

IN the afternoon of yesterday numerous reports were in circulation here to the effect that a serious insurrection had broken out at Milan, that a Republic had been declared, and a Provisional Government established.

The town of Turin was in a state of great excitement, and the various supplements of the daily papers, all containing information of a highly-coloured nature, contributed to keep alive the public agitation.

I did not transmit by the messenger Ridgway any official report as to these rumours, the Sardinian Government not having received from their agents any specified details of the extent to which the disturbances at Milan had arrived.

Sufficient was, however, known to induce the Council of Ministers to assemble, and to decide upon the immediate formation of a corps of observation on the Lombardy frontier, and upon the organization of 3 battalions of Volunteers to be stationed at Chivasso, Casale, and Novi.

The formation of the Sardinian troops in position on the frontier is a measure that could, under no circumstances, be any longer delayed, and it is a decision which the interests of the army and of general discipline required. It has, moreover, this advantage, that it will tend materially to calm the public ardour, and enable the Government, with greater facility, to avoid the risks of any collision on the frontier arising out of popular violence.

The disposition of the Sardinian troops will be as follows:—The first line will be formed upon Novara, Mortara, Voghera; the second upon Alexandria, Casale, and Vercelli. A division will be kept in reserve at Turin, and another at Genoa.

Such were the measures decided upon yesterday in Council; and I am informed that the staff officers will be despatched to-morrow to the various points mentioned, to prepare for the reception of the troops.

The Marquis Pareto, whom I have just left, informs me that he has this morning received an official despatch from the Sardinian Consul-General at Milan, the bearer of which had to be let down from the walls of the town by a cord, stating that there had been severe fighting both yesterday and the day before between the Austrian soldiers and the Milanese; that the struggle was still doubtful, but that at 8 P.M. yesterday evening, the hour at which the despatch was sent off, the Austrians still retained possession of the gates of the town.

No mention, however, is made of the establishment of a Provisional Government.

The position of affairs at Milan is, however, very critical, and it remains to be seen whether the example to revolt, now offered by the Milanese, will find an echo amongst the people of the country.

As regards this country, the question is becoming of most serious import.

The policy of this Government in these anxious moments appears to me to point out that, under all circumstances, whether the Austrian force should be sufficient to suppress the present revolt, whether that should not be the case, and that a republic should be declared, or whether a more direct appeal should be made by the Lombards to this country and to its Sovereign, it would be a most fatal mistake to allow itself to be anywise compromised; and that all their endeavours ought to be directed towards the maintenance of the strictest neutrality.

Nobody under the present aspect of politics can reasonably take umbrage at this country for protecting her frontiers from whatever side an attack may be possible, and the armaments she has made are only those which a wise and provident Government are called upon to make by the exigencies of the moment; but to employ them for acts of hostile aggression would be to endanger not only the interests of the House of Savoy, but those of the whole country, and of Italy in general.

Such being my view of the present crisis in the politics of this country, I shall conform my language to it on all occasions when talking with the members of the Sardinian Government, and it will be a great satisfaction to me to learn from your Lordship that I have taken ground of which you approve.

No. 148.—Sir G. Hamilton to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Mar. 25.)

MY LORD,

Florence, March 17, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit the accompanying despatch from Mr. Petre at Rome, containing an address from the new Council of Ministers to the Pope on taking office.

Great sensation has been created at Rome by an attempt on the part of the mob to drive the Jesuits out of the country in the same manner as they have already been expelled from the States of Piedmont and Naples.

In consequence of this attempt, the Pope issued a proclamation denouncing this project as a scandal, and declaring at the same time his intention to resist the violence by force if necessary.

Since then the faction anxious for the expulsion of the Jesuits has directed a petition to the Senate, praying that it may be pointed out to the Pope that there is no desire to use violent means for obtaining the object in view, but that, notwithstanding, a great desire is manifested that the Jesuits should leave Rome with as little delay as possible, but it appears they will not take their departure without the inducement of a popular demonstration.

Rome, March 12, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, for the information of Viscount Palmerston, the following translation of an address presented to His Holiness by the Council of Ministers on their entering into office, immediately after their first meeting yesterday morning, and as reported in the "Gazetta di Roma" of the 11th instant.

Address to the Pope.

MOST HOLY FATHER!

(Translation.)

CALLED by your Holiness to form part of your Government, we perceive the immense difficulties which are before us from the extraordinarily serious circumstances of the times, and our own insufficiency. But in moments so important every citizen must postpone his private interests to his duty towards his Sovereign and towards his country.

We are expecting the promulgation of the fundamental law promised by your Holiness, with firm confidence. And the generosity of the concessions hitherto made assures us that it will fully answer to the wants of the present time and to actual circumstances. It will be our duty and our care to hasten its accomplishment liberally and loyally.

When this fundamental law shall be promulgated, the Ministry will take upon itself, each answerable one for the other (solidarietà), the responsibility of its acts. But in the meantime it is bound to make known to your Holiness what are the principal wants chiefly to be provided for without delay.

It will be necessary, in the first place, that all the secondary authorities be made acquainted with the principles which animate the Ministry; so that the will of the Government be faithfully and quickly executed throughout all the branches of the administration, and that from the extremity to the centre all the forces tend to one end.

It will be likewise necessary to enter immediately on the armament conformably to the desires expressed by the Consulta di Stato, and to put the country into the best possible state of defence; increasing the number of paid troops, and sending them to defensible points (punti strategici); putting on active service (mobilizzando) part of the civic guard, and organizing the reserve.

But a serious difficulty to this is in the finances; as our State, partly by special, partly by general circumstances pressing on all Europe, is in great penury (in grandissime strettezze.) The Ministry will take into consideration the means of supplying what is wanted (sopperuvi), and trusts that the municipalities (communi), who offered to your Holiness their properties and lives, will, as well as the rich corporations (ecclesiastical), to whom must be of consequence the safety of the country, not spare sacrifices for so noble a cause.

We trust, in fine, that the ties of friendship which already exist between the Papal Government and the other constitutional Governments of Italy will be ever more tightened for the benefit of our common country.

The Ministry, frankly going forward on the road traced out, relies on calming the agitation now reigning in the minds of men, and on maintaining the order necessary to lay the foundation of the new institutions, and to secure the national independence. With such an object in view, it hopes to acquire the support of all wise and generous men, of all those who truly love this Italy, which blessed by you rises to new life.

Foreign Office, March 27, 1848.

You will have seen by my despatch of the 13th instant, forwarded by Count Revel's courier, and which you must have received soon after the date of your despatch of the 20th instant, that in the advice which in that despatch you state it to be your intention to give to the Sardinian Government, you were correctly anticipating the instructions which were on their road to you. I have, therefore, now only to instruct you to hold the same language, and to give the same advice to the Sardinian Government, and to impress upon the minds of the Ministers of the King of Sardinia the great risks and dangers of many kinds which they would bring upon their country by involving it in unnecessary and aggressive hostilities with Austria.

No. 152.—The Hon. R. Abercromby to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received March 27.)

MY LORD,

Turin, March 21, 1848.

No post has reached Turin from Milan for 2 days. We are, therefore, still without any very correct or detailed information from thence.

Private letters are said to have been received late last night from the frontier, giving an account that the cannonade from the citadel of Milan upon the town continued, that there was fighting in the streets between the military and the populace; that the people seemed rather to be losing ground from want of ammunition and sufficient arms; and that the Austrians still held possession of the gates of the town.

It is said, but of the correctness of this assertion I have no means of judging, that a body of peasants from the country had come to the assistance of the inhabitants of Milan, but that the Austrian troops had succeeded in preventing their entry into the town.

There is also a report of some Swiss free corps having appeared at Como and at other places at the foot of the mountains, with the intention of aiding the Milanese.

These various reports, which circulate here with the greatest rapidity, keep up the agitation in the minds of the people of this country, and this morning an assembly, not very numerous, however, met in front of the Ministry of the Interior, vociferating for arms. The civic guard was called to disperse them, which they did without difficulty.

The Count Arese, a Milanese, arrived here the night before last to demand help from Piedmont for the insurgents of Lombardy; he saw the Ministers yesterday morning, and returned in the evening to Milan, much disappointed at the unsuccessful issue of his mission. I am told positively that he did not see His Sardinian Majesty.

(Received March 27.)

MY LORD,

Turin, March 22, 1848.

WE are still without any direct news from Milan.

Reports from the frontier are, however, constantly arriving, but as no communication appears as yet to have been established with the interior of the town of Milan, these reports are all more or less subject to criticism.

Amongst those which have arrived this morning it is asserted that the Austrians in the citadel had demanded to capitulate; the result, however, is not known, but it is supposed that a suspension of hostilities had taken place, from the firing having ceased, and that the tocsin was no longer heard ringing from the bells of Milan.

The accounts of an insurrection at Piacenza, Parma, Reggio, and Modena, seem to be confirmed, and these towns are said to be in the hands of the inhabitants.

About 300 Genoese volunteers have succeeded in leaving Genoa with arms in their hands, and, from an account I have received from an eye-witness, many of them had arrived at Mortara and at Gravelone, on their way to the frontier.

One regiment of guards left Turin this morning for the army; and the other follows to-morrow.

To-day the town of Turin is quiet. I have, &c.
Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B. RA. ABERCROMBY.

*No. 154.—The Hon. R. Abercromby to Viscount Palmerston.
 (Received March 28.)*

Turin, March 23, 1848.

THE Government of His Sardinian Majesty have received this morning a despatch from the Sardinian Consul at Milan, dated last night, by which it appears that the Austrian troops still continue to hold the citadel and most of the gates of the town. No mention, however, is made of any negotiation for an armistice.

The Milanese do not seem to be in want of ammunition or of provisions; and they have got possession of the Porta Tosa, which opens a communication with the exterior of the town.

The combat continued all yesterday, and the impression is that the inhabitants were rather gaining than otherwise upon the troops.

A slight collision between Austrians and Piedmontese, and an infraction of the Sardinian territory, have occurred at the bridge on the Gravelone.

The whole length of this bridge belongs to Sardinia, and it would appear that some Piedmontese unarmed volunteers went upon it, but not to its limits at the Austrian end. A post of Austrian Custom-house officers perceiving them fired, and came upon the bridge, when 2 Austrians were made prisoners by the Piedmontese. The Intendent of the Province of Mortara arrived last night at Turin, bringing this information and the procès-verbal of what had occurred.

There is great excitement throughout the province of the Lomellina, and the Genoese volunteers which are constantly arriving upon the frontier make the position of affairs extremely critical.

RA. ABERCROMBY.

No. 155.—The Hon. R. Abercromby to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received March 27.)

MY LORD,

Turin, March 23, 1848, at midnight.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith, to your Lordship, copy of a note I have just received (11 o'clock P.M.) from the Marquis Pareto, conveying to me the result of the deliberations of the Council of Ministers held this afternoon, upon the question of the policy to be followed by Sardinia in consequence of the revolt that has taken place at Milan against the Austrian authorities.

I likewise add a printed copy in Italian of the supplement of the Piedmontese Gazette, containing an order of the day published this evening by the Minister of War to the army; a notice for the immediate calling out of the remaining contingents of the active army; and an order for the reserve of the army to hold themselves in readiness to march at the first moment that they may be required to do so.

These various documents speak sufficiently clearly as to the intentions of the Sardinian Government; but before dispatching the estafette who is the bearer, as far as Paris, of this despatch, I called upon Count Balbo to ask him whether the Government had decided to cross the frontier.

From him I learnt that he and his colleagues, judging from the various official reports made to them by the Director of the Police of the imminent danger that existed of a Republican Revolution breaking out in this country, should the Government delay any longer to assist the Lombards, and seeing in their opinion, the impossibility of restraining further the great and general excitement that exists throughout the States of His Sardinian Majesty upon this subject they had complied with the demands made upon them to-day by deputies from Milan for military assistance; and that orders had been issued to General Passalacqua to proceed immediately to Novara, to take with him such regiments as could be spared from that garrison, and to proceed direct to occupy Milan, which has, according to the accounts received by the Sardinian Government, been evacuated by the Austrian troops.

This advanced guard will be accompanied by one of the deputies from Milan, and will be followed by the whole of the Sardinian disposable force, as quickly as they can be marched across the frontier.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Savoy will leave for the army to-morrow or next day, and His Sardinian Majesty will follow at the beginning of the week.

When all the contingents shall have joined their respective corps, the Sardinian army will be able to place from 70,000 to 80,000 men in the field; with the reserve the total number may reach 120,000 to 130,000 men of all arms.

I reserve myself for another opportunity to report to your Lordship the observations I have addressed both to Count Balbo and to the Marquis Pareto, on the consequences of a determination on the part of the Sardinian Government to cross the Austrian frontier; but I observed this evening to Count Balbo, that although I should fairly state to your Lordship the difficulties of the situation of the Sardinian Government, arising out of the universal and deep excitement that prevails in Piedmont upon the question of assisting the Lombards to expel the Austrians from Italy, still that I could not conceal from you that in my opinion a firm and decided course of action might have enabled the Government to avoid a measure of this serious nature.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

RA. ABERCROMBY.

Turin, le 23, Mars, 1848.

En présence des graves événements dont la Lombardie et principalement la ville de Milan sont le théâtre, le Soussigné, Ministre Secrétaire d'Etat pour les Affaires Etrangères, croit de son devoir de porter à la connaissance de Mr. Abercromby, &c., les considérations suivantes qui serviront à faire apprécier la conduite du Gouvernement de Sa Majesté le Roi de Sardaigne dans d'aussi graves circonstances.

Le premier devoir et le droit imprescriptible d'un Etat est sans doute d'assurer la conservation de sa propre existence; or, lorsque des événements de force majeure, des événements qui par leur gravité, par la bien juste sympathie qu'ils excitent dans les pays, surgissant dans les pays limitrophes, mettent cette existence en danger d'être compromise, le Gouvernement a sans doute le droit de prendre toutes les précautions nécessaires pour se garantir de ces catastrophes qui bouleversent l'Etat et le conduisent parfois à deux doigts de sa perte.

Mr. Abercromby connaît aussi bien que le Soussigné les graves événements qui viennent d'avoir lieu dans la Lombardie: Milan en pleine révolution et bientôt au pouvoir des habitants qui, par leur courage et leur fermeté, ont su résister aux troupes disciplinées de Sa Majesté Impériale, l'insurrection dans les campagnes et villes voisines, enfin tout le pays qui borde les frontières de Sa Majesté Sarde en feu.

Cette situation, comme peut bien le comprendre Mr. Abercromby, réagit sur l'état des esprits dans les provinces qui appartiennent à Sa Majesté le Roi de Sardaigne. La sympathie qu'excite la défense de Milan, l'esprit de nationalité qui malgré les délimitations artificielles des différents Etats, se fait néanmoins très-puissamment sentir, tout concourt à entretenir dans les provinces et dans la capitale une agitation telle qu'il est à craindre que d'un moment à l'autre il n'en puisse résulter une de ces révolutions qui mettrait le Trône en grave péril, car on ne peut se dissimuler qu'après les événements de France, le danger de la proclamation d'une République en Lombardie ne puisse être prochain ; en effet, d'après des renseignements positifs, il paraît qu'un certain nombre de Suisses a grandement contribué par son intervention à la réussite du soulèvement de Milan.

Si l'on ajoute à cela les mouvements de Parme et de Modène ainsi que ceux du Duché de Plaisance sur lequel on ne peut refuser à Sa Majesté le Roi de Sardaigne le droit de veiller comme sur un territoire qui doit lui revenir par droit de réversibilité ; si l'on ajoute qu'une grande et sérieuse exaspération a été excitée en Piémont et dans la Ligurie par la conclusion d'un Traité entre Sa Majesté Impériale et les Ducs de Parme et de Plaisance, et de Modène, traité qui sous l'apparence de secours à fournir à ces petits Etats les a réellement englobés dans la Monarchie Autrichienne en portant ses frontières militaires, du Po où elles devraient finir, jusqu'à la Méditerranée, et en rompant ainsi l'équilibre qui existait entre les différentes Puissances de l'Italie, il est naturel de penser que la situation du Piémont est telle que d'un moment à l'autre, à l'annonce que la République a été proclamée en Lombardie, un mouvement semblable éclaterait aussi dans les Etats de Sa Majesté le Roi de Sardaigne, ou que du moins il y aurait quelque grave commotion qui mettrait en danger le trône de Sa Majesté.

C'est dans cet état de choses que le Roi, fort de son droit pour la conservation de ses possessions, fort des droits qu'il a sur le Duché de Plaisance et dont par une violation manifeste on n'a pas voulu tenir compte lorsqu'on a signé le Traité du 24 Décembre, 1847, se croit obligé de prendre des mesures qui, en empêchant que le mouvement actuel de la Lombardie ne devienne un mouvement Républicain, éviteront au Piémont et au reste de l'Italie les catastrophes qui pourraient avoir lieu si une telle forme de Gouvernement venait à être proclamée.

Love to my country, devotion to my king, and love of liberty, have induced me to take the office of Minister of War, at a time when every soldier, every subject, becomes the defender of his Sovereign, of his country, and of the Constitution.

I present myself to the army with the confidence inspired by sincerity of convictions, purity of intentions, and the supreme desire of the utmost good of my country.

Faithful to your King, faithful to the Constitution, worthy of admiration for the military discipline of which you have shown such evident proofs, especially in those times—you will show, Soldiers! that you have not degenerated from your fathers in supporting your King and your country in every emergency.

Provincial Soldiers, you have shown what patriotism can effect! The country, grateful, remembers you, your fathers, and your sons.

Discipline maintains order, and secures victory. Let the army trust in the wisdom of the Monarch and the loyalty of his Ministers.

Long live the King! Long live the Constitution!

Vienna, March 20, 1848.

I RECEIVED late on the 19th your Lordship's instructions, and to-day I had a long conversation with Count Ficquelmont.

I told his Excellency that your Lordship did not believe that the King of Sardinia harbours those aggressive designs on Lombardy which have been attributed to him, and that Her Majesty's Government had strongly advised the King to come to a good understanding with Austria for mutual defence in case of need, and that your Lordship had no reason to think that the King is disinclined to do so.

His Excellency replied, that he believed the King had not now any such projects, though certainly he had them at one time, and that it was the knowledge of such projects that obliged Austria to keep troops where they could defend Lombardy against attacks; and that the Austrian Government never had the least intention to attack the King. His Excellency continued: The King is now unable to execute any plan against the Austrians. It is fully in the power of the English Government to induce the Piedmontese to abstain from attacks of all kinds upon Austria; it is in the power of the British Government to induce the Tuscan Government to cease to menace and vilify Austria: for it is only necessary that your Lordship should direct the British Diplomatic Agents in Italy no longer to excite feelings of hostility against Austria; and, he added, that he should attribute to the English Government the continuation of those attacks.

His Excellency said, he knew that hostilities breaking out between Piedmont (or Tuscany) and Austria might very probably lead to a general war; but the British Government could easily put an end to all such danger, and that Austria wished the British Government to interpose for that purpose.

With respect to Lombardy and the Venetian States, his Excellency said, Austria is ready to grant to them everything they desire to have, and the Austrian Government would not refuse to one province what it had lately granted to the other dependencies of the Crown; adding, that the Lombards and the Venetians had already returned to a state of good feeling towards Austria, and now showed a willingness and a desire to remain under the Imperial Crown.

I HAVE the honour to transmit, in translation, the copy of a proclamation which appeared in this day's "Vienna Gazette," announcing that His Imperial Majesty the Emperor had been pleased to grant a general amnesty to all political prisoners in the Kingdoms of Galicia and Lodomeria, including Cracow, and also in the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom.

This proclamation has produced a very good effect here. Everything remains perfectly tranquil.

WE Ferdinand I, by the Grace of God, &c.

IN order to give our faithful subjects a further proof of our confidence, and to prove to them how much we are inclined to act with mercy towards all those who have been misled, have determined to make use of our prerogative, and to take the following measures, particularly as regards the Kingdoms of Galicia and Lodomeria, as well as the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom:

1. In the Kingdoms of Galicia and Lodomeria, including the territory of Cracow, as well as in the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom, we have resolved to remit the sentence to all civilians who are at present undergoing punishment for high treason, or for attempts against the tranquillity of the State, except they should be guilty of other crimes.

2. With regard to those individuals whose cases are still before the tribunals, and who have not been definitively judged, that no further proceedings be taken, and no new trial for similar deeds be carried on; but foreigners comprised in both these classes shall immediately leave our territories, and only be allowed to return with our express permission.

3. All those are to be restored to the enjoyment of their liberty, who in the aforesaid kingdom have been confined elsewhere, on account of their having become involved in political intrigues, or thereby compromised.

4. All those who from similar grounds have been subjected to a special interdiction, are to be considered free from it.

We accordingly hope with confidence that by these our ordinances the public mind will be quiet, tranquillity and order everywhere restored, and that our true subjects will prove their love and attachment to us which they have on so many occasions so praiseworthily shown us.

No. 161.—The Hon. R. Abercromby to Viscount Palmerston.

Turin, March 24, 1848.

IN my despatch of last night I referred to some observations I had made to the Marquis Pareto and to Count Balbo, upon the policy which Sardinia was, as I then feared, about to follow with regard to Lombardy.

Your Lordship's despatches to me by the Sardinian messenger, enabled me to point out to them the importance which your Lordship attached to avoiding all idea of becoming aggressors, and thus endangering the peace of Europe. I reminded them that if they recollected the policy that Great Britain has followed since the beginning of the Italian movement, and the declarations which your Lordship had repeatedly made on the subject of maintaining the faith of existing Treaties, they would at once perceive how much they were indebted to that system of policy and to those declarations. I stated that I left them to judge what would be the consequence if, abandoning their present advantageous position, they decided upon becoming aggressors, and attacking the territories of a neighbouring State, for they must see that Great Britain, preserving, as she always did, a consistent and uniform course of policy, must under such circumstances disapprove of measures which placed Sardinia in the wrong, and in opposition to those very principles which had hitherto formed the strength of her case.

I concluded by observing that the events at Milan, and the change which I observed as likely to be made in the policy of the Sardinian Government, were of such a recent date, that I could not pretend to have received particular instructions from your Lordship with regard to them; but judging from the views adopted by your Lordship, and by the general principles of the policy of Her Majesty's Government, I was led to the conclusion that you would consider that any unprovoked attack from this country upon Austria would seriously compromise the interests and welfare of this country and of the House of Savoy.

My observations were met by statements of the universal feeling that pervaded the States of His Sardinian Majesty in favour of Lombardy, by declarations that the Government were nearly at the end of their resources to control the frantic enthusiasm of the people, and that if a solution of the Lombardy struggle was not obtained within a very few days, the Sardinian Government would be constrained, by force of circumstances, to take the initiative, and by placing themselves at the head of the movement to endeavour to arrest the further effusion of blood.

My despatch of last night will have already informed your Lordship of the final decision of the Sardinian Government on this question, and of the measures that have in consequence been taken.

I now transmit herewith to your Lordship printed copy of a proclamation to the inhabitants of Lombardy and of the Venetian States, which has this morning been issued by His Sardinian Majesty.

The accounts received this morning from Genoa are, that a popular demonstration to oblige the Governor of the town to send succours to Lombardy had been calmed by his promising to detach a portion of the garrison for that purpose.

People of Lombardy and Venice! our arms, which were already concentrating on your frontiers when you anticipated the deliverance of glorious Milan, now in further trials come to offer you the help which brother expects from brother, and friend from friend.

Confident in the help of that God who is visibly with us, we will second your just desires of that God who has given Pius IX to Italy.

of that God who with such wondrous impulses has put Italy in the condition of standing by her own efforts.

And in order still more to exhibit by internal marks the sentiments of Italian union, it is our will that our troops entering the territory of Lombardy and Venice may bear the shield of Savoy superposed on the tricolour Italian flag.

(Received March 29.)

MY LORD,

Paris, March 28, 1848.

THE Marquis de Brignole called upon me this morning with the most recent news from Turin, and read to me a despatch he had received from the Marquis Pareto, giving in some detail the reasons which had induced the King of Sardinia to take the part he had at last done in the affairs of Lombardy. Many of the arguments used by the Marquis Pareto are the same as those contained in his note to

Mr. Abercromby, but there is one fact which is more distinctly marked than in Mr. Abercromby's communication. This is that Charles Albert had refused the first deputation from Milan to interfere whilst that city was still in the possession of the Austrians. M. Pareto's note to the Ministers intimating the line that the King of Sardinia would probably feel it necessary to pursue, was written before there was positive intelligence of the evacuation of Milan; but the deputation to which M. Balbo alluded in his conversation with Mr. Abercromby had brought the news, that on the night of the 22nd the Austrian army surrendered the citadel and was in full retreat from Milan towards the Mincio; and then it was that the men of the greatest eminence in Milan, both from character and station, addressed a petition to the King of Sardinia, calling upon him as their neighbour and countryman, to protect them from the consequences of probable disorder, which might follow the victory which they had won for themselves. They mentioned that the Austrians, upon their retreat, were ravaging and pillaging the country. They state to the King, that should he not come forward to their assistance, they apprehend that there would be a cry for a Republic, as numbers of Swiss had arrived to make common cause with them; as to the future, they state, that being merely a Provisional Government, it is no part of their duty to pronounce an opinion, but their wish would be that it might be such as would tend to the union of the North of Italy, and thereby best cause the independence of the Peninsula.

The address, as I understood from the Marquis de Brignole, was the cause of the step taken by the King of Sardinia. He assured me that the act of his Sovereign had not been to commence hostilities against a neighbouring Power, but at the request of those who, unaided, had already won their own liberties, to assist them in maintaining order on a territory which its former rulers had been forced to abandon.

No. 164.—The Hon. R. Abercromby to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received March 30.)

Turin, March 25, 1848.

IN my former despatches I have endeavoured to keep your Lordship informed as accurately as I could of the progress of events in this country, and of the state of public opinion, but I think it right by the present occasion to add a few remarks which may tend to complete and to explain my former reports.

Your Lordship will no doubt recollect that for a considerable time before the resignation of the late Sardinian Cabinet, I had repeatedly stated my fears that unless large and comprehensive concessions were speedily granted by the Austrian Government to the Lombards, the feeling of exasperation, not only in the Italian provinces of the Austrian Empire, but also throughout Italy, and particularly in this country, would reach such a height as to render it impossible for the Italian Governments to keep it within control.

An interval so precious for Austrian interests was unhappily allowed to pass without any disposition having been shown on the part of the Cabinet of Vienna to listen favourably to the wishes of the Lombards; and when the news of the concessions granted on the 15th instant at Vienna arrived by telegraph at Milan, it was also known, though indistinctly, it is true, that a popular movement in the Austrian capital had preceded these determinations of the Imperial Cabinet.

It was not unnatural, therefore, considering the state of public feeling in Lombardy, the known sympathy which the condition of that country had excited generally throughout the States of Italy, that the news of these 2 events, so far from satisfying the minds of the Lombards, only inspired them with fresh hopes of being able to accomplish their entire emancipation from Austrian control, and to determine them to reject concessions that failed to satisfy their demands.

It was under these circumstances that the rising at Milan took place, and that the struggle, which has ended in the evacuation of that city by the troops of Austria, commenced.

Such was the course which events in Lombardy have taken.

The interest and enthusiasm which they excited in this country have been immense.

I on various occasions expressed to your Lordship my fears that the moment might come when it would be impossible any longer to control the ardour of the Piedmontese, should any collision unfortunately occur between them and the Austrians on the frontier.

The late Government, however, quitted office, without any outbreak having taken place; but they left to their successors a country already excited in the greatest degree; the authority of the law weakened by repeated concessions to popular clamour, and the new institutions of the State still unestablished.

In the face of these difficulties, the Balbo-Pareto Cabinet was formed; it was composed of individuals selected from amongst those who by their former conduct were known to be firmly attached to liberal opinions, and to the cause of Italian independence.

The negotiations that preceded their acceptance of office were difficult and intricate, but they were in the end overcome, and seemed to offer proof of the honesty of their intent and desire to preserve the faith of treaties, and to abstain from all aggression upon neighbouring States.

The composition of the new Cabinet, the knowledge of the principles which were to direct their policy, gave me hopes that by firmness and tact, they would be able to steer their way through the difficulties of their position, and that it might be possible still to avoid the dangers consequent upon the relative position of Piedmont and Lombardy.

To effect this, however, time was requisite. Hardly, however, had the new Ministers taken possession of their offices, when the revolt at Milan broke out, and the struggle between the Milanese and Austrians commenced.

The Government was immediately placed in a most embarrassing situation, foreseeing all the dangers which an aggression by Sardinia upon Austria was likely to produce; but experiencing at the same time all the effects of an immense popular pressure which threatened internal revolt, and which menaced, in defiance of the authority of the Government, to commence an attack upon the Austrian troops by crossing the frontier, and by advancing to the succour of the Lombards.

The prolongation of the struggle at Milan increased the determination of the people here, and weakened the resources of the Government, and at length the danger to the monarchy of Sardinia became in the eyes of the Ministers so imminent, that they were forced to acquiesce in the demands for help addressed to them by the movers of the Milanese insurrection.

The present Sardinian Cabinet has thus been forced into a line of policy, which, had events proved more favourable for them, they would not willingly have adopted, and which is so contrary to the expectations I had formed.

I have thus endeavoured to give your Lordship as faithful a narrative as possible of the events which have preceded, and which have led to the policy which Sardinia is now following.

That there were dangers and difficulties in the way of the Cabinet of Turin is quite certain; but whether they can justify the course pursued, and the immense responsibility they have incurred, it is for your Lordship to decide.

I may add, perhaps, as some extenuation of the conduct of Sardinia, that the general rising that appears to have taken place in Parma and Modena, and the movement of Tuscan troops to the extreme frontier of the Grand Duchy, all rendered the position of King Charles Albert the more embarrassing, and made it at the same time more difficult for him to oppose a movement which assumes the character of nationality.

Since writing to your Lordship yesterday, I have learnt that my Russian and Prussian colleagues have decided upon retiring from Turin until they shall have received fresh instructions from their Courts, and that they have consequently applied for passports to the Sardinian Government to enable them temporarily to absent themselves from their posts.

No. 165.—Sir G. Hamilton to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Mar. 30.)

MY LORD,

Florence, March 22, 1848.

IN consequence of the reports that reached Florence yesterday, of the events that are now taking place in Vienna and Lombardy, I have the honour to inform your Lordship that the Grand Duke issued a proclamation, of which I inclose a copy in original and translation, informing the Tuscans that the hour of the complete regeneration of Italy having unexpectedly arisen, he had given orders that all the regular troops should march upon the frontier in 2 columns; that the service of the capital should be confided to the sedentary civic guard; and that all volunteers who desired to follow the regular army would be instantly organized.

This proclamation was received by the people with great enthusiasm, and in the course of the evening 800 civic guards, besides the regular troops, were in march to the frontier.

It is reported that Parma and Modena are in a state of insurrection.

In the course of the afternoon yesterday, the Advocate Mordini, who hitherto has been one of the most popular leaders of the people, and who is supposed to be connected with the "Alba" newspaper, endeavoured to excite the people by a violent address delivered in the Piazza Gran Duca, calling upon them to demand the dismissal of the Ministers "who had betrayed the country." The Ministers were on the spot, and the Marquis Ridolfi harangued the crowd, and said, that it was unfair to judge the Ministry before the meeting of the Chambers. The crowd responded to the sentiments of the Minister, and Mordini was obliged to withdraw.

The Grand Duke afterwards drove through the streets in an open carriage, and was well received. I have, &c.

TUSCANS!

(Translation.)

THE hour of complete Italian independence is unexpectedly arrived, nor could any one who really loves this our common country refuse to it the succour which it claims. I promised you at another time to second, as much as I could, the effusion of your hearts in opportune circumstances; and behold me ready to keep my word.

I have given the necessary orders that the regular troops should march without delay to the frontiers, in two columns, one to Pietrasanta, the other to San Marcello. The towns, the capital itself, are confided to the stationary civic guard. The volunteers who desire to follow the regular force will receive immediate organization, and will be able to depart under expert officers.

In the midst of the enthusiasm of your hearts for the sacred cause of Italy, do not forget the moderation which embellishes every enterprise.

I watch with my Government over the wants of the country, and in the meantime hasten the conclusion of a powerful Italian league, which I have always admired, and which is now negotiating.

The commander of the regular troops, the Prefect, and the Gonfaloniere of Florence, form a commission charged with the immediate movement of the column of San Marcello. The Governor, the Gonfaloniere of Leghorn, and Colonel Laugier, are charged with the immediate movement of that for Pietrasanta.

No. 166.—Vice-Consul Campbell to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received March 30.)

MY LORD,

Milan, March 18, 1848.

I HASTEN to inform your Lordship of the events that have just taken place in Milan.

At 5 o'clock yesterday morning the Viceroy of these States left this city in the direction of Brescia. In the early part of the previous day he had received news that an insurrection had broken out at Vienna on the 13th instant, that the citizens there had risen against the Government and were fighting the troops. The same evening at 9 o'clock fresh intelligence arrived here, informing him that the population of Vienna had been victorious, the conflict only ceasing at half-past 3 o'clock on the 14th, when the Emperor had granted the liberty of the press, and a Representative form of Government to all the States of the empire.

This morning (the 18th) at 9 o'clock, the following notice was posted up in every part of the city :

"The Presidency of the Imperial Royal Government conceive it their duty to make public the contents of a telegraphic despatch from Vienna, dated the 15th instant, which arrived the same day at Zilli, and reached Milan last evening.

"His Imperial and Royal Majesty the Emperor has determined to abolish the censorship, and to cause a law on the press to be published without loss of time, as well as to convoke the German and Slavonian States, and the Central Congregations of the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom. The assembly will take place not later than the 3rd of the ensuing month of July.

“ Milan, March 18, 1848.

M. HARLL, Imperial Royal Inspector of the Telegraph.

COUNT O'DONELL, Vice-President.”

The perusal of this document, combined with the departure of the Viceroy at such a moment, roused the people to the highest degree of exasperation. About 10 o'clock a written paper, containing the following demands, was circulated in all directions:

1. The abolition of the old police, and the nomination of a new one, subject to the municipality.

2nd. Abolition of the punishment of death, and instant liberation of all imprisoned for political offences.

3rd. A Provisional Government for the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom.

4th. Immediate liberty of the press.

5th. The assembling of the communal councils and convocations, in order that they may elect deputies for the National Assembly, to be convoked in the shortest possible time.

6th. A civic guard, under the orders of the municipality.

7th. Neutrality on the part of the Austrian troops, and subsistence guaranteed to them.

N.B.—At 3 o'clock the people will meet on the Corso de' Servi.

Towards noon the Podestà, preceded by his pompieri (soldiers trained as firemen), accompanied by a considerable number of citizens, went in a body on foot to the Government palace. The guard there opposed the entrance of the crowd, when a conflict took place, in which 3 soldiers were killed, the rest disarmed, and their accoutrements and schakos thrown into the Grand Canal. The apartment of the absent Governor was sacked.

The Commander-in-chief of the forces, and the Director-General of Police, in spite of every remonstrance, caused the streets to be scoured by parties of soldiers, who fired on the crowds. Barricades were soon erected. All the inhabitants sought for arms, but they did not know where to find them. Bands of armed citizens attacked the troops in different quarters of the city, in the Piazza d'Armi, the Piazza San Fedele, and principally at the police-office, where the police-guards fired from the windows, and killed many citizens. In the Contrada del Monte, near the Palace Vidiserti, the troops were driven back, leaving 2 killed. Among the citizens there were 1 killed and 3 wounded. The Palace Melzi, where the conflict was chiefly carried on, is riddled with balls. In the Contrada Santa Radegonda 2 soldiers were killed. In the Corso di Porta Orientale 2 citizens were killed. The Tyrolese troops (riflemen) have taken possession of the cathedral.

The following proclamations have just been issued by the Vice-President and the Podestà, near 8 o'clock at night :

“ Milan, March 18, 1848.

COUNT O'DONELL.”

“The direction of police is abolished, and the security of the city is confided to the municipality.

COUNT O'DONELL.”

“The Municipal Congregation of the city of Milan.

“In consequence of the above, every citizen from 20 to 60 years of age, who does not depend wholly on his daily labour, is requested to present himself at the civic palace for enrolment in the civic guard, which will immediately be brought into active service.

“It will be the duty of citizens who possess arms to carry them.

CAGATI, Podestà.

BERETTA, Assessore.

GREPPI, Assessore.”

The gates of the city remain closed ; men and arms are expected from the country the moment they can be introduced.

Bodies of citizens perambulate the city armed with fowling-pieces, rifles, swords, pistols, and old halberts, carrying tricoloured flags, with tricoloured cockades in their hats, crying “Viva Pio Nono !” “Viva l'Italia !” “Viva la Repubblica !”

During the night, the soldiers scoured the town and destroyed the greater part of the barricades, throwing carriages, carts, timber, and other heavy articles into the Grand Canal. Count Radetsky, the Field-Marshal, does not acknowledge the authority of Count O'Donell, as he is a prisoner. The soldiers, on approaching a barricade, advance towards it very slowly, firing volleys of musketry to clear the streets, which they did most effectually. Some few barricades they did not succeed in taking, among others, that at the bottom of the Contrada del Monte, which the citizens defended with great vigour ; so much so, that although the muzzles of the guns were almost touching the barricade, the troops were driven back. This took place about 6 o'clock in the morning (the 19th) ; at this period the bells sounded the alarm in every quarter. The inhabitants, on this, rushed to the windows and to the tops of the houses, throwing down stones and tiles on the troops. Fresh barricades were immediately formed more substantial than those of the preceding day. At 8 o'clock every part of the town was in full insurrection. The military, finding such unexpected resistance, began to retire. From 8 till 10 o'clock, such citizens as possessed fire-arms kept up, from the houses and the corners of the streets, a murderous fire on the troops, the greater part of whom were driven back; those engaged in the Corso di Porta Orientale were driven back behind the Grand Canal, where, after their retreat, the conflict was continued in Borgo Montforte, the courage of the citizens increasing as the troops retired. From 10 till 2, the troops and the citizens were fighting at the theatre of the Scala, in the Piazza de' Mercanti and Porta Ticinese. Two cannon were taken by the citizens, one in the Piazza de' Mercanti, where the main guard is, and the other at Porta Ticinese, a part of the city where none but the lowest classes reside.

In the meantime, Count Cagati, the Podestà, having assembled the members of the municipality, took the most active measures to procure every species of arms for the citizens, but which are very few and very inefficient to cope with numerous bodies of regular troops. In the interior of the city the troops still occupy the vice-regal palace, the great lottery-office, the custom-house, and the treasury, firing from the windows on the people. The barricades already made are strengthened, and numerous others formed, all classes from the highest to the lowest assisting; while females, and even children, were carrying stones to the tops of the houses, ready to be thrown down on the troops. During the greater part of this night the conflict was carried on in different quarters of the city, everywhere successful to the citizens. The most daring courage was shewn by the young Milanese gentlemen, many of whom were killed during the day. One in particular, named Broggi, after having picked off many artillerymen, was struck dead in the breast by a cannon-ball. I must mention here, that last night, the Broletto, or municipal palace, was attacked with cannon, the gates blown open, and those then in it (among whom Count Greppi and Signor Bellotti) were made prisoners and carried off to the castle.

During this night the barricades were strengthened, and others thrown up, the greater part of which would resist grape-shot, and were strictly guarded.

Monday, the 20th.—At daylight the conflict recommenced in the Piazza del Duomo, where the troops were driven out by the citizens from under a long portico, called Coperto de Figini. Later in the day, the troops retreated from the top of the cathedral, from whence, on the preceding day, they had kept up a fire on the people. After severe conflicts at the Custom-House and at the Treasury, at the vice-regal palace, at the police and the criminal tribunal, the troops were likewise driven from them. At the Custom-House many fire-arms were found, and immediately distributed to the people. The interior of the city is at this moment clear of troops. The greater part of them are at the different gates of the city and on the bastions, to prevent the peasants from entering the city, who were assembled in immense numbers ready to rush in and assist the Milanese. A subterranean canal, or sewer, that leads outside the gate of Porta Tosa, is now draining to enable the citizens to open a communication with the peasants. The different corsi leading from the gates of the city continue to be swept with grape-shot, the artillery keeping at a respectable distance from the barricades. The most animating proclamations were issued during the day, giving details of what had taken place in every part of the city, and calling on the citizens to protect the public establishments, and above all, to take care of all public documents.

A superior commissary of police, a man universally hated, is taken and strictly watched in a private house. The citizens had great difficulty in preventing the populace from tearing him to pieces, and were only pacified by being assured, that it was necessary to know many things from him before being put to death.

March 20th.—At 12 o'clock, the political prisoners are liberated by their fellow-citizens. A party of soldiers have been taken prisoner with 4 or 5 of their officers. A Major of a Croat regiment has arrived to treat with the municipality. The terms offered by them being, that the Austrian army should retire into Germany, and would have subsistence furnished them till beyond the Lombardo-Venetian frontiers—terms that later in the day were rejected by Field-Marshal Radetzky. Several of the bravest young men in Milan are falling, which only increases the exasperation of their companions. It may be here proper to state to your Lordship, that in consequence of a report that the city would be bombarded, the Consular Body met at the office of the French Consul-General, and there drew up a protest, in the name of their respective Governments, against this measure; and requiring, in the event of such taking place, that the Consuls should have due notice given by Field-Marshal Radetzky, and sufficient time to allow their countrymen to place both themselves and their property in safety. I do myself the honour to inclose herewith a copy of the correspondence from No. 1 to No. 8. Your Lordship will perceive that it embraces other topics besides that of a mere protest. The attack, the greatest part of this afternoon and early part of the night, was very languid, which may be accounted for by the state of the weather, the rain falling in torrents. Towards midnight the attack became more animated, but no advantage was gained by the troops, the barricades being well defended.

March 21st.—At daylight this morning the attack was principally carried on with musketry, but no great loss was sustained on either side. At 7 o'clock all the Consuls, in full uniform, went from the French Consul-General's office to the castle, agreeably to an understanding made yesterday, to have an interview with the Marshal Radetzky, accompanied by Count Greppi (on his parole from the castle, where he is a prisoner), who carried a flag of truce. At 11 o'clock the Consular Body returned to the city; at 12 o'clock the attack was vigorously carried on by the troops in the suburbs, and several shots were fired from the castle into the town. From the engineer barracks a deadly fire was kept up by the troops, which was vigorously returned by the Milanese, most of them very young men belonging to noble families. Finding they were losing considerable numbers they set fire to the gates, rushed in, and carried it at the point of the bayonet, making 160 prisoners, with their arms, ammunition, and accoutrements. At the head-quarters (comando generale) the troops held out a white flag of truce, in consequence of which the Milanese advanced, when they were treacherously fired upon. From the report of smugglers who got into the town over the bastions, the country outside the gates was swarming with peasants, eager to assist their countrymen. In the suburbs the firing on both sides was briskly kept up till near midnight.

March 22nd.—At daylight the firing commenced as usual in the suburbs, the cannon scouring the streets with grape-shot. From the college for cadets, called St. Luca, a continued fire of musquetry was kept up by the youths there. A flag of truce was held out from it, when the Marquis Triulzi and Signor De Lorenzi, on advancing to parley, were treacherously fired upon, and both wounded. In Porta Vercellina a vigorous attack was made on Field-Marshal Radetzky's palace, which, after a considerable resistance by the troops inside, was carried by assault, and sacked. About 2 o'clock P.M., many soldiers were brought in as prisoners. Towards evening the firing of musketry and grape-shot was incessant, while an occasional shell and Congreve rocket were thrown into the town from the castle. Before dark the Porta Tosa was taken in the most daring manner, the assailants being headed by Dr. Carlo Cattaneo, Giuliano, Manava, and the Marquis Villani. The troops are driven from Porta Comasina, but the attacking party, too weak to keep the position, are obliged to retire. From 8 at night till 4 in the morning a tremendous firing was kept up in every part of the suburbs, more particularly at Porta Cruova, but without any marked success on either side, the troops being unable to force any of the barricades. The firing suddenly ceased, and at 5 o'clock, just as the day was beginning to break, two political prisoners arrived at the Municipality, bringing the information that the troops had abandoned the castle, and were in full retreat in all directions. This news flew through the town like wildfire, when every house was illuminated. Crowds of peasants, armed in all sorts of ways, flocked into the town, a moveable guard was instantly formed, armed with musketry, and sent out to harass the troops on their retreat. The roads are broken up, and trees cut down and thrown across them, so as to render it impossible for cavalry, artillery, and the waggon train to proceed. During this day it has been discovered that the greatest cruelties have been committed by the Croats, whole families of women and children, in different parts of the suburbs, having been found murdered and mutilated by them in the most shocking manner. It is impossible at present to give anything like an approximate number of killed and wounded in the conflicts during the last five days. In consequence of the stringest orders and well-organized system of the Provisional Government (a title which the municipality have now assumed), the greatest tranquillity prevails. As may be expected, an exuberant feeling of joy at the victory they have gained rendered the Milanese almost delirious. No excess of any kind has been committed; every house has a tricoloured flag, every hat a tricoloured cockade. The barricades since this morning have been strengthened; sentries are placed at each of them, who during this day have preserved order in the crowds that passed them, and at night strictly demand the pass-word. At the moment I write, now 10 o'clock at night, all is still, the people having mostly retired to their houses.

The above statement, my Lord, is, I trust, substantially correct; yet some inaccuracies may be proved hereafter, which I am convinced your Lordship will kindly overlook, considering the state of things during such an unexampled revolution.

I remain, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

MONSIEUR ET CHER COLLEAGUE,

Milan, le 19 Mars, 1848.

ON paraît craindre un bombardement, et on désire, dans l'intérêt de l'humanité, que le Corps Consulaire résidant à Milan proteste contre un acte aussi sauvage, s'il est vrai qu'il en est question.

Monsieur le Consul-Général de Suisse et moi nous avons promis aux membres de la municipalité réunis chez M. le Comte C. Je vous prie, en conséquence, de vouloir bien vous réunir chez moi à tous vos collègues pour aviser à ce qu'il y a de

M. LE MARÉCHAL,

Milan, le 20 Mars, 1848.

ON nous dit que l'autorité militaire a fait menacer la ville d'un bombardement. Si, ce que nous ne pouvons croire, cette mesure extrême devait être adoptée à l'égard d'une ville de 160,000 âmes, et où réside un si grand nombre de nos compatriotes, nous nous verrions obligés, Monsieur le Maréchal, de protester auprès de votre Excellence au nom de nos Gouvernements contre un acte pareil. Dans tous les cas, nous comptons assez sur votre justice et votre humanité pour espérer que votre Excellence nous fera les avertissements et nous accordera les délais nécessaires pour pouvoir mettre nos nationaux et leurs propriétés à l'abri des dangers auxquels ils pourraient se trouver exposés ; ainsi qu'on le ferait sans aucun doute en cas semblable des sujets Autrichiens dans nos pays respectifs.

J'ACCUSE la reçue de la dépêche de Messieurs les Consuls d'Angleterre, de France, de Sardaigne, de Belgique, et de la Suisse, dans laquelle ils manifestent leur désir de ne pas me voir prendre des mesures qui ne pourraient manquer de devenir funestes pour la ville de Milan, et pour lesquelles ils demanderaient au moins un délai qui leur permit de pourvoir à la sûreté de leurs compatriotes.

Le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté l'Empereur et les troupes sous mon commandement ont été attaqués à l'improviste d'une manière contraire à tout droit des gens, sans que de leur côté il n'y ait eu provocation quelconque. On a commencé par piller et saccager l'hôtel du Gouvernement, et par surprendre et tuer partie de la faible garde qui y était postée, par s'assurer de la personne du chef de ce Gouvernement, exigeant de lui des concessions auxquelles il n'est pas dans son pouvoir de souscrire, et qui n'appartiennent qu'au Souverain. Vous concevez, Messieurs, qu'en homme d'honneur et soldat, je ne pourrai jamais compromettre ni l'un ni l'autre, ainsi que mes devoirs envers mon Souverain.

Il dépend, Messieurs, de votre influence sur les chefs du mouvement révolutionnaire, si vous pouvez les décider à s'abstenir de toute mesure hostile ; car aussi longtemps que je serai attaqué, que mes soldats seront tués sous mes yeux, je me défendrai avec le courage que surtout leur inspire la manière dont ils se sont trouvés assaillis, et à moi le sentiment de l'odieuse surprise dont on s'est servi envers eux.

A tout événement, par respect pour les Gouvernements dont vous vous êtes faits l'organe, je suspendrai les mesures sévères que je me crois obligé de prendre contre Milan jusqu'à demain 21, à condition que toute hostilité jusque là cessera de la partie adverse.

J'attends les résultats des démarches que votre intervention pourra amener, pour prendre mes mesures en conséquence.

Votre Excellence leur annonçant qu'elle attend le résultat des démarches que leur intervention pourra amener, ils se sont mis en communication avec les autorités municipales pour leur donner connaissance de votre dépêche. Comme il serait long et difficile de reproduire par correspondance la conversation qu'ils viennent d'avoir avec elles, et qui leur semble de nature à vous édifier d'une manière exacte sur les faits qui ont eu lieu et sur l'état des choses, ils doivent prier votre Excellence de bien vouloir les recevoir, de fixer l'heure à laquelle ils pourront se présenter au Château, et donner pour cela les dispositions nécessaires.

Propose de cesser toute hostilité des deux côtés et de s'abstenir de toute démonstration pendant 3 jours, qui commenceraient le 21 Mars à 4 heures du soir.

Le Maréchal comprenant que les autorités municipales n'ont qu'une autorité naturellement limitée par la force des circonstances, ne considérerait pas comme acte d'hostilité quelques coups de fusil isolés que pourraient être tirés malgré les démarches loyales que pourraient faire les autorités municipales pour les empêcher, et la même réciprocité est demandée par lui.

Le Maréchal s'engagerait dès la susdite heure à permettre l'entrée et la sortie des personnes portant des vivres et à laisser passer les postes et courriers et les personnes qui voudraient s'en aller pendant ces 3 jours sans y mettre obstacle, se réservant d'empêcher l'entrée en ville de la population des campagnes, et plus particulièrement des personnes armées.

Le Maréchal a averti le Corps Consulaire qu'il a été informé que les détenus de la maison de correction manquaient de vivres.

Il a déclaré sur la demande des Consuls, qu'il était prêt à entrer en relations directes et amicales avec les autorités municipales.

Renfermés comme nous étions ici avec une masse de troupes dans un local étroit, qui n'admet aucune commodité, le manque de moyens dans les premiers jours n'a pas permis de satisfaire à ce qu'ils pourraient désirer, ce qui est dû aux circonstances du moment et non à la volonté du Maréchal : la preuve en est la facilité avec laquelle il a cédé aux instances qui lui ont été adressées par les Comte Greppi et Litta. No. 167.—Lord Napier to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. March 30.)

MY LORD,

Naples, March 14, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint your Lordship that a serious disorder occurred yesterday among the lower orders, which may be traced to the lawless conduct of the Radical party in respect to the expulsion of the Jesuits.

It was rumoured among the common people that the Liberals intended to continue their attacks on the priesthood, and meditated the banishment of the Carmelites, and this report caused great anger among the people, who at an early hour assembled at the church of the Madonna del Carmine, of high reputation for sanctity and miracles.

Being joined by reinforcements from several ancient quarters of the city, and having filled their pouches with stones from the beach, the multitude marched towards the Largo del Castello, in the vicinity of the palace, with religious flags and shouts in favour of the Virgin and the King, maltreating all well-dressed persons as they went along. During their progress they were attacked by the national guards, and several were arrested. At the Largo del Castello the Swiss fired over their heads, and they were charged with the bayonet by the municipal force. About 8 men are said to have been killed at various parts of the town, and several were wounded and carried off to prison.

This tumult is ascribed by the Radical faction to the intrigues and inspiration of the Ministry and the Court, but probably falsely. It was most likely a natural reaction on the part of the simple and superstitious Lazzaroni against the Radicals, in whom they see the enemies of the Crown and religion. It was a demonstration of the "Santa Fede," and it may be hoped will recall the violent Liberal party to a sense of their duty to the constitution and the laws.

The Government, stimulated by these repeated violations of public tranquillity, published last night the inclosed Riot Act, which, if carried into operation, will maintain good order.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

WE, FERDINAND II, &c.

(Translation.)

HAVING seen the report of the commander-in-chief of the national guard of this day's date, as well as that of the military governor of the town of the same date, demanding prompt repressive measures for the maintenance of the public peace and the existing political regime;

Having seen the 140 and 142 Articles of the penal laws;

Considering that to ensure the execution of the laws provisionally in force, it is necessary to adopt energetic means which are recognised by the existing regulations and not at variance with constitutional institutions;

Considering that although every citizen enjoys the right of petition, yet that it must be exercised in writing and according to legal forms;

Considering that for some days past, and especially to-day, it has been attempted to exercise this right by means of numerous assemblages, acts of violence, printed placards, and seditious manifestoes derogatory to the respect due to religion and dangerous to the welfare of the State;

Considering that prudence requires the adoption of those preventive measures which are admissible in all constitutional Governments so as to prevent the recurrence of such disorders;

Considering that the public desire manifested by petitions and by deputations calls for prompt measures of prevention for the maintenance of the constitutional system;

On the proposition of our Minister Secretary of State of Grace and Justice, having consulted our Council of Ministers, have resolved to decree, and do decree as follows:

ART. I. It is forbidden to present petitions in an unconstitutional form.

II. Should the illegality of any petition prove an infraction of the laws provisionally in force, such infraction shall be punished according to the tenor of the same by the regular magistrates.

III. Should an illegal assemblage take place, it shall be called upon to disperse 3 times by the municipal authorities, accompanied by an officer of the regular or judicial police, who shall be surrounded by a detachment of the national guards or of other troops, by the sound of the drum or trumpet.

IV. After being 3 times called upon, should they not disperse, it shall be lawful to make use of the public force to effect their dispersion.

V. Our Ministers of the Interior, Grace and Justice, and of War are charged with the execution of the present decree, each in their respective offices.

THE Undersigned has the honour to inform Lord Napier that the Jesuits resident here having expressed a wish to go to Malta, the Government of His Majesty, in compliance with their desire, have hired the steamer Vesuvio, giving orders to her commander to take them to that island, and to treat them in every respect as first-class passengers. This Government has at the same time placed the sum of 2,000 ducats in the hands of the captain to supply their wants, and has desired the Neapolitan Consul at Malta to furnish them with 1,000 more should it be required. It has also given orders to grant them the necessary passports, that they may be enabled to go to any other country which they may select.

The Undersigned begs Lord Napier to inform the British Govern-

SIR,

Naples, March 13, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint your Excellency that the Neapolitan Government, yielding to a popular clamour, have consented to the expulsion of the Jesuits from this capital.

Their banishment, which is disguised under the pretext of a voluntary departure, has been accompanied by circumstances of peculiar hardship; and in the present temper of public feeling it would be imprudent for them to take refuge in any of the adjoining States of Italy.

Under these circumstances, the Government of His Sicilian Majesty have determined to convey the members of this persecuted order to Malta, in the hope that they will find under your authority that asylum which is never denied by Her Majesty's Government to any class or colour of political refugees.

I have been assured that the Order of the Jesuits is not generally esteemed at Malta, and I am sensible that so large an increase of their number may not be in all respects desirable, yet I feel that I should be deviating from the principles of impartial toleration which distinguish Her Majesty's Government if I did not grant them the usual facilities of passport, and recommend them to your Excellency's protection and good offices.

The Neapolitan Government have engaged the steam-vessel Vesuvio for the accommodation of the Jesuits, and have placed in the hands of the captain the sum of 2,000 ducats for their entertainment and relief, to which an additional sum of 1,000 ducats has been added for their subsequent assistance, should they require it, which will be remitted to the Neapolitan Consul at Malta.

I have the honour to inclose to your Excellency a list of the names of the Jesuits, as they appear on their passports, signed by Her Majesty's Legation, to the number of 114. And I believe that it is their intention to disperse, and return, as opportunity may offer, to their several places of birth or previous residence; but I have not thought it necessary to insist on their profession being specified in their respective passports, which might perhaps expose them afterwards to molestation.

I have, &c.

MY LORD,

Foreign Office, March 31, 1848.

WITH reference to your Excellency's despatch of the 20th instant, reporting what passed between you and Count Ficquelmont on that day, I have to instruct your Excellency to assure Count Ficquelmont that he is quite mistaken in supposing that it is the British Government or British diplomatists who have excited angry feelings towards Austria in the minds of the people of Italy. Those angry feelings, it is well known, have long existed, and, whether well or ill-founded, spring from causes wholly independent of British diplomacy; and as these feelings take their origin from sources with which British diplomacy has nothing to do, so also can British diplomacy exercise no effective influence in putting an end to those feelings.

It is, however, the less surprising that Count Ficquelmont should be misinformed on this matter, considering how mistaken he seems to have been in his opinion as to the supposed contentment of the people of Lombardy and of Venice. I am, &c.

H.E. Viscount Ponsonby.

PALMERSTON.

No. 176.—Sir G. Hamilton to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. April 1.)

MY LORD,

Florence, March 24, 1848.

SINCE I had the honour of addressing your Lordship on the 22nd instant the revolutions at Parma and Modena have been completed, and the Sovereigns of both States have fled.

On the first news of the Modenese revolution, 2,000 civic guards marched from Bologna into the Modenese territory; and yesterday evening I received a note from Don Neri Corsini, Marquis of Layatico, the new Minister for Foreign Affairs, and who had arrived only yesterday morning from Rome, inclosing a proclamation of the Grand Duke, stating that in consequence of the political events in the city of Modena, and other places in the duchy, he had come to the determination of provisionally occupying parts of the Duchy of Modena, in order that quiet and security in his own dominions might not be compromised.

I have the honour to inclose herewith a copy of Don Neri's note to me, as well as the proclamation, in original and translation, for your Lordship's information.

I was informed this morning, from Leghorn, that 1,200 men of the civic guards and 300 troops of the line have marched to the frontier, animated with the greatest enthusiasm; and they have been joined at Pisa by the armed students and the civic guard. Another party of civic guards and volunteers left Florence yesterday for the frontier, so that the Tuscan force in the Duchy of Modena will be very considerable.

At Parma the Duke issued a proclamation, stating that it was his intention to absent himself, with his family, from his States, and appointing a Regency, who would grant all the reforms required by the necessity of the times.

I believe that much blood has been shed, but I am not enabled to give your Lordship any authentic details on this subject. I understand that the Duke showed much personal courage; that 6 shots were fired at him, and one went through his hat.

At Rome the populace have pulled down the Austrian arms from the Ambassador's palace; they were dragged through the streets, then burnt, as well as every other Austrian symbol in the city.

The Baron Nenmann left Modena with the Duke, who retired with the Modenese and Austrian troops and the military chest.

At Massa and Carrara the Modenese troops delivered up their arms, and the inhabitants of those places are desirous of forming part of the Tuscan dominions.

The Grand Duke pays the civic guards and volunteers who have gone on this expedition a paul per day each, in addition to the rations given to the troops of the line when on foreign service.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

WE, LEOPOLD II, &c.

Florence, March 22, 1848.

CONSIDERING that the quiet and security of our dominions might be compromised by the disorders which, after the political events of Modena, and other towns of that duchy, might be manifested in the territories of Este, which, on the side of the Duchy of Lucca and of Pietrasanta, are on the confines of the Grand Duchy, and that for this reason it is our duty to prevent the evils which might result from them;

We are come to the determination of providing, with this view, that the territories of Este, above-mentioned, may be occupied provisionally, and retained in a line of simple garrison by the troops of the Grand Duchy.

We declare, moreover, that, saving the inconvenience of lodging for the same troops, to be afforded to them, according to military regulations, by the inhabitants of the places to be occupied, in consideration of the succour which the said troops will yield on every emergency for the maintenance of public tranquillity in the said places, all the other expenses relatively will remain at the charge of Tuscany.

The Minister of War will give the dispositions and necessary arrangements for the execution of this our determination.

Provisional Government of Milan.

SACRED MAJESTY!

Milan, March 23, 1848.

WE have vanquished the enemy who occupied the city. He left the Castle last night, and marched towards Verona, but he is not yet far from the capital, and is marking every step with slaughter and plunder. Our citizens have made heroic efforts, and with very few means they have repulsed the pride of an enemy confident in his strength. Our country cannot get together disciplined forces and artillery in so short a time; we had already invoked the aid of your Majesty's arms, while we fought in our streets, ready to encounter a second mine for the cause of Italy. Although the city is now free, the ready and powerful help of your Majesty is not less important.

The Provisional Government, therefore, strongly urges your Majesty to hasten to help us by every means. Your Majesty will thus be a benefactor to the sacred cause of Italian independence and brotherhood, and will surely obtain the applause and gratitude of this people. We would willingly add more, but our position as a Provisional Government does not allow us to anticipate the wishes of the nation, which are without doubt all directed to the furtherance of the cause of union in Italy.

PAR sa note du 23 de ce mois, le Soussigné, Ministre Secrétaire d'Etat pour les Affaires Etrangères, a eu l'honneur de faire connaître à Mr. Abercromby, &c., les justes et puissantes considérations qui ont déterminé le Gouvernement du Roi à intervenir en Lombardie; il s'empresse maintenant de compléter cette communication en informant Mr. Abercromby que l'ordre vient d'être donné aux commandants des navires de l'Etat de laisser librement naviguer les bâtimens marchands portant pavillon Autrichien qu'ils seraient dans le cas de rencontrer, et qu'aucune lettre de marque ne sera non plus délivrée, le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté étant bien décidé à s'abstenir de tout acte qui, par sa nature, s'écarterait du noble caractère de la guerre qu'il vient d'entreprendre principalement par devoir d'humanité et de nationalité.

Les commandants des navires de la Marine Royale ont aussi reçu l'ordre de ne se porter à aucun acte d'hostilité contre les bâtimens de guerre Autrichiens, sauf qu'ils n'y soient provoqués par ceux-ci.

I HAVE the honour to inclose a copy of a proclamation published last night by the Provisional authorities of Venice, together with a copy of a Convention entered into between those authorities and the Military Governor-General Zichy, stipulating the evacuation of Venice by the German troops. A portion of these troops (the regiment of Kinsky) and a brigadier-general, refused to adhere to this Convention, but some gunboats being brought up from the arsenal this afternoon, and placed in front of their barracks, these troops, finding further resistance hopeless, consented to yield. They are to be forthwith transported to Trieste.

I am happy to say no disturbance occurred last night; the people and the Italian soldiers, who have all adopted the tricoloured cockade, crying "Long live the Republic! Long live St. Mark!" The Imperial eagle has been everywhere defaced, or is being replaced by the winged lion of St. Mark. It is said that the Republic has been proclaimed at Bassano, Treviso, and other towns, and the country people are represented as rising to a man against the Austrians, but we are up to this moment without any accurate information from the mainland. It is believed that the whole of the Austrian fleet, which is almost entirely manned by Dalmatians and Venetians, will join the Republic.

The gentleman who proclaimed the Republic in the square of St. Mark's was Signor Manin, the same who is now the President of the Provisional Government. This Government has been acknowledged by the Consul of the United States and by the Vice-Consul of France.

Although order has hitherto been preserved, I fear it is too probable that the self-constituted authorities may be unable to maintain it, supposing no attempt to be made by the Austrian forces to retake the town.

SIR,

Foreign Office, April 5, 1848.

I HAVE to instruct you, if occasion should require it, strongly but in a friendly manner to represent to the persons in power at Venice, that they would be doing great injury to their cause, and to the character of their country, by acting cruelly or even harshly towards any Austrian subjects who, in the performance of their duty towards their own Sovereign, might fall into the power of the Venetians; but that in all wars the utmost possible respect is shown and the greatest protection is afforded to women and children whom the chances of events may place within the power of the enemies of their husbands, fathers, brothers, or sons. You will say that Her Majesty's Government cannot believe that the Venetians will show themselves in this or in any other respect less generous than the people of other countries in Europe are accustomed to be.

No. 205.—Lord Napier to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. April 6.)

Naples, March 27, 1848.

A GREAT crowd of people of the better class assembled yesterday in front of the palace and selected a deputation, who having obtained an audience of His Sicilian Majesty, demanded leave to march to the assistance of their brethren in Lombardy.

The King replied that lists would be opened at the different quarters of the national guard, where all who desired to become volunteers in the patriotic cause might enrol their names, and that they would be armed at the expense of Government and transported to the seat of war in the royal vessels.

Something seems also to have been promised, but indistinctly, for the employment of the national troops, and the inclosed proclamation was issued in the course of the evening, which appears tantamount to a declaration of war against Austria.

Prince Schwarzenberg has informed me, that should he not be obliged to demand his passports on account of the unprovoked and unpunished outrage offered to the Imperial arms, he will do so on account of this proclamation, which is a violation both of the laws of peace and honourable war.

Naples, March 26, 1848.

THE Government hereby gives notice to the public, that lists have been opened at the 12 posts of the national guard of this capital, for the enrolment of those brave and patriotic young men who are desirous of forming part of the volunteer corps which is to start for Leghorn by sea, from whence they will proceed into Upper Italy, after having been regularly organized into companies, battalions, and regiments.

For this purpose, the Government has already provided for the arming of these volunteers, and has prepared steamers to convey them to Leghorn.

Notice is also given that the names of all those who shall proceed on this expedition will be made public, and inserted in the official journal.

No. 206.—Lord Napier to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. April 6.)

MY LORD,

Naples, March 28, 1848.

ABOUT 7 o'clock on the evening of the 25th instant, a body of persons, not of the lowest order, proceeded to the gate of the Austrian Legation, and after venting their rage in insulting cries, tore down the Imperial escutcheon and carried it to an adjoining square, "Largo Capella Vecchia," where it was burned with indignity and acclamation.

The national guard did not arrive until after the first act of the outrage had been perpetrated, but the Imperial arms were burned in the immediate vicinity of a post of the civic force and the Swiss, who are said to have regarded the act with indifference, if not with encouragement.

Count Chreptowitch, the Envoy of Russia, and the Chargé d'Affaires of Prussia, called upon me, and proposed to frame a collective protest to the Neapolitan Government in respect to this insult offered to the Diplomatic Body in the person of Prince Schwarzenberg.

I replied that I did not think such a measure would be justifiable, unless the Neapolitan Government, by refusing to afford the becoming measure of apology and redress, should identify itself with the conduct of the people; and that before I could join in any representations on the subject, I must be made acquainted with the tenor of the demands of the Austrian Legation and the answer of the Government of His Sicilian Majesty. Count Chreptowitch appeared to recognise the propriety of the course suggested, and consented, in an interview which I had with him on the following morning, to await the result of Prince Schwarzenberg's note.

Prince Schwarzenberg has since received from the Neapolitan Government an expression of apology; but in the absence of all promise of public reparation for such a national indignity, his Excellency has informed me that he will leave this capital to-night, and has requested me to cause him to be furnished with a boat from one of Her Majesty's ships of war to convey him on board the Imperial steam-vessel.

I have, &c.

IN consequence of intelligence received from Palermo of the opening of the Sicilian Parliament on the 25th instant, I called on the President of the projected Ministry, and communicated to his Excellency the substance of the Earl of Minto's letters.

M. Troja expressed his sense of the importance of the moment, and said that the Sicilian affairs should receive the immediate attention of the new Government.

I availed myself of the opportunity to express my sense of the expediency of immediately offering to Prince Schwarzenberg a due measure of redress for the indignity offered to the Imperial arms, and of recalling the manifesto signed by M. Tofano, Director of Police, encouraging volunteers to enlist for the invasion of Lombardy, laying before his Excellency the extremely doubtful nature of the contest in that province, and the wisdom of pursuing a neutral course, especially when there existed no valid cause for war.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

NAPIER.

No. 214.—Viscount Ponsonby to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. April 7.)
(Extract.) Vienna, April 2, 1848.

UNDOUBTEDLY your Lordship has received from Turin intelligence of the military intervention which the King of Sardinia has ordered to be made by his troops in the affairs of Lombardy, &c. The fact was announced here on the 31st of March by the Sardinian Envoy, and on the 1st of April that Minister received his passports from the Imperial Government, and has left Vienna.

It is possible that your Lordship may not have had stated the motives His Sardinian Majesty assigns for his act, and I therefore send you an extract from the instructions of the Sardinian Minister for Foreign Affairs to the Sardinian Envoy here, namely, the danger the King feared from the existence of another republic on the frontiers of his kingdom. Your Lordship will know, first, that a republic had not then been established in Milan; secondly, that the Austrians had obtained such advantages as almost to ensure the re-establishment of their authority in that city.

I had a conversation with Count Ficquelmont, who said that there was nothing left for Austria but war with Sardinia,—that he hoped for victory,—that if the Sardinians were beaten back into their own territories, the Austrians would not pursue them there, as it might be their interest to do under other circumstances than those of the present time.

Count Ficquelmont mentioned that on the 22nd of March the King of Sardinia gave the Austrian Minister the strongest assurances of His Majesty's pacific intentions, and on the 23rd March issued his declaration of military intervention.

Marshal Radetzky has retired towards Verona. The Austrians will reinforce their army, already very large, and there is in this city so much anger against the Italians, that crowds of men have already volunteered to serve with the Austrian army in Lombardy. The popular feeling has been so great that it has prohibited the Italian opera. There are many people, however, who desire the termination of the Italian affair; and a gentleman, one of the leaders of the party who contributed largely to bring about the late revolution at Vienna, called on me on the morning of the 1st, and in the name and by the direction, as he said, of the leaders of that party, requested me to endeavour to obtain an armistice in Lombardy, and a final settlement of the contest; saying that the Lombards would pay to Austria any sum of money that could be demanded as an indemnity for the loss of territory. I replied that I should be most happy to have the power to promote peace.

Your Lordship will not doubt me when I say that I found Count Ficquelmont in a mood that made it impossible for me to treat such a topic at the moment, and I confined myself to some observations upon the difficulties under which Austria would still be after a victory over the Piedmontese, and after the reconquest of her Italian territories. I mentioned the excess of hate and prejudice which had grown up in the Italian mind against the Austrians; the certainty that such feelings would continue, and would oblige the Austrians to hold Lombardy and the other Italian provinces by means of garrisons in every city and town, and other military force distributed over the whole territory; that the cost of such occupation must be immense; that upon the first occasion the Italians would again revolt; that occasions would necessarily occur again and again whilst France, and Switzerland, and Italy should remain in the political state in which those countries now are; that if it were possible to find means for a complete and amicable settlement with the Italians, it would be a happy thing for Austria.

Count Ficquelmont said that I was in error if I believed that all the Italian population was hostile to the Austrians, that on the contrary, there were large numbers who disapproved greatly of what the Milanese agitators and others had done; that if Austria chose to avail itself of its actual power to raise the peasantry against their superiors, it would have perfect facility in procuring the ruin and destruction of those persons; but, added the Count, "that is a policy I would rather die than adopt."

I have now reported to your Lordship the main points, so far as I know, of the particular question I have touched upon. I am unable to see a remedy for present evils. The intervention of the Piedmontese has complicated things, and may perhaps lead to still greater complications.

I called yesterday upon M. Delacour, the new French Chargé d'Affaires. He informed me that he was directed by his Government to consult with me upon every occasion, for the object of assimilating, as far as possible, the policy of England and France; and then he mentioned to me the project for settling affairs in Lombardy by some pecuniary transaction, as an indemnification to the Austrians for giving up the country.

Your Lordship has heard of the expulsion of the Dukes of Parma and Modena from their territories. That event must contribute to the difficulties of the times.

I presume that the Austrian army will occupy the line of the Mincio, &c. They will, of course, be very strong in such positions, and I do not know where there is a force to drive them from thence or to take their fortresses. The French profess peace. The Hungarians, being now content with what has been done by the Austrian Government, have offered with eagerness to furnish the Imperial Government with any number of men that can be wished for by that Government. The Croats, &c., have also offered Count Ficquelmont any number of men for the same service.

It appears, as I think, that many of those who looked with apathy upon the position of the Emperor's affairs have altered their opinion considerably, and incline to think that their own interests are much engaged in the preservation of the power of the House of Hapsburg.

Count Ficquelmont spoke of the engagement of England, in common with other powers, to respect the territorial divisions of Italy, including the Austrian territories of Lombardy, &c., and asked if England would approve of the attempt made by the King of Sardinia on Lombardy, which, if it succeeded, would destroy that subdivision. I replied that I did not know what would be the conduct of Her Majesty's Government on this occasion, but that I would not say that I believed the British Government would make war upon the King of Sardinia, or adopt coercive measures to oblige that Monarch to desist from his enterprise. The Count said, "We must rely upon ourselves."

I added that I felt sure Her Majesty's Government would be glad to be useful to the Austrian Government, and anxious to preserve peace, and I asked if he could suggest means for that purpose. He rejoined, "All I am by the past entitled to hope for from your Government is their counsel to the Sardinian King, and that the English Diplomatic Agents in Italy should be instructed not to act in a hostile spirit against us. The English influence in Italy is at this moment the only influence—and it is great." Your Lordship will recollect that the Count said the same thing to me at a previous interview.

I must hope that the Lombards will feel the advantages they would derive from being under the Crown of the Emperor, and entitled to the support of the whole empire against any foreign enemy. They might enjoy full authority within their own limits to manage all their own affairs, to employ only their own people in every civil office, and perhaps to have only their own people employed as officers in their army.

There would be, I presume, arrangements made for the proportion of the public debt which should fall to their share; for fixing also the amount they should pay for certain expenses which the Central Government would incur for diplomatic and other services; and what part of the cost which might be imposed upon the Government by a war.

It would perhaps be insisted upon by Austria that the Emperor should keep in his hands the great fortresses. Upon this last point it may be observed that even if the Milanese and their friends should gain possession of their own and other cities and towns, it would still be a work of no small difficulty and cost for them to take those fortresses from the Austrians.

I have thus cursorily spoken of certain things which might be considered, if any arrangement should be contemplated by Austria and the Lombards. I do not know how what I have said would apply to Venice. None of these things I presume could be done until the Piedmontese affair shall have been settled.

Ce soir donc (le 24 Mars), le Roi s'est décidé à intervenir militairement en Lombardie, et la communication dont je joins ici copie, a été faite au Ministre d'Autriche ainsi qu'à ceux de Prusse, de Russie, et d'Angleterre.

Cette détermination de Sa Majesté était impérieusement exigée par les circonstances actuelles de l'Italie, où le sentiment de l'indépendance nationale est porté au plus haut degré. Il y avait aussi à craindre que les nombreuses associations politiques existantes en Lombardie et la proximité de la Suisse ne fissent proclamer un Gouvernement Républicain. Cette forme aurait été fatale à la cause Italienne, à notre Gouvernement, à l'auguste dynastie de Savoie; il fallait prendre un parti prompt et décisif; le Gouvernement et le Roi n'ont pas hésité; et ils sont intimement persuadés d'avoir opéré, au prix des dangers auxquels ils s'exposent, le salut des autres Etats Monarchiques.

No. 215.—The Marquis of Normanby to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received April 8.)

MY LORD,

Paris, April 7, 1848.

I INQUIRED of M. Lamartine this morning what was the correct version of the most recent intelligence from Savoy.

He stated in reply that a sort of half revolution had been effected there, and that the workmen who had returned to their country had, in consequence of the feebleness of the authorities, proclaimed a Republic at Chambéry; but that after a short time the priests had collected the peasants from the neighbouring mountains, and they had entered the town and restored the royal authority of Charles Albert. M. Lamartine added that the French Government were entirely free from all blame in this transaction; that notwithstanding the difficulties which beset M. Arago, the Commissary at Lyons, he had acted with great energy; the Savoyards had been prevented from entering their country with arms, or in any large numbers, however they might have reunited after passing the frontier and crossing the Mont de Chat.

I then asked M. Lamartine what was the explanation of a bulletin in the "Moniteur" of this morning, concerning what was called the Army of the Alps; that taken in connexion with all these transactions, it was rather a threatening title.

He reminded me that it was the usual title for the division of the French army assembled in those provinces in time of peace; that it had existed under all Governments, the Government of the Restoration included. But he had no objection to state to me personally exactly what was his view in collecting about 60,000 men in those provinces. There was no desire to interfere in the internal concerns of any other country; but since the late expedition of the King of Sardinia, it was impossible not to feel that events might occur which it would be difficult for the French Government to view with indifference. If in consequence of any defeat of Charles Albert, he was to be in difficulties, and Italy likely to be exposed to a prolonged warfare on the part of its population against an Austrian army, he should then think it was a case, not for any isolated step on the part of France, but for the intervention of an armed diplomacy; that his first object, if the case arose, would be to consult with us, and endeavour to come to an understanding with the British Government, and, if possible, with Europe, as to a settlement of the Italian questions.

In the second place, he said, the formation of a strong army in the neighbourhood of Lyons was not a matter of indifference for the maintenance of order, considering the present state of that large manufacturing population.

No. 216.—The Hon. R. Abercromby to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received April 8.)

Turin, March 27, 1848.

I THIS morning had a conversation with the Marquis Pareto, upon the intentions of the Sardinian Government now that the determination had been taken to advance the Piedmontese army across the frontiers of the Austrian provinces in Italy.

The Marquis Pareto stated that this declaration of war against Austria had a twofold object: 1st, to drive the Austrians for ever out of Italy; 2ndly, to assist the Provisional Government formed at Milan.

Turin, March 27, 1848.

BARON WARD arrived at Turin late the night before last.

The Duke of Parma having granted a constitution, which had been accepted with satisfaction by his subjects, the Baron had been sent to this Court.

News arrived yesterday that Piacenza had, by order of Marshal Radetzky, been evacuated and the garrison withdrawn, and the 800 Austrians who had been stationed in the town of Parma had retreated to Colorno on the Po, where they had surrendered their ammunition, and had only not quitted the Parmesan territory because their passage through the country of Casal Maggiore had been opposed by the Lombards.

No. 222.—Sir G. Hamilton to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. April 9.)

MY LORD,

Florence, April 1, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit a despatch from Mr. Petre, stating the movement of troops from Rome to the northern frontier, under the command of Generals Durando and Ferrari.

The same despatch also mentions that the Sardinian Minister at Rome has publicly announced the intention of his Sovereign to effect with his army the liberation of Italy from Austria.

I have the honour to enclose a Florence Gazette of March 30th, containing 2 important motuproprios. The first of these imposes an additional burden of 1-3rd of the present taxation throughout the Grand Duchy, excepting Lucca, and likewise a tax on all public salaries, graduated in proportion to the amount of each, from 1 to 5 per cent.

The sum of 700,000 lire is also to be raised from the trade and commerce of the Grand Duchy generally.

The object of this taxation is to provide for the exigencies of the war contemplated against Austria, and in consideration of Tuscany having to furnish her contingent as a member of the Italian League.

The 2nd motuproprio states the intention of the Government to send troops, which had before been only destined for the frontier, to a rendezvous between Modena and Reggio, to co-operate with those already on the march from Sardinia and Rome.

Since the departure of the Duke of Modena great confusion has prevailed in that territory. Some attempts appear to have been made at counter-revolution, and the Provisional Governments at Modena and Reggio are reported to entertain different views in respect of the ulterior settlement of that country.

The Lunigiana, both on the side of Modena and of Parma, including Fivizzano and Pontremoli, have proclaimed the nullity of the Treaty of 1844, and their determination to belong to Tuscany, which, indeed, has already occupied them with her volunteers.

Piacenza, since the evacuation of the fortress, has declared itself for a separation, but Parma as yet remains loyal to the Duke, and has willingly accepted the constitution which was offered by the advice of Baron Ward.

The press at Florence, on this account, expresses much indignation both against Baron Ward and the people of Parma, as the expulsion of the Duke of Parma and the annexation of the whole of Modena and Parma to Tuscany is assumed here as an incontrovertible right.

Your Lordship will doubtless have received through Mr. Abercromby, an account of all the military events connected with the insurrection in Lombardy since the evacuation of Milan.

All the fortresses have been abandoned which are not in the line of defence of the rivers Adige and Mincio. But the last accounts which have reached Florence describe the determination of the Austrian commanders to defend other fortresses, and particularly Mantua and Ferrara, to the last extremity.

General Gorgowski, who commands at Mantua, received a deputation from the town demanding the surrender of the place. He showed them a small key, which, he said, opened the door leading to the mines, and declared his intention to light the train himself and blow up the fortress and perish, rather than capitulate.

The Grand Duke of Tuscany has issued a motuproprio removing all custom-house duties between the States of Tuscany and Modena.

The arrival of 6,000 Neapolitan troops is expected at Florence, which were to be landed at Leghorn, and are to proceed to the seat of war without delay.

The Government has sent in a note to the Austrian Chargé d'Affaires, who still remains at Florence, justifying the armament against Austria on the general ground of the state of events, and the danger that would menace the throne of Tuscany, which renders such a policy inevitable.

Your Lordship will observe that the Grand Duke of Tuscany has recently abandoned, in all public documents and proclamations, the titles of Archduke of Austria and Prince of Hungary, and I have further to inform your Lordship that when he has appeared at the opera he has been saluted by the audience as King of Etruria.

No. 228.—Viscount Palmerston to Lord Napier.

MY LORD,

Foreign Office, April 11, 1848.

WITH reference to your Lordship's despatch of the 28th ultimo, reporting what passed between M. Troja and yourself on the subject of the indignity offered to the Austrian Ambassador at Naples, and on the subject of the manifesto encouraging volunteers to enlist for the invasion of Lombardy, I have to inform your Lordship that Her Majesty's Government approve of the language held by you on that occasion; and I have to instruct you to point out to the Neapolitan Minister that the Neapolitan Government is, by such proceedings, engaging in that very interference in the internal affairs of another country with which Naples is not at war, which the Liberal party all over Italy made it the standing reproach against the Austrian Government that it was likely and meditating to commit. What is law for one party ought equally to be law for the other; and if the Liberals of Italy objected, and with justice, to an interference of Austrian troops in the internal affairs of Naples, so also ought they, upon the same principle, to condemn an interference by the Neapolitan Government in the internal affairs of the Austrian dominions.

In point of fact, it is an act which in its nature is war, and it is worth while for the Government of Naples well to pause before it commences unprovoked war against Austria, even while Austria is in the embarrassments which at present weigh upon her.

I am, &c.

Lord Napier.

WITH reference to your despatch of the 27th ultimo, reporting on the supposed intentions of the Sardinian Government with regard to Lombardy, I have to inform you that Her Majesty's Government approve the language which you held to the Marquis Pareto on this subject; and I have to instruct you to say to the Sardinian Minister, that the conflict into which Sardinia has entered must be admitted to be one of doubtful result, and that the principle on which it has been commenced is one full of danger.

I HAVE to instruct you to exhort the Sardinian Government to accept the offer made by the Duke of Parma to join the Italian Com-

MY LORD,

Turin, April 6, 1848.

I AM this moment returned from the Foreign Office, and it is with much pleasure that I am able, from the official reports received by the Sardinian Government from Chambéry, to contradict the information that the invasion of the workmen from Lyons had been successful; that His Sardinian Majesty's authority in the Duchy of Savoy had been overthrown; and that a Provisional Government had been established in its stead.

It would seem that after the inhabitants of the town of Chambéry and of the neighbourhood had recovered from the effects of their panic, they regained courage, and after a sharp struggle of some hours, in which several of the invaders were killed and wounded, the workmen were completely defeated, several made prisoners, and the remainder dispersed over the country, where it will be difficult for them to escape from the vigilance of the peasants, who appear to be much exasperated by this unprovoked and undesired invasion of their country.

The accounts add that the best spirit of loyalty towards the House of Savoy has shown itself on this occasion.

MY LORD,

Turin, April 6, 1848.

BY accounts received from the army, the head-quarters of His Sardinian Majesty will be this day at Marcara, in the direction of Mantua.

A Piedmontese corps has crossed the Mincio at Goito.

The left of the Piedmontese army has advanced to the position of Montechiaro, and the Austrians appear to be directing their retreat upon Verona.

The fortress of Legnago on the Adige, in the rear of Mantua, and between that fortress and Verona, has fallen into the hands of the Italians.

This event opens the country from Venice to the seat of war.

Au Ministre des Affaires Etrangères du Royaume Britannique.

LES provinces de l'ancien Etat Vénitien, en prenant le nom de République, ont cru obéir à leur passé et à la nécessité des choses. Une nation telle que l'Anglaise, chez laquelle le respect des traditions est une espèce de dogme social, doit sentir ce qu'il y avait de sacré pour ces provinces dans leurs anciens souvenirs. Un Gouvernement constitutionnel dans ce pays et dans l'état actuel des esprits, n'aurait été qu'une transition incommode, dangereuse, et la cause des révolutions, peut-être suivies d'un despotisme pire que les précédents. Nous avons cru que le seul moyen de rester indépendants, c'était d'être libres. Mais le même sentiment qui nous conseillait une telle résolution nous impose le respect de tout Gouvernement établi. Nous ne doutons point des sympathies de cette grande nation où le sentiment de liberté est un instinct, et qui par la grandeur de ses vues et la persévérance de ses volontés rappelle plus que toute autre le succès et les gloires de Rome ancienne. Le drapeau Vénitien en rencontrant sur les mers le drapeau Britannique recevra toujours, nous l'espérons, un salut amical.

No. 237.—Sir George Hamilton to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received April 12.)

MY LORD,

Florence, April 3, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit, for your Lordship's information, 2 notes which have been addressed to the Austrian Chargé d'Affaires, and officially inclosed by the Tuscan Minister for Foreign Affairs to all the foreign Representatives at the Court of Florence.

The first of these documents is for the purpose of justifying the motives of the Grand Duke in having aided in the hostile operations against Austria with reference to the insurrection in Lombardy; and I would call your Lordship's attention to that remarkable part of it in which the Minister states that it was necessary that the Grand Duke should yield to the wishes of his people in this respect for the preservation of his throne.

The second note relates to the destruction of the Imperial arms at Florence, which were insulted and publicly burnt by a Tuscan mob.

This latter communication has been made generally to the Diplomatic Body, in order to prevent a remonstrance by the foreign Ministers, which was already under consideration.

I am enabled, at the same time, to transmit to your Lordship a copy of the reply made by Baron de Schnitzer Meeran to Don Neri Corsini, with reference to Lombardy.

In acknowledging the Minister's 2 communications, which were sent to me by his Excellency without any comments, I have made in my reply, which I have the honour to inclose, a protest against the outrage committed at the Austrian Minister's house, and have expressed my earnest hope that precautions may be used to prevent a recurrence of so unjustifiable an act.

I have received information this morning that the French fleet, under Admiral Baudin, is expected at the Bay of Spezzia, and to anchor in that roadstead.

From private accounts which have reached me this morning, I am afraid that excesses have been committed by the Leghorn volunteers at Carrara; they forcibly entered and took possession of private houses, seizing every article that was valuable.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

Je me suis empressé de soumettre à Son Altesse Impériale et Royale le Grand Duc, mon auguste maître, la lettre confidentielle que vous avez bien voulu m'adresser ce matin.

Son Altesse m'a chargé de vous signifier que profondément indignée de l'attentat commis hier au soir contre la Légation Impériale, elle trouvait un soulagement à la fâcheuse impression que cet événement a produit sur son esprit dans l'espoir de vous exprimer personnellement tous ses regrets à la réunion de ce soir, où elle avait espéré que vous seriez intervenu.

Je saisis cette occasion pour vous donner l'assurance que toutes les dispositions sont prises pour qu'une surveillance spéciale soit portée sur les environs de la Légation.

NERI CORSINI.

Florence, 29 Mars, 1848.

M. LE Commandeur de Schnitzer Meeran, Chargé Affaires d'Autriche, connaît sans doute aussi bien que le Soussigné, les graves événements qui viennent d'avoir lieu en Lombardie : l'évacuation forcée de Milan par les troupes Impériales ; l'insurrection éclatée dans d'autres villes, et dans les campagnes voisines ; des conflits sanglans partout entre les populations armées et les soldats Autrichiens.

Cette situation, comme peut bien le comprendre M. de Schnitzer Meeran, réagit sur les populations des autres Etats de la Péninsule. L'esprit de nationalité en est vivement excité ; et l'appel et la sympathie la plus prononcée.

Tout cela entretient dans la capitale et dans les provinces du Grand Duché une agitation telle qu'il est à craindre d'un moment à l'autre une commotion des plus graves si l'on ne s'empresse de satisfaire au vœu généralement exprimé de voir nos troupes et nos milices prendre part à la lutte dans laquelle leurs confrères de la Lombardie se trouvent engagés.

C'est dans cet état de choses que Monseigneur le Grand Duc se croit obligé de satisfaire au vœu susdit, dans l'intérêt bien entendu de toute l'Italie et dans celui de l'ordre et de la tranquillité de ses propres Etats, ainsi que de la conservation de son trône.

J'AI l'honneur d'accuser la réception de la note que votre Excellence m'a adressée en date d'avant-hier, pour m'annoncer que Son Altesse Impériale et Royale Monseigneur le Grand Duc, votre auguste maître, attendu la réaction que les nouvelles des derniers événements dans la Lombardie exercent sur les provinces du Grand Duché, se croit obligé, dans l'intérêt bien entendu de toute l'Italie, et dans celui de l'ordre et de la tranquillité de ses propres Etats, ainsi que de la conservation de son trône, de satisfaire aux vœux généralement exprimés de voir les troupes et les milices Toscannes prendre part à la lutte des Lombards. Tout en faisant la part dûe à la gravité des circonstances qui ont déterminé Son Altesse Impériale et Royale à prendre cette mesure, il est de mon devoir de préserver, ainsi que j'entends le faire par la présente, le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté l'Empereur, mon auguste seigneur et maître, contre toute conséquence qui pourrait en résulter ou qui voudrait en être tirée, considérant la communication de votre Excellence simplement comme une ouverture à transmettre à mon Gouvernement, ce que je viens de faire par le courrier d'hier. Les anciens rapports d'intimité et les liens de parenté qui unissent les 2 augustes Souverains étant pour moi l'objet d'un trop profond respect pour prendre de suite la détermination qui dans toute autre circonstance serait une suite naturelle d'une communication de cette nature, je me suis déterminé d'attendre les instructions qui me seront transmises par mon Gouvernement pour régler d'après elles ma conduite ultérieure. J'ai, &c.

I HAD the honour of receiving yesterday your Excellency's notes to me of the 29th and 30th ultimo, containing copies of the communications which your Excellency had addressed by His Imperial and Royal Highness the Grand Duke of Tuscany's orders to the Austrian Chargé d'Affaires at this Court, one on the subject of the military assistance afforded by the Grand Duchy to their Lombard brothers, the other expressing His Imperial Highness's regrets at the outrage which had lately been committed by the populace at Florence in tearing down and burning the Imperial arms.

I have to thank your Excellency for these communications, at the same time I think it my duty, as a member of the Diplomatic Body at this Court, to enter my most solemn protest against such lawless proceedings as characterized the outrage committed at the Austrian Minister's house, and to express my earnest hope that measures will in future be taken against the possibility of such a repetition of the infraction of the "Droit des Gens." PIUS PP. IX.

To the People of Italy, Health and Apostolic Benediction.

THE events which these 2 months have seen succeeding and pressing on each other with so rapid change, are not the work of man. Woe to him who in this wind which agitates, splits, and breaks to pieces cedars and oaks, hears not the voice of the Lord! Woe to human pride, if to the faults or merit of any whatsoever men is attributed these wonderful changes, instead of adoring the hidden designs of Providence, in whose hands are all the boundaries of the earth! And we, to whom is given the word to interpret the mute eloquence of the works of God, we cannot be silent in the midst of the desires, the fears, the hopes which agitate the minds of our children.

And we must first make known to you, that if our heart were moved at hearing how in a part of Italy the dangers of combats were provided against by the comforts of religion, and that by acts of charity the nobleness of minds was made known, we could not, however, nor can we not but be deeply grieved by the outrages committed in other places against the ministers of this religion itself; which, even if we, contrary to our duty, were to pass over in silence, it could not be that our silence would not diminish the efficacy of our benedictions.

We cannot, moreover, not tell you that the good use of victory is greater and more difficult than conquering. If the present time recalls to mind another of your history, let the errors of your fathers be of use to their descendants. Remember that all stability and all prosperity has concord for its primary civil reason; that God alone is He who makes the inhabitants of one and the same house unanimous; that God grants this reward to the humble alone, to the gentle, to those who respect his laws in the liberty of his Church, in the good order of society, in charity towards all men. Remember that justice alone builds up—that passions destroy; and He who takes the name of King of Kings, likewise entitles himself the ruler of the people.

May our prayers ascend in the sight of the Lord, and cause to descend on you that spirit of counsel, of strength, and of wisdom of which the fear of God is the beginning; so that our eyes may see peace on all this land of Italy, which if in our universal charity for all the Catholic world we cannot call the most beloved, God willed, however, that it should be the nearest to us.

Datum Romæ apud S. Mariam Majorem die 30 Martii, 1848, pontificatus nostri anno secundo.

DIETRICHSTEIN,

M. LE COMTE, Vienne, le 5 Avril, 1848.

DANS des circonstances différentes de celles au milieu desquelles nous sommes placés, je me serais fait un devoir, M. l'Ambassadeur, de répondre sans retard aux intéressants rapports que votre Excellence a soumis au Cabinet Impérial par son expédition du 13 Mars. Il eût été de la plus haute importance pour nous, de faire connaître au Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique les événements qui se sont succédés dans le mois de Mars en Italie, considérés du point de départ des droits et des intérêts de l'Empire d'Autriche; il nous a été cependant impossible de satisfaire à l'importance d'un devoir que nous avions à remplir envers nous-mêmes; car c'est un devoir de parler sincèrement à une Cour anciennement amie et alliée. Il nous eût été facile de vous entretenir des difficultés de notre situation en Italie; car, quoique grandes, elles sont d'une nature claire et positive ; nous avons pour nous des Traités, des droits, des intérêts légitimes et de premier ordre ; nous avons contre nous une révolte morale que nous étions occupés d'apaiser dans des voies de conciliation, lorsque cette révolte devint une rébellion à main armée. Toute l'Italie excitait depuis longtemps nos provinces à se soulever ; les 2 foyers de la plus vive excitation étaient Gênes et Turin ; peu de jours après que ce soulèvement eût éclaté, le Roi de Sardaigne promit solennellement aux insurgés de venir à leur secours, et l'armée Piémontaise vint remplir cette promesse.

Il n'y avait dans l'ensemble de votre expédition par laquelle vous nous avez rendu compte de vos derniers entretiens avec Lord Palmerston comme dans la teneur de la dépêche que le Principal Secrétaire d'Etat venait d'adresser en date du 13 Mars à M. l'Envoyé d'Angleterre à Turin, que des raisons pour nous de nous adresser au Cabinet Anglais, pour lui demander quelle suite il croirait devoir donner à la déclaration que l'Envoyé Anglais, M. Abercromby, venait d'être chargé de faire à la Cour de Sardaigne ; il faut que nous ayons eu de graves raisons pour ne pas l'avoir fait sur le champ. Ces raisons, nous allons vous les dire, en vous priant, M. l'Ambassadeur, de les porter à la connaissance de sa Seigneurie le Principal Secrétaire d'Etat.

Nous ne croyons pas avoir besoin de vous exposer les causes qui ont amené le changement du système politique de l'Autriche, et qui viennent de placer notre empire sur une autre base. Il suffit de prendre ce changement comme un fait. La facilité avec laquelle il s'est accompli prouve qu'il a été à la fois un produit du temps et des hommes ; elle prouve surtout, et je mets cette preuve en tout premier lieu, parcequ'elle est la plus importante pour notre avenir, que la famille Impériale a su comprendre la maturité de l'événement. D'anciennes convictions sont une tradition vivante dans le sein de la maison de Hapsbourg. C'est à l'aide de son illustre et longue éducation historique qu'elle avait pendant plusieurs siècles porté, comme si elle eut été héréditaire, la couronne élective de l'Empire d'Allemagne. C'est par suite de ces mêmes convictions, qu'on a vu la maison Impériale conserver dans chacun de ces pays héréditaires ce qui lui appartenait en propre nationalité, lois, et coutumes. Le changement actuel n'est donc que le retour à d'anciennes maximes du Gouvernement, maximes dont le mouvement naturel avait été paralysé par un principe de centralisation administrative, qui s'était plus ou moins imposé en Europe à tous les Gouvernements.

Si la résolution de changer ce système a été d'autant plus facile à prendre que ce changement se rattachait à d'anciens souvenirs, il ne l'est pas autant de transformer une administration fortement organisée. Le mouvement universel qui agite l'Europe a toute la violence d'un état de révolution, dont la première exigence est de briser la mesure du temps, et d'ajouter la difficulté de faire vite, à celle qui en toute chose existe toujours, de faire bien.

Voilà en 2 mots l'exposé de notre situation, qui était de nature à absorber tous nos soins, je dirai plus, toutes nos facultés. Il fallait déplacer les rouages les plus élevés de l'administration du terrain sur lequel il faut établir la base du nouvel ordre des choses ; c'est ce qui vient de se faire ; ce n'est que dès ce moment que je pouvais avoir la faculté d'entretenir un Cabinet étranger de nos intérêts politiques, et c'est au Cabinet Anglais que s'adressent nos premières paroles.

Depuis que j'ai été appelé à prendre le Ministère des Affaires Etrangères, j'ai eu 2 entretiens avec Lord Ponsonby ; il en aura rendu compte au Principal Secrétaire d'Etat.

Lord Ponsonby est un homme trop éclairé pour ne pas voir toutes les difficultés de notre position intérieure ; il est en même temps trop sincère pour ne pas m'en avoir entretenu. Je lui ai dit que les difficultés intérieures étaient notre affaire ; que nous nous en tirerions comme nous pourrions ; mais que si le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique tenait encore à l'ancien principe d'alliance qui pendant si longtemps a servi de base aux relations de nos 2 Gouvernements, ce serait dans des voies politiques qu'il lui serait possible de venir en aide à notre position ; que le mouvement général qui s'était emparé de toute la Péninsule Italienne avait entraîné nos provinces ; que la guerre que nous avions à y soutenir réagirait d'une manière fort embarrassante pour nous. "C'est le point de vos affaires qui nous occupe le plus," dit Lord Ponsonby, "parce que l'Italie pourrait devenir l'occasion d'une guerre générale ; le Gouvernement de la République Française aura besoin de la guerre pour se soutenir ; nous désirons que vous ne lui en donniez pas l'occasion en Italie."

Ce thème fut discuté entre nous dans les 2 entretiens que j'ai eus avec l'Ambassadeur ; comme les événements ont marché très vite pendant le temps qui s'est écoulé entre les deux, il serait inutile de les retracer ; je ne m'arrêterai qu'aux résultats.

Lord Ponsonby avait eu l'inquiétude que si la guerre nous conduisait sur le territoire Piémontais, la France interviendrait ; je lui dis donc que le soulèvement général du Royaume Lombard-Vénitien avait changé cette situation ; que les Piémontais venaient d'envahir la Lombardie ; que si nous parvenions à les repousser sur leur territoire, nous nous trouverions tellement occupés, ou de la soumission ou de la pacification de nos propres provinces, que je pouvais d'avance lui donner la certitude que nous ne poursuivrions pas hors de nos provinces les succès que nous pourrions avoir.

"Du reste," ai-je ajouté, "Milord, le sort de l'Italie est dans les mains de l'Angleterre ; vous êtes aujourd'hui la seule Puissance qui y ait de l'influence ; elle est d'autant plus grande qu'elle est seule ; le renversement si facile de Louis Philippe, l'établissement d'une République en France, ont inspiré une véritable épouvante ; on craint le secours autant qu'on craindrait l'hostilité ; mais en reconnaissant votre puissance, ce dont certainement vous n'avez aucun droit de vous plaindre, permettez-moi de reporter en même temps sur vous la responsabilité des événements, au moins quant à ce qui nous regarde."

Nous avons en effet le droit d'en appeler à l'Angleterre. Vous trouverez, M. le Comte, dans la dépêche qui suit, le très court exposé historique de la guerre que nous fait aujourd'hui le Piémont. Je ne me sens pas à l'aise en vous chargeant de demander à sa Seigneurie le Principal Secrétaire d'Etat, jusqu'où pourra aller l'interprétation qu'il croira devoir donner à sa dépêche du 23 Mars à M. Abercromby ; elle est écrite dans un tout autre ordre d'idées que celle d'une guerre que le Piémont ferait à l'Autriche ; et cependant de cette interprétation dépendra le plus ou moins de facilité, j'irai même plus loin, et je dirai de possibilité, que nous trouverons à pacifier nos provinces Italiennes.

Il y a quelquefois des événements qui semblent marqués au coin d'une hostile fatalité.

Le soulèvement du Royaume Lombard-Vénitien a eu lieu au moment même où l'Empereur Ferdinand venait de prendre la résolution pour ainsi dire spontanée d'accorder à ses peuples ce qui lui a été démontré être un vœu universel ; de manière que les populations Italiennes, qui auraient trouvé dans la patente Impériale plus même qu'elles n'avaient demandé, n'ont pas pu en avoir connaissance, sur le bruit des armes qui les empêcha d'entendre les paroles souveraines.

La position que vient de prendre l'armée Autrichienne entre la Lombardie et le Vénitien amènera un temps d'arrêt, qui sera mis à profit pour l'œuvre de la pacification.

Un Commissaire Impérial va partir pour l'Italie, muni de pleins pouvoirs nécessaires pour négocier une réconciliation sur les bases plus larges qui sont une suite naturelle et voulue du nouveau système politique que vient d'adopter l'Autriche. Nous croyons donc que le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique trouverait dans l'ensemble de ces considérations des motifs suffisants pour se convaincre, qu'appuyer la position de la Cour d'Autriche dans les limites de ses possessions Italiennes serait tout autant conforme aux intérêts de l'Angleterre qu'à ceux de l'Autriche ; le concert de ces 2 intérêts rétablirait une garantie en faveur du maintien de la paix générale, dont les bases sont aujourd'hui si fortement ébranlées.

Veuillez, M. l'Ambassadeur, donner lecture de cette dépêche à Lord Palmerston, lui en laisser une copie, et nous faire connaître les résolutions que prendra le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique.

M. LE COMTE,

Vienne, le 5 Avril, 1848.

LE Roi de Sardaigne vient de se mettre en état de guerre contre l'Autriche sans l'avoir déclarée; le fait ne nous a certes pas surpris, depuis plusieurs mois nous pouvions nous y attendre; jour par jour le Roi Charles-Albert faisait un pas de plus dans cette direction; son Ministère ne cessait cependant pas de chercher à se maintenir dans les meilleurs termes avec la mission de l'Empereur à Turin, ainsi que directement avec le Cabinet Impérial à Vienne. Les plaintes que M. le Comte de Buol eut souvent à porter contre les attaques d'une presse qui n'était pas encore libre et qui se livrait sans aucune réserve à tous les genres de diffamation du Gouvernement Impérial, et à l'excitation la plus directe adressée sous toutes les formes aux Lombards-Vénitiens pour les entraîner à la révolte, leur promettant le secours des armées Piémontaises; ces plaintes si fondées n'obtinrent d'autre réponse que celle de l'expression de l'impuissance dans laquelle se trouvait le Roi de réprimer de pareilles manifestations, qu'il ne pourrait pas se dépopulariser et affaiblir son propre pouvoir au profit d'un Gouvernement étranger; les phrases de banale excuse accompagnaient ordinairement cet aveu de faiblesse qui dans les premiers tems de cette position n'était que simulé, mais qui plus tard, nous voulons le croire par suite de cette complicité, devint une vérité.

Les choses en étaient à ce point et ne nous laissaient aucun doute sur les intentions de la Cour de Turin, lorsque vint à éclater l'insurrection de Milan, le 18 Mars.

Dès que la nouvelle en fut arrivée à Turin, le Gouvernement Piémontais s'empressa d'autoriser la formation de différents bataillons de volontaires dans lesquels tout étranger qui n'aurait pas déserté ses drapeaux pouvait être admis.

Le Ministre d'Autriche à Turin ayant adressé à ce sujet quelques observations à M. le Marquis Pareto, celui-ci lui fit une réponse évasive et peu satisfaisante qui termine par la phrase suivante :

Tel fut à la date du 22 Mars, le langage officiel du Gouvernement Piémontais.

Le lendemain 23, parut à Turin le manifeste connu, par lequel le Roi Charles-Albert offre aux insurgés de la Lombardie le secours de ses armes.

Sous la même date le Marquis Pareto adressa au Comte Buol la note ci-jointe en copie.

Le contenu de cette pièce ne laissa plus d'autre parti à pendre au Comte de Buol que de demander ses passeports. Il le fit au moyen de la note ci-annexée, à laquelle le Marquis Pareto fit la réponse également ci-jointe en copie.

Le principal argument mis en avant par le Marquis Pareto pour justifier l'intervention armée du Roi de Sardaigne dans les troubles de la Lombardie, est puisé dans l'existence du Traité d'alliance défensive conclu naguère entre l'Autriche et les Ducs de Parme et de Modène. Ce Traité, selon le Marquis Pareto, serait attentatoire au droit de réversion que possède la Sardaigne sur le Duché de Plaisance.

Rien n'est facile comme de mettre au néant les sophismes par lesquels on a tâché de colorer l'invasion de la Lombardie.

Le Traité attaqué par la Sardaigne comme portant atteinte à ses droits, a été signé entre des Puissances indépendantes, entièrement libres de le signer selon leurs droits et leur convenance.

La présence des troupes Autrichiennes, soit à Plaisance, soit dans les Duchés de Parme, n'était ni une occupation, ni bien moins encore une prise de possession. Loin de porter atteinte à aucun des droits de souveraineté du Duc régnant, elle en était au contraire une émanation directe.

L'occupation de la place de Plaisance est un fait isolé dans cette question ; il est d'une autre nature puisqu'il repose sur une stipulation de l'Acte du Congrès de Vienne. Mais quelle que soit la cause de la présence des troupes Autrichiennes dans les Duchés de Parme et de Plaisance, cette présence ne porte pas non plus atteinte aux droits de réversibilité acquis à la Couronne de Sardaigne, droits anciens qui ont reçu leur dernière confirmation, conjointement à ceux de la Cour de Vienne, par le Traité de Paris du 10 Juin, 1817.

Ce Traité et les conditions de réversibilité qu'il contient ne sauraient enlever au Duc de Parme et de Plaisance aucun des droits dont il jouit en vertu de sa position politique de Souverain indépendant ; le droit de réversibilité auquel sont soumis les 2 Duchés n'enlève à ce Souverain aucun autre droit politique que celui de ne pouvoir aliéner aucune partie de ses possessions territoriales soumises à la clause de réversibilité.

La Cour d'Autriche a un intérêt commun avec celle de Sardaigne, celui de maintenir cette clause et les conséquences dans toute leur intégrité, puisque ce Traité de réversibilité ne peut exister isolément en faveur d'une de ces 2 Cours, sans exister à la fois pour l'autre.

Ce Traité n'a d'ailleurs d'autre but que celui de fixer l'éventualité d'un droit qui ne peut exister qu'au moment de l'extinction de la succession directe de la maison régnante des Ducs de Parme.

Il nous reste à faire une grave observation sur la nature du manifeste signé par le Roi Charles-Albert en date du 23 Mars, adressé aux Lombards-Vénitiens, par lequel il leur annonce la résolution qu'il a prise de venir à leur secours, et de conquérir de concert avec eux l'indépendance du territoire Italien du joug étranger. Si le Roi de Sardaigne croyait avoir le droit de déclarer la guerre à Sa Majesté Impériale, &c., qu'il accusait d'avoir violé les droits qui lui étaient acquis sur une partie des Duchés de Parme et de Plaisance, pourquoi donc ne pas donner cette forme à son manifeste ? pourquoi donc adresser son manifeste aux sujets révoltés de l'Empereur ? Il nous serait difficile de trouver un précédent comparable à celui-ci de la part d'un Gouvernement qui aurait occupé une place régulière dans les rangs des Puissances Européennes.

Nous comprenons les révolutions ; qui ne les comprendrait pas de nos jours ? mais nous ne comprenons pas qu'un Gouvernement régulier, qui était encore dans toute la plénitude de son organisation politique, ait pu, pour ainsi dire, de plein gré quitter la place qu'il occupait pour se ranger dans les insurrections populaires.

Nous comprenons aussi ces insurrections populaires ; nous connaissons leur organisation, les forces qui les mettent en mouvement ; nous comprenons encore qu'un Gouvernement puisse vouloir mettre à profit ces insurrections, qu'il ait même secrètement favorisé leur explosion ; mais ce que nous ne comprenons pas, c'est que ce Gouvernement puisse lui-même se mettre dans les rangs de cette insurrection.

Si le Cabinet Anglais n'était pas encore en parfaite connaissance des faits de cette époque, veuillez alors, M. l'Ambassadeur, communiquer cette dépêche à M. le Principal Secrétaire d'Etat.

FICQUELMONT.

Turin, le 23 Mars, 1848.

MALGRE les nombreuses observations que M. le Comte de Buol, &c., lui a présentées à l'égard de la convenance ou non d'une intervention dans les Etats de la Lombardie, le Soussigné, &c., croit de son devoir de présenter à l'examen et à l'appréciation de M. le Comte les considérations suivantes pour justifier les mesures que le Gouvernement du Roi se croit en devoir et dans le droit de prendre à l'occasion des troubles graves et des terribles événements qui viennent d'éclater dans ce pays.

Le premier devoir et le droit imprescriptible d'un Etat est sans doute d'assurer la conservation de sa propre existence ; or, lorsque des événements de force majeure, événements qui, par leur gravité, par la bien juste sympathie qu'ils excitent dans le pays, surgissant dans les Etats limitrophes mettent cette existence en danger d'être compromise, le Gouvernement a sans doute le droit de prendre toutes les précautions nécessaires pour se garantir de ces catastrophes qui bouleversent l'Etat et le conduisent par fois à 2 doigts de sa perte. Monsieur le Comte de Buol Schauenstein connaît aussi bien que le Soussigné les graves événements qui viennent d'avoir lieu dans la Lombardie. Milan en pleine révolution, et bientôt au pouvoir des habitants, qui, par leur courage et leur fermeté ont su résister aux troupes disciplinées de Sa Majesté Impériale; l'insurrection dans les campagnes et dans les villes voisines; enfin tout le pays qui borde les frontières des Etats de Sa Majesté Sarde en feu.

Cette situation comme peut bien le comprendre Monsieur le Comte de Buol, réagit sur l'état des esprits dans les provinces qui appartiennent à Sa Majesté le Roi de Sardaigne, la sympathie qu'excite la défense de Milan, l'esprit de nationalité qui malgré les délimitations artificielles des différens Etats, se fait néanmoins très puissamment sentir, tout concourt à entretenir dans les provinces et dans la capitale une agitation telle qu'il est à craindre que d'un moment à l'autre il en puisse résulter une de ces révolutions qui mettraient le trône en grave péril; car on ne peut se dissimuler qu'après les événements de France, le danger de la proclamation d'une République en Lombardie ne puisse être prochain; en effet d'après des renseignements positifs, il paraît qu'un certain nombre de Suisses a grandement contribué par son intervention à la réussite du soulèvement de Milan.

Si l'on ajoute à cela les mouvements de Parme et de Modène ainsi que ceux du Duché de Plaisance, sur lequel on ne peut refuser à Sa Majesté le Roi de Sardaigne le droit de veiller comme sur un territoire qui peut lui revenir par droit de reversibilité; si l'on ajoute qu'une grande et sérieuse exaspération a été excitée dans le Piémont et dans la Ligurie par la conclusion d'un traité entre Sa Majesté Impériale et les Ducs de Parme et Plaisance, et de Modène, traité qui, sous l'apparence de secours à fournir à ces petits Etats, les a réellement englobés dans la monarchie Autrichienne en portant les frontières militaires du Po, où elles devraient finir, jusqu'à la Méditerranée, et en rompant ainsi l'équilibre qui existait dans les différens Etats d'Italie, il est naturel de penser que la situation du Piémont est telle que d'un moment à l'autre, à l'annonce que la République a été proclamée en Lombardie, un mouvement semblable éclaterait aussi dans les Etats de Sa Majesté le Roi de Sardaigne, ou du moins il y aurait quelque grave commotion qui mettrait en danger le trône de Sa Majesté.

C'est dans cet état de choses que le Roi, fort de son droit pour la conservation de ses possessions, fort des droits qu'il a sur le Duché de Plaisance, et dont par une violation manifeste on n'a pas voulu tenir compte lorsqu'on a signé le Traité du 24 Décembre, 1847, se croit obligé de prendre des mesures qui, en empêchant que le mouvement de la Lombardie ne devienne un mouvement républicain, éviteront au Piémont et au reste de l'Italie les catastrophes qui pourraient avoir lieu si une telle forme de Gouvernement venait à être proclamée.

Turin, le 24 Mars, 1848.

Le Soussigné, &c., se proposait de se présenter ce matin même chez M. le Marquis de Pareto pour lui demander des explications catégoriques sur les nouveaux armements publiés en date d'hier soir, dont l'importance lui semblait peu en accord avec les protestations d'amitié et de bon voisinage qu'il venait de recevoir la veille encore de la part de M. le Ministre. La note qui lui fut remise hier soir à 11 heures, l'en dispense.

Cette pièce contient l'apologie de la rébellion, et attaque les droits souverains de Sa Majesté Impériale et Royale Apostolique, au mépris des Traités qui jusqu'à présent avaient formé les bases de l'union des 2 Cours.

Le Soussigné croirait manquer à la dignité de l'Empereur son auguste maître, en continuant dans cette grave circonstance des rapports diplomatiques avec un Gouvernement qui méconnaît ainsi la sainteté de traités reconnus et sanctionnés par lui-même, et qui jusqu'à présent avaient été la base des principes politiques de Sa Majesté le Roi de Sardaigne; il se voit par conséquent dans l'obligation de demander à M. le Marquis ses passeports pour pouvoir demain se rendre par Novare dans les Etats Impériaux.

Il est peiné au vif de la circonstance qui lui impose cette démarche, et prie M. le Ministre de recevoir, &c.

M. le Marquis Pareto.

BUOL.

Turin, 24 Mars, 1848.

Le Soussigné, &c., a reçu la note que M. le Comte de Buol, &c., lui a adressée ce matin pour lui annoncer la résolution de cesser les rapports diplomatiques qu'il entretenait avec le Gouvernement du Roi, et pour demander ses passeports, afin de se rendre dans les Etats Impériaux. Les raisons au moyen desquelles le Soussigné a justifié, dans sa communication en date d'hier, la conduite de son Gouvernement dans la circonstance actuelle, devraient le dispenser de revenir sur ce point. Mais il ne saurait garder le silence en face du reproche que M. le Comte de Buol fait au Gouvernement du Roi d'avoir méconnu la sainteté des traités. Il le peut d'autant moins, que c'est au contraire au Gouvernement Impérial que revient ce reproche, puisque c'est lui qui a donné l'exemple d'une violation en signant avec le Duc de Modène et celui de Parme et de Plaisance, le traité du 24 Décembre, 1847, et en rompant ainsi l'équilibre qui existait entre les différents Etats de l'Italie, sans tenir aucun compte du droit qu'a Sa Majesté de veiller sur un territoire qui peut lui revenir par reversibilité. Cette raison pourrait seule justifier la résolution du Gouvernement du Roi, si d'ailleurs elle n'avait pas été impérieusement commandée par le devoir de sa propre conservation, qui est le premier devoir d'un Etat.

Le Soussigné, en adressant ci-joint à M. le Comte de Buol les passeports qu'il a demandés, partage avec lui le regret qu'il a témoigné en faisant cette démarche, et il le prie d'agréer, &c.

MON CHER LORD PALMERSTON, Chandos House, le 15 Avril, 1848.

Vous avez vu par la dépêche du Comte de Ficquelmont en date du 5 de ce mois, dont je vous ai remis copie, que mon Gouvernement a pris la résolution d'expédier un Commissaire Impérial dans le Royaume Lombardo-Vénitien avec la mission d'y négocier une réconciliation sur les bases plus larges qui sont une suite naturelle et voulue du nouveau système politique adopté par l'Autriche. Cette œuvre de pacification, toutefois, ne pourra pas s'accomplir aussi longtemps que les 2 parties belligérantes se trouvent en présence et à la veille d'une collision. C'est donc avant tout une suspension d'hostilités qu'il s'agirait d'obtenir, et l'atteinte, de ce but me semble devoir être puissamment facilitée par l'influence conciliatrice que vous jugerez à propos de faire valoir à cet effet auprès des diverses Cours Italiennes.

En vous rendant au vœu que je me permets de vous exprimer par ces lignes vous contribuerez par vos bons offices à écarter les chances d'une guerre générale qui menacerait de sortir d'une collision sur le sol de l'Italie.

DIETRICHSTEIN.

No. 246.—Viscount Ponsonby to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received April 15.)

MY LORD,

Vienna, April 9, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inclose a report made by the Marshal Radetzky to the Imperial Government, which appeared yesterday in the "Vienna Gazette."

We learn that on the 18th of March the concessions made by the Emperor to the demands of the Milanese, and the fact that a Constitutional form of Government was determined upon, were officially notified and published by the Austrian authorities in Milan, and known to the inhabitants before the insurrection took place; a fact which renders it very doubtful if any hope may be entertained of arriving at any amicable arrangement whatever. I believe the Austrian Government considers war to be inevitable; and the best preparations the Government can make are in progress to reinforce the army, and by all means to maintain the line it now occupies, to defend the Tyrol, and guard against an attack upon the Venetian territory by any force from Milan. It is doubted here if the Piedmontese will advance,—it is thought their force is not sufficient to authorize that movement, and there are some notions that they entertain fears of a French intervention of some sort.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

PONSONBY.

(Inclosure.)—Article from the Wiener Zeitung, of April 8, 1848.

WE have received from the head-quarters of Field-Marshal Count Radetzky reports down to the 2nd of April, with a general description of the operations which took place from the 19th to the 30th of March, and we hasten to lay them before the public in as complete a form as possible. It will be seen by these reports that the army and their valiant and experienced leader have preserved the honour of their arms under such perilous circumstances as have scarcely been equalled in the annals of war; and that they are ready at any moment, though in the face of unparalleled difficulties, undauntedly to renew the struggle, without a doubt of being able to bring it to a happy termination. The Government, on its side, will not fail to second the exertions of these exemplary troops with the greatest energy.

The report of Field-Marshal Radetzky from the Castle at Milan, dated 2 A.M. in the night of the 18th and 19th, relates that he had received numerous accounts, to the effect that the revolution would break out at Milan on the 18th. On the 17th the news was received by telegraph from Vienna, of the concessions granted by His Imperial Majesty on the 15th. Already on the 18th they were posted up at an early hour at the corners of all the streets at Milan. A display of military force was prepared only in the event of a request to that effect from the civil authorities. The expected favourable impression became, however, not only a vain hope, but was succeeded in a few hours by an anxious foreboding of the reverse. The mob became gradually more dense and more threatening, and Field-Marshal Radetzky, who was at his office when the storm broke out, was obliged to retreat to the castle to avoid being surrounded by the populace. From one moment to another the accounts became more alarming,—barricades were erected in all the principal streets, and the Field-Marshal ordered the troops to be held in readiness. In the meantime the small guard at the Government house was for the greater part put to the sword, the house plundered, part of the archives destroyed, and the Vice-President, Count O'Donell, made prisoner.

The Field-Marshal ordered General Wohlgemuth, who commanded the troops in this quarter, to carry the barricades by storm, and that building was again occupied. Meanwhile the struggle had begun in every part of the city; the soldiers were fired upon from the windows, and every kind of projectile (stones, boiling oil, and water), was showered down from the roofs. General Rath, who repaired to the centre of the town in order to take possession of the square in front of the cathedral, the citadel, and the Government buildings, was obliged to carry every barricade by force; the troops carried them all, and reached the positions appointed to them. It was evening, and the contest in the streets, or rather the firing upon our troops, had already lasted 6 hours, when the Field-Marshal determined to carry the Hôtel-de-Ville at all risks, and, if possible, to strike at the heart of the revolt by making prisoners of the Provisional Government. The contest lasted 4 hours, and was maintained by the insurgents with great obstinacy. At length, when most of the carpenters who were employed to break in the doors were killed or wounded, the troops succeeded in bursting the door with 12-pounders, which could with difficulty be made use of in narrow streets, and in making themselves masters of the building; upwards of 250 prisoners were made, and among them many persons of distinguished names. The prisoners and a dépôt of arms found in the house were transferred to the castle. The Field-Marshal could not yet furnish a list of the killed, but the number was considerable; in the meantime Count Radetzky resolved to keep possession of Milan at every risk, and, if the contest did not cease, to bombard the city.

It was the intention of the Field-Marshal to despatch couriers to Verona, but this was rendered impracticable by the impossibility of procuring post horses along the road. The course of the contest at Milan on the 19th was as follows:—nothing had at first changed in the state of the city; the firing was begun already early in the morning at individual spots, and afterwards became general. The troops, notwithstanding their excessive labours, were indefatigable, and animated with the most admirable spirit. The Field-Marshal had summoned to his aid the nearest battalions in the neighbourhood, in order to increase the number of his forces, and to afford some repose to his troops. All the streets were intersected with barricades, but they formed no obstacle to the troops. The seat of the Provisional Government had been removed to the house of Count Borromeo.

The Field-Marshal resolved at a later hour of the day to take this house, in order, by carrying off the leaders of the revolution, to thwart the combination of the hostile party, and to obtain, in the persons of the most distinguished Milanese, hostages for the peace of the city. It had become necessary to employ large bodies of men to procure the necessary supply of food for the troops. The previous day and during the night of the 19th torrents of rain had fallen, but on the 19th the weather had cleared up. The Field-Marshal, who had till now hoped to reduce the town without bombardment, and had only employed artillery against the barricades, and on the most dangerous positions, began to fear that no other choice would now be left him. He resolved to withdraw in the night most of the troops into their barracks, and only to keep possession of the principal Government buildings; but if the contest was renewed, to do what his duty bound him to.

On the Piedmontese frontier everything as yet was tranquil; but the Field-Marshal felt that his difficulties would be materially increased if the free corps should embrace the opportunity to enter Lombardy either on that or the Swiss frontier. In the course of the day the Field-Marshal received unsatisfactory accounts from Field-Marshal L. d'Aspre at Padua, and from Venice. He was also informed that batteries had been formed on the frontiers of Piedmont. At Como an insurrection was expected, and assistance was reckoned upon from Switzerland, where 4 battalions had been offered by the Canton of Tessin. Meanwhile Como was sufficiently garrisoned, General Maurer was at Magenta, and at Pavia was the regiment Giulai, with its full complement of artillery. While the Field-Marshal resolved to leave the frontier of Piedmont protected as heretofore, he summoned 5 fresh battalions to his aid, in order to renew the attack on the 20th. It was impossible to send any despatches, as every communication with the exterior was so intercepted, that accounts could only be received or dispatched under escort of strong detachments.

On the 20th the contest was renewed with the greatest ardour, and many victims fell on both sides. The Field-Marshal could still give no account of his losses, as he had no time to ascertain them with any precision. In Milan, the very foundations of the city were torn up; not hundreds, but thousands of barricades crossed the streets, and the enemy displayed in the execution of their plans so great a circumspection and an audacity, that it was evident that military leaders of foreign extraction must have been placed at their head. The character of this people, says the Field-Marshal, has become quite changed, fanaticism has seized every rank, every age, and every sex. Early on the 20th all the troops were withdrawn from the town into the citadel, with the exception of those in the barracks, with which it was possible to keep up a communication. All the gates of the city were also still held by the troops, and the Generals Wohlgemuth and Clamm kept their previous positions, by which means the communication with the gates was maintained. It was no longer possible to keep the posts within the town, as they could neither be supplied with provisions, nor could be relieved without a contest and severe loss. Particulars of the strife were in part wanting, and in part impossible to detail for want of time. "But one observation," says the Field-Marshal, "I must make; my feelings will not suffer me to omit that; my troops are really wonderful; they perform impossibilities, and maintain their courage, though they have now enjoyed no rest for 4 days, and have fought in the most dreadful weather. It almost breaks my heart that such courage cannot be employed against an open enemy."

Meanwhile, the foreign Consuls were endeavouring to save Milan from bombardment, and a truce, which had become very necessary to the troops after their excessive exertions, was agreed upon for 3 days. In the meantime, news arrived that the Piedmontese troops were on the march; the truce, therefore, had no result, and the contest was renewed with fresh vigour. Then came the news from the provinces; the whole country was in revolt, and the people had everywhere armed themselves. The Field-Marshal had resolved to summon all the detached garrisons to Milan, and thus to attack the city from every side; but every communication was intercepted, single orderlies were shot or made prisoners, stronger detachments met everywhere with the strongest resistance from the barricaded streets and villages, scouts were out of the question, and the interruption of the communications frustrated every scheme. There was only bread sufficient for a few days, and more could only be baked in the midst of a continual contest. Meat and salt was procured by the commissariat, but this resource was also exhausted. Access to the magazine of provisions, situated outside the walls of the town, was each time necessary to be obtained by force. Thus did the Field-Marshal, though victorious at every point at which his troops showed themselves, find himself under the painful necessity of yielding to hunger.

On the 21st, intelligence came that the Piedmontese force on the Ticino was increasing in numbers, and that free corps had here and there crossed that river. Armed bodies of peasantry from the frontiers of Switzerland, and from the Valteline spread themselves over the plains; their numbers were calculated at 10,000 men.

Such was the state of affairs when the Field-Marshal felt the impossibility of maintaining any longer his position in Milan. He now ordered the brigades of Maurer and Strasoldo, which were stationed respectively in Magenta and Sarogna, to join him in Milan, during which time he renewed the contest with redoubled fury.

The Generals Wohlgemuth and Clamm protected the junction, whilst they destroyed with the artillery all the buildings which were near the ramparts. Many of them were taken by storm. The Field-Marshal having been the whole time in possession of the gates, had cut off every communication with the town. A pound of beef cost already a florin. The troops were also in want of food; they were all suffering from the greatest fatigue, and yet the spirit of the brave troops remained undaunted. It was a painful resolution: but they were obliged to abandon Milan. The whole country was in insurrection, the army was threatened from the rear by Piedmont. All the bridges might be broken down, and they had no beams to replace them, no means of transport. Nothing was known of what was passing in the rear. The Field-Marshal determined to retreat by Lodi, in order to avoid the large towns, as the country was there more open. This retreat took place, in 5 columns, on the nights of the 21st and 22nd. The march over the ramparts was again of the most difficult kind, as there was a great quantity of baggage, and many civil and military employes had taken refuge with the troops, whom one could not abandon to the fury of the fanatical rabble.

Generals Clamm and Wohlgemuth, who had destroyed everything near the ramparts, covered the march. The brigades Maurer and Strasoldo had joined the Field-Marshal. Everything was in flames in the neighbourhood of the Porta Tosa and Romana.

The retreat succeeded completely. It is one of those sad master-pieces in the art of war, in which we can only admire the strength of mind of the general and the undaunted bravery of the troops; which only causes the wound to be felt more acutely by the country. As soon as it became dark, all the troops were stationed in close columns on the Place d'Armes; the castle remained occupied; the flanks were covered by numerous skirmishers. The march proceeded quickly through the defile of the ramparts. An attempt was made to oppose it at the Porta Comasina; but our troops overcame every obstacle. The loss was small when compared with the difficulty of the undertaking.

After midnight the rear-guard left their position on the ramparts, from whence they had covered the retreat; on the road to Lodi there were barricades put up and trenches made. The advanced guard had in the meantime cleared the way for the main body of the army. When they arrived on the 23rd at Molegnagno, that place had the temerity to demand that we should lay down our arms, and place the Colonel, Count Wratislaw, under threat of death, as prisoner in the castle. The Field-Marshal informed of this, ordered batteries to be raised, and the place, which was set on fire, to be taken by storm. The destruction of the bridge, which was composed of massive stone, had not succeeded; but it had been barricaded in the most extraordinary manner. The terror which the fate of Molegnagno spread, had the most salutary effect. No more resistance was offered to the Field-Marshal. The Archduke Ernst had succeeded in keeping Lodi in subjection, so that the Field-Marshal was able to pass the Adda without resistance. He halted one day at Molegnagno to give time to the exhausted troops to rest themselves. The Field-Marshal's plan was to take up a position behind the Adda, to assemble all his disposable troops, to open communication with the fortresses behind him, and then to make a fresh attack upon Milan. He was then informed of the revolution at Venice, the evacuation of Brescia, the defection of the garrison of Cremona. The former plan was therefore no longer practicable, and it became necessary to abandon the position of the Adda. On the 25th, the Field-Marshal received intelligence of the able retreat of Colonel Benedech from Pavia. Orders were given to abandon the half-ruined and completely untenable castle of Piacenza, and in this way 3 battalions and 3 batteries were added to the army.

The march as far as Montechiari, which place the army entered on the 30th of March, presents nothing particularly worthy of notice.

Separate reports of the occurrences at Como, Bergamo, and Cremona will be made as soon as the Field-Marshal is able to give a complete and connected account of all that has taken place. The Brigade Wohlgemuth was already sent to save Mantua. The Field-Marshal ordered the 1st corps to remain on the Mincio, the strong advanced guard to the heights of Lonato, and is himself engaged in organizing the army in Verona. Up to this time no desertion had taken place among the Italian troops under the immediate command of the Field-Marshal.

During the contest at Milan, they emulated with each other in the discharge of their duty. At Cremona, however, the regiment Albert and the 3rd battalion Ceccopieri went over to the enemy; and at Brescia, a part of the regiment Haugwitz, who were fired upon by the rest of the regiment, and 3 squadrons of Lancers, which were at Cremona, have joined the enemy.

The Field-Marshal was, as we have shown, victorious in Milan, and had he not been compelled, by want of provisions and the declaration of war from Piedmont, to abandon the place, neither the balls of the enemy nor the boiling oil from the roofs would have driven away his brave troops. Seldom in long protracted wars have so many proofs of self-devotion and bravery been shown as in this contest. The loss of life at Milan must have been considerable, especially in those houses carried by assault, where every one who resisted was put to the sword. The loss on the side of the troops is far from inconsiderable, but the returns are wanting; with the exception of the battery, which, through the desertion of the Italian troops at Cremona, was lost, the army has not left behind one gun.

The reports from the Field-Marshal are dated Cremona, April 2nd.

YOUR Lordship may like to have re-stated the particular concessions made by the Imperial Government to the Lombards on the 15th March; Liberty of the Press, National Guard, Convocation within the shortest possible delay of the States of the German provinces of Galicia, of Lombardy, and Venice, with their representatives, consisting of proportionate numbers of the people, to form a general Constitution with the Hungarian part of the empire.

These concessions were published at Milan before hostilities commenced.

Milan, April 8, 1848.

I BEG to call your Lordship's attention to the following fact which has at this moment come to my knowledge. In consequence of an alliance, offensive and defensive, that existed between the Emperor of Austria and the Duke of Parma, the town of Parma was occupied by 800 Hungarian soldiers. Shortly after the revolution broke out in this duchy, a regency, composed of the Liberal party, ordered these troops to return to the States of their Sovereign. On arriving at the Po they attempted to cross it, but were driven back by the Lombard insurgents. Not knowing where to go, and all the country round being in full insurrection, they returned to Colorno, a country town near Parma, where they remained several days, they being fed and lodged at the expense of the city of Parma. At last, ashamed of their sad position, they sold their arms and ammunition to the commune of Parma, making a capitulation that they should return immediately to their different places of abode in Hungary.

Au Ministre des Affaires Etrangères de Sa Majesté le Roi de Grèce.

LA Grèce et l'Italie se rencontrent enfin sur le chemin de la liberté. Nous qui devions tant à cette terre où la politique fut une inspiration et la science un hymne, nous lui devons dans ce siècle même des exemples qui confirment à la Grèce le titre glorieux de notre sœur aînée. Peuple incomparable, après quatre siècles d'esclavage, après trente ans de combats et de martyres, vous avez pris place à côté des nations civilisées; vous avez ensuite accompli une révolution pacifique, et si le mot nous était permis, nous dirions presque Attique, telle que les capitales les plus policées n'en eurent pas une pareille. La servitude nous avait séparés; que la liberté nous unisse. Rappelez-vous nos anciennes relations d'amitié et de gloire: rappelez-vous ce nom de Venise, qui est encore béni dans les Iles Ioniennes, et que les vieillards après cinquante ans ne peuvent prononcer sans pleurer de tendresse. Il y a pour vous encore des milliers d'hommes qui parlent notre langue, comme il y en avait jadis parmi nous qui parlaient la vôtre. Les souvenirs et les espérances, les intérêts et les études vont nous joindre plus fortement que jamais.

Nous ne saurions souhaiter, nous ne saurions pas même imaginer une consolation et une gloire qui ne soient la gloire et la consolation de nos frères.

MY LORD,

Turin, April 10, 1848.

A DECREE was the day before yesterday published, containing the names of 66 persons on whom His Sardinian Majesty has conferred the rank and title of Senators of the Kingdom.

These Senators will form the first or Upper Chamber of the State ; and the members are appointed for life.

The individuals chosen by the King to be members of the Upper Chamber show that His Sardinian Majesty has desired that this body of the State should comprise persons representing various classes and opinions, and that care has been taken to prevent the Senate from becoming a retreat for mere hangers on of the Court.

The Abbé Gioberti, the Chevalier Massimo d'Azeglio, the Chevalier Giacinto Collegno, the Prince de la Cisterna, the Baron Plana, and the Count Ludovico Sauli, all persons of Liberal opinions, are named Senators. The Archbishops of Chambéry and Vercelli are the only Prelates. His Excellency the Marquis Villamarina is a member of the Upper Chamber ; not his Excellency Count Solar de la Marguerite.

No member of the present Ministry is a Senator, several having declined that honour, in order not to have the appearance of having named themselves.

The composition of the Senate has been received in general with approbation.

The elections of the Deputies have been postponed for 10 days, and the Chambers have been convoked for the 8th of May, instead of the 27th instant, the day of meeting formerly proposed.

MY LORD,

Florence, April 8, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inclose, in original and translation, a proclamation issued by the Grand Duke of Tuscany addressed to the soldiery, which differs considerably from those which have hitherto appeared, as it at once calls upon the troops to join themselves to the magnanimous Sardinians, and fly to the relief of Lombardy, and is, in fact, a declaration of war against Austria.

The Government states that the number of troops of the line marching towards Lombardy is above 6,000, inclusive of civic guards and the numerous volunteers.

Some divisions of the Neapolitan army are hourly expected to disembark at Leghorn.

The Grand Duke has appointed the 5th of June for the opening of the 2 Chambers at Florence. I have, &c.

SOLDIERS!

Florence, April 5, 1848.

The sacred cause of the independence of Italy is to be now decided on the plains of Lombardy. Already the citizens of Milan have bought with their blood, and with a heroism that history offers few examples of, their liberty. The Sardinian army moves to the great combat, headed by its magnanimous King, under whose orders are fighting the royal princes.

Sons of Italy, heirs of the military glory of ancestors, the Tuscans cannot, ought not to remain in shameful ease in these solemn moments. Fly, then, united to the brave citizens as well as volunteers under our banners, to the assistance of the Lombard brethren. Let the love of country excite in you that valour of which the Tuscan warriors have given proof in every age.

Let discipline give you that force which does not come from numbers, and the victory will be yours.

Honour to Italian arms!

Long live Italian independence!

(Extract.) Milan, April 10, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that the Provisional Government of Milan has issued a proclamation dissolving all the local Provisional Governments that had been established in Lombardy since the retreat of the Austrians from this city. It, at the same time, changes its own name into that of "The Central Provisional Government in Lombardy," and invites the several towns and districts, according to their size and population, to send one, two, or three delegates, for the purpose of consulting with and representing them near the central body. The Central Government has likewise appointed a commission, charged with the drawing up of a plan for the convocation of a National Assembly, in which the form of the future Government will be decided.

By a decree of the Central Government of the 9th instant, the Jesuits are no longer allowed to remain in Lombardy; their colleges and institutions are consequently suppressed, and their property of all kinds sequestered.

MY LORD,

Foreign Office, April 18, 1848.

WITH reference to your Excellency's despatch of the 5th instant, reporting what passed between your Excellency and Count Ficquelmont on the subject of the intervention of the King of Sardinia in the affairs of Lombardy, I have to inform you that Her Majesty's Government very much lament the unfortunate state of conflict which has suddenly arisen between Austria and Sardinia; and the more so, because it is scarcely to be supposed that the King of Sardinia has not in some way or other reckoned upon support from France, if such aid should become necessary. It is right, however, to say, that Her Majesty's Government have no information of any kind that can be deemed as confirming such a conjecture.

With regard to the attack made by the King of Sardinia on the Austrian territory, it is certain that no sufficient ground for that proceeding has been alleged by the Sardinian Government. Her Majesty's Government would be much relieved from the anxiety which the present state of these affairs necessarily inspires, if the mission of Count Hartig should lead to a peaceful settlement of these matters.

MY LORD,

Florence, April 10, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that an official notice appeared in the Florence "Gazette" of yesterday, announcing that the Grand Duke (who has now dropped the title of Imperial Highness) had recalled the Tuscan Chargé d'Affaires from the Court of Vienna, and had directed that passports should be given to the Austrian Chargé d'Affaires at this Court.

Don Neri Corsini, in announcing to M. de Schnitzer de Meeran the intentions of the Government, stated that the Grand Duke had been exposed to popular misinterpretations for allowing him to continue his functions as Austrian Chargé d'Affaires until the present time.

The Grand Duke wishing to contribute, from his private resources, to the voluntary loan required by the exigencies of the State, has desired the Maggiordomo of his Court to pay to the Repository-General the sum of 100,000 lire (about 6,000 pounds); but His Royal Highness, knowing that the funds of the Court will not furnish such a sum at the present moment, has ordered that a quantity of his plate, equal to that sum, shall be sent to the Mint to be melted down and converted into money. No. 267.—Viscount Palmerston to Viscount Ponsonby.

MY LORD,

Foreign Office, April 20, 1848.

WITH reference to your Excellency's despatch of the 2nd instant, reporting a conversation with Count Ficquelmont on the affairs of Italy, I have to instruct your Excellency to say that the advice which Her Majesty's Minister at Turin has invariably given to the Sardinian Government, both in execution of positive instructions from Her Majesty's Government and upon his own responsibility, has been that the King of Sardinia should maintain a strictly neutral position, and should not give any just cause of offence to, nor commit any acts of aggression against, either France on the one side, or Austria on the other. This advice, however, has not been followed.

The great practical question now to be decided by Austria is, what course she should take in regard to her Italian provinces, and the decision of that question must depend upon a much more accurate knowledge of the state of things in Northern Italy than Count Ficquelmont seemed to possess when he conversed with your Excellency on these matters on the 2nd instant, if what he said is to be taken as representing his real opinions. The events which have since happened in Lombardy and Venice have shown that Count Ficquelmont was entirely mistaken in supposing that there was any party in those provinces favourable to Austria, or that the Austrian troops were able to defend the country; and after the manner in which those troops have been expelled from Milan and other places, and have of their own accord evacuated several strong positions, there does not seem any reasonable ground for expecting that any attempts by Austria to reconquer Italy could be attended with success.

With respect to the notion that the Italians would be willing to pay a large sum to Austria as the purchase of their independence, if such an arrangement could be negotiated, it would no doubt be an advantageous one for Austria, and ought not to be refused by her. But events are advancing so rapidly in North Italy, that great doubts may be felt whether the time is not gone by when such a bargain could have been made.

(Received April 21.)*

Turin, April 14, 1848.

THE "Journal des Débats" of the 9th instant, received at Turin yesterday, contained the concluding half of the inclosed address from the Provisional Government of Milan to that of the French Republic, bearing date 27th March, 1848, three days after the publication of His Sardinian Majesty's proclamation to the inhabitants of Lombardy and Venice, announcing his determination to enter Lombardy at the head of his army for the purpose of expelling the Austrians from Italy.

As no mention of any document of such a nature as that now inclosed had ever been made within my knowledge, I called upon the Marquis Pareto, and inquired of him whether he had ever heard of such a communication having been forwarded from Milan to Paris.

The Marquis at once assured me that neither he nor any of his colleagues had ever been made acquainted with such a step having been taken by the Provisional Government of Milan.

I then placed the "Journal des Débats" in the hands of the Sardinian Minister.

I could not help remarking to the Marquis Pareto, that the contents of this address appeared to account for the measures taken by the Provisional Government of France for the organization and concentration of the army of the Alps; and that when this direct appeal of the Provisional Government of Milan for the assistance of France was publicly known at Paris, it would be difficult for M. Lamartine, notwithstanding his sincere desire to preserve peace, successfully to resist the movement that would probably take place in favour of a march of French troops upon Italy.

The Marquis Pareto informed me that he should forthwith demand an explanation from the Provisional Government of Milan of their conduct in this business; and my Tuscan colleague, who came to speak to me upon this question later in the day, told me that a very strong despatch had been written to the Government of Milan, requiring that an immediate communication should be made to Paris, retracting in decided and positive language all avowed or implied application for French intervention to assist in completing the emancipation of Italy from foreign rule.

This affair has been reported to his Excellency the Marquis Brignole, at Paris, and he has been instructed by the Marquis Pareto to renew to M. Lamartine the protestations of the Sardinian Government against any intervention of France in the affairs of Italy being required, or even wished for by the Italian Governments.

The conduct of the Provisional Government of Milan on this occasion has produced a very unfavourable impression.

Milan, le 27 Mars, 1848.

APRES 5 jours d'une lutte acharnée, pendant lesquels notre peuple a fait des prodiges de valeur et de magnanimité, nous avons secoué le joug de l'Autriche et nous nous sommes constitués en Gouvernement Provisoire de Milan.

Mais la guerre continue tout près de nous; l'armée Autrichienne est transformée en bandes de pillards; car, harcelée de tous côtés, elle fuit, elle revient sur ses pas, elle porte l'incendie et le ravage dans les villes et les campagnes, de l'Adda à l'Oglio et au Mincio, cherchant, à ce qu'il paraît, à assurer sa retraite sur Vérone.

Le Roi de Sardaigne nous a envoyé un corps de troupes, et il va venir en personne pour nous aider à chasser jusqu'aux Alpes l'éternel ennemi de l'indépendance Italienne.

Dans cet état de choses nous nous sommes abstenus de toute question politique; nous avons solennellement déclaré à plusieurs reprises, qu'après la lutte ce sera à la nation de décider sur ses destinées.

A cause de cela nous n'avons pas encore cherché à nous faire reconnaître par le Gouvernement Provisoire de la République Française; nous attendons d'être un Gouvernement avec une forme quelconque pour nous adresser à l'Europe. Maintenant nous ne sommes que le Gouvernement de l'urgence et de la nécessité.

Cependant, puisque nous envoyons un de nos citoyens les plus honorables, M. Louis Pono, à Toulon, pour faire un achat d'armes, nous avons cru pouvoir adresser au Gouvernement Provisoire de la République Française cette expression de notre respect et de notre sympathie.

C'est à ce Gouvernement, qui a déclaré si solennellement vouloir venir en aide à toutes les nationalités opprimées et en hâter la délivrance, c'est au Gouvernement de la nation la plus brave et la plus généreuse du monde, de trouver le moyen de nous aider dans nos circonstances si difficiles.

Nous n'ajoutons rien de plus, ne voulant pas donner une portée politique à cette adresse.

No. 273.—The Hon. R. Abercromby to Viscount Palmerston.
(Received April 22.)

MY LORD,

Turin, April 16, 1848.

ON the 9th instant His Royal Highness the Duke of Parma by letter publicly accepted the resignations of the members of the Regency appointed by him at the commencement of the Parmesan revolution.

By the same letter His Royal Highness authorized the election by the elders of the city of Parma of a Provisional Government, and that election took place on the 11th instant.

The practical result of these events, although accomplished under the seeming authority of the Duke as Sovereign, has been to establish a Government elected by the people, and to destroy the position of the Sovereign.

The continued residence of the Duke of Parma under these circumstances has become impossible; and, by information which I have this moment received from Parma, I learn that at 2 o'clock P.M. yesterday, it was settled between His Royal Highness the Duke of Parma and the Provisional Government, that His Royal Highness should leave Parma last night, accompanied by Signor Pallavicini on the part of the Parmesan Government, and proceed direct by Lombardy through Switzerland to Bâle, where His Royal Highness will for the present remain.

The Duke and Signor Pallavicini will be preceded on their journey by a Parma Government Commissioner, charged to arrange with the Lombard authorities of the towns through which they have to pass that no personal insult shall be offered to the Duke.

The Duchess of Parma and the Hereditary Princess of Parma are to remain as private individuals in the Garden Palace at Parma, under the protection of the Provisional Government.

The Hereditary Prince of Parma is still a prisoner at Milan, where, however, I am told that he is well and respectfully treated.

The Duke of Parma has not abdicated; and he quits his capital as Sovereign de jure of the Duchy of Parma.

The Neapolitan Government furnished arms and great coats, and defrayed the expenses of the vessel.

The volunteers seemed mostly of the middle class. They went under the orders of M. Giardini and M. Balzo, retired officers of the Neapolitan army, and were organized in two companies.

Naples, March 30, 1848.

THE Undersigned, &c., hastens to transmit to Lord Napier, &c., copy of the correspondence which has taken place between him and Prince Schwarzenberg on the occasion of the insult offered to the Austrian arms by an excited multitude, composed for the greater part of subjects of His Imperial and Royal Majesty.

The Undersigned had reason to believe that the friendly declarations of the Royal Government of Naples would have induced Prince Schwarzenberg to change his resolutions; but instead of this he has been informed that, without any further communication, he embarked on board an Austrian steamer, and has left this capital.

The Undersigned, in communicating these facts to Lord Napier, begs him to bring them to the knowledge of his Government for their information, and avails himself, &c.

Lord Napier.

PRINCE OF CARIATI.

(Inclosure 2.)—Prince Schwarzenberg to Prince Cariatì.

Naples, March 25, 1848.

THE Undersigned, &c., hastens to inform the Prince of Cariatì, &c., of the following fact:

On the evening of this day, 25th March, 1848, about 7 o'clock, a crowd assembled before the entrance of this Imperial Royal Legation, situated in the Vico Freddo, and after having intimated to the porter that he should remain in his lodge, they shut the gates, at the same time throwing stones at him.

Then, climbing up the gates, some of the mob detached the arms from the iron bar to which they were fixed, after which they were dragged along, accompanied by the hootings of the crowd, and finally burnt in the Largo di Cappella Vecchia, upon a pile already prepared for the purpose, amid the acclamations of the mob.

So brutal an insult makes it unnecessary for the Undersigned to add any ulterior reflections, and renders superfluous any further explanation of the motive that induces him to address to his Excellency the present note.

Such a breach of the international law, respected between all civilized nations, demands a prompt and solemn reparation; and the Undersigned is too confident in the justice of the Government of His Sicilian Majesty not to expect that the same will be such as shall give perfect satisfaction to the Government of His Imperial Majesty.

It will manifestly be useless to allege that so outrageous an act (characterizing the same as the work of a few disturbers of the peace, and those not the subjects of His Sicilian Majesty), could not have been prevented in a capital, the seat of Government, furnished with a numerous body of troops of the line and national guards, and the more so, as for several days preceding it was foreseen that it was the intention of the mob to make a scandalous breach of the peace, directed to insult a friendly Government and an ally.

In expectation of a prompt and satisfactory answer, the Undersigned has the honour, &c.

Prince Cariati.

SCHWARZENBERG.

(Inclosure 3.)—Prince Schwarzenberg to Prince Cariati.

Naples, March 27, 1848.

THE Undersigned, &c., was under the necessity of addressing to his Excellency the Prince of Cariati, &c., a note, in date 25th instant, of which it is incumbent on him to send to his Excellency the inclosed copy.

The object of the note was so important, that the Undersigned considered himself authorized to expect an immediate reply. The same not having been sent, notwithstanding the urgency of the case in question, the Undersigned must attribute it to the absence of will or power in His Sicilian Majesty's Government to accord His Imperial Royal Majesty's Government, insulted in the person of their Representative, the satisfaction due to the same.

In consequence of which the Undersigned finds himself compelled to insist that the answer to his note of the 25th of March should not be deferred beyond the space of 24 hours, and should be accompanied with adequate satisfaction.

Should, however, His Sicilian Majesty's Government neither evince the will to respect, nor have the power to cause to be respected, the most sacred principles of international law, it only remains to the Undersigned to declare that he must consider himself as having ceased from the exercise of his diplomatic functions at the Royal Court, and to demand his passport, in order to leave the kingdom.

The Undersigned, &c.

Prince Cariati.

SCHWARZENBERG.

(Inclosure 4.)—Prince Cariati to Prince Schwarzenberg.

Naples, March 27, 1848.

THE Undersigned, &c., has received the notes of Prince Schwarzenberg, &c., dated 25th and 27th instant, and hastens to reply to them.

The Royal Government are deeply afflicted on account of the violation of the arms of the Imperial Royal Legation of Austria, which occurred on the evening of the 25th instant, by a multitude (principally composed of individuals not subjects of His Majesty) beyond measure excited by the events that have taken place in Vienna, and by those most unfortunate ones of Lombardy.

The Royal Government, as is well known to the Prince, so soon as they had intimation of the fact that took place in Rome, made every disposition to prevent a repetition of the same in Naples, judging such a fact in opposition to the principles of the laws of nations generally acknowledged, and they had reason to hope that they had succeeded in their intention. Unfortunately, however, at the very moment when the greatest tranquillity appeared to reign, and, contrary to all expectation, the event that has occasioned so much regret unexpectedly took place, in such a manner that it was not in the power of the public force to restrain the fury of the mob. Nor should this occurrence surprise the Prince, as he well knows that, in a capital cited as a model of the vigilance of Government, and of the devotion and discipline of the military of every grade, it has not been possible to prevent occurrences of a far graver nature.

The Royal Government considers it an imperious duty to make known to the Prince Schwarzenberg their reprobation of this most unfortunate circumstance, and they will embrace with pleasure any opportunity that may present itself, whereby they may be enabled to repair it so far as the serious state of affairs will allow.

The Undersigned hopes that these candid declarations may be sufficient to appease the just resentment of the Prince, and hence that, after the example of the Austrian Envoy at Rome, he will continue his friendly relations with the Government of His Majesty, and in such expectation the Undersigned, &c.

Prince Schwarzenberg.

CARIATI.

(Inclosure 5.)—Prince Schwarzenberg to Prince Cariati.

Naples, March 27, 1848.

It has come to the knowledge of the Undersigned, Envoy, &c., that an edict signed "for the Minister of the Interior, by the Director, G. Tofano," has issued from the printing-office of the Minister of State for the Home Department, and that the same has been placarded in all the principal parts of this capital.

This ministerial edict treats of the "enrolment of generous and patriotic youths, who desire to join a body of volunteers destined to embark for Leghorn, and thence to proceed to Upper Italy, organized in companies, battalions, and regiments."

Such a publication bears the character of an appeal to the free corps whom His Majesty's Government assures "that they have already provided everything necessary for the arming of the same; and, moreover, the steamers that are to take them to Leghorn."

A part of Upper Italy being a territory forming a portion of the Austrian Monarchy, and it being the clearly manifested intention of the above-mentioned generous and patriotic youths to aid and abet the rebellion which it is said has broken out in the Kingdom of Lombardy against its legitimate Government, it becomes incumbent on the Undersigned to beg his Excellency the Prince of Cariati, &c., to have the goodness to declare to him, in explicit terms, within the definite space of 24 hours, the object of the arming of the free corps above mentioned.

Should no answer be returned, the Undersigned will consider it as a manifest rupture of the friendly relations existing between the Empire of Austria and the Kingdom of the 2 Sicilies, and a motive for the departure of the Undersigned from this kingdom.

Naples, March 27, 1848.

AFTER waiting 48 hours, the Undersigned, Envoy, &c., had the honour to receive the answer to the notes, dated 25th and 27th instant, directed to his Excellency the Prince of Cariati, &c.

How much soever he may be personally grateful for the obliging expressions with which the note in answer, dated 27th instant, abounds, the Undersigned is under the painful necessity of declaring that the before-mentioned expressions do not offer any sufficient satisfaction for an insult of so grave a nature, offered to the august Court of Austria in the person of its representative.

The public affront that took place through the negligence of the Royal Government, demands a public reparation, whereby the Undersigned is in duty bound to require from His Sicilian Majesty's Government:

1st. That the Imperial Royal arms, torn down in so brutal and disgraceful a manner from the gate of entrance to the palace of this Imperial Royal Legation, and afterwards burnt upon a pile erected for the purpose in a public place, should be replaced by order of Government, and in presence of a public functionary, in the same place from whence they were taken.

2ndly. That a declaration, containing the expressions of reprobation with which his Excellency's note of the 27th describes the fore-mentioned violation of international law, should, as speedily as possible, be inserted in the official journal of the 2 Sicilies.

The Undersigned should hold himself wanting in his duty, as also in the consideration that he professes to the Court in which he has the honour to reside, if he did not treat the question under discussion according to the principles of international law acknowledged and respected by all civilized nations.

With a view to the same, the Undersigned takes the liberty of calling to his Excellency's attention, that precisely in that very city to which the Prince has been pleased to allude in his reply of the 27th, in the midst of the gravest events, the Government, so far from forgetting that protection due to the Representatives of Foreign Powers caused detachments of troops to be posted near to their respective residences, to protect them from any molestation.

After this exposition, the sound judgment of his Excellency will be convinced of the necessity in which the Undersigned finds himself of insisting on an explicit and speedy reply, which he expects within the space of 24 hours.

In the affirmative, the Undersigned will be persuaded of the intention of His Majesty's Government to continue the friendly relations that have hitherto existed with the Court of Austria.

In case of a negative, on the other hand, nothing remains to the Undersigned but to renew his demand for the immediate delivery of his passports.

The Undersigned, &c.

Prince Cariati.

Naples, March 28, 1848.

AT 1 o'clock on the morning of this day were delivered to the Undersigned, Minister, &c., the 2 notes which the Prince Schwarzenberg, &c., addressed to him, of yesterday's date, one of which was relative to the much regretted event that took place with regard to the removal of the arms of the Imperial Court of Austria placed over the entrance-gate of his residence; and the other, referring to the departure of certain Neapolitan volunteers for Lombardy.

Considering the resignation of Ministers, and the Undersigned not being able to take upon himself the grave responsibility of replying to them without first consulting the Council of Ministers, he finds himself under the necessity of begging the Prince to have the goodness to wait till the formation of a new Cabinet, to which his demand shall be submitted, that a due answer may be given to the same as soon as possible.

Trusting that the Prince will appreciate the circumstances that render the involuntary delay indispensable, he avails himself, &c.

No. 279.—Lord Napier to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. April 22.)

(Extract.)

Naples, April 1, 1848.

THE Radical party acknowledge as their chiefs, M. Saliceti, M. Lieto, and General William Pepe.

General Pepe, on being desired by the King to form a Cabinet, submitted to His Majesty, in concert with M. Saliceti, a project involving a radical change in the existing constitution and order of Government.

He proposed :

1st. The abolition of the House of Peers, or at least its suspension until after the meeting of the Chamber of Deputies, by whom, with the King's consent, it remained to determine whether there should be an Upper Chamber, and what should be the nature of its institution and functions.

2ndly. The abrogation of the present Electoral Law, and the introduction of a scheme of universal suffrage, exercised in the choice of electoral colleges, by which the Deputies should be directly chosen.

3rdly. A sweeping change of public functionaries in every branch of the civil service, carried into effect by the dispatch to all the provinces of commissioners charged with full powers to dismiss the local authorities, and upset the previous order of administration.

After some hesitation, the King, who endeavoured to compose a Ministry in every quarter without success, seemed disposed to accede even to these terms, when he suddenly changed his resolution, and informed General Pepe in writing that he could not possibly avail himself of his services on conditions so revolutionary, or in connection with persons in whom he had no confidence.

(Extract.) Naples, April 2, 1848.

I was yesterday morning informed that His Majesty the King desired to speak with me. I accordingly waited on His Majesty, and a long conversation ensued, the import of which may be stated as follows :

The King having related the various attempts which he had made for the purpose of forming a substantial administration, and having referred to the revolutionary nature of the project of General Pepe, who alone seemed capable of uniting a Cabinet, requested to hear my opinion of the position of affairs.

The King dismissed me, saying that his attention should be bestowed on the immediate formation of a Ministry. which was the one object of paramount importance, and I subsequently learned that he is renewing negotiations with M. Troja.

Prince Cariati was present during the audience.

No. 282.—Lord Napier to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. April 22.)
(Extract.) Naples, April 4, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint your Lordship that His Sicilian Majesty has at length succeeded in forming a Ministry.

M. Troja has again accepted the offices of President of the Council and Minister of Public Instruction.

Count Peter Ferretti has consented to take the portfolio of Finance, the post of greatest difficulty; and he will also transact, for the present, the business of Agriculture and Commerce.

Count Ferretti is of an ancient family of Ancona, and brother to the Cardinal, but he has been long naturalized in the Kingdom of Naples.

Marquis Dragonetti is the new Minister for Foreign Affairs. He is descended from a noble and opulent house of Aquila, and became, while a very young man, distinguished as an orator in the Parliament of 1820. The Department of Religion is provisionally confided to his superintendence.

Colonel Degli Uberti, Minister of War in the late Cabinet, has been appointed to the office of Public Works.

M. Vignale is Minister of Grace and Justice, and General di Giudice Minister of War.

The modifications of the Constitution proposed are comprised in 10 Articles.

They may be succinctly stated in the following manner:

The admission to the suffrage of all persons exercising the learned professions and trades, and engaged in the pursuits of commerce, science, and the fine arts.

The reduction of the qualification necessary to being elected to that of the electors; so that every one who can vote can be chosen a deputy.

The nomination by the electoral colleges of persons whom they deem worthy of seats in the House of Peers from whom the King will select 50, at pleasure, to form the first assembly of the Upper Chamber, the constitution of which will, however, afterwards be modified at the will of Parliament and the King.

The negotiation of the Italian League, and the disposal of a large body of troops, for the purposes of this projected confederation, and, as a beginning, the dispatch of a regiment by sea without delay.

The appointment of delegates to the provinces, with special instructions for administrative objects, or the grant of similar powers and functions to the existing "Intendente."

These modifications seem to have met with a very general approbation.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

NAPIER.

(Inclosure.)—Programme of the Neapolitan Ministry.

(Translation.)

1st. To determine the day of election of the Deputies as soon as possible, according to the present provisional electoral laws, but with an extension that will permit men duly qualified to be elected Deputies, and that independently of the income that every other

Deputy ought to prove, the income of the Deputies being lowered and made equal to that of the electors.

2ndly. The elections of those communes under the jurisdiction of a judge, to be directed by the Deputies for the total number of each province, and the state of the poll to be examined by the central commission of scrutiny, in the capital of the province. The income required of the eligible shall be reduced to that of electors, being declared, moreover, electors, and in every way eligible, all qualifications.

3rdly. By qualification is to be understood the laudable and actual exercise of the learned professions, commerce, science, letters, the fine arts, and industry.

4thly. For this once His Majesty, wishing to collect from public vote the names who shall be esteemed most worthy to form a part of the Chamber of Peers, charges each electoral college to present a list of those whom they shall esteem as such in the respective provinces, and according to the category indicated in the statute, and that with a view to choose for the time being from the said votes the number of 50 Peers.

5thly. So soon as the Parliament shall be opened, the 2 Chambers, together with the King, shall have the power to modify the statute, especially in that which regards the Chamber of Peers.

6thly. The immediate appointment of Diplomatic Agents to form a free and loyal League with the other Italian States.

7thly. To place at the disposal of the Italian League a large contingent of troops, which shall immediately leave our frontier, and in the meantime to send without delay a regiment by sea.

8thly. The royal flag shall be surrounded by the Italian colours, so that they shall form one single flag.

9thly. To continue to hasten, with solicitude, the arming of the national guard throughout the whole kingdom.

10thly. The sending of delegates to organize the provinces, furnished with instructions that shall be given from the Minister of the Interior, or the conferring of similar powers on the Intendents of the provinces.

His Majesty, in his first conference, held this day, with the new Cabinet, has ordered :

1st. That the reserved troops shall be called, a portion of the levy recently suspended having been assigned to augment the army, in accordance with the present exigencies.

2ndly. That orders shall be given immediately by the Minister of War to call the 10th Regiment of the Line to Naples, to embark for Leghorn, and the necessary dispositions be made for the prompt departure of a body of troops towards the frontier of the kingdom.

3rdly. All those who desire the success of the Italian cause are invited to assist by every means in their power to provide the army with horses, mules, money, and every other assistance that may further their ends.

Be it understood, however, that if for the said assistance it should be required that a reimbursement be made by Government, a corresponding "bono" shall be delivered to them.

His Majesty has been the first to set the example by contributing 20 fine horses from his private stud.

MY LORD,

Paris, April 22, 1848.

As I see by Mr. Abercromby's last despatches, which reached me under flying seal, that much uneasiness had been excited in the Sardinian Government by an address from the Milanese Provisional Government to that of France, I thought it as well to mention the matter again to M. Lamartine, though when we had previously some conversation on the subject he had treated it very lightly.

His reply was again of the same character. He said that the French Government had never published the document, and that he had never made any reply to it.

ROBERT CAMPBELL.

(Inclosure.)—Manifesto of the Central Provisional Government of Lombardy.

Milan, April 12, 1848.

The Central Provisional Government of Lombardy to the Nations of Europe.

A PEOPLE regenerated in their own blood, spilt in a heroic battle of 5 days, fought by them with an army most unequal, against a numerous army previously prepared, can confidently present themselves to Europe, and ask to be judged, without pride and without fear.

We say the judgment, and we might say the suffrage, because our cause is already judged; first, by God, who nerved our efforts; secondly, by men, who have celebrated our victory. We do not wish to escape from the supreme tribunal of public opinion, which is the interpreter of the conscience of all mankind and the absolute arbiter of people and kings. We have fought and won in the face of the world, and in the face of the world we present ourselves to Europe, not to have our victory sanctioned, but to make it evident that we conquered because the right was on our side.

In the face of the Austrian Government, which, in force of the stipulations of the Congress of Vienna, has held us for 34 years under its dominion, we have the inalienable right, which all people have, to be independent, and to be masters of our native land. We have the right not only to be Lombards, but Italians. Treaties may settle questions between nations but they cannot dispose of the rights of a people; as they cannot blot out a history, abolish a language, and establish that a transient act, created by force, should prevail over the laws fixed by Providence. The life of nations belongs to the highest order of things, in which diplomacy, with its combinations liable to momentary interests, does not enter. It may happen that a nation, struck by the violence of events or broken up by its own fault, may appear as if shrouded in the funeral pall of her misfortunes; but the least accident, the least word, is sufficient to breathe a new life into her, and it is then that she rises again in the full vigour of her right. Nor could we be ever looked upon as a lifeless nation, not even during the long period of our slavery, as we ever formed a part, although detached and depressed, of Italian nationality, and were admitted and respected, not only on account of our geographical situation and statistical condition, but also by the public right, to which all civilized nations are entitled. We were ever jealous and unshaken supporters of our Italian nationality. We may accuse ourselves, we may be accused, of having submitted ourselves to a foreign domination; but we cannot accuse ourselves, nor can we be accused of having acknowledged the right, and least of all, of having disavowed our nationality. Every act of our public life, every act of our private life, would clear us from this accusation. Every manifestation of thought in science, letters, and arts, would give the lie to it. No, we never professed to be Austrians, nor even Lombards or Venetians, we always professed to be, and wished to be, Italians.

But if even we had tranquilly acquiesced in the law of circumstances, and had forsworn our right, the system pursued by the Austrian Government from the fatal 28th of April, 1814, up to the day of its expulsion, was such as to render it insupportable, from a sentiment of our dignity, both as men and Christians. Safe in point of right, we stand so high in point of fact, that we feel the necessity of restraining our expressions in the face of Europe, in order that it may not appear as if we wished to set ourselves up as a miracle of patience.

The Austrian Government continually strove not only to disinherit us of our own country, but to make nations regard us as the men, the country, and the province of Austria, but likewise bent its endeavours to debase us in our own eyes as apostates of the Italian family ; it bent itself to corrupt us, to quench all feeling of conscience and vitality. In 1813, when frightened by the flight of Napoleon from the Island of Elba, and the Italian movement of Gioachimo Murat, it promised to respect our nationality, to grant us a constitution and an Italian representation ; and so many promises were confined to the deceitful representation of the Central and Provincial Congregations, that by degrees we became deprived of every power of proposing measures, deprived of every right, even that of advising and petitioning.

It promised to preserve those of our soldiers who had gloriously fought in Napoleon's battles ; instead of which they were immediately disbanded or incorporated with the troops from the other parts of the empire, thus making the noble profession of arms a shameful slavery for us, an instrument of servitude for ourselves and for others. It promised to pay the debts it had taken on itself, which belonged to the Kingdom of Italy, and acknowledged them as just ; then they were disowned and left unpaid, burthening instead the Monte Lombardo-Veneto, an Italian fund, with Austrian debts, stealthily causing them to be paid under the most foul mystery.

The Austrian Government never kept one of its promises, and on being reminded of them, it laughed at us and punished us.

As a violator of public faith, it could not feel any check on its arbitrary will, and it did not. It burthened us with immoderate taxes upon our goods, our persons, and the necessities of life ; it compelled us to prevent its bankruptcy, to which its disordered finances, stupidly and thievishly administered, dragged it from time to time. It brought upon us a host of foreign employés, public functionaries, and secret spies, who ate our bread, administered our affairs, judged upon our rights, while ignorant of our language and our customs. It imposed upon us bastard laws, inefficient from their multiplicity ; it imposed upon us long inextricable criminal law proceedings, in which there was nothing solemn or true except the sentence, the prison, the pillory, the hangman, and the gallows. It entangled us in a net of civil and military, juridical and ecclesiastical regulations, all fettering us, and all centred in Vienna, that pretended to have the sole monopoly of thought, of will, of decision. Every development of our commerce and industry was denied to us, to serve the interest of Austrian provinces and of privileged government manufactures, the private speculation of Viennese oligarchs. It subjected the municipal and communal system, the ancient boast of this country, the precious legacy of the clear good sense of the Italians, to a minute and irksome surveillance, all connected with the interest of the revenue, all tending to confine and to confuse. It pretended to protect religion, merely to use it as a tool of despotism, and make it a slave to its fears. It deprived public charity of every spontaneous action, entangled it with administrative procrastinations, reduced it to an obedient machine of Aulic omnipotence. It did not permit, and made a difficulty to permit—arming itself with the most vile precautions—the spontaneous charity of the citizens to succour public misery, to check and purge the contagion of corruption which was abandoned to itself on high roads, in cottages, in asylums, and in prisons. It seized on the patrimony of minors, obliging guardians to invest it in public Government paper, left to the mercy of its mysterious frauds. It pauperized liberal professions, subjecting their exercise to the most abject and vexatious regulations. It persecuted Italian science, sought to destroy it by means of multifarious studies introduced in the public instruction, the whole of them falsified, in order that our ideas might not remain free, in order that their clumsy burthen might stifle and render abortive the outbursts of genius. It raised ridiculous scruples, hateful and innumerable stumbling-blocks to the Italian press, and to the diffusion of foreign books and journals, to debase our intellects and our hearts, and to disjoin us from European civilization. It ensnared and scourged the most illustrious intellects, protecting instead narrow and servile comprehensions; it organized the infamous sale of people's consciences, it organized an army of spies, made a system of secret denunciation, of suspicion; made the police the arbiters of liberty, life, and fortune, incriminated the wish, inflicted a penalty on words, menaced the thoughts, mingled and made no distinction between the victims of patriotism and those convicted as forgers and murderers.

This and still worse we suffered for so many years; we suffered the shame which was evident to ourselves and to all Europe; we suffered with the courage of patience, striving by all means in our power that the spark of national feeling should not be extinguished. We expected little, we desired nothing from the Austrian Government, but we were kept back by the terrible responsibilities that we would have brought upon ourselves, throwing, perhaps prematurely, in the midst of Europe the great question of our independence. The movements of 1821 and 1830 agitated and shook us most profoundly, and the cry which was heard throughout the world of the cruel tortures of Spielberg announced how many noble intellects, how many ardent minds had since then sworn to sacrifice themselves for the national cause. Still the whole country continued in its forbearance, in its perpetual but tacit protest against the Austrian Government, and showed that it was determined to wait till the day when the measure of its oppressions and our patience was at its height.

And that day came. At the voice of the great Pontiff, whom God has raised up for the salvation of Italy, for the freedom of all Christian people, we felt kindled with every brotherly affection, we felt to be more Italians than ever. Making of his name the symbol of our hopes, of our aims, our minds so long compressed began to expand, our national feeling expressed itself in an unanimous tribute of admiration, of gratitude, of love to Pius IX, and behold, the Austrian Government put forth all its strength to prevent our showing ourselves to be Catholics and Italians, to make us almost accomplices of its odious attack on Ferrara; behold it breaking through every restraint by a blind and cruel rage, and letting loose its "sbirri" on the unarmed Milanese people while they were celebrating in the name of Pius IX, the entry of the new Archbishop, and soiling the public squares and streets with guiltless blood. Ah! that blood ought to have made us declare a war of extermination to the Austrian Government; still we had yet patience; we wished to see, we wished Europe should see to what pitch the despotism of the House of Lorraine might be carried.

From that day we only thought of multiplying protests, remonstrances, demands; the Central, the Municipal, the Provincial Congregations, all constituted judicial, administrative, scientific bodies, and the most eminent citizens joined together, of one accord, in one petition, in one protest: there was but one voice in the whole country, one sole complaint, one sole manifestation, which broke forth in every act: never was seen so unanimous and perfect harmony among a whole people. But the Austrian Government showed itself aware of these demonstrations merely to elude them, to turn them into ridicule, in order to quell them. On our part we scrupulously observed and respected all legal forms; on that of the Austrian Government there was nothing but provocations, insults, arbitrary arrests, and senseless proclamations. But it did more. It organized a band of assassins, advised them, protected them; let loose from the prisons cut-throats, inflamed by wine and bribed with money, to attack unarmed men and peaceful citizens; it did not hesitate to dishonour the military uniform by making soldiers the instruments of this iniquitous proceeding, and Milan, for the 2nd time, on the 3rd of January of infamous and mournful recollection, and Milan and Padua saw renewed the butcheries of Gallicia.

Still we continued to be patient, and although with bleeding hearts we showed that we were ready to rely on the soothing promises with which it tried to stifle our indignation; lying promises, though coming from the seat nearest to the throne; promises immediately gainsaid by proscriptions, banishments, by fresh military apparatus destined to thunder upon our town, and the proclamation of a sort of martial law ("Giudizio Statario"). We strove, however, to be patient, and submitted to endure the bitterest insults, the most cruel outrages for more than 2 long months of cruel agonies.

Finally, on the 18th of March, a proclamation was put forth in Milan stating that the Austrian Government had determined to concede to its subjects more extended institutions, promising the liberty of the press, and the convocation in July at Vienna of representatives of all the States in the empire. At the same time intelligence was spread of the movements of Vienna, from which we gathered that the Austrian Government was compelled to yield to a popular movement. That proclamation and that intelligence revealed at once that the promises were only extorted, and would be eluded or denied on a change of events. Therefore we resolved to try a last experiment, and to make evident the intentions of Vienna before all Europe. Victims as we had been for many years of the deceptions and frauds of the police, we demanded that that body should be abolished, and the preservation of public order confided to a civic guard.

We were answered by the fire of cannon and of musketry.

Then we felt that the moment of action had arrived, and we rose; we ceased then to be patient, and determined to finish it for ever.

God was with us! With a few hundred guns, with those weapons that chance placed in our hands, with the pavement of the streets, the tiles of the roofs, with our ingeniously raised barricades, with the pealing of the tocsin, in a conflict of 5 days we terrified and put to flight an army of 16,000 well disciplined soldiers, who had been excited by their merciless chief with promises that our city would be delivered up to fire and to pillage.

God was with us; with us, the weak against the strong; and no sooner we attempted to force open from within the gates of the town, we were surrounded by crowds of brethren who flew to arms outside, called together by those sounds of war, and who hastened to share with us the dangers of the battle and the joys of victory.

Scarcely 3 weeks were passed, and all Italy held out a fraternal and succouring hand. The magnanimous King of Sardinia is the first to put himself at the head of an Italian army, such as has not been seen for 3 centuries past, for the defence of the Italian cause; and one voice is on our lips, one sentiment in our hearts: "Viva l'Indipendenza Italiana!"

The Austrian Government no longer exists for us; it is now our enemy, with whom we must and do desire to fight, an enemy whom we shall meet under the tricoloured flag—our banner and that of Italy; an enemy with whom we can never come to terms. We have risen to the dignity of a nation, we become once more Italians, and in the sacred joy with which this conviction inebriates us, we feel a horror even at the idea of any foreign domination whatsoever. We should deem ourselves unworthy of the miracles that God has accomplished for us, if we did not feel inspired to unite ourselves with all our Italian brethren; if we did not declare before the world that never more we should submit our necks to the yoke of the Austrian Government, or even to enter into a compromise with it.

If we even wished it, the thing could not be effected. The Austrian Government, we are happy to say, and for which we thank Heaven, has placed us in such a position that we cannot. It carries on a war of extermination against us, and has renewed a system of pagan and barbarian devastation. The butcheries, the degradations, with which its hordes have marked their way in their disgraceful fight, opened between us and it an abyss which separates us for ever. Our fields desolated by pillage and by fire, our churches profaned, our women violated, our children massacred and burnt; many of our dear brethren treacherously carried off and imprisoned by detached parties, render it impossible for us to entertain a thought of being reconciled to the Austrian Government. From such an enemy, who has thus desecrated the name of war, how could we receive the name of peace? Ours is a war of defence, of civilization against barbarism, and we will pursue it fearlessly, prepared for all, even for the last extremity, with the minds of men, who, placed in a great crisis, will neither withdraw, nor can they.

For these our declarations, for these our resolutions, we call upon Europe to bear witness: to Europe we turn, asking efficient aid towards a great work of justice and humanity. The Austrian Government orders against us a crusade, excites its populations by every argument of hatred and hypocrisy. We do not fear its battalions; we expect them in the confidence that victory will be once again on the righteous side. But for the honour of this age, the honour of civilization, and of the Christian name, we admit that we are depressed in spirits, on thinking that there are people so blinded by ferocious fanaticism, willing to carry on a war disgraceful and iniquitous. It is for Europe to enlighten them, to make them comprehend their true interests, to restrain them from carrying on an enterprise in which misfortune and disgrace can alone be gained. Let the European opinion raise its principal voice, and the result must be that the age shall be spared the shame of renewed barbarism.

Our fate is in the hand of God; Europe is the judge of our actions. This age is big with events, which may recompose on a new basis all Christian society. Perhaps the day is not far distant, in which all people, putting down their ancient jealousies, may meet under the banner of universal fraternity, and, all dignities being hushed, they will cultivate pacific relations, which commerce and industry will be the means of binding indissolubly. We offer up our vows for the speedy advent of that day: free, independent Italians, we will then willingly entwine the sacred bonds of brotherly peace, even with those who now form a part of the Austrian empire, if they wish it. Nations will receive us into the European compact, because we can tell them,—we, who, of all the Italian people were destined to suffer most, to atone more painfully for the faults and errors of our forefathers,—we had the glory of arousing them all, of nerving them in the sublime emotions of our struggle and of our victory, of uniting them all under our national banner; we are worthy to speak in the name of Italy, our common country.

I HAVE the honour to inclose a despatch from Mr. Petre.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

GEORGE B. HAMILTON.

(Inclosure.)—Mr. Petre to Sir George Hamilton.

SIR,

Rome, April 12, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint you, for the information of Viscount Palmerston, that yesterday evening was published a Ministerial ordinance by the Minister of Finance, by and under the advice of the Consalto di Stato, of the Council of Ministers, and by will of His Holiness, ordering that the notes of the Roman Bank of Discount shall be received from the date of the decree, and for the space of 3 months, as legal money;—that for this space of time the Bank is relieved from the obligation of paying its notes in specie;—that the privilege of issuing 1,500,000 dollars is reduced to 800,000;—that the condition of the Bank shall be published weekly in the “Gazzetta di Roma,”—that “for the greater guarantee of the possessors of notes, during their course as legal money, they must on every demand of the possessors be changed for Boni del Tesoro, bearing interest, and mortgage on real property of ecclesiastical establishments, expressly assigned for this purpose by Apostolic will (benepiacito Apostolico), and repayable as they fall due in specie; failing payment when due they shall be satisfied by the sale of the property mortgaged, to take place immediately by public auction without any expense.”

However doubtful the success of this measure may be, the Government had no other resource. Want of confidence, the rapid disappearance of the gold and silver coin, either from hoarding, or for the payment of the troops and volunteers on their march, caused a run upon the Roman Bank, and serious consequences might have ensued if some attempt had not been made to restore confidence.

Assemblages of some of the lowest of the working classes, not indeed very numerous, their numbers being probably augmented by the idlest, who used to depend on the charity of the Jesuits, have been for the last 2 days noisy and clamorous before the residences of the Treasurer, and the banker Valentini, lately retired from business. There were some cries of down with the rich! down with the Roman Princes! Money was distributed amongst them by the Treasurer, and by Messrs. Valentini and Torlonia; and Prince Borghese, one of the Conservators of the Senate, addressed an assemblage in firm language, telling them that henceforth work would be given to those willing to work, but no more charity.

Every effort is made, both secretly and publicly, to excite the masses and to induce mistrust. The agitators in the clubs and other places of resort, under pretext for what they term the holy war, are crying out for fresh armaments, and a deputation from these clubs called upon the Cardinal Secretary of State a few days ago, when the well-known Ciceroacchio, now the president of a newly-established one, the Circolo Popolare, told his Eminence that money must be found; that if it were ill for those who had none, it would be worse for those who had some and who would not give it.

The following is a translation of the latter part of an article headed,—“War and Money,” by Sterbini, in the “Contemporaneo,” of Tuesday, 11th of April:

“And you who, shut up in a cold egotism, lock up in iron chests your treasures, and removing from around you all appearance of luxury, call yourselves poor in order not to give a dollar to the chest of the country, fly from society, leave Italy, take refuge amongst people brutalised by slavery; but make haste, for soon you will with difficulty find any in Europe. Why do you contaminate by your presence this land, in which revive so many virtues, in which every sacrifice springs spontaneously from the heart, in which the inhabitants strive one with the other to render themselves honoured and immortal? Fly! The patience of the people has a limit; woe! if they should overpass it, woe! if the baseness of your vile passions succeed in endangering the holy cause which is now defended, and this would happen if the means necessary for the war were to fail. That gold which you zealously shut up will be your ruin. Read history, and if your soul, by punishment of Heaven, be shut to every generous sentiment, if the fountain of moral pleasures be dried up within your heart, let at least that interest of preservation which so masters you, move you. In the serious dangers in which the country is, do you think that recourse will not at last be had to violent means? Did a people ever stop for trifling considerations when it is a question of being or of not being? And why will you drag this people to abandon legal ways? Why will you that they have recourse to force as to the only anchor of safety?

“A sacred duty incites us to counsel you for your own good; the love of order will lead us to search out every way of calming the boiling passions of the multitude; but if you yourselves, instead of raising a mound, open the way to the torrent which is advancing, if daring incorrigibly you defy it, we, crossing our arms, will repeat the sublime words of the people of the middle ages,—‘Let it be as it will, it is the vengeance of God which is passing.’”

Many arrests have been made in the course of to-day by the Civic Guard. The greater number of those arrested, some singly, some in small knots, were armed with knives; many had money. The people generally say that they are thieves; the club agitators, that they are the paid agents of the retrogrades.

A better spirit is beginning to animate the Civic Guards. They now say that they will act if called upon.

No. 287.—Sir G. Hamilton to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. April 25.)
MY LORD, Florence, April 17, 1848.

THE Provisional authorities of the districts embracing the towns of Massa and Carrara in the Modenese States, have determined to elect a Chamber of Deputies by universal suffrage, in order to decide upon the future fate of that part of the territory which the population of Florence and Lucca are determined to annex to Tuscany.

I have already had occasion to inform your Lordship of the system which the Tuscan Government have adopted for the election of their future Chamber. The list of voters for the electoral colleges are already posted up in a printed form on the walls in every comunità, but notwithstanding the lowness of the franchise, it does not satisfy the violent party, whose opinions are adopted entirely on the subject by the press; and an article has already denounced the closeness of the system in the “Patria,” the least Radical of the journals in circulation; nor shall I be surprised if a modification of the measure in a more liberal sense is very shortly adopted.

Communications directly from the seat of war in Lombardy are infrequent. It was officially reported in various journals that a great victory had been obtained by the Piedmontese over the Austrians at Goito, and that the advanced guard had passed the Mincio, made 2,000 prisoners, and encamped on the left bank of the river.

Subsequent accounts contradict the importance of this affair. A private letter from a Piedmontese officer, published in the "Resorgimento" of Turin, who was engaged on this occasion, states that an attack was made on the Austrian troops in Goito; that they were driven out of the place, and then recrossed the Mincio by a bridge which they blew up, and thus prevented the King of Sardinia's troops from following them to the other side. Some few prisoners were taken by the Piedmontese, and about 100 Italian troops in the Imperial service appear to have deserted to the Piedmontese army.

The amount of force engaged on either side is not mentioned, and would appear to have been trifling.

Yesterday, the 16th instant, the Neapolitan war steam-vessel Archimede, of 8 guns, brought to Leghorn, and landed 1,100 Neapolitan troops, who immediately marched to the frontier.

MY LORD,

Turin, April 19, 1848.

IN a former despatch I announced to your Lordship that His Royal Highness the Duke of Parma had quitted his capital.

Since then later information has been received, stating that His Royal Highness was still at Parma, his journey having been delayed under the pretence that the Commissioner dispatched to Milan to secure his safe passage through Lombardy had not returned.

In the meantime, the Provisional Government of Parma have treated His Royal Highness with much indignity and severity, sequestering his plate, horses, carriages, and furniture, as security for a sum of 50,000 francs to be advanced to the Duke for the expenses of his journey.

The harshness of the Provisional Government was carried so far as to require that the plate used for the Duke's own table should be removed.

The conduct of the Provisional Government at Parma, and that of Milan, bears much the appearance of a preconceived plan for forcing the Duke of Parma and his son—the one virtually in a state of arrest, the other practically so, for he is guarded by 2 sentries outside of his door and another constantly in the same room with himself—to sign some document by which they shall renounce their claims to the sovereignty of Parma.

Paris, April 24, 1848.

IN the course of conversation this morning, M. Lamartine reverted to the present state of Italy. He said it was likely that Charles Albert would sustain a defeat, and that such an event would very much complicate the position of the French Government. There would be a great cry for assistance to the Italians. He begged me to state at once to your Lordship, that in the first place he was unwilling to do anything at all, unless forced by events, and then he should not wish to attempt anything except in accord with England: he had always thought that the affairs of that Peninsula could never be settled without a sort of Congress or Conference, as to which he should wish, when the time arrived, to come to an understanding with Her Majesty's Government.

That such a Congress might be held either at Rome or at Milan, or at London or Paris, if that should be preferred.

I said that I would communicate to you his idea of what events might require.

I gathered from what he had said, that he had the same view as the British Government as to the independence of Italy, and that even in the way of carrying out these views, that independence must be respected. Any plan of that kind must be met halfway by the Italian Powers, if it did not emanate from them.

M. Lamartine is determined to be no party to any unprovoked aggression.

Hibernia, Naples, April 14, 1848.

I REQUEST you will inform the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty that a Neapolitan steam-packet arrived here at 7 A.M. to-day, by which I have received letters from Lieutenant Smyth of the Antelope, from Her Majesty's Vice-Consul at Trieste and the Consul at Ancona, as well as from Count de Salm, the Governor of Trieste, of which I inclose copies, the whole relating to the important and critical state of affairs in the Austrian dominions. The Oberon, which conveys the mails to Marseilles, proceeds at such an early hour that I have not time to make any observations on the contents of these despatches, beyond my intention to send all the vessels at my disposal to the Adriatic for the protection of the persons and property of British subjects, of which I shall apprise the Governor of Trieste, giving him at the same time to understand that Her Majesty's naval forces cannot further interfere. The Spartan has been ordered to proceed at once to the Ionian Islands, and I shall direct Captain Symonds to ascend the Adriatic for the object above stated. The Mutine has been also ordered from Beyrout to Athens, and she shall likewise be sent on to the Adriatic, if the state of Greece is sufficiently quiet to admit of her being withdrawn with security to the English residents in that quarter.

The Secretary to the Admiralty.

SIR,

Antelope, Ancona, April 7, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to report to you that I left Trieste for Ancona, in Her Majesty's ship under my command, at 3h. 25m. P.M. yesterday, having been requested by Henry Raven, Esq., Her Majesty's Consul at Trieste, to forward the despatch which he had addressed to you through Her Majesty's Consulate at Ancona.

I also inclose a copy of Mr. Raven's letter to me, together with a despatch addressed to you by His Excellency Count Salm, the Governor of Trieste, and further to acquaint you that I arrived at this port at 10 A.M. this day, and purpose returning to Trieste immediately after performing this service.

I left at Trieste the Austrian brigs of war Oreste and Montecuculi, the Volcano steam-vessel, and 8 gun-boats.

I have, &c.

Vice-Admiral Sir W. Parker.

(Inclosure 3.)—Vice-Consul Raven to Lieutenant Smyth.

SIR,

Trieste, April 6, 1848.

IN consequence of the alarming state of affairs which the Austrian dominions are placed in at this moment, owing to the declaration made by Sardinia and the Papal States, and the expected declaration of the Neapolitan Government, to which may be added the possibility of France countenancing the measures adopted and expected to be adopted against the Government of Austria, I earnestly request that you will be pleased to convey to Ancona despatches from the Austrian Government here, to be forwarded from Ancona to Vice-Admiral Sir W. Parker; judging from the present tranquillity of this town and ts immediate vicinity, your presence, so far as regards the protection of British interests, may be dispensed with for the period requisite to perform this mission. The vast amount of British property in jeopardy from any attack made on this town, within a few hours' approach by sea or land from the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom, and the fleets which may be expected to come from Sardinia, Naples, and other places, render it necessary for me to communicate with the Admiral with the least possible delay.

I have, &c.

Lieutenant Smyth.

H. RAVEN.

SIR, Trieste, April 6, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to forward to you the inclosed despatch from the Government here. In consequence of the news arrived this morning of the declaration of war against Austria by Sardinia and the Papal States, and the expectation that Naples will follow their example, I beg to state that I consider the immediate presence of a British ship of war is necessary for the protection of British interests at this port. There being no other safe mode of conveyance, I have requested Lieutenant F. Smyth, commanding Her Majesty's ship Antelope, now in this port, to proceed with these despatches to Ancona, when they will be forwarded to Leghorn by the British Consul. I consider that the large amount of British property here fully justifies me in this step, and from the present tranquillity of this town and its immediate vicinity, I see no objection to the temporary absence of the Antelope for the time necessary to perform the voyage and return.

The Governor having fully explained in his communication to you the important necessity of the presence of a British force, and the Antelope being on the point of departure, I beg you will excuse this hurried communication.

I have, &c.

Vice-Admiral Sir W. Parker.

H. RAVEN.

SIR, Ancona, April 7, 1848.

HER Majesty's ship Antelope, Lieutenant Smyth, Commander, arrived in this port this morning with despatches for you from his Excellency the Governor of Trieste, to be forwarded with the least possible delay. I have therefore the honour of at once transmitting them by a special courier.

The Antelope having come for this express purpose has started immediately for Trieste. It is strongly rumoured here that the Sardinian fleet is expected in this port, and that both the Governor of this town and the Sardinian Consul have received instructions thereof. It is further stated that the fleet was to sail from Genoa to-morrow for the Adriatic.

I have nothing official on this subject. Here we are perfectly tranquil ; but enthusiasm is at its pitch for the independence of Italy. Troops of the line and volunteers are daily marching northward. The small Austrian garrisons of Comachio, Magnavacca, and Valuno, in these States, have capitulated to the Papal troops and civic guard ; Ferrara till holds out.

The English name stands well here, as we are supposed to wish well to the present progress and the regeneration of this country.

I have, &c.

Vice-Admiral Sir W. Parker.

GEO. MOORE.

(Inclosure 6.)—The Govr. of Trieste to Vice-Admiral Sir W. Parker.
SIR,

I HOPE you have received my last letter, 2nd April, No. 998, by which I had the honour to acquaint your Excellency that the town and port of Trieste was for the moment sufficiently protected by the Austrian navy and strand batteries against any attack that should be tried by the Venetian Provisional Government.

Now circumstances have changed. There is no more the Venetian navy alone by whom such an attack may be anticipated. The King of Sardinia and the Pope have begun hostilities against the Austrian Empire, Naples perhaps soon will follow that example, and France also would be willing to protect the Italian States and new formed Republics by an attempt against Trieste from the sea side.

Without venturing to enter into a discussion on the line of conduct to be adopted by Her Majesty's naval commanders, I beg leave to observe to your Excellency that it would not be indifferent to the British Government if other maritime Powers should play the master in the Adriatic, and if Austria, the most true and faithful ally of Great Britain, should suffer by an attack from their side, which would undoubtedly be accomplished by immense losses for British subjects and properties, of which there are great stores in the magazines of Trieste.

It is, therefore, that I have the honour to inform your Excellency of the state of things, and of the perils possibly menacing Trieste, that you may judge what, according to your instructions and powers, it would be best to do, being quite sure that if 2 British men-of-war, or any force you would deem adequate, be stationed in the port of Trieste, or cruize in the Adriatic, no one would dare to think of attacking Trieste or any other Austrian coast, or insulting Austrian ships. You would very much oblige me by a kind answer to this letter, and much more if that answer could be a satisfactory one for the wishes expressed by me. I have, &c.

Vice-Admiral Sir W. Parker.

No. 291.—The Secy. to the Admiralty to the Right Hon. E. J. Stanley.
 SIR, Admiralty, April 24, 1848.

I AM commanded by my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to send you herewith, for the information of Viscount Palmerston, a copy of letter from the Sardinian Consul-General in London, dated the 19th instant, transmitting a copy of the instructions given to the officers commanding the ships of war of His Majesty the King of Sardinia, relative to hostilities with Austria.

I am, &c.

The Hon. E. J. Stanley.

W. A. B. HAMILTON.

 SIR, London, April 19, 1848.

I BEG to communicate to you for the information of the Honourable Lords of the Admiralty, the following extract of a despatch from his Excellency the Minister of Foreign Affairs at Turin, dated the 9th of April, 1848:

“While passing the frontier of his States, His Majesty, desirous of manifesting distinctly the important and sole motive which led the army under his command to the territory of Lombardy, ordered that the flag hoisted should be the Italian tricolour with the escutcheon of Savoy in the centre. His Majesty has ordered that the same flag shall be hoisted on the mainmast of his ships of war, which, however, are to retain also in the usual place at the stern the blue national flag. As the national merchant-vessels are to adopt the same flag in the way pointed out, I have the honour to acquaint you with the fact for your information, and in order that you may communicate it to the authorities of the port in which you reside; requesting you to take the necessary steps that the new flag may be recognised and respected,”

I have, &c.

The Secretary to the Admiralty.

W. B. HEATH.

P.S.—I beg to add the copy of the instructions given by the Admiralty to the commanders of His Sardinian Majesty's ships.

Instructions to the following effect have been given to the Officers commanding the Ships of War of His Majesty the King of Sardinia, and have been officially communicated to the Consul-General in London.

The state of hostility in which His Sardinian Majesty's Government finds itself with respect to His Majesty the Emperor of Austria, renders it necessary that its intentions with respect to maritime emergencies should be made manifest.

It is not the intention of His Majesty in this war to avail himself of those rights on the sea which belligerent Powers have in past times assumed to themselves.

It has not escaped His Majesty's Government that the greater part of the officers and crews of Austrian ships of war is composed of Italians, and that in a war essentially Italian, and waged solely for the purpose of expelling strangers from Italy, it is generous not to combat with Italians.

The Government therefore has instructed the Admiralty to order the Commanders of the Royal ships of war to confine themselves to their defence in case of attack by Austrian ships of war, without, however, provoking such attacks.

With respect to mercantile ships with the Austrian flag, it is the intention of the Government that they shall be allowed to pursue their voyages without molestation. But as it is possible that Austrian ships, or others under cover of the Austrian flag with the pretexts of trading, may be fitted out as privateers to molest the ships of His Majesty's subjects, or those of the Italian States allied with ours, the Commanders of the Royal ships are directed to ascertain that vessels hoisting the Austrian flag are really in the merchant service and used for traffic only, by the examination of the papers on board, or by any other mode they may deem necessary. Should there appear reasonable grounds of suspicion that they are privateers, such vessels will be conveyed to one of the ports of the State for the ulterior decision of the competent tribunals.

No. 292.—Lord Napier to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. April 27.)

MY LORD,

Naples, April 9, 1848.

ON the evening of the 5th instant a Neapolitan regiment of the line was embarked for Leghorn, and on the 7th there appeared in the official journal the accompanying proclamation, addressed by His Majesty the King to the people, appealing to their patriotic feelings, and promising them to march against the national enemy.

In consequence of these hostile demonstrations, which may be regarded as equivalent to a declaration of war against Austria, I sought an interview this morning with his Excellency Marquis Dragonetti, and requested him to explain the intentions of his Government.

His Excellency stated that the regiment alluded to above had been placed at the disposal of the Grand Duke of Tuscany, and would act in concert with His Royal Highness's troops, but that at the present moment he could not state with confidence whether it was destined to cross the frontier of Lombardy or not. He added, that it had been sent at the request of the Tuscan Government, that a greater force would shortly be set on foot for the same purpose, and that another detachment would be devoted to strengthen the garrison of Ancona at the solicitation of the Holy See. The free right of passage for troops, to any number, had also been obtained from the Papal Government.

I observed to Marquis Dragonetti that Her Majesty's Government could not see without regret such an infraction of existing Treaties as would be involved in an unprovoked invasion of the Imperial territory, and asked his Excellency how he could justify his Government in engaging in a war without any valid pretext. He replied that he knew their position was one theoretically of questionable right, but that the national will was declared on the subject, and that the Government must obey the impulse given by the people. He also alleged the appeal for assistance made by the Government of Sardinia, through the channel of Count de Rignon, dispatched for this purpose to the Neapolitan Court, and the interests of the Italian League, which rendered a concert and community of policy and action imperative on the Powers of the Peninsula, though he acknowledged that the Italian League existed as yet merely as a project and matter of sentiment, and had acquired no substantial international shape.

I asked Marquis Dragonetti what were the views of the Neapolitan Cabinet as to the future disposal of Lombardy, should it be severed from the Imperial States, and whether it would be agreeable to their wishes that it should be united to the Sardinian Crown. His Excellency declared that such a settlement would be inconsistent with the balance of power between the Italian States, and that the Austrian territories must be erected into an independent kingdom. His Excellency did not, however, seem prepared to offer any practical solution of the question.

I availed myself of the same occasion to urge upon Marquis Dragonetti the expediency of embracing the same resolution in respect to the affairs of Sicily, which, by timely exertion, might still remain attached, if not to the Crown, at least to the reigning family of Naples.

I have deferred entering upon these subjects with the Neapolitan Minister for Foreign Affairs until the departure of the English squadron, in consequence of a report which has obtained some currency, that it was stationed here with the view of influencing or coercing the policy of the Government of His Sicilian Majesty.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

NAPIER.

(Inclosure.)—Proclamation of the King of Naples in favour of the Italian League. (Translation.)

BELOVED PEOPLE,

Naples, April 7, 1848.

YOUR King shares with you the lively interest which the Italian cause raises in every mind, and moreover, it has been determined to contribute to its safety and success, with all the material force which our peculiar position in one part of our kingdom leaves at our disposal. We consider the Italian League as existing de facto, although not yet established by certain and unalterable treaties, because the universal consent of the Princes and people of the Peninsula causes us to consider it as already concluded, as the Congress which we were the first to propose is now about to meet in Rome, and we purpose to be the first to send to it the representatives of this part of the great Italian family. Already have troops been sent by us by sea, and already has a division begun its march along the coast of the Adriatic to act in concert with the army of Central Italy.

The fate of our common country will be decided on the plains of Lombardy, and every Prince and people of the Peninsula is bound to assist, and to take part in the struggle to insure its independence, liberty, and glory. We, although involved in other private necessities which keep occupied a great part of our army, intend to assist with all our naval and land forces, with our arsenals, and the treasures of the nation. Our brothers are waiting for us on the field of honour, and we shall not fail to attend there where the great cause of Italian nationality will be fought for.

People of the 2 Sicilies, unite round your Prince, let us unite so as to be strong and feared, and let us prepare for the fight with the calmness which springs from a consciousness of strength and courage. Let us confide in the valour of the army to take that part in the great enterprise which befits the greatest kingdom of the Peninsula. To make use of all our strength abroad we have need of concord and peace in the interior, and we confide in the good spirit of our national guard and the love of our people, for the maintenance of public order and observance of the laws; as, on the other hand, they must confide in our loyalty and in our love of those liberal institutions to which we have solemnly sworn, and which we intend to maintain at any, the greatest sacrifice.

By union, self-denial, and firmness, the independence of our beautiful Italy will be established. Let this be our only thought, let this generous passion silence all others less noble, and 24,000,000 of Italians will soon have a powerful country, a common rich patrimony of glory, and a respected nationality which will have weight in the political scale of the world.

THE positions of the Piedmontese army are still as before. The Austrians are encamped outside Porta S. Zeno, along the Adige.

Citizen Augusto Aglebert, captain of the staff and commissary of the Papal army with the Venetian Republic, arrived here this morning and notified to this Provisional Government the military intervention of the Papal troops, who began their passage of the Po yesterday.

Private letters which have this moment reached us from Udine, relate that yesterday, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, General Zucchi marched against the village of Visco, occupied by the Croats, who are said to have fled after a short resistance, leaving about 40 men dead on the field.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

PONSONBY.

(Inclosure.)—Proclamation of Count Hartig to the Lombardo-Venetians.

IN the midst of the excitement and confusion which now prevails among you, listen to the words of reconciliation and consolation which I now address to you.

My name is not unknown to you, and I hope you have not forgotten my affection for Italy and her generous people.

Hear my voice, and be reconciled to that good Monarch who has entrusted me with unlimited power, and has graciously been pleased to give me the honourable commission of inviting you to return under his protection, which will always be able to preserve you from the terrors of anarchy and the rapacity of selfishness, and at the same time grant that freedom and those institutions which are in accordance with the spirit of the present times and the wishes of the people.

Italians of the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom, trust to my word, which I have never betrayed; hear me with that good sense and judgment which so much distinguishes you. The peace during 35 years, during a whole generation, which has been the means of an increasing prosperity, admired and envied by the Italian Peninsula, as well as by the whole of Europe, is now turned into a destructive war.

Your beautiful land has now become the scene of a fierce struggle with soldiers and volunteers of different countries, whom you invite to support your cause, which you call a holy and national cause, and place under the banner of the cross.

But what is your position?

You take from your King, at the moment that he is ready to grant you everything, the Lombardo-Venetian Crown, which 9 years ago was most solemnly placed upon his head, in the presence of your reverend bishops and the representatives of the people, under the shadow of that cross under which you now oppose him.

In the meantime your land will fall into the hands of a neighbouring Prince, who can neither by birth nor feeling lay greater claim to be called Italian, than your Monarch, Emperor Ferdinand, grandson of Peter Leopold.

Italians, &c., you have never had cause to doubt the honourable intentions and justice of your King. You say the system of Government was not in accordance with your wishes, and it appears to be at variance with your national feelings.

But not until the end of the past year did your representatives, the congregations (likewise a royal institution), make known, in virtue of their office, to your Monarch, your grievances and your wishes.

And these demands were by no means rejected, but, on the contrary, submitted to an immediate and impartial examination, with the manifest intention of your King to summon deputies from among you, to deliberate upon the best means for satisfying your just claims.

In the meantime His Majesty the Emperor determined to grant a constitution to that part of his kingdom, and made his will known in a declaration of the 15th of March, on the fixed principle of respecting the feeling of nationality in the different countries of the monarchy.

By this generous gift much more was granted than you had demanded.

How great was, therefore, the astonishment and grief of His Majesty to perceive that exactly that moment was chosen to plunge you into the terrors of war, whereby you have deprived yourselves of the effect of the good intentions of the Monarch, whom you received at his coronation with such rejoicing and magnificence.

Italians, &c., the astonishment at the attack which you made at the very moment in which everything invited you to remain on good terms with us; the unexpected transformation of a Power declared friendly into one secretly attacking us, imposed upon our troops the necessity of taking up a strong position in order to reconquer our sovereign and international rights.

The zeal of all other countries under the sceptre of His Majesty will afford us means to attain this object, for which, as you yourselves must naturally see, we shall use all our force.

Consider that, even if victory in the war is uncertain, and the final consequences doubtful, the devastation of the country, the stoppage of trade and industry, the ruin of the arts and sciences, as well as internal prosperity in years to come, is quite sure.

Consider that which your Monarch has also considered, who has sent me as a messenger of peace to you.

I can assure you in his name, that under the new order of things in the monarchy, you will richly enjoy all the political, national, and intellectual advantages which you are contending for. You will have that freedom and every other concession which your wants, your language, your inclinations, and your nationality require. The administration of your affairs will, under the superintendence of the State, be confided to you. Laws will be established under your influence. The press will be free, and those taxes which fall upon the poor and more numerous class will be reduced.

Is it not unreasonable to wish to obtain by arms what will be granted to you without the terrors of war? Do not be deceived and led astray by the spirit of insurrection, which would be a weakness unworthy of you, but in the midst of the general confusion give place to reflection of which your spirit is capable.

Come in confidence to your Monarch, and be sure that you will be received by a father who has never ceased to love his children.

May your past false notions be effaced from your memory, and may the building of your unity be raised upon the surest foundations, so that your prosperity and nationality may be preserved.

Venice, April 20, 1848.

I TRANSMIT to your Lordship a copy of the answer returned by the Swiss Federal Directory to the letter from the Provisional Government of Venice, which has been published in the "Venice Gazette."

Since I forwarded to your Lordship my despatch of the 7th instant, Venice has remained perfectly tranquil, but the Government is becoming daily more unpopular, and its opponents more loud. Accounts from the mainland represent the state of feeling in the principal towns as little favourable to Venice, and little disposed to acknowledge her supremacy; and the union which existed as long as the Austrians were present seems to be disappearing. It cannot be said that there is any reaction in favour of Austria, but a vast number of persons, seeing little prospect of order, and having neither a share in the Government nor confidence in its members, would offer no very violent opposition to the return of Austria with a constitutional form of government.

The Provisional authorities here have published a decree sequestrating all the property of the Archduke Viceroy of the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom.

Berne, le 6 Avril, 1848.

LE Directoire Fédéral a reçu par l'entremise de son Vice-Consul la note que vous avez adressée à la date du 28 du mois passé au Président de la Confédération Suisse, et dans laquelle vous lui donnez connaissance de la constitution d'un Gouvernement Provisoire pour la République de Venise, en exprimant en même temps l'espoir que les relations d'amitié entre la République de Venise et la Suisse continueront d'exister et se consolideront toujours davantage pour le bonheur des 2 nations.

La Confédération Suisse a toujours revendiqué pour elle le droit de se constituer librement et elle reconnaît aussi ce principe pour les autres nations. C'est donc avec plaisir que le Directoire Fédéral vous félicite, Messieurs, du rétablissement si prompt et presque sans effusion de sang de l'ordre public et d'un état de droit régulier.

Le Directoire Fédéral partage avec vous, Messieurs, l'espoir que le changement des choses, la renaissance de l'antique République des bords de la Mer Adriatique, contribueront à resserrer plus étroitement les liens entre les 2 nations, et exerceront une action salubre particulièrement aussi sous le rapport commercial.

A ces félicitations, le Directoire Fédéral joint en même temps l'assurance de sa plus parfaite considération.

Les Président et Conseil d'Etat du Canton de Berne, Directoire Fédéral, et en leur nom

Le Président, OCHSENBEIN.

No. 307.—Consul-General Dawkins to Visc'. Palmerston.—(Rec. May 2.)

MY LORD,

Venice, April 22, 1848.

HER Majesty's steam-ship Spitfire arrived here from Corfu on the 20th instant.

I have the honour to inclose a copy and translation of a notification published in the "Venice Gazette" by the Sardinian Consul-General here, stating the measures taken by the King of Sardinia for the protection of Sardinian commerce in the Adriatic and Archipelago.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

CLINTON G. DAWKINS.

(Inclosure.)—Notification issued by the Sardinian Consul-General in Venice.

Venice, April 20, 1848.

THIS Consulate has received the following official notification in a recent despatch from Turin :

As the hostilities recently undertaken by the royal army against the Austrian land forces in Italy may naturally inspire the Sardinian merchant navy with some fear of aggression on the part of the ships of war or privateers of Austria, His Sardinian Majesty has immediately taken those steps necessary to tranquillize it, and to assure it of that protection and assistance of which it may stand in need.

His Majesty has therefore ordered the royal squadron forthwith to put to sea, under the command of Rear-Admiral Albini, and the vessels composing it will be distributed in such places where their presence may be most useful.

In consequence of this determination :

The royal frigate St. Michael, on board of which the Rear-Admiral will hoist his flag, and

The frigate Beroldo will cruize in the Adriatic ;

The frigate Des Geneys, and the brig-schooner Staffetta, in the Archipelago ;

The brigantine Daino in the Dardanelles.

In pursuance of directions received at this Consulate, the above-mentioned determination is made known to the merchants and other subjects of His Majesty, in order that they may concert with the commanders of the said royal vessels with regard to the escort to be given to the convoys to be assembled in places agreed upon by them.

No. 309.—Count Dietrichstein to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. May 3.)

Chandos House, le 30 Avril, 1848.

LE Comte Dietrichstein présente ses compliments à son Excellence M. le Vicomte Palmerston, et a l'honneur de lui transmettre ci-jointe une dépêche qu'il vient de recevoir de Vienne, en date du 22 Avril, avec 2 annexes et une sous-annexe. En priant son Excellence de bien vouloir la lui restituer après en avoir pris connaissance, il saisit, &c.

M. LE COMTE,

Vienne, le 22 Avril, 1848.

J'AI l'honneur de vous envoyer copie d'un rapport du Chargé d'Affaires de l'Empereur à Munich, en date du 5 Avril, parceque c'est le meilleur moyen de vous mettre à même de porter à la connaissance du Cabinet Anglais l'objet qui y est traité, avec les détails qui seuls peuvent en faire apprécier le caractère.

Nous nous sommes empressés de répondre à l'ouverture qui nous était faite de la part du Cabinet de Turin, que n'ayant aucunement provoqué la guerre que nous faisait Sa Majesté Sarde, nous consentions à tenir la décision qu'a prise Sa Majesté comme le premier pas vers une meilleure direction, et que nous acceptons le maintien de la paix maritime que nous propose la Cour de Sardaigne. Vous trouvez ci-joint, M. l'Ambassadeur, le texte d'un extrait de la dépêche adressée à M. de Brenner, qu'il remit à M. le Marquis de Pallavicini comme réponse à la note qu'il en avait reçue.

Le Gouvernement Anglais prendra avec intérêt, nous n'en doutons pas, connaissance de ces actes, qui assurent la paix maritime entre les 2 Puissances. Nous eussions fait le même accueil à une ouverture de la même nature de la part de la Cour de Naples, si elle nous eût été faite.

Recevez, &c.

Count Dietrichstein.

FICQUELMONT.

Munich, le 5 Avril, 1848.

M. LE Ministre de Russie m'ayant fait exprimer le désir, ce matin, de pouvoir me parler d'affaires, je me suis empressé de me rendre chez lui pour connaître l'objet dont il aurait à m'entretenir. M. de Sévérine me dit alors que le Ministre de Sardaigne l'avait fait sonder pour savoir s'il voulait se charger de m'engager à recevoir les ouvertures que le Marquis Pallavicini avait eu l'ordre de me faire, ordre qui lui était parvenu par un courrier arrivé hier soir. M. de Sévérine ajouta que ne connaissant point l'attitude que le Cabinet de St. Pétersbourg aura jugé devoir prendre par suite de la rupture qui vient d'éclater entre les Cours d'Autriche et de Sardaigne, il avait fait répondre à M. de Pallavicini qu'il ne se croyait pas autorisé à assumer l'office de médiateur entre les Représentants des 2 Puissances belligérantes, mais qu'il était prêt à intervenir officieusement pour faciliter les ouvertures qu'on avait l'intention de me faire. Sur ma question s'il savait de quelle nature étaient ces ouvertures, M. de Sévérine me dit qu'elles se réfèrent au désir qu'aurait la Cour de Turin de borner son conflit avec l'Autriche aux hostilités sur la terre ferme, et de voir maintenues les relations de commerce maritime entre les 2 pays dans le statu quo actuel.

Je répondis à M. de Sévérine que, bien qu'étant absolument sans instructions à cet égard, je ne croyais cependant pas devoir me refuser à recevoir les ouvertures qu'on m'adressait par l'intermédiaire du Représentant d'une Puissance alliée et amie de l'Empereur mon auguste maître, mais que je devais comme de raison me borner à rendre compte à mon Gouvernement de la démarche que vient de tenter le Ministre de Sa Majesté Sarde.

M. de Sévérine objectant à ce que mon entrevue avec le Marquis Pallavicini ait lieu chez lui à cause de l'attention que, dans les circonstances actuelles, ce fait pourrait éveiller chez les curieux de Munich, nous convîmes de choisir le logement de M. Voillier, Conseiller de la Légation de Russie, qui se trouve situé dans un quartier écarté de la ville, comme l'endroit le plus adapté pour me rencontrer avec M. de Pallavicini.

Vu l'urgence avec laquelle ce dernier paraissait insister à s'acquitter de sa commission, notre entrevue eût lieu encore dans l'après-midi. Le Ministre de Sardaigne me remit alors la feuille ci-jointe en original, en me disant que son Gouvernement désirait par les dispositions dont cette pièce fait mention, éloigner autant qu'il était en son pouvoir, les conséquences funestes que le conflit dans lequel la Sardaigne se trouvait malheureusement engagée avec l'Autriche, pourrait avoir pour les intérêts du commerce maritime des 2 pays; que l'intention du Gouvernement Sarde était d'autant moins douteuse que le sort de la marine militaire Autrichienne avait été en grande partie décidé par les événements de Venise.

En recevant cette communication je me suis abstenu de toute observation sur son contenu; je me suis borné à répondre que je m'empresserais de la transmettre au Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Impériale et Royale Apostolique, dont il m'était impossible de préjuger l'accueil qu'il lui conviendra de faire à cette ouverture. Sans entrer à cette occasion dans une conversation prolongée, j'ai cru cependant m'apercevoir que le Marquis Pallavicini n'était nullement rassuré sur le résultat final de l'entreprise dans laquelle le Roi Charles-Albert vient de s'engager; qu'en cas d'une collision entre les 2 armées il s'attendait à voir l'avantage rester au Maréchal Radetzky, et qu'il paraissait fonder les espérances plutôt sur les difficultés intérieures qu'il croyait voir surgir sur tous les points de l'empire, et qui, selon lui, auraient pour conséquence inévitable de paralyser l'action du Gouvernement Impérial du côté de l'Italie.

Je dois faire observer à votre Excellence que le Comte Waldkirch, que j'ai vu ce matin, avait déjà été informé par sa correspondance de Turin, de la décision susdite prise par le Gouvernement Sarde relativement aux rapports maritimes et commerciaux avec l'Autriche, et qu'il l'attribuait aux démarches du Ministre de Sa Majesté Britannique à Turin.

Après avoir ainsi rendu compte à votre Excellence de ce qui précède, j'ai l'honneur d'y ajouter les observations suivantes.

Si je me suis permis, sans y avoir été autorisé en aucune manière, de recevoir les ouvertures du Marquis Pallavicini, ç'a été parceque je n'ai pas cru devoir repousser des avances dont il ne m'appartient pas de juger la portée, et qui, dans les intentions du Gouvernement Sarde pourraient peut-être avoir la valeur d'une première tentative d'amener une entente avec le Cabinet Impérial. J'ai pensé d'un autre côté que si la supposition d'une idée de conciliation prêtée à la démarche de la Cour de Turin était erronée, ce procédé pourrait bien décèler le côté où le Gouvernement Sarde se sent le plus gêné, et fournir ainsi des données utiles au Cabinet Impérial pour y asseoir ses calculs ultérieurs.

Je crois finalement devoir faire observer à votre Excellence que j'ai d'autant moins hésité de donner connaissance de la pièce ci-jointe à M. de Sévérine, qui m'en avait préalablement adressé la demande, qu'il avait déjà, de la part de M. de Pallavicini, été instruit de l'essence de son contenu.

Je suis, &c.

Count Ficquelmont.

No. 310.—The Marquis of Normanby to Viscount Palmerston.(Received May 4.)(Extract.)Paris, May 3, 1848.

As I had this morning occasion to see M. Lamartine, I adverted to the question of French intervention in the north of Italy. I asked him whether it was not true that Count Ficquelmont had through M. Appony, previous to his departure, expressed a willingness to make the question of Lombardy matter of negotiation. M. Lamartine assenting to this, and explaining how it had been conveyed to him, I said that I hoped this circumstance would have its effect in preventing any extreme step in the way of intervention: that in addition to other obvious reasons against it, I felt convinced from communications I had from different parts of Italy, that there was great doubt whether such a step would not be ill received by the Italians themselves; that there was no feeling at this moment so dominant among them as the desire to owe their independence to themselves alone; and that whatever might be the nature of the appeals for assistance he might have had, I could not help thinking he ought to take care that the French were not there looked upon as unwelcome intruders; but that none of these objections would apply to his attempting at once to satisfy French sympathies by prompt offers of negotiation.

M. Lamartine said that he should quite agree with every word I had said as far as Italy alone was concerned, but that he was obliged to consider France, and what she would expect and require. He further said, he could assure me that the Government were sincere in an unanimous desire not to take any step which should permanently interfere with the perfect independence of Italy.

MY LORD,

Foreign Office, May 3, 1848.

IN compliance with the request of Count Dietrichstein, Her Majesty's Government, on the 17th ultimo, instructed Mr. Abercromby to urge the Sardinian Government to consent to an armistice in order to afford Count Hartig an opportunity of making, and the Provisional Government at Milan an opportunity of considering the proposition which it was understood that Count Hartig was commissioned by the Cabinet of Vienna to make. It appears, however, that Count Hartig, instead of making any proposal to the Provisional Government at Milan, has merely issued a proclamation addressed to the people of Lombardy, inviting them to send deputations to him at the head-quarters of the Austrian army, with tenders of submission to the Austrian Government. Under these circumstances, the Sardinian Government has informed Her Majesty's Government, by the Sardinian Minister at this Court, that the case has not arisen with reference to which Her Majesty's Government had recommended a suspension of hostilities; and Her Majesty's Government are compelled to acknowledge that this statement on the part of the Sardinian Government is correct.

No. 316.—Sir G. Hamilton to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. May 5.)

MY LORD,

Florence, April 27, 1848.

I HAD the honour of informing your Lordship, in my despatch of the 22nd instant, of the arrest of the Duke of Parma at Bologna.

Don Neri Corsini, in giving me this intelligence, was unable to state by whom, or for what reasons, the Duke had been arrested. In the course of the evening great alarm was spread among the Duke's friends at Florence for the safety of His Royal Highness; my assistance having been applied for, I lost no time in writing the Cardinal Legate at Bologna, to request information as to the cause of the Duke's arrest, and to express my hope that he would be allowed to continue his journey under the protection of the Cardinal. To this letter I received the very courteous reply, a copy of which I have the honour herewith to inclose. I received also a letter from the Duke of Parma, thanking me for my interference in his favour, which proved the interest that Her Majesty had always taken in himself and his family.

I likewise wrote to Mr. Petre at Rome, requesting him to wait on the Cardinal Secretary of State and ask explanations as to the Duke's arrest, and by the despatch which I have this morning received from

Mr. Petre, and which I have the honour to inclose, I am happy to be enabled to inform your Lordship that orders have been transmitted to Bologna to facilitate in every manner His Royal Highness's journey to Civita Vecchia, whence it is his intention to embark for Marseilles.

In a former despatch I stated that the Pope had given positive orders that his troops should not pass the Po, but it appears by Mr. Petre's despatch that General Durando had done so contrary to the orders of His Holiness. I have, &c.

EXCELLENCE,

Bologne, le 24 Avril, 1848.

LES nouvelles qui se sont répandues à Florence quant à l'arrêt de Son Altesse Royale le Duc de Parme à Bologne, ne sont pas tout-à-fait véridiques, et je vais en assurer votre Excellence par le détail exact de ce qui s'est passé.

Son Altesse traversait cette ville pour se rendre à Rome avec le consentement du Gouvernement Provisoire de Parme, qui, pour mieux garantir sa personne, chargea 2 gentilhommes distingués qui appartiennent à la Garde Nationale de l'accompagner, et ce ne fut qu'en suite de manque de prévoyance que le passage de ce Prince a causé à l'instant un peu de bruit entre le peuple.

Ce fait me mit sur mes gardes contre ce qui aurait pû avoir lieu avec la plus grande facilité dans le progrès de son voyage. Ainsi je crus qu'il fût une démarche prudente que de le retenir auprès de moi jusqu'à ce que j'aurais reçu les ordres que j'invoquai à l'instant de Sa Sainteté, qui ignorait le voyage et la direction du Prince. Son Altesse fut parfaitement d'accord à cet égard et accepta l'hospitalité que je lui offris avec des marques de satisfaction, ce qui est prouvé par la lettre de Son Altesse que j'ai l'honneur de remettre à votre Excellence ci-incluse. La réponse de Rome ne tardera pas à me parvenir, et votre Excellence en même temps sera informé ensuite de la charge qu'elle a donné à son agent.

Je me flatte que votre Excellence, aussi sage qu'elle est, sera persuadée que dans cette affaire nulle infraction du droit des nations n'a eu lieu. En attendant, je prie votre Excellence de vouloir bien agréer, &c.

Sir George Hamilton.

L. CARD. AMAT.

(Inclosure 2.)—Mr. Petre to Sir George Hamilton.

SIR,

Rome, April 24, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that on the receipt this morning of your despatch of the 22nd instant, touching the reported arrest of the Duke of Parma at Bologna, as communicated to you by Don Neri Corsini, I called on his Eminence the Secretary of State, who told me that the Duke of Parma, on his arrival at Bologna incognito, imprudently gave out who he was; and it was no sooner known than large crowds began to collect, and some Parmigiani to threaten violence, but that the prudence and exertions of the Cardinal Legate prevented any ill consequences; and that His Royal Highness immediately, on the invitation of his Eminence, took up his abode in the Apostolic Palace, and became the guest of the Legate.

On the receipt of a despatch from the Cardinal Legate, stating that His Royal Highness wished to proceed to Civita Vecchia for the purpose of embarking on his way to Marseilles, his Eminence the Secretary of State immediately returned for answer that every facility which the Government of His Holiness could afford, in the present distracted state of affairs and absence of all authority, would be given to His Royal Highness, and that he hoped he would meet with no impediment on his journey, which he was of course at liberty to pursue as soon as it so suited His Royal Highness.

At Rome there was no report of his arrest, but merely that his arrival had caused some excitement, which ceased on his becoming the guest of the Cardinal Legate.

I took this opportunity of asking his Eminence if it were true that General Durando had crossed the Po at the head of the Papal troops. The Cardinal replied that he did not know it officially, but that he believed he had, and contrary to orders, but orders were not now obeyed.

The volunteers and free corps act in the same independent manner; their movements are reported in the Roman papers; and in the non-official part of the "Gazetta di Roma," extracts from private letters, and from the Italian journals, speak of the Papal troops and volunteers as forming part of the armament acting against the hated stranger. It would be worse than useless, it would be imprudent on the part of the Government to disown these acts, for the clubs and the journals would soon overawe it, and call out treason to the national cause, to be defended at every cost, now at the rate of upwards of seven millions of dollars a-year above the ordinary revenue.

There are at present in Rome Deputies from all the States of Italy endeavouring to induce the Roman Government to convoke a Diet under the Presidency of His Holiness, to plan an union of the whole of the Peninsula, for one sole object in the first instance—the driving out of the Austrians, and then to take into consideration the future government of the country freed from every stranger. Most, if not all these Deputies have had interviews with the Cardinal Secretary of State, but it is in the clubs that they are exerting all their influence.

Rome is tranquil. This morning I congratulated the Cardinal on its tranquillity. "Yes," he said, "it is apparently tranquil now, but there is no governing authority, 'forza governativa;' " and then he spoke of the noble example lately given by London and the Government; such conduct, he added, must produce an effect over the whole of Europe.

MY LORD,

Vienna, May 1, 1848.

COUNT FICQUELMONT seemed to be much pleased with the evidence of the kind feeling of Her Majesty's Government, apparent in the instructions of the 18th ultimo, which I had the honour to receive on the 29th.

His Excellency felt in the same way the kindness of the intention with which your Lordship directed Mr. Abercromby, in your instructions to that Minister, to recommend to the Sardinian Government a suspension of hostilities to enable Count Hartig to make, and the Lombards to consider, the propositions for reconciliation with which Count Hartig is charged.

I have to observe here that I do not mean to convey to your Lordship the idea that the Imperial Government adopts the idea of a suspension of hostilities. I believe that Marshal Radetzky is likely to be left to judge of the advantage or disadvantage of that measure; at the same time I have to say that I think the pacific views of the Government are still what I reported them to be in my former despatch, strongly for that result.

FICQUELMONT.

No. 321.—Lord Napier to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. May 6.)

MY LORD,

Naples, April 25, 1848.

IN my despatch to your Lordship of the 9th instant I stated on the authority of the Neapolitan Minister for Foreign Affairs, that the Papal Government had requested from that of Naples a reinforcement for the garrison of Ancona, and had offered a free passage to the troops of His Sicilian Majesty through the territories of the Church.

It became apparent, subsequently, that the consent of the Holy See was neither so spontaneous nor so complete as Marquis Dragonetti had supposed, and a change of plans and delay in the commencement of active operations ensued.

In consequence of the various rumours which have prevailed on the subject, I sought an interview this morning with Marquis Dragonetti, and begged he would acquaint me, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, what were the actual intentions of His Sicilian Majesty, and what the scruples or impediments offered by the Roman Government. Marquis Dragonetti replied that the latter had positively refused to allow the Neapolitan troops to land at Ancona, or to form an encampment or concentration of forces at Bologna before invading the Imperial provinces, but that there was no objection to their passage through the States of the Church to Tuscany or Modena. The scheme of dispatching a force by sea to Ancona was therefore abandoned, and his Government had it in contemplation to send the squadron at once to Venice with 5 battalions to be landed in that city.

At the same time, a strong division would probably take its passage through the Roman territories, by the route which was left open to them by the declaration of the Papal Government.

I expressed my hope to Marquis Dragonetti that the Government of Naples had no desire of forcing that of Rome to embrace any course opposed to its wishes, and his Excellency disclaimed all such intentions.

I also called his Excellency's observation to the speech of the Marquis of Lansdowne in the House of Lords in respect to the invasion of the Imperial dominions by the King of Sardinia, reminding him that as the House of Savoy held Genoa under the Treaty of Vienna, so did that of Bourbon possess the united sovereignty of the 2 Sicilies by the same instrument; and I recalled to his Excellency's remembrance how often that Treaty had been invoked, and stretched even, to defend what was termed the unity and integrity of this kingdom, and I contrasted the principles then asserted with the present policy of attacking an allied and kindred Power suffering from internal disorganization. I also begged Marquis Dragonetti to remark that the issue of the present struggle was by no means decided; and although appearances might promise triumph to the Sardinian arms, those of the empire might yet be strengthened to support at least an equal contest.

Marquis Dragonetti contented himself with pleading that the King of Naples could not remain idle in a national struggle, and that the dignity and security of his crown rendered it imperative on him to appear actively on the scene of war.

NAPIER.

No. 322.—Lord Napier to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received May 6.)

MY LORD,

Naples, April 27, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's instruction directing me to point out to the Neapolitan Government the inconsistency and injustice of making an unprovoked war against Austria; and in conformity with your Lordship's orders, I this morning sought an interview with Marquis Dragonetti, and translated to him the terms of your Lordship's despatch. His Excellency requested to be furnished with a copy of it, which I did not feel at liberty to give, but I left it in his hands, empowering him to communicate it verbally to his colleagues, who were at the moment assembled in council in an adjoining room, and begged him to return it in the course of the day.

I had already seen M. Ferretti, Minister of Finance, on the previous evening, and being aware that this Minister, by his superior ability, has acquired a great ascendancy in the Government, I imparted to him the views of Her Majesty's Government, and requested to be made acquainted with the opinions which he entertained on this momentous question. M. Ferretti acknowledged the injustice, theoretically, of embarking in a course which had been so often and so loudly deprecated when apprehended from the part of Austria, but he endeavoured to represent the policy of aggression as Italian, not Neapolitan, as a policy which, having been embraced already by the other members of the Italian League, must of necessity be adopted by Naples too; and he seemed, like most of his countrymen, persuaded that the Imperial power had been doomed to fall for ever in Italy, and even perhaps in Germany, under the calamities which now oppress it. He held that the Austrians could draw no strength from Hungary, and that even the Hereditary Duchies would not lend their forces to subdue the Lombards, who had merely taken their part in a common revolt against the ancient despotism. M. Ferretti also appeared to conceive that the present position of Europe was altogether exceptional and subversive of the usual laws of international relations, and that what in ordinary times would be unjustifiable, might be excused by the new combinations which had arisen, and the unprecedented pressure and constraint of the popular will.

To such views I opposed those which may be gathered from the tenour of your Lordship's instruction and the speeches of Her Majesty's Ministers in Parliament, and I endeavoured to persuade his Excellency, by a variety of arguments which it is unnecessary to submit to your Lordship, that the present movement in Europe would probably not issue in any vast territorial changes or in the overthrow of thrones, and I asserted the strong probability that unless the affairs of Lombardy were arranged by negotiation at the present time, the Sardinian forces would, at no distant period, be expelled from the Imperial territory, for the energies of Austria were merely crippled, and not destroyed, and that nothing could be more impolitic than for a weak State like Naples to trifle with the torpid strength of a Power which, though slow to arouse, had proved formidable to the greatest foes in the termination of every contest.

M. Ferretti informed me that those opinions had been advocated in the Council, but that the Government had been obliged to decide in favour of war in consequence of the representations of Sardinia and the strong public feeling for that course.

He also said that the notion of sending a large force by sea had been abandoned, and that though the squadron would be dispatched to the Adriatic, the troops would march through the Roman territory by battalions, and concentrate at Ferrara to the number of about 15,000 men, where they would be joined by the regiment which had previously gone to Leghorn.

M. Ferretti acknowledged that the Pope had refused liberty to occupy Ancona, or to make it or Bologna the basis of military operations; but he assured me that the Neapolitan forces were not forbidden access to the former city, nor passage through it.

I have, &c.

No. 323.—Lord Napier to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received May 6.)

MY LORD,

Naples, April 28, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint your Lordship that I have seen the President of the Council, and obtained from him the following statement of the intentions of the Neapolitan Government.

The squadron destined for the Adriatic will not at present proceed further than the limits of the Neapolitan territory.

The troops will be disembarked at Pescara, and will march through the Roman provinces to concentrate at Ferrara, or some other position, as shall be appointed between the Papal Government and that of Naples.

Representations are, however, still being made to the Government of Rome with the view of obtaining liberty to land at Ancona, or at some other port further to the north, and should it be conceded, the troops will be conveyed thither by the squadron, which will not advance to the head of the Adriatic Sea, nor make any attempt at Venice.

The Neapolitan forces destined to go by land are now crossing the Papal frontier by battalions, they will unite with those sent by sea, at Ferrara, or at some other point, as stated above. The whole will then form an army of observation on the south side of the Po, and their ulterior movements will depend on the course of events.

M. Troja assured me that the wishes of the Holy See would be most scrupulously respected in regard to the passage of the Neapolitan troops and the occupation of the States of the Church, and he expressed his hope that Her Majesty's Government would consider the dilemma in which that of Naples is placed, to which he also trusted the Cabinet of Vienna would not be insensible, in case the Imperial arms should prevail.

(Received May 6.)

(Extract.)

Turin, April 30, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt, by Sardinian messenger, of your Lordship's despatch of the 11th instant.

In compliance with your Lordship's instructions to communicate to the Sardinian Minister for Foreign Affairs the observations contained in that despatch relative to the policy that Sardinia has followed in commencing hostilities in Lombardy, I called upon his Excellency a few days ago, and read to him the contents of your Lordship's despatch of the 11th April.

The Marquis Pareto made hardly any observations in reply to my communication, confining his remarks almost entirely to the assertion that had not the Sardinian Government decided upon ordering the Piedmontese army across the Tessin at the moment that it did, it would have been impossible to have preserved Genoa from revolt, and from separating itself from the dominions of His Sardinian Majesty.

I replied to the Marquis Pareto that after the loyal demonstrations that had lately occurred in the Duchy of Savoy, and the satisfactory change that was supposed to have taken place in the minds of the Genoese, I trusted that the determination of those two provinces to continue faithful to the House of Savoy would no longer be doubted.

MY LORD,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's despatch of the 11th instant, instructing me to exhort the Sardinian Government to accept the Duke of Parma's offer to enter the Italian Commercial League, and I beg to inform you that I have not failed to recommend the Sardinian Government to act upon your Lordship's advice with reference to this point. No. 326.—The Hon. R. Abercromby to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received May 6.)

MY LORD,

Turin, April 30, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt, by Sardinian messenger, of your Lordship's despatch of the 17th instant.

I lost no time in speaking to his Excellency the Marquis Pareto upon the subject of Count Hartig's mission to Lombardy, and of the terms of reconciliation which Her Majesty's Government have been informed that the Cabinet of Vienna have instructed Count Hartig to offer to the Lombards.

I likewise, in obedience to your instructions, urged strongly upon the Marquis Pareto the desirableness of a suspension of hostilities, in order that the proposals of Count Hartig might be fairly considered by the Lombards.

The Marquis Pareto asked me if I was acquainted with the nature of the propositions which Count Hartig is empowered to make; I replied that I was entirely unacquainted with them, but that I felt that you would not have instructed me to urge their being considered had you not been led to believe that they were of a nature to justify their being maturely and deliberately weighed.

The Marquis Pareto in the course of our conversation having observed that to consent to a suspension of hostilities might very probably lead to placing the Sardinian army in a critical and dangerous position, as it would afford time for the arrival of Austrian reinforcements in Lombardy, I replied, that the system of armistices not being a new one, it would no doubt be easy for those conversant with military affairs to arrange matters in such a way as not to prejudice the military interests of either party, but that what I wished particularly to impress upon him was, that supposing the proposals of the Austrian Government, when known, were found to be of such a nature as to offer a chance of settling the questions in dispute between Austria and Lombardy without a further effusion of blood, it was highly to be wished that such should be acceded to; that the chances of war were always doubtful, and that any course that tended to an honourable termination of a war was not to be lightly laid aside.

I added also, that I trusted to his Excellency faithfully reporting to His Sardinian Majesty the nature of my present communication; and I expressed to him, as strongly as I could, my expectation that whenever Count Hartig's propositions came under discussion at the head-quarters of His Sardinian Majesty, he would take care that in replying to them due consideration should be had to the friendly and important advice which I had been instructed by your Lordship to offer to the Sardinian Government.

Since my interview with his Excellency the Marquis Pareto upon this affair, I have received from him a note, copy of which I have now the honour herewith to forward to your Lordship for your information.

Your Lordship will observe that in this note the Marquis Pareto argues as if I had proposed that Sardinia was to negotiate for herself independently of Lombardy, whereas what I had urged was an arrangement compromising both; and I even went so far, when opposing such an idea, in the course of our conversation, as to observe that if he asked my opinion upon the subject I was inclined to think that the Cabinet of Vienna would be more likely to address itself to the Lombards singly than to the Piedmontese, against whom it was only natural to suppose that Austria was more particularly exasperated.

I have, &c.

MY LORD,

Turin, May 1, 1848.

IN a former despatch I had the honour to inform your Lordship that M. Kakoschkine, my Russian colleague at this Court, had on the determination of His Sardinian Majesty to cross the Tessin with his army, applied for passports, and that he had intended to quit Turin and wait elsewhere the receipt of instructions from his Court, leaving M. de Skareatine in charge of the Russian Mission and in communication with the Sardinian Government.

Circumstances prevented M. Kakoschkine from leaving Turin, as he had proposed, but having announced his departure, he placed the direction of the affairs of the Mission in the hands of M. de Skareatine.

Two days ago M. de Skareatine received orders from St. Petersburg to break up the Russian Legation at this Court, to demand passports for himself and the other member of the Mission, and to rejoin M. Kakoschkine wherever he might be in Italy.

In consequence of these instructions, M. Kakoschkine leaves Turin to-morrow for Florence and Rome, and he will be immediately followed by the remaining portion of the Russian Legation at this Court.

The Sardinian Chargé d'Affaires at St. Petersburg has received his passports from the Russian Government, and returns to Turin.

I HAVE the honour to inclose herewith to your Lordship a printed copy in French of a report addressed to the King of Sardinia by his Ministers, and of a decree subsequently issued by His Majesty, granting a full and complete amnesty to all the individuals against whom legal proceedings were pending in consequence of the invasion of the Duchy of Savoy on the 3rd and 4th ultimo.

SIRE,

Turin, le 22 Avril, 1848.

UNE procédure s'instruit par la Cour d'Appel de Savoie par suite de l'invasion d'une partie de ce Duché qui s'est opérée par des bandes venant de l'étranger, dans les journées du 3 et du 4 du mois courant.

Le Gouvernement a sans doute le droit d'appeler la vindicte publique sur les auteurs de ce coupable attentat. Mais il est, Sire, une raison qui quelquefois parle plus haut que les exigences de la justice, c'est celle qui s'allie à la clémence et qui s'appuie sur la force morale. Cette raison nous persuade aujourd'hui de placer sous les yeux de votre Majesté deux considérations puissantes. Au moment d'inaugurer le système Représentatif dans vos Etats, il vous en coûterait certainement, Sire, de voir, à côté de cette sécurité dont nous jouissons, se poursuivre les conséquences d'inquiétudes qui ont si promptement et si complètement disparu. Il paraît ensuite que l'énergie d'action et l'accord d'opinions qui ont caractérisé les efforts des populations Savoyennes pour délivrer le pays, ne laissent aucun doute sur l'opportunité de la résolution que nous avons l'honneur de soumettre à votre Majesté. L'emploi de la clémence est un des attributs de la force, la preuve incontestable d'une juste confiance pour le présent et pour l'avenir.

Mû par ces considérations, convaincu qu'il ne fait que devancer les intentions de votre Majesté, votre Conseil des Ministres a l'honneur de vous proposer, Sire, l'adoption du décret suivant.

SUR la proposition de notre Conseil des Ministres, nous avons décrété et décrétons ce qui suit :

Amnistie pleine et entière est accordée à tous les prévenus impliqués dans la procédure instruite par la Cour d'Appel de Savoie par suite de l'invasion d'une partie de ce Duché, qui a eu lieu dans les journées du 3 et 4 du mois courant.

Ceux parmi ces prévenus amnistiés qui sont étrangers seront immédiatement reconduits à la frontière.

No. 329.—Mr. Peel to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received May 8.)
 (Extract.) Berne, May 4, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to forward to your Lordship an extract from a Swiss journal, "L'Helvétie," published under the direction of M. Stockmar, a member of the Vorort, containing the answer given by the Federal Directory to the Chargé d'Affaires of Sardinia, relative to his proposal of an offensive and defensive alliance.

The last paragraph of the answer from the Federal Directory contains the following important decree of the Diet: "Il ne sera pas donné suite à un Traité d'alliance offensive et défensive tel qu'il est proposé entre le Roi de Sardaigne et la Suisse, avec toutes ses conséquences et dans la portée indiquée."

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

W. PEEL.

(Inclosure.)—The Federal Directory to the Sardinian Chargé d'Affaires.

PAR dépêche du 6 courant M. le Chargé d'Affaires de Sa Majesté le Roi de Sardaigne, agissant au nom de son Souverain et en vue des grands événements dont la Lombardie est actuellement le théâtre, a proposé à la Confédération Suisse la conclusion d'une alliance offensive et défensive entre les 2 pays.

La note de M. le Chargé d'Affaires mentionne les efforts héroïques de la généreuse nation des Lombards combattant pour reconquérir la liberté dont elle a été privée si longtemps, et reprendre son rang parmi les peuples indépendants. Il donne à considérer que la position géographique de la Suisse au centre de la grande ceinture des Alpes qui bordent la Péninsule Italique, sa tendance naturelle vers la mer, et tout particulièrement l'analogie actuelle des principes politiques, conseillent à la Suisse de cimenter avec l'Italie les rapports les plus intimes comme les plus profitables. Il ajoute que les peuples d'Italie, à peine sortis d'une longue léthargie, ont commencé une lutte d'une issue incertaine, et que la péninsule tourne ses regards vers la Confédération Suisse, comme étant la nation la plus intéressée à coopérer à un œuvre dont le but est commun aux 2 nations.

Le Directoire Fédéral s'est empressé de porter, en date du 16 courant, la note de M. le Chargé d'Affaires de Sardaigne à la connaissance de la haute Diète, et l'autorité suprême Fédérale a soumis à un mûr examen les ouvertures et propositions qui y sont contenues. En suite de ces délibérations, le Directoire Fédéral a l'honneur de faire à M. le Général Chevalier Racchia la réponse suivante.

Fidèle à son origine et aux principes auxquels elle doit son existence et la position qu'elle occupe aujourd'hui, la Confédération reconnaît à chaque nation le droit de se constituer librement, le droit de se donner telle forme de Gouvernement qui lui plaît, d'organiser à son gré son administration selon ses besoins, sans que l'étranger ait à intervenir dans ses affaires. La Confédération a salué avec la plus sincère sympathie les efforts que les peuples font pour briser les formes surannées de l'absolutisme, et entrer dans la voie de la nationalité et de la liberté. Le réveil héroïque des peuples de l'Italie n'a pas été d'un moindre intérêt pour elle, et la Confédération se livre à l'espoir que les nouveaux élémens qui surgissent et les voies dans lesquelles l'Italie va entrer seront de nature à avancer le bonheur et la prospérité d'une nation généreuse.

Il existe toutefois des motifs extérieurs et intérieurs qui ne permettent pas à la Confédération d'accepter, dans le sens proposé, une alliance avec une Puissance voisine, et de prendre une part directe à une guerre étrangère.

Après les efforts prodigieux que la Suisse a dû faire, il y a 6 mois à peine, afin de comprimer dans son sein une ligue factieuse qui menaçait d'ébranler les bases de son existence, la Confédération a besoin du repos nécessaire pour réparer les forces dont elle pourrait avoir besoin pour faire face aux grands événements qui se préparent, et n'être pas prise au dépourvu dans le moment décisif. Il y a plus encore : l'incertitude existant au sujet de la ligne politique que d'autres états voisins se décideront, dans un prochain avenir, à suivre vis-à-vis de l'Italie, constitue pour la Suisse une nécessité impérieuse d'agir avec la plus grande circonspection, et cela à plus forte raison que la Suisse, vû sa position géographique, doit se tenir prête à des éventualités qui réclameraient une coopération positive de sa part.

La Confédération Suisse s'est imposé la tâche d'observer une neutralité consciencieuse et stricte au milieu du grand drame des nations. Dans le scrupuleux accomplissement de cette mission elle a la conscience de rendre un service marquant aux peuples dont la lutte a commencé. Car aussi longtemps que les passages des Alpes demeurent fermés, qu'une invasion par le territoire Suisse est rendue impossible, les parties belligérantes ne sont point réduites à la nécessité de disséminer leurs forces, et peuvent les concentrer tout entières sur les points les plus menacés. Si d'un autre côté l'on considère les succès qui jusqu'à ce jour ont accompagné les armes de Sa Majesté le Roi de Sardaigne et ceux dont sont couronnés les efforts des Lombards, si en présence de l'état d'épuisement où se trouve la Monarchie Autrichienne on peut prévoir, avec une presque certitude, que la Lombardie, soutenue par Sa Majesté le Roi de Sardaigne, sortira victorieuse de la lutte, la Confédération a un motif de plus de ne pas se départir. Fondée sur ces considérations, la Diète arrête :

Il ne serra pas donné suite à un Traité d'alliance offensive et défensive tel qu'il est proposé entre le Roi de Sardaigne et la Suisse, avec toutes ses conséquences et dans la portée indiquée.

SIR,

Foreign Office, May 8, 1848.

As the whole of Italy appears to have determined upon a general crusade to drive the Austrians out, it seems to Her Majesty's Government to be of no use to make any more representations on the subject of the departure of volunteer bands for Lombardy to any of the Italian Governments.

No. 331.—Viscount Palmerston to Viscount Ponsonby.

Foreign Office, May 8, 1848.

I HAVE to instruct your Excellency to make known to the Austrian Government the strong likelihood that if matters are not soon settled in the north of Italy, the French Government may be either tempted or forced to interfere. Your Excellency will request the Austrian Government seriously to consider whether it would not be better policy, and more consistent with the real interests of the Austrian Empire, that they should at once come to some arrangement with the people of Lombardy as to the conditions on which that province should be detached from its connexion with Austria, rather than that the Imperial Government should, by waiting for doubtful successes, and for the uncertain result of military operations, run the risk of bringing a French army into the north of Italy.

There can be no doubt that the abandonment of Lombardy must involve a sacrifice of feeling on the part of the Austrian Government, but it may be questioned whether that abandonment would be productive of any real diminution of the power of the Austrian Empire, provided Lombardy either became a separate and independent State, or was to unite itself to some existing Italian State.

I HAVE to point your attention to the formation of a large French army on the French frontier towards the Alps, to the order of the day issued by General Oudinot, the commander of that army, and to the vote of credit of 86,000,000 of francs for the service of that force. You will draw the attention of the Sardinian Government to all these things, as indications of a probable entrance of a French force into Northern Italy, if the war there should continue; and you will point out how much it is for the interest of the King of Sardinia that such an additional complication of affairs should be prevented. But the best way to prevent it would be to bring about a final settlement between the Milanese and the Austrian Government.

It would seem, therefore, to be very desirable that the Sardinian Government should encourage and exhort the Provincial Government of Milan to enter into communications with Count Hartig with a view to settle the conditions upon which the Milanese would be willing to come to terms with Austria, either for a modified connexion with, or for an entire separation from the Austrian Empire.

MY LORD,

Venice, April 28, 1848.

A MESSENGER arrived here on the morning of the 23rd instant with despatches from Vice-Admiral Sir Wm. Parker for the Governor of Trieste, and as all communication by land is intercepted, I requested Commander Macdonald, of Her Majesty's steamer Spitfire, to convey to Trieste the despatches of which the messenger was the bearer, and I took that opportunity of proceeding myself for a day to Trieste.

I now have the honour to inclose copies of 2 despatches which I thought it my duty to write to Sir Wm. Parker from Trieste, and I trust your Lordship will not disapprove of the opinion which I therein express with regard to the presence of Her Majesty's ships in the Adriatic.

Her Majesty's steam-vessels Terrible and Antelope (the latter awaiting the arrival of Sir Stratford Canning), and Her Majesty's brig Harlequin, were at Trieste on the 25th instant. The Spartan frigate was also expected there.

Her Majesty's ship Spitfire returned here on the afternoon of the 25th.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

CLINTON G. DAWKINS.

(Inclosure 1.)—Consul-General Dawkins to Vice-Admiral Sir W. Parker.
SIR,

Trieste, April 24, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that the messenger with your despatches for the Governor of Trieste, for the Vice-Consul, and for Lieutenant Smyth, of Her Majesty's ship Antelope, arrived at Venice yesterday morning, and the communication by land being interrupted, and no other means of conveyance offering, I requested Commander Macdonald to give the messenger a passage to Trieste in Her Majesty's ship Spitfire, which had arrived at Venice from Corfu on the 20th instant. I availed myself of the same opportunity to come over here for a day to learn the state of affairs, and shall return with the Spitfire to-morrow, the 25th, to Venice. Her Majesty's ship Harlequin had arrived here on the evening of the 22nd.

It appears that General Nugent is advancing in the Friuli, and has obtained possession of Udine, after, it is said, a rather severe contest. He has since advanced beyond Udine, as far as Codroipo, and the force under his orders is said to amount to about 25,000 men.

It does not appear certain whether General Nugent will endeavour to effect a junction with General D'Aspre, who is to be detached from Verona towards Vicenza, or whether General Nugent will first attempt to regain possession of Venice; should he decide upon the latter course, it is to be presumed that a simultaneous attempt will be made upon Venice by sea.

I inclose a list published in the Trieste newspapers of the vessels which are still in the hands of the Austrian Government. These would be much more than sufficient to undertake any operation against Venice, but the difficulty is the want of seamen, almost all those who were in the service having gone over to the Republic. I am assured, however, that great progress has been made in procuring a further supply from Dalmatia, and I am told that a blockade of Venice is meditated. So much delay and so great a want of union and combination is evident in the proceedings of the Austrian commanders, that I cannot venture to say anything positive on this point.

On the side of Verona it appears that Field-Marshal Radetzky maintains his position, and is daily strengthened by reinforcements which reach him through the Tyrol.

Bodies of volunteers, from the Papal and other States, have crossed the Po, and have entered the country eastward of the Mincio.

Looking solely to the protection of British subjects and property in these parts, I venture to express my opinion, as far as I am able to judge, that the presence of one ship of war here, and of one at Venice, would be sufficient at the present moment, and that the ship to be stationed at Venice should be a steamer, on account of the difficulty, and at times almost impossibility, of a sailing vessel getting in or out of the harbour.

I have the honour to transmit* a translation of a notification issued by the Sardinian Consul-General at Venice, respecting the expected arrival of Sardinian ships of war in the Adriatic.

I do not presume to give an opinion as to the desirability of other of Her Majesty's ships temporarily visiting these parts, and perhaps looking in at Fiume and Ancona, with reference to the possible arrival of Sardinian or other ship of war.

I have, &c.

Vice-Admiral Sir W. Parker.

CLINTON G. DAWKINS.

(Inclosure 2.)—Consul-General Dawkins to Vice-Admiral Sir W. Parker.

SIR,

Trieste, April 24, 1848.

I TOOK the opportunity of coming over here yesterday from Venice, whither I return in the Spitfire to-morrow, and I take the liberty of writing to you a few lines privately, on the subject of the application made by the Governor of Trieste, Count Salm, for the presence here of some of Her Majesty's ships.

Looking solely to the protection to be afforded to British subjects and property under present circumstances, it seems to me that the presence of one man-of-war here, and of one at Venice is sufficient. From what I have learnt, it appears to me that the Governor of Trieste, naturally anxious under the trying circumstances in which he was for some time placed, for the presence of a friendly flag, and one which was respected, may perhaps have somewhat exaggerated the possible danger to British subjects and property.

Trieste seems to have pronounced strongly for Austria, and to be persuaded that her prosperity depends upon the maintenance of her connection with that empire, but I am of opinion that this view of the case would be much modified were the Austrians to meet with any very decided reverse, or were fresh troubles to break out at Vienna, when the task of the local Government would be most difficult.

I have taken the liberty to make these observations, in consequence of your despatch to the Vice-Consul here, announcing the arrival of the Spartan and Harlequin, and perhaps the temporary visit of the Terrible.

I trust, Sir, you will not consider me presumptuous in thus writing to you, but I have thought it my duty to state my opinion, lest it should appear that any undue demand was made for the presence of Her Majesty's ships, whose services you might require in other quarters.

I have, &c.

Vice-Admiral Sir W. Parker.

CLINTON G. DAWKINS

No. 341.—Sir G. Hamilton to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. May 11.)
 MY LORD, Florence, May 3. 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inclose herewith a despatch from Mr. Petre at Rome, which contains a translation of an allocution addressed by the Pope to the College of Cardinals, and which confirms the information that from private sources I was enabled to give your Lordship some time ago, of the Pope's determination not to carry war into Lombardy.

The publication of this allocution has made a great sensation at Rome, and at the departure of the post it seemed uncertain how things were to end. I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

GEORGE B. HAMILTON.

(Inclosure.)—Mr. Petre to Sir G. Hamilton.

SIR,

Rome, April 30, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, for the information of Viscount Palmerston, the following translation of an allocution addressed by His Holiness to the College of Cardinals, assembled in secret consistory, yesterday, 29th April:

“Venerable Brothers,

“Not once, venerable brothers, have we expressed our detestation in your assembly, of the audacity of some who have not hesitated to cast that wrong on us, and what is more, on this Apostolic See, that they should feign that we have turned aside from the most holy institutions of our predecessors, and not on one head (horrible to say) from the doctrine itself of the Church. But those are now not wanting who so speak of us as if we were the chief authors of the public commotions which have lately happened, not only in other parts of Europe, but likewise in Italy. From the Austrian parts, especially of Germany, we have learned that it is there spread about amongst the people that the Roman Pontiff, by emissaries sent, and by other arts employed, had excited the people of Italy to bring about unusual changes in public affairs. We have likewise learned that certain enemies of the Catholic religion hence seize the opportunity of inflaming the minds of the Germans with a fury of revenge, and of alienating them from the unity of this Holy See. Now, truly, although we have no doubt whatever but that the Catholic people of Germany, and the most worthy prelates who preside over them, are as far removed as possible from their wickedness, yet we know that it is our duty to provide against the scandal which some unwary and more simple men might hence take, and to rebut the calumny which not only may redound to the contumely of our humble person, but likewise of the supreme apostleship which we discharge, and of this Holy See. And as those, our same detractors, not able to bring forth any document of the schemes which they palm upon us, endeavour to throw suspicion over what has been done by us in undertaking the temporal administration of the Papal rule, therefore in order that we may cut off this handle of calumny, it is our design to explain to-day clearly and openly the whole cause of those things in your assembly.

“It is not unknown to you, venerable brothers, that already from the late times of Pius VII, our predecessor, the chief Princes of Europe had taken care to recommend to the Apostolic See, that in the administration of civil affairs it should apply a more favourable rule, and one answering to the wishes of laymen. Afterwards, in the year 1831, these their counsels and desires were more solemnly made known by that celebrated Memorandum which the Emperors of Austria and Russia, and the Kings of France, of Britain, and of Prussia judged proper to send by their Ambassadors to Rome. In that writing also, amongst other things, was treated the question of calling to Rome from the whole Papal rule a Consulting Council, as well as that of restoring or of enlarging the constitution of Municipalities, and of establishing Provincial Councils; moreover, of introducing these same and other institutions into all the provinces for the common utility, and of opening to laymen the entrance unto all offices which might belong either to the administration of public affairs, or to the distribution of justice. And these two last heads were especially proposed as vital principles of governing. In other writings likewise of the Ambassadors, mention was made of a more ample pardon being granted to all, or nearly to all, who had rebelled against their Sovereign in the Papal territory.

“It is concealed from no one that some of these were accomplished by Gregory XVI, our predecessor, and some promises, moreover, in edicts, published by his order in the same year 1831. But these good acts of our predecessor appeared to answer less fully to the wishes of the Sovereigns, and not to be sufficient to secure the public utility and tranquillity throughout the whole temporal state of the Holy See.

“Therefore we, when we were first by the inscrutable judgment of God appointed in his place, not certainly induced by the advice or counsel of any one, but moved by our singular charity towards the people subject to the temporal ecclesiastical rule, we conceded a more copious pardon to those who had strayed from the fidelity due to the Papal Government, and thereupon hastened to institute some things which we had considered as conducive to the prosperity of its people. And all those things which we in the very beginning of our Pontificate performed, clearly accord with those which the Sovereigns of Europe principally desired.

“But truly after, by the good help of God, our designs were brought about, not only our own but the neighbouring people were seen to exult for joy, and so to extol us by public signs of congratulation and respect, that we were forced to endeavour to restrain, in this fair city especially, popular cries, applause, meetings breaking out with too much violence within the line of duty.

“And there are known to all, venerable brothers, the words of our allocution to you in the consistory held on the 4th of October of the past year, by which we recommended both the paternal kindness and readier good will of Sovereigns towards the people subject to them, and the people themselves we exhorted anew to fidelity and obedience towards their Sovereigns. Nor did we afterwards omit, as much as it was in our power, to warn and to exhort all again and again, that firmly adhering to the Catholic doctrine, and keeping the precepts of God and of the Church, they should labour after mutual concord, and tranquillity and charity towards all.

“And would that the wished-for event had answered to our paternal voice and exhortations! But well known to every one are the public commotions of the people of Italy, which we have above commemorated, and also other incidents, which either out of Italy, or in Italy itself, had either happened before or took place afterwards. But if any one will contend that any way was opened to the issue of the self-same things from those which at the beginning of our sacred sovereignty were by us benevolently and kindly done, he certainly in no manner whatever could ascribe it to our work, when we did nothing else than what seemed not only to us, but also to the above-named Sovereigns, favourable to the prosperity of our temporal rule. But with regard to those who in this our State have abused benefits themselves, we, indeed, imitating the example of the divine Sovereign of Pastors, pardon them from the heart, and call them lovingly to sounder counsels, and from God, the Father of mercies, suppliantly beg that He may kindly avert from their shoulders the scourge which awaits ungrateful men.

“Furthermore, nor could the above-mentioned people of Germany be angry with us if it were not possible for us to restrain the ardour of those who, in our temporal state, resolved on applauding what was carried on against them in Upper Italy, and, inflamed by a like desire with others towards their own nation, on giving their assistance to the same cause with the other people of Italy. Since many other Sovereigns, likewise, of Europe, far more powerful in military strength than we, equally could not withstand at the same time the commotion of their people. In which condition of things we, however, willed no other command to our troops sent to the confines of the Papal territories, than that they should protect the integrity of the Papal State.

“But when now some desire that we, likewise with the other people and Sovereigns of Italy, should undertake a war against the Germans, we have at length thought it our duty that, in this your solemn assembly, we clearly and openly declare that that is wholly abhorrent from our counsels, seeing that we, although unworthy, discharge on earth the office of Him who is the author of peace and lover of charity, and, agreeably to the duty of our supreme Apostleship, regard and embrace with equal paternal earnestness of love, all tribes, peoples, and nations. But if amongst our subjects, nevertheless, they desist not, in what manner finally shall we be able to restrain their ardour, who are dragged away by the example of the other Italians?

“But in this place we cannot but repudiate in the presence of all nations the crafty counsels made manifest by means likewise of the public journals and of various writings, of those who would that the Roman Pontiff should preside over some new republic to be formed of all the people of Italy. Yea, on this occasion, the people themselves, out of our charity towards them, we particularly warn and exhort, that they beware most diligently of crafty counsels of this kind, and pernicious to Italy itself, and that they firmly adhere to their Sovereigns, whose benevolence they have also experienced, and that they never suffer themselves to be borne from the obedience due towards them. For if they should act otherwise, not only would they swerve from their own duty, but they would likewise incur the danger of Italy itself being divided by daily increasing discords and intestine factions. With regard, however, to us, we again and again declare that the Roman Pontiff directs all indeed his thoughts, cares, and desires, that the kingdom of Christ, which is the Church, should daily increase; not, however, that the bounds should be widened of the civil sovereignty with which Divine Providence willed this Holy See to be bestowed, to protect its dignity and the free exercise of the Supreme Apostleship. Greatly therefore are they in error, who think that our soul is seduced by the ambition of a more ample temporal dominion, that we should throw ourselves into the midst of the tumult of arms. That truly would be most grateful to our heart, if by our labour, cares, and exertions, it were given to us to contribute in any way to the extinguishing of the incentives to discord, to the conciliating mutually of the minds of the combatants, and to the restoring of peace amongst them.

“In the meanwhile, we have heard with not a slight consolation to our heart, that in many places, not only in Italy but without it, in such a disturbance of public affairs, our faithful sons have not been wanting in their deference to sacred things, and to the ministers of things sacred; we were grieved, however, in our whole soul, that this respect has not been everywhere maintained. Nor can we refrain from lamenting in fine, in this your assembly, that most fatal usage, spreading particularly in our times, of publishing every sort of pernicious writings, by which a dreadful war is carried on either against our most holy religion or the purity of manners, or civil commotions and discord are inflamed, or the endowments of the Church are attacked, and every its more sacred rights are invaded, or every most worthy man is wounded by false accusations.

"These things we have judged proper to be communicated this day to you, venerable brothers. It now remains that at the same time we together offer up, in the humility of our heart, assiduous and fervent prayers to God, best and greatest, that He may please to defend His Holy Church from all adversity, and to look down propitiously from Sion and to protect us, and that He may deign to recall all princes and people to the desire of much wished-for peace and concord."

The Consistory, in which the allocution was delivered, was called in haste, on account of the agitation and clamour of the clubs and political societies to induce His Holiness to declare war against Austria. A war committee had already been formed, composed of deputies from various clubs; and one deputy is the Duke of Rignano, Chief of the Staff of the Civic Guard.

The publication of the allocution late on Saturday night produced a most threatening appearance and language amongst the war party; and the agitation increasing this morning, the Ministers, the majority of whom are in favour of a declaration of war—and this His Holiness will not concede—have just given in their resignations, but at the request of His Holiness retain their offices until to-morrow.

How all this is to finish I know not. In the clubs many of the leading members talk still more openly than hitherto of the necessity of appointing a Provisional Government to carry on the war. The Civic Guards, who have lately shown a better spirit in the maintenance of public order, that is, when they think that their own properties are more immediately in danger, are much divided on what they deem mere political questions; and I doubt the firmness and resolution of any authority in Rome to resist or to attempt to resist the schemes of the clubs; I doubt the efficiency of these Guards; I doubt their standing by their Sovereign.

This evening, about 6 o'clock, all the gates of the town were taken possession of by the Civic Guards, and no one was allowed to go out of any of them, except out of the Porta del Popolo towards the public walk.

I have not been able to learn by whose orders these measures were taken. Some of the Guards said that they were ordered to watch especially Cardinals and other ecclesiastics.

SIR,

Admiralty, May 9, 1848.

I AM commanded by my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to send you herewith, for the information of Viscount Palmerston, a copy of a letter from Captain Henderson, of the Sidon, dated the 28th of April, reporting the departure from Naples of an expedition bound for the Adriatic, to assist the Lombards and Piedmontese against the Austrians.

Sidon, Naples, April 28, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inform you, for the information of their Lordships, that an expedition sailed from Naples for the Adriatic last night, consisting of 7 steam-vessels—5 of 300 horse-power and 2 of 200—towing 2 large frigates, a man-of-war brig, and 2 vessels laden with coals, having 4,000 regular troops, with a proportion of artillery and 700 irregular troops, embarked, part of a force of 15,000 troops intended to assist the Lombards and Piedmontese, the remainder being ordered, with permission from Rome, to march through the Roman dominions.

It was said that the force now sent by sea was to be landed at Venice, but it is thought it will really disembark at Pescara, and from thence march to Ferrara, where the whole Neapolitan line will be concentrated in observation.

M. LE COMTE,

Vienne, le 3 Mai, 1848.

LES bulletins qui sont publiés par nos Gazettes vous auront successivement appris les mouvements de nos troupes en Italie. Je vais vous exposer quelle est la position telle qu'elle nous est connue aujourd'hui.

* The other despatch does not relate to Italian affairs.

Le Général Nugent a occupé Udine après avoir accordé à cette ville une généreuse capitulation ; le premier succès de son corps d'armée devait devenir la preuve d'une pensée de paix.

Dix-sept arches du grand pont du Tagliamento avaient été brûlées ; il a fallu 3 jours pour mettre ce pont en état. Le gros du corps du Général Nugent l'a passé le 30 Avril, sans trouver de résistance dans aucun endroit ; les habitans sont venus aider au rétablissement du pont ; ils se sont empressés de satisfaire aux demandes de vivres qui leur étaient faites.

Le passage de la Piave pourra retarder la marche ; les torrens sont gros ; le pont de la Piave a été aussi en partie détruit ; il faudra le rétablir.

La première ville qui fera de la résistance c'est Trévisé ; une partie des insurgés du Frioul doivent s'y être réunis ; le lieu n'est pas fort ; plus il y aura du monde, moins il résistera à un bombardement.

Nous supposons qu'au moment où le Général Nugent aura forcé Trévisé et qu'il marchera sur Mestre, le Maréchal Radetzky fera alors de son côté attaquer Vicence ; cette ville résistera peut-être davantage ; les maisons y sont plus fortes, les habitans d'un caractère plus décidé. Ces deux villes prises, Padoue devra tomber, Venise alors se trouvera bloquée par terre ; les nobles Vénitiens, inquiétés sur le sort de leurs belles possessions de terre ferme, pourraient se montrer disposés à entrer en arrangement si le blocus maritime ajoute aux difficultés de la situation de la ville.

Le Maréchal a son armée réunie devant Vérone ; les Piémontais ont fait de faibles démonstrations sur Mantoue et Peschiera. La prise de Venise favoriserait ou les négociations de paix, si les Lombards veulent les écouter, ou l'offensive du Maréchal Radetzky.

Toutes les gorges du Tyrol sont nettoyées par le Général Welden.

Les troupes régulières Pontificales ont eu l'ordre de passer le Po ; cet ordre, auquel le Pape a résisté le plus longtemps possible, vient de rompre nos relations diplomatiques ; le ménagement que nous devons à nos rapports avec le chef de l'Eglise nous avait fait supporter avec longanimité tous les événemens hostiles à Rome. Mais enfin la mesure vient d'être comblée et c'est de Rome qu'a été arboré le signe d'une croisade ; le clergé s'est mis partout à la tête de l'insurrection.

La faiblesse du Pape aura fait le mal sans que la Cour de Rome puisse avoir en elle-même aucun moyen d'agir d'une manière utile et forte sur la réorganisation d'une Italie conçue dans un autre système politique.

Recevez, &c.

No. 346.—Sir G. Hamilton to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. May 16.)
(Extract.) Florence, May 2, 1848.

SINCE I had the honour of informing your Lordship of the arrival of the Duke of Parma at Bologna, in accordance with the views of the Provisional Government advising his retirement, His Royal Highness was in the first instance received as a visitor and guest in the palace of the Roman delegate.

His Eminence, however, became so alarmed for the personal security of the Duke, on account of the state of public feeling at Bologna, that he felt himself obliged to refuse any longer to His Royal Highness an asylum, even under his own roof.

Under these circumstances, the Duke of Parma has had recourse for advice to the Grand Duke of Tuscany, who offered on the occasion every assistance in his power.

The Duke of Parma expressed a desire to embark on board a British man-of-war at Leghorn; and I have thought it right, under the circumstances, to write to the Governor of Malta, in case of the Admiral's absence, to cause a British steam-vessel to go to Civita Vecchia for the purpose of taking the Duke of Parma to Marseilles.

Having acted in accordance with the suggestions of the Grand Duke and the Delegate at Bologna, and as I am not able to receive your Lordship's instructions, I trust that the course I have pursued will meet with the approbation of Her Majesty's Government.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

GEORGE B. HAMILTON.

No. 347.—Sir G. Hamilton to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. May 13.)
MY LORD, Florence, May 5, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inclose 2 despatches from Mr. Petre, dated May the 2nd and 3rd, relating to the ferment created at Rome by the Pope's allocution in the Consistory, disapproving of, and refusing to declare war in Lombardy, which was increased by a brief issued from the Quirinal Palace, calling upon the inhabitants of the city to respect their Sovereign and listen to wiser counsels.

The Civic Guards took possession of all the gates of Rome, the Castle of St. Angelo, and powder magazine.

The Cardinals were confined to their palaces, and not allowed access to the Pope.

The Ministry which had resigned consented to take office provisionally.

The influence of the clubs has been directed to the expulsion of the Cardinals Antonelli and Vizzardelli from the Government, to which are added cries of "Out with the Austrian Ambassador!" whose embassy, it is feared, will be attacked.

Some fear also exists that an attack will be made on the Jews, now that the Ghetto is no longer protected by walls and gates.

The Roman Minister at Florence has expressed his opinion that whatever may be the consequence, nothing will induce the Pope to alter his determination, and agree to allow any administration to declare war against Austria with his sanction.

I need not call your Lordship's attention to the importance of this decision, if it continues to be the policy of the Pontiff, and on this he appears to have shown determination.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

GEORGE B. HAMILTON.

(Inclosure 1.)—Mr. Petre to Sir G. Hamilton.

SIR,

Rome, May 2, 1848.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 30th instant, I have the honour to report to you, for the information of Viscount Palmerston, that yesterday evening an "Official Notice" was put forth previously to the publication of the "Gazzetta di Roma," stating that "His Holiness having accepted the resignation of the Ministry, had made dispositions for the formation of a new Ministry." "But," continues the notice, "as these attempts have not yet succeeded, His Holiness has signified to the Ministers who resigned his desire that they should remain in office, authorizing them to continue frankly in the exercise of their attributions. The substitute of the Minister of Interior, who had also given in his resignation, remains in office with the Minister. The Ministry, with its President, unanimous to-day as formerly on all questions, occupies itself with an Italian mind about those measures which in the actual state of things are in its conscience considered necessary and useful to the good of the State and of the Italian cause."

In my last despatch I mentioned that the Civic Guards had taken possession of the gates of the town, but that I could not learn by whose authority. It appears that the chief of the staff of the Civic Guard gave his permission rather than his sanction to this act. They likewise took possession of the powder magazine and of the Castle of St. Angelo.

Yesterday morning a party of Civic Guards, headed by Ciceruacchio, seized at the Post Office, in spite of the resistance of the Director, the letters, after the arrival of the mails, addressed to the Cardinals, and some others, and deposited them, under seal, in the Capitol, and desired the Senator Prince Corsini to examine and read them to the populace assembled in the square. This was of course refused. In the meantime the Ministry having been formed anew, Prince Simonetti, the Minister of Finance, came as his first duty, he said, to claim these letters, for he would ever maintain the inviolability of private correspondence. Resolute against all clamour, he took back the letters to the Post Office. In the evening another attempt was made to seize the correspondence of Cardinal Antonelli, the Secretary of State, on the departure of the courier, but I believe it was successfully resisted, and some of the Civic Guards accompanied the courier a short way out of the gate. At some of the gates no one was allowed to go out, or to enter during the whole of the day, and, as it appears, at the caprice of the particular officer on duty, for there were no general orders. The Cardinals were watched and guarded in their houses, and some were not permitted to proceed to the palace, when sent for by His Holiness. Those who were, were hooted by the populace.

A brief of His Holiness, in the form of a letter to the Romans, was affixed early this day on many church doors; it referred to his late allocution, and called upon his misguided subjects to return to their duty; but it was soon torn down.

I have, &c.

Sir George Hamilton.

WILLIAM PETRE.

(Inclosure 2.)—Mr. Petre to Sir G. Hamilton.

Rome, May 3, 1848.

IN the closing paragraph of my last despatch of the 2nd instant, I mentioned that a brief of His Holiness, having reference to his allocution of the 29th ultimo, had been torn down soon after it had been published. This brief did not appear in the "Gazzetta di Roma" of the evening. It was not printed by the Government printer, but at the press of the Secretary of State's office in the Quirinal Palace. In the course of the day, however, copies privately printed were circulated, and increased the exasperation of the clubs and of their adherents. The following is a translation of the closing passages of the brief:

"No one is ignorant of the words pronounced by us in the last allocution, that is, that we were averse from a declaration of war, but at the same time we averred that we were incapable of restraining the ardour of that portion of our subjects who were animated by the same spirit of nationality as the other Italians. And here we will not conceal from you that we did not forget, even in such circumstances, the cares of a Father and of a Sovereign, providing in a manner in which we considered most efficacious for the greatest possible safety of those sons and subjects who were exposed against our will to the chances of war. Our words above alluded to have awakened a commotion which threatens to break out into acts of violence, and not respecting even persons, heading on every night attempts (O Great God, our heart shudders in uttering it) to stain the streets of the capital of the Catholic world with the blood of those venerable persons, innocent victims, to satiate the unbridled wills of those who will not reason. And shall this be the recompense which a Sovereign Pontiff looked for in return for the multiplied acts of his love towards the people? 'Popule meus quid feci tibi?' Do not these unhappy beings perceive that besides the enormous crime by which they would stain themselves, and the incalculable scandal which they would give to the whole world, that they would but injure the cause which they seek to carry on, filling Rome, the State, all Italy, with an infinite series of evils? And in this or like cases (which God keep distant), could ever the spiritual power which God has given us remain idle in our hands? Let all know for once that we feel the greatness of our dignity and the strength of our power.

"Save, O Lord, your Rome from so many evils, enlighten those who will not listen to the voice of your Vicar, reconduct all to sounder counsels, so that obedient to him who governs them they may pass less unhappily their days in the exercise of the duties of good Christians, without which it is not possible to be either good subjects or good citizens.

"Datum Romæ apud S. Mariam Majorem die prima Maii, MDCCCXLVIII. Pontificatus nostri anno secundo."

Several Cardinals have taken refuge in the Quirinal Palace, and are now living there.

I know not how long the re-established Ministry is likely to last, the cries are "Out with the Cardinals!"—Antonelli, Secretary of State, and Vizzardelli, Minister of Public Instruction. The person whom they wish to place at the head of the Ministry is Count Mamiani.

The cries are becoming more frequent of "Out with the Austrian Ambassador!" and it is to be feared that another attack will be made on the embassy.

I am equally afraid of some serious outrage against the Jews; for some of the lower classes are indignant that the Government should have pulled down the walls which separated the Ghetto from the town. The gates have not been shut since shortly after the accession of the present Pope, and the Minister of Police pulled down the gates, though with the consent of the Cardinal-Vicar, with great ceremony by torchlight, and, as was remarked, in Holy Week. A few days after were written on some church walls these words—"Morte a Gesù! Viva Barabba!"

Strong patrols of Civic Guards nightly guard the Ghetto.

No. 350.—The Hon. R. Abercromby to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received May 14.)

MY LORD,

Turin, May 8, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that the first session of the first Sardinian Parliament was this day opened by a speech from the throne, delivered by His Serene Highness the Prince of Savoy-Carignan, as Lieutenant-General of the kingdom, during the absence of His Sardinian Majesty from his States.

The ceremony commenced by the Lieutenant-General taking the oath to preserve and faithfully to obey the fundamental Statute of the 8th February of this year. The roll of senators was then called, and each member individually took the same oath.

The same course was pursued with regard to the deputies, after which the Prince read the speech from the throne; a copy of which I herewith forward to your Lordship, printed in Italian, in order to save time.

Two paragraphs called forth strong marks of approbation.

The first related to the hope expressed, that a common accord would bind together the people of Italy, which nature had destined to form one sole nation; the second declared, that should the desired fusion with other parts of the Peninsula be brought about, such changes in the law will be proposed as may suffice to render more important the destinies of this country, and to reach that degree of power to which Providence desires to conduct it for the welfare of Italy.

Your Lordship will also perceive that the recognition of Queen Isabella of Spain has found a place in the speech from the throne.

The ceremony was conducted with much order and regularity.

The members of the Diplomatic Body had a box reserved for them in the gallery on the right of the throne.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

RA. ABERCROMBY.

(Inclosure.)—Speech of the Prince of Carignan at the Opening of the Sardinian Parliament, May 8, 1848.

SENATORS, DEPUTIES,

(Translation.)

I COME in the name of the King to open the first session of the National Parliament.

Providence calls us to inaugurate the representative system in our country at one of the most memorable epochs for Italy and for Europe.

Though environed by a gloomy horizon, we, united by mutual love and confidence between people and Sovereign, have received in peace from the wisdom of the King those reforms and institutions which secure the strength and freedom of our country.

But our internal contentment being disturbed by the sorrows of our Italian brothers, trodden down by the foreigner, the nation rose up in indignation, and pressed round its chief to support the honour and independence of Italy.

At length God has blessed our arms ; the army, as admirable for its discipline as for its bravery, has added new glory to its ancient renown ; the Cross of Savoy, engrafted on the banner of the Italian Union, waves over the banks of the Adige.

Our navy has sailed from Genoa ; if it meets with enemies, I have full and personal confidence that it will show itself worthy of our glorious King—of our glorious army.

The ardour of our soldiers in the field amid the fatigues of war, the rapid formation and noble conduct of the provincial militia in the interior, the harmony of opinions and desires on all sides prove the strength of patriotism throughout the country, and show how powerful the nation is, and how truly it is prepared for its high destiny.

Sardinia, rejecting the fatal heritage of ancient privileges, wished to be united by closer ties with the mainland, and was received by the other provinces like a beloved sister.

Savoy, a cause of momentary pain, was soon an occasion of true consolation. The Savoyards have shown themselves worthy sons of their country, the firm bulwark of Italy.

Liguria, more recently united to those subalpine regions, clings to them with a force which becomes every day stronger, a new guarantee for the salvation of Italy.

All the foreign Powers whose form of Government is like our own, and those in which the people themselves rule the State, testify their sympathy with us.

The diplomatic relations with the Constitutional Government of Spain, which have been for a time suspended, have been renewed.

In Italy, the disunited parties are daily tending to a closer approach, and there is hence a firm hope that a common tie may join the people whom nature destined to form one sole nation.—
(Loud cheers).

Gentlemen, the King's Government feels the importance of the mission to which it is called in such difficult times, so pregnant with futurity. As it had the courage to assume the mission, it will have the courage to carry it out.

You will lend it your aid in consolidating and completing the work of regeneration which it has undertaken. Europe, which has its eyes upon us, will see us vanquish difficulties inseparable from the commencement of a new life, by means of a power always invincible, that of union.

The Ministry will present to you the financial statement for the year 1849, and at the same time will bring before you the requisition indispensable to meet the heavy expenses required by the present circumstances, and by the reduction of the salt duty.

The reform of the legislation of the country, which was the first care of the King on coming to the throne, will be completed by a code of civil procedure, and by the establishment of judicial institutions rigorously adapted to the constitutional system.

There will be brought before you the draft of a law on the Council of State, which will determine the consulting powers of that body. Another draft is in preparation to put the municipal and provincial institutions in accordance with our political ordinances.

The organization of public institutions, on which the best hopes of the country are founded, will be submitted to your consideration. Other drafts will also be submitted to you for the revision of the laws on the forests, waters, and roads, as well as for the improvement of the other branches of the administration, and for adapting the existing laws to the new form of Government, in order that the principles of liberty and progress by which it is animated be diffused on all sides, to vivify all the parts of the social body, and especially for the moral and economic welfare of the more numerous classes.

If the desired union with the other parts of the Peninsula shall be effected, such changes in the laws will be promoted as may be available to aggrandize our future fortunes, and to carry us on to that degree of power which, for the welfare of Italy, Providence wishes us to attain. (Loud cheers.)

Gentlemen, in entrusting to me the high charge of representing him among you, the King commands me to express to you his good will, and to assure you of the profound confidence which he places in your intelligence and devotion to your country. You are fully sensible how dear it would have been to his heart to open in person the new era which is dawning upon us through his noble wisdom; the necessities of the war compel him to sacrifice this pleasure.

May God grant a speedy and victorious return to him whom I regard as a father, and to whom the nation is indebted for so many blessings.

No. 351.—The Hon. R. Abercromby to Viscount Palmerston.

MY LORD,

Turin, May 9, 1848.

THE new Roman Cabinet is composed as follows:—President of the Council, Cardinal Ciacchi; Minister for Foreign Affairs, Signor Marchetti; Minister of Finance, Advocate Lunati; Minister of the Interior, Marquis Mamiani; Minister of War, Prince Doria; Minister of Public Works, Duke of Rignano; Minister of Police, Advocate Galletti.

Cardinal Orioli to act as President of the Council until the arrival of Cardinal Ciacchi from Ferrara.

Your Lordship is aware, no doubt, that His Holiness the Pope has published a second declaration in Italian, confirming the views he had announced in his late encyclical letter with regard to the declaration of war against Austria.

It is supposed now, to avoid further complications and difficulties between His Holiness and his subjects, that on the one side His Holiness will remain satisfied with the declarations he has made upon this subject, and that the Roman people, on the other, will consider that His Holiness, by leaving the prosecution of the war to the responsibility of his Ministers, gives a sufficient acquiescence to their will.

Venice, May 6, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Lordship a copy of the supplement to the "Venice Gazette" of yesterday evening, containing an announcement dated the 3rd instant, copied from the Trieste paper, the "Lloyd Austriaco," of the blockade of Venice by an Austrian squadron.

I do not know what amount of force the Austrian Government may be able to employ for the maintenance of this blockade, but an Austrian barque under Austrian colours arrived in this port yesterday morning the 5th, with a cargo of sugar from America, without having seen or heard of the blockading squadron, or being aware of the existence of a blockade. This vessel belonged to the port of Venice.

Later in the afternoon another Austrian merchant-vessel, under Austrian colours, took shelter in this port without any impediment.

The Neapolitan steamers whose expected arrival here I mentioned in my despatch of the 28th ultimo have not yet made their appearance. It is said they will be accompanied by 2 frigates and a corvette; and a person in the employment of the Provisional Government here has left for Venice on board of an English merchant-vessel homeward bound, with despatches for the Commander of the Neapolitan expedition, to be delivered in the event of his falling in with it.

(Translation.)

Venice, May 5, 7 o'clock, P.M.

WE read the following notification in the "Lloyd Austriaco" of the 4th instant :

Trieste, May 3, 1848.

The Government of His Majesty the Emperor and King, in consequence of the events of Italy, and in connection with the measures of war which it has been necessary to put into operation against the provinces of the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom in rebellion against their Sovereign, has decided to place Venice in a state of blockade ; hence ships and vessels of every sort are interdicted from repairing thither, and are warned that, in the contrary case, they will be driven back by force of arms.

An Austrian squadron has already taken post in those waters for the maintenance of the blockade. This is publicly notified, in obedience to an order from his Excellency the Minister of the Interior, dated the 28th of April.

The above has been already communicated to Foreign Powers by his Excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs.

No. 355.—Sir G. Hamilton to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. May 17.)

MY LORD,

Florence, May 8, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit a despatch from Mr. Petre at Rome, announcing officially the list of the new Ministry presided over by his Eminence Cardinal Ciacchi, in spite of the cries of the clubs against an ecclesiastic in the Administration.

Much anxiety is felt, Mr. Petre says, to learn the effect produced on the provinces by the Pope's allocution. Up to this date, from what I have been able to hear, the most perfect tranquillity prevails both in Romagna and in Tuscany.

Her Majesty's Consul at Ancona, in a letter dated May 5th, informs me that a Neapolitan steam-vessel of war has arrived at Ancona, with 500 civic guards on board from Naples, destined for Lombardy.

On the following day, the 5th instant, 2 more steam-vessels of war and a brig arrived also with troops of the line, and another steam-vessel was in sight, towing a frigate or corvette. It was reported that 6,000 Neapolitans would be landed at Ancona. The arrival of the Neapolitan artillery by land was hourly expected.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

GEORGE B. HAMILTON.

(Inclosure.)—Mr. Petre to Sir G. Hamilton.

SIR,

Rome, May 5, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint you, for the information of Viscount Palmerston, that the "Gazzetta di Roma" of yesterday evening officially announces the appointment of the new Ministry, constituted as follows:

Cardinal Ciacchi, President of the Council of Ministers, and for the interim, his Eminence Cardinal Orioli; Count Marchetti, Minister for Foreign Secular Affairs; Count Mamiani, Minister of the Interior; Signor De Rossi, one of the Consulta di Stato, Minister of Grace and Justice; Signor Lunati, of the Consulta di Stato, Minister of the Finances; Prince Doria Pamphili, Minister of Arms; Duke of Rignano, Minister of Commerce and of Public Works; The Advocate Galletti, Minister of Police.

You will observe that spite of the cry of the clubs against ecclesiastics, which broke up the late Ministry, the President of the Council is a Cardinal; but that contrary to the motuproprio of the 31st December, as reported in despatch of that date, the Minister for Foreign Affairs is a layman, and the secular will be separated from the ecclesiastical affairs. It is probable that the President for the interim of the Council of Ministers, Cardinal Orioli, will be named for Ecclesiastical Affairs. His Eminence is a theologian of repute.

Cardinal Ciacchi, now Legate at Ferrara, was Legate of that province when the town was occupied by the Austrians in August last.

Count Marchetti, one of the Consulta di Stato, Deputy of Bologna, is an old and intimate friend of His Holiness.

The Duke of Rignano and the Advocate Galletti were of the late Ministry.

There is much anxiety to hear what effect will be produced by the publication in the provinces of the allocution of the 30th ultimo and of the brief of the 2nd instant, which latter has not been given in the Roman journals. Amongst the common people in Rome a faint murmur is already heard against the clubs.

(Inclosure.)—Plan for the Pacification of Italy.

Le développement du principe de la nationalité est incontestablement la principale cause motivée des événements que nous avons vu et que nous voyons encore surgir en Europe. L'on court risque de ne pas comprendre la marche de ces événements, si on ne cherche pas les motifs ailleurs que dans le sentiment inné dans l'homme qui peut rester comprimé pendant quelque tems, mais qui, une fois réveillé, brise tous les obstacles et triomphe sur toutes les difficultés.

C'est ainsi que deux erreurs accréditées même dans des esprits supérieurs empêchent de juger sainement la question de l'Italie, et de chercher sa solution là où elle serait possible. En Autriche on accuse assez généralement le Pape Pie IX d'avoir excité les passions des Italiens—on lui suppose une haine acharnée contre l'Autriche, et on lui attribue la part la plus active dans le vaste projet de l'expulsion des étrangers d'Italie; on accuse le système qui vient de crouler d'avoir excité le mécontentement de ses sujets Italiens par une administration pesante et peu intelligente, par le refus des concessions les plus justes, demandées dans les voies légales, et il y a assez de gens de bonne foi qui croient que si on avait voulu écouter dans les derniers temps, des réclamations fondées, et accorder ce qu'on ne pourrait plus refuser, on aurait éteint l'incendie, ou pour mieux dire on l'aurait empêchée d'éclater.

Je veux admettre que les nobles efforts de Pie IX afin de relever le caractère de la nation, en accordant des réformes dont toutes les parties reconnaissent la nécessité, ont contribué à hâter l'explosion du sentiment de la nationalité; que le malheureux incident de Ferrare a donné le prétexte aux ennemis de l'Autriche de l'accuser d'une intervention dans le but de maintenir les anciens abus contre lesquels elle avait si souvent protesté; que si, enfin, le Gouvernement avait accordé à temps des demandes justes et raisonnables, il aurait ôté aux malveillans des armes puissantes, et aurait pu retarder le soulèvement général; mais il n'en est pas moins sûr que le germe longtemps enfoui de la nationalité Italienne, réveillé par les efforts de la "Giovane Italia," aidé par les écrits de Gioberti et de Balbo, et de tout autre, secondé par le mouvement du siècle, aurait rompu toutes les entraves et aurait toujours produit les événements dont nous sommes les témoins, car le cri universel de "morte ai Tedeschi!" n'a pas éclaté en Lombardie ou dans le Vénitien, mais il est parti du fond de la Sicile, où l'Autriche n'avait jamais exercé une influence oppressive, et a traversé toute la Péninsule, pour arriver jusqu'au Tyrol Italien, qui semblait sincèrement attaché à la monarchie.

Ce n'est donc pas une haine motivée qui a fait pousser ce cri odieux, mais seulement la conviction que la présence des Allemands en Italie était le seul obstacle à la régénération de la nationalité

Italienne. Ce fait une fois établi, on se trouve plus à portée de juger la situation actuelle et de chercher les moyens les plus propres à la changer. Si l'on veut flatter les passions populaires on pourra même avec raison parler de châtier la perfidie, d'exercer une juste vengeance, de réhabiliter l'honneur de l'armée; on trouvera des échos même dans les cœurs les plus généreux et les esprits les plus cultivés; mais l'homme d'état doit considérer l'avenir et mettre dans la balance les intérêts durables de son pays contre les impulsions du moment; il doit donc envisager la question sous le rapport de l'influence que la prolongation de cette lutte entre la nationalité Autrichienne (car il n'est pas question de l'Allemagne) et la nationalité Italienne devrait avoir sur les intérêts les plus vitaux de la monarchie. Les chances mauvaises sont possibles dans toutes guerres, dans celle-ci elles seraient d'une portée incalculable; mais en admettant les hypothèses les plus hasardées, c'est-à-dire, que l'insurrection de la Lombardie soit étouffée, que les Piémontais soient refoulés dans leurs positions, et que les Français soient restés tranquils spectateurs de cette lutte, qu'en résulterait-il pour l'Autriche? La possession de provinces appauvries, qui pendant de longues années ne couvriraient pas les frais de l'occupation militaire indispensable pour les contenir, l'affaiblissement de la Monarchie dans toutes les questions relatives à la France et à la Russie, par la nécessité d'entretenir une armée de 100,000 hommes dans le Royaume Lombard-Vénitien, afin de garder les Provinces du Tyrol, du Littoral, et de la Carniole, contre les attaques des ennemis du dehors et de l'intérieur; ainsi, sous le rapport politique, financier, et militaire, et plus que tout, sous le rapport moral, diminution des forces réelles, complication d'intérêts, et lutte, quelquefois sourde, quelquefois ouverte, mais incessante, contre une nation de plus de 20,000,000 hommes réunis par la même langue, la même religion, les mêmes espérances.

Si tel est le tableau véridique de la situation et des causes qui l'ont amenée, ce n'est que dans ces causes que l'homme d'état doit chercher les moyens d'y porter remède. Le premier de tous est dans la reconnaissance franche et loyale de la nationalité Italienne, mais non d'une nationalité provinciale qui se limiterait à accorder à la Lombardie et au Vénitien ce que l'Empereur a accordé à tous les pays qui composent la Monarchie; c'est-à-dire, une administration provinciale et communale indépendante, et les droits sanctionnés par la constitution en bienfait, qu'il y a 2 ans auraient pû assurer la domination de l'Autriche en Italie, ne suffiraient plus maintenant; le vœu hautement prononcé par tous les Italiens, et dont la réalisation peut seule amener une pacification durable, c'est la "Lega Italiana politica e commerciale," c'est-à-dire, une confédération qui assurerait l'unité des pays qui composent l'Italie dans toutes les questions politiques et commerciales : quiconque connaît le mouvement des esprits et leur tendance en Italie, ne saurait avoir le moindre doute à cet égard, mais il est également impossible de se dissimuler combien il serait difficile pour l'Autriche d'accéder à un pareil arrangement dans la position actuelle de la question, car dans le cas où elle serait dans la nécessité de renoncer au Royaume Lombard-Vénitien, elle ne pourrait pourtant pas sanctionner la formation d'une Confédération dont la tendance serait nécessairement hostile envers elle, de même que dans le cas où les événements de la guerre la mettraient en possession de ces provinces, elle ne pourrait pas les faire entrer dans la Confédération Italienne, au risque de les voir suivre une tendance qui pourrait être en opposition directe avec les intérêts du reste de la Monarchie.

La solution de ces immenses difficultés ne peut se trouver que dans une idée grande et généreuse, féconde en beaux résultats, et qui me paraît digne d'occuper tous les esprits sérieux. Il faudrait que l'Autriche déclarât qu'elle reconnaît le principe de la nationalité Italienne, qu'elle veut contribuer de tout son pouvoir à la formation de la Confédération Italienne sur les bases les plus nationales, mais à condition que cette Confédération déclare sa stricte et permanente neutralité Européenne, et que l'Europe sanctionne cette neutralité, ainsi qu'elle l'a fait pour la Suisse en 1815.

Cette déclaration devrait être faite au Gouvernement Anglais en lui demandant sa médiation, et au Pape, qui, comme Souverain temporel et comme chef de la religion Catholique, trouverait dans cette grande mesure les moyens de se tirer des embarras qui le menacent, et parmi lesquels un schisme en Allemagne n'est pas le moins présent et le moins funeste dans ses conséquences.

La promulgation de cette déclaration de l'Autriche devait donc se faire par la Puissance médiatrice, qu'on ne saurait accuser la loyauté, et le Pape devait l'appuyer de toute l'autorité morale que sa position lui donne. Cette promulgation devrait être suivie d'un armistice dont les bases seraient que les troupes Autrichiennes resteraient sur la ligne de l'Adige, et que les Piémontais et les corps francs et auxiliaires resteraient dans leurs cantonnements ou se retireraient dans leurs frontières, aux choix des Lombards. Cet armistice durerait jusqu'au moment où les Grandes Puissances de l'Europe et celles qui composent l'Italie se seraient déclarés sur la question de la neutralité. Pendant la durée de cet armistice on convoquerait tous les conseils communaux qui sont élus par les suffrages des citoyens dans tout le Royaume Lombard-Vénitien, et on leur poserait la question, s'ils préfèrent entrer dans la Confédération Italienne sous le suzeraineté de l'Autriche avec un Archiduc pour Viceroy, mais avec une représentation nationale, une constitution, et un code de lois voté par cette représentation, et jouissant des bienfaits de la paix que la déclaration de neutralité assure à toute l'Italie ; ou s'ils préfèrent l'indépendance absolue, et dans ce cas quel serait le dédommagement qu'ils offriraient à l'Autriche pour le sacrifice des droits que les Traités les plus solennels lui ont assurés.

Il ne faut pas perdre de vue la réflexion très importante que cette votation des communes se ferait non plus sous l'impulsion de la haine, mais sous celle de la reconnaissance ; car l'homme le plus acharné contre l'Autriche ne saurait méconnaître la noble et magnanime tendance de la neutralité permanente.

Du moment où le principe de la nationalité serait mis à couvert, le souvenir du bien-être matériel dont le Royaume Lombard-Vénitien a joui sous la domination de l'Autriche se réveillerait avec force, et les 2 grands mobiles, qui, quoiqu'opposés en apparence se combinent de la manière la plus extraordinaire dans toutes les actions des Italiens, c'est-à-dire, l'imagination et le calcul, se réuniraient pour affirmer le triomphe pacifique de l'Autriche, du moins dans les provinces Vénitiennes. En proposant cette modalité, le Gouvernement Autrichien aurait donné une preuve de son respect pour les droits des peuples, que ne pourrait que lui attirer l'approbation de toute l'Europe ; et si, comme il y a tout lieu de l'espérer, la votation exprimait le vœu de rester sous la souveraineté d'Autriche, ses droits auraient reçu une sanction qui les rendrait à jamais inviolables et sacrés. Il reste maintenant à examiner sous toutes les faces, la question de la neutralité stricte et permanente de la Confédération Italienne.

Par rapport à l'Europe.

L'idée de la neutralité aurait pu être inexécutable aussi longtemps que 2 systèmes différens divisaient l'Europe, alors l'Italie pouvait ajouter un grand poids dans la balance et jouer un rôle important dans la lutte entre les idées constitutionnelles et les Gouvernements absolus ; cette importance est prouvée par les efforts qu'on a fait des 2 côtes pour s'assurer de la prépondérance en Italie, efforts qui ont produit les dissensions et les troubles qui ont à différens époques détruit la tranquillité de ce pays ; mais maintenant que toutes les nations Européennes, à l'exception près des Russes et des Turcs, sont réunis sous le même drapeau, et qu'il ne peut plus y avoir de guerre de principes, la neutralité de l'Italie deviendrait le gage le plus assuré de la paix Européenne, et serait en même temps le plus bel hommage rendu par l'Europe aux progrès de la civilisation, en préservant à jamais du fléau de la guerre ce jardin de l'Europe où tous les êtres souffrans au moral comme au physique cherchent le soulagement de leurs maux dans les douceurs du climat, les charmes d'un séjour tranquille, et les nobles jouissances que les beaux arts prodiguent dans ce pays favorisé du ciel.

Je suis donc convaincu que cette idée serait accueillie avec la plus grande faveur en Angleterre et en Allemagne, où tant de cœurs généreux battent pour la cause Italienne ;—elle pourrait plaire moins à la France, à laquelle elle enlèverait le théâtre habituel de ses guerres avec l'Allemagne ; mais quels motifs plausibles la République Française pourrait-elle alléguer pour combattre une idée qui assurerait le triomphe de cette paix que le Gouvernement actuel de la France assure être le but de tous ses efforts ? La Russie, moins intéressée dans cette question que les autres Puissances, voudrait-elle se charger de l'odieux que sa résistance jetterait sur sa politique ? Je crois donc que par rapport à Europe, l'exécution de cette idée ne montrerait pas de grandes difficultés.

Par rapport à l'Italie.

L'Italie depuis la chute de l'Empire Romain n'a jamais eu la prétention d'être conquérante, et elle a presque toujours subi la destinée d'être conquise ; mais quand même elle a pu échapper à cette destinée, celle d'être le théâtre des guerres entre les Espagnols et les Français, et eux et les Allemands, a périodiquement exposé le pays aux dévastations et aux maux de la guerre, sans qu'il en retirait jamais aucun avantage ; il paraît donc impossible que l'idée d'un état de paix permanent ne soit adopté avec enthousiasme par la grande majorité des Italiens. Quels avantages une guerre quelconque pourrait-elle apporter au Royaume de Naples, aux Etats du Pape, à la Toscane ? Il n'y a que le Piémont qui puisse trouver quelque avantage au maintien d'un état de choses qui promet à sa politique cauteleuse et perfide de vendre son alliance au plus offrant ; mais comment ce Gouvernement oserait-il se déclarer contre le vœu général de l'Italie, et trahir ainsi le honteux secret des motifs qui le font agir ? De la part des Gouvernements il ne paraît pas qu'il puisse y avoir des obstacles ; il ne serait pas impossible que la jeunesse, échauffée par les divers événements et désirant d'effacer la prévention défavorable au courage personnel des Italiens, s'opposait à l'exécution d'une idée qui mettrait des bornes à leur honneur belliqueuse ; mais outre que cette effervescence céderait à la conviction des immenses avantages que la patrie commune retirerait de cette combinaison, il suffirait de représenter aux plus opposés, que la neutralité de l'Italie n'empêcherait pas les individus de chercher dans les armées étrangères l'occasion de se distinguer, et que la neutralité de la Suisse n'a porté aucune atteinte à la réputation dont les Suisses ont joui en tous temps d'être de braves et valeureux soldats. Il serait superflu de s'étendre sur les avantages incalculables que l'état de paix assurerait à l'Italie, qui pourrait développer toutes ses ressources matérielles et intellectuelles et former un centre de civilisation dont l'influence pourrait être bienfaisante sur le midi de l'Europe.

Par rapport à l'Autriche.

La question de la neutralité ne préjudicie en rien les arrangements financiers et commerciaux que l'Autriche pourra prendre vis-à-vis du Royaume Lombardo-Vénitien, au contraire elle préparerait toutes les voies et aplanirait toutes les difficultés. D'ailleurs, quels sont les avantages que l'Autriche retire de sa possession Italienne ? Celui d'avoir ses frontières du Tyrol couvertes par la ligne de l'Adige serait parfaitement obtenu par la neutralité, et on épargnerait ses frais de maintien des forteresses qui défendent cette ligne.

L'Autriche perdrait un contingent de 30,000 hommes à peu près. Mais comme la possession disputée des provinces Italiennes exigerait pour le moins une garnison de 70,000 hommes que les événements actuels démontrent comme insuffisante, l'Autriche se trouverait plus forte de 40,000 hommes, et dans tous les cas épargnerait les sommes qu'elle dépenserait à maintenir cette force sur pied. Dans le pire des hypothèses, c'est-à-dire, si les provinces Italiennes déclareraient dans la votation proposée, qu'elle désire une indépendance absolue, l'Autriche pourrait obtenir des indemnifications financières et commerciales beaucoup plus importantes sous l'influence de l'idée de la neutralité ; car un pays n'étant plus dans la nécessité d'entretenir une armée ou de payer des auxiliaires, ayant de plus l'immense perspective d'une paix permanente, s'ouvrirait bien plus facilement à des sacrifices qui délivreraient l'Autriche d'une partie de ses dettes et à des concessions qui assureraient à ses manufactures un débouché important, et à son commerce des facilités qui le rendraient florissant. Toute la politique de l'Autriche deviendrait moins compliquée ; elle pourrait tourner toute son attention sur les questions vitales qui doivent s'agiter en Allemagne et dans l'Orient. Est-il nécessaire de fixer l'attention d'un homme d'état sur l'influence qu'une pareille solution de la question Italienne exercerait dans ce moment sur les décisions de l'Allemagne et sur l'esprit des Hongrois ?

Les bornes d'un mémoire ne permettent pas de donner à cette idée tous les développements nécessaires, mais je la crois éminemment pratique, et je suis prêt à répondre à toutes les objections et à discuter toutes les modifications, heureux si je puis contribuer au bien-être de l'Autriche et à la pacification de l'Italie.

M. L'AMBASSADEUR,

Vienne, 12 Mai, 1848.

LE mémoire que j'ai eu l'honneur de vous communiquer a été discuté hier soir dans le Conseil des Ministres : on m'a assuré que le résultat de cette discussion a été assez favorable, et que je serai invité sous peu à discuter verbalement ce projet : telle est maintenant la position de cette affaire, je ne négligerai rien pour la pousser vivement, et j'espère que le Gouvernement Anglais recevra bientôt la demande de sa médiation.

Je me suis aperçu en relisant la minute de mon mémoire, qu'il s'y était glissé une faute qui dénaturerait le sens: j'ai écrit qu'on devait proposer aux provinces Italiennes de faire partie de la Confédération sous la "suzeraineté" de l'Autriche, mais c'est "souveraineté" que j'ai voulu écrire; l'idée de suzeraineté serait trop vague, et d'ailleurs n'obtiendrait pas l'assentiment du Ministre.

Veuillez, &c.

Vienna, May 12, 1848.

COUNT FICQUELMONT has been with me, and has stated that the Austrian Government is ready to grant to the Lombards the complete enjoyment of their independence, upon conditions that they shall take certain steps which will be fully communicated to your Lordship by Baron Hummelauer, who will leave Vienna to-morrow for London. I will therefore confine myself to one or two of the principal points.

The Austrians propose that the Milanese should appoint an "hereditary Viceroy," totally independent of Austria and of every other Power; hereditary only to preserve fixity; that they shall select the 2nd brother of the Duke of Modena, who shall bring as it were a marriage portion of the Duchy of Modena; that Parma should also be incorporated with Lombardy, Austria resigning the right enjoyed by Treaties of a contingent succession to that Duchy; that the Lombards shall take upon them absolutely a certain portion of the Austrian Debt, and shall contribute also a certain proportion to the expense of any military aid which may be required by the Lombards; Austria is also willing to give up everything, except such portions of the territory of the Venetian Kingdom as are necessary for the defence of the Tyrol and other parts, and for the free intercourse between Vienna and Trieste. Austria is under the difficulty of not seeing with whom such a negotiation can be well entered into, and is desirous that Her Majesty's Government should facilitate that part, and should offer their good offices, &c.

The Viceroy is to be under the suzeraineté of the Emperor.

No. 363.—The Hon. R. Abercromby to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received May 20.)

MY LORD,

Turin, May 14, 1848.

IN the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies of yesterday, his Excellency the Marquis Pareto announced to the Chamber that the Duchy of Piacenza had formally proclaimed its union with Piedmont and the States of His Sardinian Majesty.

Registers were opened for the votes of the people upon this occasion, and the numbers were as follows:

For the union with Piedmont	37,000
„ Lombardy	69
„ States of the Church	300
„ Parma	10

A deputation from Piacenza will proceed direct to the headquarters of His Sardinian Majesty, for the purpose of placing in His Majesty's hands the Act recording the decision of the people.

This is the first example of the actual adhesion to Piedmont of any of the various States of Italy, at present governed by Provisional Governments, and the news of the accession of Piacenza was hailed, I am informed, by the Deputies in the Lower Chambers with much enthusiasm.

Registers have also been opened for recording the votes of the inhabitants of the Duchy of Parma, as well as for those of the States of Reggio and Modena, and the accession of those States is confidently looked for.

The question of the greatest importance is, however, the determination taken by the Provisional Government of Milan to consult the will of the people as to the future form of Government to be adopted in that province.

On the breaking out of the revolt, and on the evacuation of Milan by the Austrians, the Provisional Government announced that the wishes of the people would be consulted upon this point at the termination of the present war.

It has, however, been discovered, that for many reasons it would be better to close at once the existing transitory state, and to constitute immediately into one united and strong country the provinces which are now about to seek to be annexed to the States of His Sardinian Majesty.

For this reason the Provisional Government of Milan have issued a decree, dated the 12th instant, by which they order the immediate opening of registers in every parish throughout Lombardy, in which the votes of the inhabitants are to be recorded with reference to two questions: the one in favour of immediate union with the Sardinian States; the other, that the fusion of the 2 countries should be deferred until the war shall be successfully ended.

I have the honour to inclose herewith translations of the forms in which these two questions are to be submitted to the vote of the people.

These lists are to be closed on the 29th instant, the anniversary of the battle of Legnano in 1176.

There can be little doubt that a large majority will be found to have voted for the immediate annexation of Lombardy to the States of His Sardinian Majesty, and your Lordship will observe in the inclosed form proposed for the vote for immediate junction with Piedmont, that the vote likewise positively declares that the constituent assembly of the whole States thus blended together is to discuss and establish the bases and form of a new constitutional monarchy under the dynasty of the House of Savoy.

It is generally believed that the territory of Venice will follow the line taken by Milan and the other towns of Lombardy, and it may therefore be confidently expected that by the first days of the month of June, the whole of Lombardy, Venice, Parma, Piacenza, Reggio, and Modena, with the exception of Massa and Carrara, and the Lunigiana, which have gone to the Grand Duke of Tuscany, will have pronounced their adhesion to the Crown of Sardinia.

The population thus united under one sceptre will amount to about 10,159,102.

No. 368.—Vice-Consul Campbell to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received May 21.)

MY LORD,

Milan, May 14, 1848.

I DO myself the honour to transmit, for your Lordship's information, the translation of a letter of the 13th of May from the Provisional Government of Lombardy to me, inclosing a decree from the same, relating to the plan that has been decided on to ascertain the sense of the people, as to whether the union of Lombardy with Piedmont should take place immediately, or whether it should be delayed till the end of the war, the majority of the votes deciding the question. The Provinces of Como, Brescia, and Piacenza have, by large majorities decided in favour of an immediate union with the Piedmontese States.

The bulletin of the 13th contains only the following paragraph worthy of notice: "In consequence of the occupation of Belluno and Feltre by the enemy, our troops have been obliged to abandon the line of the Piave, and are now retreating on the Brenta, where, when concentrated, they will strongly resist the corps d'armée of Nugent, if he attempts to advance."

I have, &c.

ROBERT CAMPBELL.

(Inclosure.)—The Provisional Government of Lombardy to Vice-Consul Campbell.

Milan, May 13, 1848.

FROM the annexed decree you will see under what grave circumstances the Provisional Government has been obliged to hasten the expression of the country on the most important point as to its union with Piedmont, with the proviso that a Constituent Assembly will in due time determine on the basis and forms of a new Constitutional Monarchy.

The wants incident upon war, those affecting the interior, the finances, diplomacy, all tend to make the continuation of a Provisional Government impossible, and render it necessary that it should deliberate upon the quickest means of escaping from its difficulty. The safety of Italy might be compromised by a longer delay, and the Government would be wanting in its own duty, in face of the public opinion which becomes every day more explicit, especially in the provinces, if it remained any longer neuter.

Besides the opening of the Piedmontese Chambers, and the anticipation of serious debates respecting the war, which would certainly be the echo of the prevailing opinions in the country and in the camp, ought to induce the Provisional Government to take all these circumstances into the most serious consideration.

Finally, the condition of the Venetian Provinces, which are on the point of being entirely re-occupied, and the increase of the Austrian troops—an increase requiring the most timely junction of all our military forces—are new and pressing circumstances which oblige us to provide not only for our own safety, but also for that of all Italy. By union alone can the barbarian be again driven on the other side of the Isonzo, and the Constitutional Monarchy, after having saved the independence of the country, will not compromise its liberty, as this liberty will be guaranteed by a Constitution discussed and decided upon by a National Assembly that will be convoked on the broadest basis of universal suffrage.

The Provisional Government of Lombardy hasten to communicate to you this resolution, that you may acquaint your Government with the same.

(Translation.)

THE Provisional Government of Lombardy decrees:

1. The registers are open in all the parishes of the communes of Lombardy, in order to collect the signatures of the Lombard people.
2. Every man of 21 years of age has the right to vote.
3. Those who cannot write will make a cross in the presence of the curate and 2 delegates named as in Articles V and VI.
4. The vote must be given by each person in the parish where he resides, without distinction of religious creeds.
5. The curates, or those who act for them, will be assisted in collecting the votes by 2 delegates named in the cities by their respective municipal congregations, as in Article VI.
6. In the country towns and villages the curates will be assisted by 2 of the members of the Communal Deputations, or their substitutes, or by 2 persons chosen by the same deputations. Where Communal Councils exist, however, the delegates shall be chosen in preference from the body of councillors.
7. Registers shall be open in the parishes from the day in which the present law shall be published in the respective communes, and they shall be closed definitively on the 29th of May, the anniversary of the battle of Lograno. After which they will be sealed up by the different curates, and sent to the respective Communal Deputations or Municipal Congregations.

8. It being necessary to provide that the right of voting should be regularly exercised also by the citizens who are now at the army, measures are taken that registers may be opened at the head-quarters of their corps. The Italian soldiers, whether conscripts or volunteers, who fight under the flag of Lombardy, will all vote by subscribing in presence of the superior officers of the corps to which they belong.

9. The Government Commission destined to send succour to the Venetian provinces will take care to collect the vote of the citizens forming part of the company that are now on that territory.

10. The Communal Deputations and Municipal Congregations will deliver the registers, sealed up, to the Provincial Congregations on which they depend, in the most secure and ready manner, at the expense of the commune and on their personal responsibility.

11. The Provincial Congregations will make the scrutiny of the registers in the presence of the Bishop or of his representative, and of a Government Commissary.

12. As in consequence of the peculiar condition of the city and province of Mantua, Articles X and XI cannot be observed, it is determined that the Communal Deputations should deliver the sealed registers to the extraordinary Commissary of the Government residing in Bozzolo, and that the scrutiny of the registers be made by him in presence of the Ecclesiastical and Communal authority.

13. The scrutiny of the registers must be sealed up after a procès-verbal, and delivered to the Government, together with the same register, without delay.

14. The scrutiny of the provincial registers must be made public by the Government, and whichever of the two propositions shall contain the greatest number of votes will be the vote of the nation.

(Received May 22)

MY LORD,

Vienna, May 12, 1848.

IN my hurry this afternoon I may not, I fear, have marked sufficiently the fact that there were 2 projects mentioned by Count

Ficquelmont officieusement to me by order of the Imperial Government.

The first is, the abandonment of all the Austrian rights in the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom, upon an agreement between the 2 parties.

The second, the total unconditional abandonment by the Austrians of the Lombard territories, and the concentration of their forces on the strong position of Verona, &c., and the continued occupation of the Venetian territories, making a declaration that they would not take any part in the affairs of the rest of Italy, and would limit themselves strictly to defensive measures.

The first of these projects is that for which Count Dietrichstein will be instructed to ask for the friendly intervention of the British Government to bring about an amicable arrangement between the Imperial Government and the revolted provinces in Italy, and with the Court of Sardinia.

The second project will be acted upon only if Her Majesty's Government shall decline intervention.

Baron Hummelauer will take with him to London full instructions to the Count Dietrichstein, and will leave Vienna to-morrow night, the 13th.

No. 371.—Baron Lebzeltern to Count Dietrichstein.—(Communicated to Viscount Palmerston by Count Dietrichstein, May 22.)

M. LE COMTE,

Vienne, le 14 Mai, 1848.

LA note responsive que Lord Palmerston vous a adressée sous la date du 21 Avril, et que votre Excellence nous a transmise par son rapport portant la date du 22 du même mois, nous a offert une preuve non équivoque de l'intérêt avec lequel le Principal Secrétaire d'Etat de Sa Majesté Britannique avait accueilli la nouvelle du départ de M. le Comte Hartig, envoyé en Italie pour entâmer des négociations tendant à amener la pacification de nos provinces insurgées.

Lord Palmerston a senti que le bruit des armes devait d'abord se taire pour que des paroles de paix telles que le Comte Hartig est chargé de les porter aux sujets de l'Empereur en Italie, puissent avoir des chances d'être justement appréciées. Nous ne pouvons que regretter que la recommandation que le Gouvernement Britannique a dans ce but fait adresser à la Cour de Turin, et qui avait pour objet d'amener une suspension des hostilités, n'ait pas été suivie d'effet.

Toutefois, la nécessité de continuer une lutte meurtrière n'a pas atténué la pensée de paix qui prédomine avant tout dans les conseils de l'Empereur. Désirant fournir une nouvelle preuve des intentions conciliantes qui l'animent au moment même où les renforts envoyés à l'armée Impériale promettent de faire tourner en notre faveur les chances de la guerre, le Gouvernement Impérial s'est décidé à prier le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique de vouloir bien par l'influence de ses conseils et par son intervention amicale entre nous, nos provinces Italiennes en état d'insurrections, et la Cour de Sardaigne, dans la lutte dont la Haute Italie est en ce moment le théâtre, concourir à faire cesser l'effusion du sang et à rétablir la paix dans un pays où elle ne saurait continuer longtemps à être troublée sans risquer une conflagration générale.

Votre Excellence est chargée de donner à Lord Palmerston lecture et copie de cette dépêche, et de nous faire connaître sans délai la réponse de sa Seigneurie.

Recevez, &c.

M. le Comte Dietrichstein.

LEBZELTERN.

No. 372.—Sir G. Hamilton to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. May 23.)

MY LORD,

Florence, May 15, 1848.

IN the Duchies of Parma and Modena a very decided movement has been made for the union of those States with the kingdom of Sardinia.

At Parma, the Provisional Government has made arrangements for the opening of registers in all the communes of the State, in order that the suffrages of the people may be duly collected as to the future destiny of the country, but with the view that Parma should form part of a powerful kingdom under the name of "il Regno d'Alta Italia."

At Modena this movement originated with the municipal body, who have addressed their countrymen, pointing out the advantages that are to be obtained from the formation of a powerful kingdom, to which Modena is to belong, and the Provisional Government has seconded the movement, and a register is kept open at the Palace of the Municipality for the signatures of all classes of the Modenese.

It has been declared and voted by universal suffrage in the Duchies of Massa and Carrara, that these principalities should form part of Tuscany, and a deputation has been sent to the Grand Duke at Florence, informing him of this decision.

His Royal Highness has given the deputation a kind and prudent reply, but disclaiming at the present moment any wishes of aggrandizement for Tuscany.

An universal dread pervades Italy lest the French army should cross the Alps.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

GEORGE B. HAMILTON.

No. 376.—Baron Hummelauer to Viscount Palmerston.

Londres, ce 23 Mai, 1848.

Mon Gouvernement m'a chargé de mettre sous vos yeux, Milord, les élémens qui nous paraissent susceptibles à entrer dans les bases, de l'intervention amicale que nous demandons au Gouvernement de Sa Majesté la Reine.

Le Royaume Lombardo-Vénitien continuerait à rester sous la souveraineté de l'Empereur.

Il recevrait une administration séparée de celle du reste de l'Empire, entièrement nationale, et dont les bases seraient combinées par les Représentants mêmes du royaume sans aucune intervention de la part du Gouvernement Impérial. Un Ministère Italien, établi dans le centre de la Monarchie, entretiendrait les rapports entre le Gouvernement Impérial et l'Administration du Royaume Lombardo-Vénitien.

A la tête de l'Administration séparée du royaume serait placé un Archiduc Vice-Roi comme Lieutenant de l'Empereur. Les frais de l'administration du royaume seraient portés par le royaume lui-même, qui serait tenu à payer en sus un montant d'environ 4,000,000 de florins par an pour contribuer aux dépenses centrales de l'Empire, comme le maintien de la Cour, le service diplomatique, &c.

Le royaume se chargerait, comme sa part à la dette publique de l'Empire, du paiement annuel d'une rente d'environ 10,000,000 de florins, transportée sur le Monte Lombard-Vénitien, de manière à ce que, quels que puissent être les revirements futurs de la politique le royaume en reste seul responsable.

Les forces militaires du royaume constitueraient une armée toute nationale, dont la majeure partie resterait en tems de paix dans le pays même, mais qui en tems de guerre suivrait l'appel de l'Empereur pour la défense générale de l'Empire.

Les rapports de commerce entre le royaume et le reste de l'Empire seraient réglés sur la base des intérêts réciproques et dans le but d'assurer au commerce de part et d'autre la plus grande liberté possible.

Les circonstances suivantes pourraient peut-être être utilisées en faveur de cette combinaison. Le Duc de Parme ainsi que son fils se trouvent si désavantageusement placés vis-à-vis de leur propre pays que leur rétablissement dans le Duché de Parme est autant qu'impossible. Il se présente ainsi de fait le cas de réversion prévu dans la Paix d'Aix-la-Chapelle et par rapport aux quelles dispositions du Traité de Paix d'Aix-la-Chapelle ont reçu une dernière confirmation dans le Traité de Paris du 10 Juin, 1817, de sorte qu'en obtenant la renonciation du Duc de Parme et de son fils, pour eux et leurs successeurs, contre un dédommagement pécuniaire proportionné à offrir à la famille Ducale, et en garantissant à celle-ci son état de possession allodial, le Duché de Plaisance reviendrait à la Sardaigne, et le Duché de Parme à l'Autriche, et par conséquent au Royaume Lombard-Vénitien, tandis que la Convention du 28 Novembre, 1844, pourvoit aux dédommagements territoriaux à donner à la Sardaigne pour la place forte de Plaisance, qui resterait également à l'Autriche et au Royaume Lombard-Vénitien. Les articles des Traités susmentionnés et relatifs à cette question sont consignés dans l'annexe ci-jointe.

Le Duc de Modène a ipso facto cessé de régner, et un Gouvernement Provisoire s'est institué. Nous avons motif de ne pas regarder comme impossible de disposer le Duc de Modène contre un dédommagement pécuniaire, et en assurant à la Maison d'Este la possession de ses biens de famille, d'abdiquer en faveur de son frère l'Archiduc Ferdinand, qui n'est point compromis dans le Duché de Modène. Si cette supposition devait se trouver fondée, l'Empereur pourrait faire choix de ce Prince comme Vice-Roi du Royaume Lombard-Vénitien, et qui, comme Duc de Modène, apporterait au Royaume Lombard-Vénitien le Duché de Modène. La réunion administrative des Duchés de Modène et de Parme avec le Royaume Lombard-Vénitien ajouterait essentiellement à la force de la position militaire du Royaume Lombard-Vénitien.

Les bases sus-indiquées font certainement preuve de la sincérité du Gouvernement Impérial, et cela d'autant plus que dans ce moment, à l'exception de la ville de Venise et de la place de Palmanova, nos troupes sont maîtresses de tout le territoire Vénitien; que le Maréchal Radetzky est sur le point de recevoir les renforts qui le mettront en état d'aller chercher lui-même l'armée Piémontaise; que le Tirol Allemand est levé en masse; et le Tirol Italien parfaitement assuré; et que vient de paraître l'allocution du St. Père du 29 Avril, qui découvre la perfidie dont on s'est servi de son nom et de son autorité pour fanatiser le peuple.

Si malgré ces circonstances qui sont plutôt en notre faveur, nous avons recours à l'amitié de la Grande Bretagne, c'est que nous attacherions un grand prix à voir terminer sans délai cette complication. Le Cabinet Britannique doit être informé de la marche des choses en France mieux que nous ne saurions l'être. Nous regardons comme inévitable et peut-être prochain le débordement de la France. L'invasion de nos Etats par l'armée Piémontaise et par les troupes et bandes du reste de l'Italie est faite pour attirer les Français. Si demain les Français franchissent les Alpes et viennent en Lombardie, nous n'irons point à leur rencontre. Nous resterons d'abord dans la position de Vérone et sur l'Adige, et si les Français devaient venir nous y chercher, nous reculerions vers nos Alpes et vers l'Isonzo, mais nous n'accepterons pas la bataille, nous ne nous opposerons pas à l'entrée et à la marche des Français en Italie. Ceux qui les y ont appelés n'auront qu'à essayer une fois de plus de leur domination. Personne n'ira nous chercher derrière nos Alpes, et nous resterons spectateurs des luttes dont l'Italie deviendra le théâtre. Dans le cas seulement où la complication actuelle fût aplanie sous les auspices de la Grande Bretagne, il y aurait encore une possibilité de réunir les moyens du Piémont et ceux de l'Autriche dans un système de défense commune contre l'invasion des Français. Mais c'est aussi uniquement sous les auspices de la Grande Bretagne qu'une pareille idée puisse être conçue, car ce n'est que la présence et l'autorité du nom Britannique qui pourrait nous porter à ajouter foi à des engagements pris par les Piémontais et les Lombards.

En faisant abstraction des considérations qui se rattachent à la défense de l'Italie contre les Français, l'intervention amicale que nous demandons à l'Angleterre—si le Cabinet Britannique accueillit notre demande—offrir à l'organe que le Cabinet Britannique en chargera, le moyen le plus sûr de se procurer une connaissance très exacte du véritable état des choses en Italie, pour le cas où l'Autriche fût obligée à s'en retirer, les forces Françaises se joignant à celles de l'Italie. Le Gouvernement Impérial ne méconnaît nullement que la demande qu'il fait puisse avoir aux yeux du Gouvernement Britannique un caractère grave par rapport aux précautions que commande la situation actuelle de la France, mais nous croyons que par cette même raison il serait doublement important de ne pas se refuser à l'essai d'aplanir une complication qui précisément sous ce même point de vue constitue un danger direct et imminent. Les éléments que je viens d'exposer à votre Excellence ne sont à considérer que comme la preuve des intentions bienveillantes et paternelles de l'Empereur. Si le Cabinet Britannique devait nous accorder son intervention amicale, la proposition à faire aux Lombards serait concertée avec le Représentant Britannique qui serait dans le cas de diriger toute démarche de manière à préserver la marche des négociations de tout ce qu'il ne jugerait pas être en accord avec les convenances de l'Angleterre.

Le droit de réversion de Sa Majesté le Roi de Sardaigne sur le Duché de Plaisance, stipulé par le Traité d'Aix-la-Chapelle de 1748, et par le Traité de Paris du 10 Juin, 1763,* est confirmé. TREATY of Limitation, between the Courts of Lucca, Modena, Tuscany, Austria, and Sardinia, signed at Florence the 28th of November, 1844.† (Translation.)

ART. VIII. It has, however, been decided, between His Majesty the Emperor of Austria and His Majesty the King of Sardinia, that all that portion of Lunigiana which has been assigned above to the future Duke of Parma, and which comprehends the greatest part of the territory, now Tuscan, of Pontremoli and Bagnone, besides the districts now Modenese, such as Treschietto, Villafranca, Castevoli, and Mulazzo, shall be ceded with all titles to property and sovereignty to His Majesty the King of Sardinia, his heirs and successors, whenever the case of reversion contemplated by the Treaty of the 20th of May, 1815, shall come to pass, by which the Duchy of Parma would fall to Austria, and that of Piacenza to Sardinia. And this concession to Sardinia will form the basis of that compensation, which, by reason of the Additional and Separate Article of the said Treaty of the 20th of May, 1815, Austria owes to her for giving up the city and fortress of Piacenza, together with its portion of the surrounding district, which was determined and agreed upon between them. Nevertheless, the value of the above-mentioned States to be exchanged between them, namely, Piacenza, with a circle (zona) or district that has been decided upon, and the Parmesan territory which borders on Sardinia, shall be verified and examined at the precise epoch of reversion, with an impartial spirit of equity by an Austro-Sardinian Commission; and in the unlikely case of dissension, it has been agreed between the 2 at once to refer the case to the decision of the Holy See.

No. 377.—Baron Hummelauer to Viscount Palmerston.

MILORD,

Londres, ce 24 Mai, 1848.

CONFORMEMENT à la permission que vous avez bien voulu m'en donner, je joins ci-près le résumé des idées qui formeraient la base de l'arrangement de la complication Lombard-Piémontaise. Plus je réfléchis aux observations que vous avez faites au projet que j'avais été chargé de vous soumettre, et plus j'en apprécie la valeur et vous en suis reconnaissant. En effet, les idées dont il s'agit maintenant, si elles rencontrent l'approbation du Conseil, sont conformes à l'état des faits tels qu'ils sont, aux possibilités et aux incompatibilités qu'ils renferment, et elles achemineraient la négociation dans une voie où tout ce qui pourra offrir un motif de plainte ou d'ingérence à la France pourra être évité. Vous pouvez être convaincu, Milord, que le Gouvernement Impérial partage sous ce rapport entièrement les vues du Gouvernement de la Reine, et si le Conseil accorde son approbation aux idées en question, je me rendrais sur-le-champ à Vienne pour en faire valoir les avantages auprès de mon Gouvernement. Si le Gouvernement de la Reine nous accorde son intervention, il ouvre la seule issue possible à cette complication, qui, sans l'intervention de la Grande Bretagne, doit nécessairement se traîner de calamité en calamité et finir par l'entrée des Français en Italie. L'intervention de la Grande Bretagne offrira à toutes les parties la possibilité d'y mettre un terme.

En rédigeant le susdit résumé je me suis trouvé obligé, afin de mettre à couvert ma responsabilité vis-à-vis de mon Gouvernement, de toucher à quelques considérations de détail qui ressortent de ce que dans ce projet l'Etat de Venise doit être séparé de la Lombardie. Une entente précise sur ces points, qui sont d'une nature technique, sera l'affaire d'une demi-heure à Vienne, où l'on possède les données nécessaires à leur égard.

HUMMELAUER.

(Inclosure.)—Memorandum by Baron Hummelauer.

Londres, ce 24 Mai, 1848.

LA Lombardie cesserait d'appartenir à l'Autriche, et serait libre maîtresse de rester indépendante ou de se réunir à tel autre Etat Italien de son propre choix. Elle se chargerait par contre d'une partie proportionnée de la dette publique Autrichienne, qui serait transportée définitivement et irrévocablement sur la Lombardie.

L'Etat Vénitien resterait sous la souveraineté de l'Empereur : il aurait une administration séparée, entièrement nationale, concertée par les Représentants du pays eux-mêmes, sans l'intervention du Gouvernement Impérial, et représentée auprès du Gouvernement Central de la Monarchie par un Ministre qu'elle y entretiendrait, et qui soignerait les rapports entre elle et le Gouvernement Central de l'Empire.

L'Administration Vénitienne serait présidée par un Archiduc Vice-Roi qui résiderait à Venise comme Lieutenant de l'Empereur. L'Etat Vénitien porterait les frais de sa propre administration, et il contribuerait aux dépenses centrales de la Monarchie, comme le maintien de la Cour Impériale, le service diplomatique, &c., en proportion à ses ressources, en prenant pour base que le Royaume Lombard-Vénitien réuni se serait chargé sous ce titre d'un paiement annuel de 4,000,000 de florins environ.

L'Etat Vénitien se chargerait pour sa part à la dette publique, d'une rente annuelle proportionnée à ses ressources, en prenant pour base que le Royaume Lombard-Vénitien réuni y aurait participé à raison d'une rente de 10,000,000 de florins par an, et cette rente serait transportée sur le Monte Vénitien, de sorte à ce que, quels que puissent être les revirements politiques de l'avenir, l'Etat Vénitien en reste seul responsable.

Les sommes qui lors de la révolte de Milan et de Venise ont été saisies dans les caisses publiques doivent être restituées au Gouvernement Impérial.

La troupe Vénitienne sera toute nationale, quant à son personnel, mais comme elle ne saurait être d'une force suffisante pour former une armée séparée, elle devra naturellement participer à l'organisation de l'armée Impériale et être placée sous les ordres directs du Ministère de la Guerre de l'Empereur. En temps de paix elle sera cantonnée dans l'Etat Vénitien, en fournissant un contingent pour le service de garnison à Vienne. En cas de guerre les troupes de l'Etat Vénitien suivront l'appel de l'Empereur pour la défense de l'Empire.

Les frais de la troupe Vénitienne seront portés par l'Etat Vénitien.

Les relations de commerce entre l'Etat Vénitien et le reste de la Monarchie Autrichienne et entre celle-ci et la Lombardie, seront réglées conformément aux intérêts réciproques et sur la base de la plus grande liberté possible.

A l'égard du Monte Lombard-Vénitien actuel, une répartition proportionnée aurait lieu entre la Lombardie et l'Etat Vénitien.

Ce qui dans l'exposé d'hier a été dit par rapport aux Duchés de

Parme et de Modène trouverait son application à la Lombardie, qui aurait à fournir des dédommagements convenables aux 2 Ducs et à leur assurer la possession de leurs propriétés de famille.

No. 381.—Baron Hummelauer to Viscount Palmerston.

MILORD,

Londres, Mai 26, 1848.

SIR R. ABERCROMBY regarde la renonciation de l'Autriche à la Lombardie et à l'Etat Vénitien comme le seul moyen d'éviter l'intervention de la France.

Quand même l'Empereur voudrait y consentir, voici quelques difficultés d'exécution que l'on aurait à rencontrer. Veuillez faire attention à la position géographique des différentes provinces. La partie du Tirol située sur le versant des Alpes et qui s'appelle Tirol Italien, serait entièrement entourée par le territoire Lombard-Vénitien. Les Gouvernements Provisoires de Milan et de Venise déclarent dans leurs proclamés officielles et dans leurs feuilles, que le Tirol Italien ainsi que le littoral de l'Istrie et de Dalmatie, qui jadis appartenait à la République de Venise, font partie de cette Italie dont il s'agit d'expulser l'Autriche. Ils ont adressé à tous ces peuples des appels à la révolte. Ils ont suscité des mouvements que nous avons supprimés en Istrie et Dalmatie. Ils ont envahi de tous les côtés le Tirol Italien, les armes à la main. Leurs bandes en ont été chassées. Il est donc évident que nous serions entièrement livrés à leur bon plaisir si nous leur abandonnions l'Etat Vénitien. L'Empereur ne peut point renoncer à l'Etat Vénitien sans renoncer virtuellement au Tirol Italien. Vous paraît-il, Milord, qu'une suggestion pareille puisse présenter des chances de succès auprès du Gouvernement Impérial? L'Empereur est en Tirol; vous voyez l'enthousiasme qui y a éclaté; un semblable enthousiasme éclatera dans l'armée, qui exigera à grands cris d'être conduite à l'attaque. Etre allé à Innsbruck est autant que se placer au milieu de l'armée. Voyez les nouvelles de Vienne dans les feuilles de ce matin; elles sont très favorables à l'Empereur et au réveil de l'ordre et de la force dans l'empire. Si l'idée touchée par Sir R. Abercromby pouvait trouver place au nombre des chances possibles il y a deux jours, elle ne peut plus aujourd'hui. Cette idée était naturelle aux Italiens, qui aiment à nous croire morts;—nous ne le sommes pas encore! Je pense que nous verrons sans délai des signes d'une vie effective, signes que dans l'intérêt de tout le monde il eût été désirable d'éviter.

Et si l'Empereur, ce que je ne regarde pas comme probable, voulait consentir à abandonner la Lombardie et l'Etat Vénitien, êtes-vous sûr, Milord, que la France verra de bon œil leur jonction au

Piémont? L'article du "Morning Chronicle" de ce matin renferme quelques bonnes observations à ce sujet. La marche que l'on semble vouloir suivre ici est à mes yeux bien plus propre à amener la complication Française que de la détourner.

Ma plume est allée plus loin que j'avais voulu la faire aller. Vous voudrez bien l'excuser, pour la gravité de la situation. J'attends la réponse que vous avez eu la bonté de me promettre, et je compte alors me mettre tout de suite en route pour retourner à Vienne.

Veillez, &c.

No. 384.—The Secretary of the Admiralty to Mr. Addington.

SIR,

Admiralty, May 26, 1848.

I AM commanded by my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to send you herewith, for the information of Viscount Palmerston, a copy of 2 letters from Captain Henderson of Her Majesty's steamship Sidon, dated Naples, the 15th and 16th instant, respecting affairs at that place.

I am, &c.

H. U. Addington, Esq.

H. G. WARD.

(Inclosure 1.)—Captain Henderson to Vice-Admiral Sir W. Parker.

SIR,

Sidon, Naples, May 15, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that the nomination of Peers, to sit in the Neapolitan Chambers, took place during yesterday, and the Chambers were to assemble to-day. Some excitement, however, prevailed, the Deputies insisting on an alteration of the oath required of them by the King, which His Majesty unfortunately refused to alter. Towards night the people began to form barricades in the Toledo, the excitement still increasing, and this morning Lord Napier went to the King, and the King was prevailed on to make some tardy alteration in the oath, to meet the wishes of the Deputies; but it seems their demands increased by delay, and what would have satisfied them last night was refused this morning. The troops were under arms all night, the cavalry patrolling the streets, and the National Guard espousing the part of the Deputies.

At half-past 11 this morning, the troops opened a continuous fire of musketry, and a few light field-pieces, which lasted about a quarter of an hour, and they continue firing at intervals. I shall send the Porcupine to lie off the British Legation, for the purpose of affording protection, at the request of Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, and will keep the Sidon in readiness to afford protection to British lives and property, as far as possible, should it be in danger.

The Locust will be kept in readiness to sail for Civita Vecchia to-night, Lord Napier having received another most pressing letter respecting the Austrian Ambassador.

I send this by the French packet, just about to sail, and will send the Porcupine, with particulars, when things are more quiet.

The Locust arrived on Saturday evening, and the Porcupine last night, from Marseilles, after landing there His Royal Highness the Duke of Parma, without molestation.

I have, &c.

Vice-Admiral Sir W. Parker.

W. H. HENDERSON.

(Inclosure 2.)—Captain Henderson to Vice-Admiral Sir W. Parker.
SIR, Sidon, Naples, May 16, 1848.

IN continuation of my letter of yesterday I have the honour to inform you that about 4 o'clock the King's troops stormed Mount Oliveto, a position of the National Guard, and where with 2 or 3 pieces of artillery they were in some force; this was taken without much resistance, after which there was occasional firing at intervals until about midnight, when it entirely ceased.

From what I can learn to-day, the loss on the part of the National Guards and the troops seems to have been nearly equal, about 100 of each, that on the part of the troops falling principally on the Swiss regiments, and amongst the number several are officers; there must have been many wounded, I presume, in addition.

From what can be ascertained, the National Guards first opened fire, and the troops throughout seem to have behaved well; and, although many atrocities no doubt have been committed in these triumphs, it is to be hoped these atrocities are much exaggerated.

A number of prisoners have been taken, probably 600 or 700, and the city being under martial law, the soldiers are seizing arms generally, and I believe it is intended to disarm the National Guard.

The Ministers of Russia, Spain, and England, went early to the King to advocate the cause of humanity; and I have no doubt the foreign Ministers generally will continue to use their best endeavours to prevent a further effusion of blood.

It is not yet known whether the King will dissolve the present Chamber of Deputies, but I understand that it is recommended he should continue the present Chamber, endeavouring to act strictly up to the Constitution, with the hope that the present Deputies will give him their support in carrying it out.

I have, &c.

Vice-Admiral Sir W. Parker.

W. H. HENDERSON.

No. 385.—Sir G. Hamilton to the Earl of Aberdeen.—(Rec. May 26.)
MY LORD, Florence, May 18, 1848.

IN my despatch of the 15th instant, I had the honour of informing your Lordship that the Duchies of Massa and Carrara had offered themselves to Tuscany, but that the Grand Duke had repudiated any idea of aggrandizement to the Tuscan States at the present moment.

For the reasons set forth in the inclosed proclamation, a translation of which I have also the honour to inclose to your Lordship, together with the copy of the note from the Minister for Foreign Affairs which accompanied it, His Royal Highness has thought proper to alter his first determination, and to annex the Duchies of Massa and Carrara, and the territories of Garfagnana and Lunigiana, to the Tuscan dominions.

As the annexation of these territories to Tuscany is an infraction of the Treaty of Vienna, I thought it my duty to return the answer to M. Cempini's note, of which I have also the honour to transmit a copy to your Lordship. I have, &c.

The Earl of Aberdeen, K.T.

GEORGE B. HAMILTON.

(Inclosure 1.)—Motuproprio of the Grand Duke of Tuscany annexing Massa and Carrara to Tuscany.

Florence, May 12, 1848.

AT the cessation of the Ducal Governments of Modena and Parma, the people of the Lunigiana, who with so much mutual grief saw that they were to be separated from the Grand Duchy, manifested directly the desire to be rejoined to a State to which they were allied by so many dear recollections.

An equal desire was shown also by the populations of the States of Massa and Carrara, of the Garfagnana, and of the ex-fiefs of the Lunigiana, which by their geographical position, by their commerce, by their pursuits, and by natural affection, have ever been accustomed to consider themselves as united to Tuscany, which was most near to them.

Of this common sentiment of the above-mentioned population, the various Provisional Governments which were established in these cities and districts made themselves the interpreters, and turned to us in order that the universal proposal to be annexed to the Grand Duchy should be accepted.

But it appeared to us that we should receive them only under our protection and guardianship, not consenting to a formal annexation, being aware that to enlarge the territory is nothing but to increase the burden of duties, the fulfilment of which was always our sole ambition; and not desiring in any manner to prejudice that general arrangement of Italian affairs, which may at once provide for the common good of the nation, and for the private advantage of the families of which it is composed.

We, however, were obliged to acknowledge very soon, that a state uncertain and unfirm was hurtful and tedious for these people, who partly by popular assemblies assembled by the respective Provisional Governments for this purpose, had most strongly expressed their wish to be firmly united and identified with the people that Providence had confided to our care.

And it was by this shown to us that we were bound to satisfy this their just and benevolent desire, which, whilst it tended to increase and strengthen, by means of a political bond, those mutual interests which could never be destroyed by a separation of sovereignty, led more effectually to the combination of the united forces for that chief and common object on which the whole nation is now intent.

Animated, therefore, by equal affection for our old and our new children, and in the trust of promoting as much as we can that advantage for Italy which is first in our thoughts, and, for this, convinced that either in this respect or by reason of the advantages which will accrue to the State, we do that which will satisfy Tuscany and the Chambers which will represent her ;

By the advice of our Council of State, having heard our Council of Ministers, we are determined to adhere to the wishes expressed for the annexation, as we do annex to the Grand Duchy the States of Massa and Carrara, and the territories of the Lunigiana and Garfagnana, ordering that, as soon as possible, the most convenient means may be proposed to us to introduce in them the laws and institutions, governmental and administrative, of the Grand Duchy, that the populations of the same may participate in all the rights that appertain to the Tuscans.

Desirous, however, that our adhesion, and therefore the annexation decreed by us, may not interpose any obstacle to the future fate of Italy, and that no event, however unforeseen, may prejudice the wish and the interests of those our most dear children, we declare from henceforward, that in the national arrangement which by this act we have desired to promote, and to which we profess to conform ourselves, whilst we shall support as far as in us lies this union equally advantageous for both parties who shall form it, we intend, should any contrary event whatever arise, that the people who are now to be annexed to us should preserve that natural liberty by which they may be able in any event to provide for themselves, and that no other disposition shall take place without their consent.

Les raisons qui ont porté Son Altesse Royale à prendre la dite détermination sont exposées dans cet acte, lequel fait aussi connaître sous quelles réserves elle a été prise, tant pour ce qui tient à l'intérêt général de l'indépendance Italienne, que pour ce qui concerne les peuples qui ont imploré l'agréation dont il s'agit.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge a note from your Excellency, dated the 16th instant, informing me of the motuproprio issued by the Tuscan Government, by which part of the territories of the Duke of Modena and the Duke of Parma have been recently annexed to this Grand Duchy.

As Great Britain was a principal party to the settlement of Europe under the Treaty of Vienna, of which arrangement the act of annexation to Tuscany of these territories is a very important modification, it does not become me, without instructions from my Government, to offer your Excellency any observations on the subject of your Excellency's note, further than my assurance that I shall lose no time in communicating to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs the copy of the note and of its inclosure which I have had the honour to receive from the Tuscan Government.

MY LORD,

Venice, May 17, 1848.

IN my despatch of the 28th ultimo I mentioned that it was in contemplation to impose a forced contribution upon the inhabitants of Venice in aid of the funds necessary to defray the expenses of the contest carrying on. I have now the honour to transmit to your Lordship a copy of the "Venice Gazette" of the 15th instant, containing a decree of the Provisional Government for a loan of 10,000,000 of Austrian livres (rather more than 300,000*l.*), to be raised in "the United Provinces of the Republic not occupied by the enemy," viz., the provinces of Venice, Padua, Vicenza, the Polesina, and Treviso, in the proportions therein stated. The sum to be thus raised is all to be paid up before the end of July next, and is to bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent., and departmental committees are to apportion the sums, in no case less than 2,000 livres for Venice, and 1,000 livres for other places, to be exacted from the several contributors according to their respective means. This loan is declared to be national, and to be guaranteed by the nation.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

MY LORD,

Vienna, May 22, 1848.

BARON LEBZELTERN gave me this morning the copy of a despatch addressed to Count Dietrichstein, which I have the honour to inclose for your Lordship according to the desire of the Council of Ministers, as expressed to me by the Baron. Your Lordship will see that the Imperial Government is in great alarm at the state of Trieste and the coast of Italy, exposed as they are, and at the mercy of the Neapolitan ships of war; and the Baron asked me if it might not be possible for me to obtain some protection from the English marine for Trieste, &c. I told him that it is out of my power to give any advice to our naval officers on this occasion, but that I knew information of the fact of the appearance of the Neapolitans had been sent to our Admiral.

I told the Baron that he might be certain of the warm desire felt by Her Majesty's Government to have the power of being useful to His Imperial Majesty; that your Lordship had long since exerted yourself to induce the Government of Sardinia to maintain the relations of peace with Austria; and that perhaps it was due to those efforts that when the King of Sardinia made war, that war was limited to land operations; without doubt you were under the influence of the same friendly feelings, and would willingly take any part in your power to be of service in the present difficulty.

I took occasion to point out to the Baron, that supposing it were in my power to induce the Admiral to take any step which could be considered an intervention with the Neapolitans, there would arise the danger that in consequence of that intervention, the French would interfere in Italy, and thereby complicate affairs so as to augment the obstacles to the conclusion of a peace there, or even perhaps to bring on a general war.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

M. LE COMTE,

Vienne, le 21 Mai, 1848.

UNE escadre Napolitaine, composée de 4 bâtiments-à-voiles, au nombre des quels se trouvent 2 frégates, de 5 grands bateaux-à-vapeur ayant à bord des canons de gros calibre, et de plusieurs bâtiments de moindre dimension, a mouillé dans le port de Malamocco, où elle s'est réunie à la flotille Vénétienne, après avoir débarqué à Ancone les troupes Napolitaines destinées à opérer contre l'armée Impériale dans le Royaume Lombard-Vénétien.

A l'approche des bâtimens Napolitains, notre escadre chargée de tenir le port de Venise en état de blocus, ne pouvant engager une lutte inégale avec des forces trop supérieures en nombre, a dû lever le blocus et se retirer dans le port de Pola.

Le Gouverneur de Trieste, voyant dès lors la ville et le commerce de Trieste exposés à un danger flagrant, à réclamé la protection du Capitaine Ramsay, commandant la frégate-à-vapeur Anglaise Terrible, mouillée dans le port de Trieste. Cet officier toutefois a déclaré que ses instructions lui enjoignaient de garder la plus stricte neutralité, et que sa mission devait se borner à protéger la vie et les propriétés des sujets Britanniques. M. le Comte de Salm lui ayant fait observer que les magasins de Trieste étaient encombrés de marchandises Anglaises; que les pyroscaphes du Lloyd transportaient souvent des sujets et des biens Anglais et même la malle Anglaise, et que, par conséquent, toute attaque contre la ville ou le commerce de Trieste ferait à la fois un grave préjudice au commerce Anglais, le Capitaine Ramsay a répliqué qu'il ne pouvait accorder sa protection qu'aux Anglais qui se rendraient à son bord.

Ne pouvant disposer de forces navales suffisantes pour repousser les attaques que pourrait tenter la flotte Napolitaine, la ville de Trieste et les côtes de l'Istrie sont peut-être à la veille de devenir victimes de la plus injuste des agressions.

Dans cette pénible circonstance il n'y a que la Grande Bretagne qui puisse nous tendre une main secourable. Nous espérons d'autant plus pouvoir compter sur ce que l'ancienne amitié de la Grande Bretagne ne nous fera point défaut dans cette complication, que nous avons fait naguères un appel à son intervention amicale, dans le but d'amener sur de larges bases la pacification de l'Italie. Rien ne saurait compromettre davantage le succès de cette entreprise, réclamée impérieusement dans l'intérêt général de l'Europe, que de nouveaux conflits dont les conséquences pourraient réagir d'une manière désastreuse sur notre situation intérieure.

L'avenir est menaçant : l'Allemagne s'agite : en France les partis sont aux prises, et de leur choc peut naître une explosion de nature à mettre en question la paix de l'Europe.

Dans un moment pareil, l'Angleterre peut elle voir avec indifférence son alliée la plus ancienne et la plus fidèle s'affaïsser sous le double poids d'agression extérieures qu'elle n'a point provoquées, et d'embarras intérieurs qui sont toujours inséparables d'une transformation politique telle que celle que subit en ce moment notre Empire ?

Il nous semble impossible qu'un pareil calcul puisse entrer dans les vues d'un Ministre Anglais. Nous espérons dès lors que le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique, tant par le langage qu'il fera tenir aux Cours Italiennes, que par les instructions qu'il fera parvenir à l'Amiral commandant les Forces Navales Anglaises dans la Méditerranée, saura empêcher que la lutte qui désole le Royaume Lombard-Vénitien, et dont nous appelons de tous nos vœux la prompte fin, ne s'étende pas à la mer et ne gagne pas des parages qui jusqu'ici ont été préservés des maux de la guerre.

Je prie votre Excellence de donner communication de cette dépêche à Lord Palmerston, et de me faire connaître au plus tôt l'accueil qu'elle rencontrera auprès de sa Seigneurie.

Recevez, &c.

MY LORD,

Vienna, May 22, 1848.

I INCLOSE copy of my letter to Mr. Vice-Consul Raven at Trieste, directing him that whenever he should be acquainted with the fact of an attack being about to be made by the combined squadrons Neapolitan and Sardinian, or by either of them, on Trieste, he should then go and inform the Commanders that in Trieste there is a great quantity of British property so placed in the port and elsewhere, as to be in great danger of being destroyed by an attack upon the town; and that whatever quantity of it should be destroyed by the attack, the British Government would demand indemnity for the loss sustained by British subjects.

I hope that your Lordship will not disapprove of what I have done.

SIR,

Vienna, May 22, 1848.

I HAVE received your letter of the 18th instant, in which you mention your fears that a large amount of English property may be endangered by an attack made upon Trieste by the Neapolitan squadron. I have therefore to direct you, in the event of an attack being about to be made by the Neapolitan squadron alone, or in conjunction with the Sardinian squadron, to take the earliest and most effectual measures for making known to the commander or commanders of the above-mentioned squadron, that there is a vast amount of British property in Trieste, situated in the docks and other parts of Trieste the most exposed to danger of destruction by an attack; and that if the attack by the squadron should take place and the British property be destroyed, Great Britain may demand indemnity for the losses sustained by her subjects, which losses will probably be immense; and you will declare in a formal and official manner, that you make the communication of these facts to them, the commanders, to the end that they may be forewarned of the consequences to which they may be exposed if an attack be made. You will also make a similar declaration that indemnity for the losses sustained by British shipping may be demanded from those who may occasion those losses.

(Inclosure 1.)—Government Proclamation respecting the Insurrection at Naples.

Naples, May 16, 1848.

AN act of flagrant illegality was committed in this capital on the night of the 14th and on the 15th of May, and for the purpose of exciting an unmerited distrust in the King's Government, barriers were erected in the public streets, with the criminal intention of producing a collision, disturbing public peace, and causing the effusion of the blood of the citizens.

Most sad was it to see that a part of that National Guard which had been organized for the safety and protection of families, not only took part in this unfortunate disorder, but itself began an attack upon the King's troops, who when they saw their comrades fall under the unexpected fire of fratricidal arms, were obliged to make use of the sacred privilege of defence, and moved by a just indignation, which it was not in the power of any to prevent, rushed forward to repress force by force.

After some hours of this dreadful conflict, the mass of those who were trying to overturn the State was definitely subdued and dispersed. Tranquillity is everywhere restored, and the most energetic means have been taken to find out the real origin of this criminal attempt, to discover the authors, subject them to the justice of the law, and lay the whole case before the public.

Let good citizens in the meantime know that strict vigilance will be used by Government, so that no similar disorder may take place in future, and that fresh obstacles may not be illegally opposed to the maintenance and full exercise of that liberty which has been solemnly established by the Constitution, and which His Majesty fully intends to protect in all its integrity.

The National Guard of the city of Naples, which has so ill responded to the confidence placed in it, has been already dissolved, to be again re-organized according to law. The Legislative Chambers whose meeting was yesterday prevented, will be convoked without delay by decree, for the purpose of supporting by their valuable concurrence the principles of order, legality, and general prosperity, which form the prominent object of the King's Government.

Let then the friends of order and liberty be assured that the Government will take all legal measures for the promotion of the country's good.

FERDINAND II, &c.

Naples, May 17, 1848.

It having appeared from authentic documents, that on the disastrous 15th of May those who had been elected members of the Chamber of Deputies met together in the character of an Assembly sole representative of the nation, and having elected a President, proceeded to deliberate and form a Committee of Public Safety, whose orders alone the National Guard was bound to obey;

Considering that as they had not yet taken the oath required by law, the power they assumed was the more arbitrary, unlawful, and subversive of every principle of order, inasmuch as it exceeded the privileges of a college purely elective;

Considering that such conduct was prompted solely by wicked designs, because the opinion of many honest Deputies was expressed to blame such conduct as absurd and illegal, although the voice of reason was drowned everywhere by clamour and by every kind of threat from those who had resolved to bring about a disastrous change in the State, and the disorders of a civil war;

Having considered Article LXIV of the Constitution;

On the proposition of our Minister Secretary of State of the Interior;

Having consulted the Council of our Ministers Secretaries of State;

We have resolved to decree and do decree as follows:

ART. I. The Chamber of Deputies which was convoked for the 15th of May is dissolved.

II. Our Minister Secretary of State of the Interior shall present as soon as possible for our approbation a decree convoking the electoral colleges to proceed to new elections.

III. Our Minister Secretary of State of the Interior is charged with the execution of the present decree.

No. 403.—Lord Napier to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received May 30.)

MY LORD,

Naples, May 18, 1848.

I HAD the honour to address to your Lordship on the 16th instant a hasty narrative of the events of the preceding day. I am now enabled to lay before your Lordship some additional details, and correct some errors inseparable from the first account of a convulsion so violent and unforeseen.

The Deputies carried on during the evening and night of the 14th instant a correspondence with the President of the Council and the Palace, relative to the form of the oath to be taken on the ensuing morning.

It was agreed on both sides that the positive oath contemplated by the printed programme should be abandoned, and one of a conditional nature substituted in its place. The King seems to have contended for the single expression "svolgere" (develope); the Deputies insisted on the addition of the words "modify" and "reform."

Before 6 in the morning His Majesty, however, sanctioned a form which I have the honour to inclose. It runs thus:—"I promise and swear to be faithful to the Constitution as it shall be developed and modified by the 2 Chambers, together with the King."

According to the assurance of one of the Deputies who was present during the night, and, after a short repose, during the whole of the next day, and who having refrained from taking an active part in the proceedings, was the better capable of observing and remembering every occurrence, the assembled Deputies, after some discussion, were satisfied with His Majesty's offer, and sent a deputation to the house of the President, adjoining the Palace, to concert measures for the composure of the tumult, the removal of all impediments, and the performance of the projected ceremony. They dispatched at the same time 10 members of their number to the principal streets, urging the National Guards to disperse the crowd, to remove the barricades, and abstain from all acts of hostility or resistance to the royal authority. This was about 6 o'clock. The envoys of the Deputies met, however, with indignity and denial; the barricades were no longer in the power of those who had raised them. Many of the National Guards had withdrawn, and the minority who remained were intoxicated with excitement and enthusiasm, and overruled by the Calabrese and foreign emissaries who held the most desperate designs. The deputation to the house of the President never returned to the Assembly of Deputies. The envoys of peace and reconciliation to the insurrection went back defeated.

The Deputies continued together at the house of the Municipality, to the number of about 80, deliberating on various propositions, receiving and dispatching messages to their partisans without.

About 3 o'clock, the Deputies, according to my informant, who was present to the last, appointed a "Committee for the Safety of the Preparatory Assembly of Deputies" (Comitato di Sicurezza dell' Assemblea Preparatoria dei Deputati), a title which has given occasion to assert that the Deputies formed "a Committee of Public Safety," and constituted themselves a Provisional Government. My informant, however, has assured me positively that the members by a fair majority never sanctioned any resolution of an anti-constitutional kind, nor pretended to erect a separate power, or to subvert the King's prerogative.

When at 7 o'clock in the evening the Swiss troops reached the Town House, there were still about 70 Deputies assembled, none of whom were arrested, but all were directed to retire.

HAVING seen the programme for the inauguration and opening of the Parliament to take effect on the 15th day of May instant;

Considering that unforeseen circumstances will not allow the ceremony of the said inauguration to be observed;

Having heard the Council of Ministers;

We have resolved to decree, and do decree as follows:

ART. I. The opening of the united Chambers and the reading of the address by the Crown shall take place this day at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, in the hall appointed for the Deputies in the building of the Royal University degli Studi.

II. The oath prescribed in Articles XII and XIII of the Programme shall not be administered.

III. The Chambers shall begin by verifying their powers, after which verification the Deputies and Peers shall take oath according to the form following:

"I, N. N., promise and swear before God fidelity to the Constitutional King Ferdinand the Second.

"I promise and swear to fulfil the duties entrusted to me with the greatest zeal and with the utmost fidelity and honour.

"I promise and swear to be faithful to the Constitution, as the same shall be developed and modified by the 2 Chambers in accordance with the King, especially with relation to the Chamber of Peers, as is stated in Article V of the Programme of April 3.

"Thus I swear, so help me God."

No. 405.—The Hon. R. Abercromby to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received May 30.)

(Extract.)

Turin, May 24, 1848.

SINCE the receipt of your Lordship's despatches by the messenger Robbins, I have seen the Marquis Pareto.

My interview with the Sardinian Minister for Foreign Affairs took place the day on which the news of the conflict at Naples between the King's troops and the National Guard arrived at Turin.

Our conversation naturally turned in the first instance to these deplorable events, the details of which were then, and indeed are even now but imperfectly known here; but I found that the reports received by the Marquis Pareto coincided in the main with those which I had been enabled to forward to your Lordship in my despatch of the 21st instant.

As soon as we had finished discussing the Neapolitan news I directed the conversation to the main object of my visit.

I stated to the Marquis Pareto the pleasure I had derived from hearing the declaration he had made a few days before in the Chamber of Deputies, to the effect that the Sardinian Government admitted the possibility of negotiation for the purpose of obtaining the object for which the war with Austria had been undertaken, namely, the evacuation of the Italian provinces by the forces of Austria; that observing this favourable disposition on the part of the Sardinian Government, I had been induced to speak to him on the subject of the great importance for the peace of Europe, for the independence of Italy, and for the welfare of the Italian cause in general, that the possibility of a French armed intervention should be avoided; that to secure this object, it should be the endeavour of all parties concerned in the preservation of the tranquillity of Europe, to remove every ground for such an intervention; and that the best and surest means of arriving at such a point would unquestionably be the termination of the contest now going on in Lombardy.

I observed to the Marquis Pareto that to obtain the object of the war by peaceable means instead of by force of arms, would not diminish the merit of the Italian movement for independence, and that in adopting this course there would be the positive benefit that, besides arresting the further effusion of blood, and stopping a heavy expenditure of money, the various chances and uncertainties of war would be avoided.

I stated to him that it seemed to me individually, that there would be much advantage in His Sardinian Majesty being in a position to be the contracting party in behalf of the north of Italy, instead of leaving the negotiation in the hands of the Provisional Government of Milan, and therefore that as the junction of Lombardy and of the Venetian States to Piedmont might now be expected to be declared in the space of a very few days, it might not be inexpedient to delay until then attempting an amicable arrangement of the differences with Austria; but I added that I could not sufficiently urge upon him the necessity of not delaying even until the decision of the Lombardo-Venetian States shall have been declared, the consideration and settlement of the terms upon which an accommodation with Austria might be effected; and that he should thus be prepared to take advantage of the first favourable opportunity that might offer for terminating a contest which, if prolonged, endangered the future tranquillity of Europe.

I told the Marquis Pareto that I hoped I need not, notwithstanding the animosity displayed in several of the public journals against England, which I had of late regretted to remark, assure him that Great Britain entertained but one wish with regard to Italy; namely, her prosperity and welfare, and that of Sardinia in particular; that although speaking to him on that occasion my own and not an official opinion, I firmly believed that Her Majesty's Government would willingly lend their assistance to advance any reasonable and practicable plan for a settlement of the affairs of Italy, but that to make this possible, the Sardinian Government must in the first place treat England with frankness and confidence.

I expressed to the Marquis Pareto my willingness to convey to your Lordship, for your information, the terms upon which the Sardinian Government would be ready to treat for a settlement with Austria of the Italian question, should he be disposed to act upon my present suggestion; and I pointed out to him that although I had no instructions authorizing me to offer to him any direct intervention on the part of Her Majesty's Government, still he must perceive that the knowledge that your Lordship would thus have obtained of the views of the Sardinian Government with reference to this question, might greatly assist your Lordship in the language you might deem it right to hold to the Austrian Government through Her Majesty's Ambassador at Vienna.

The Marquis Pareto listened to my observations with much attention.

He quite agreed that no objection existed to terminating by negotiation the present contest in Lombardy, if the objects of the war could be so obtained; but he distinctly stated that the immediate and entire evacuation of Italy by Austrian troops must be the leading feature in any negotiation that might be commenced.

The Marquis was extremely explicit in all that he said to me with regard to a French armed intervention. He at once admitted that such an event would not only be fatal to the cause of Italy; and he likewise agreed that the passage of the Alps by a French army would be the signal for a general war in Europe.

In reply to the observations I had made to him with regard to the distrust which I had remarked of late in Italy of the opinions of Her Majesty's Government, and of the policy which Great Britain was supposed to be following with reference to the affairs of this peninsula, he assured me that he in no way participated in those ideas, and that he placed the same reliance in the continued sympathy and friendship of Great Britain towards this country that he had always done.

No. 407.—Vice-Consul Campbell to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received May 31.)

MY LORD,

Milan, May 24, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that a deputation from the Provisional Government here, consisting of M. Beretta, Borromeo, Guerrieri, and Strigelli, proceeded to the head-quarters of His Majesty the King of Sardinia at Somma Campagna, and on the 19th instant presented an address to him, but it was only published in the official Gazette of the 23rd instant, which is usually given out late at night. Without troubling your Lordship with the translation of the whole address, which is rather long, I shall give merely the most essential parts of it. It sets forth:

“ That the unfortunate turn of the war in the Venetian States has thrown the people of Lombardy into a painful state of anxiety, and that the feeling of fraternity which binds the Venetians to the Lombards would be deeply wounded, were this noble part of Italy to fall again under the foreign yoke.

“ That they do not presume to judge of the military operations in the Venetian territory, or of the conduct of the generals directing them; still the welfare of the common cause, His Majesty's own glory, require that they should not remain silent when the increasing occupation of a great part of that territory by the Austrians is a fact which disquiets all Lombardy.

“ That they have laboured to bring about the unity of Lombardy and Piedmont, in order that the war might be carried on with greater assiduity and efficacy, in order to ensure the liberation of the Venetian States, so necessary to the independence of Italy.

“ That the Lombards have generously answered the call of the Provisional Government, in showing, by an overwhelming majority of votes, their earnest wish that such an union should take place immediately.

“ That they are convinced His Majesty the King's firm intention is not to lay down his arms till the stranger is driven beyond the Alps, and entreat him to reassure the people of Lombardy of this his intention.

“ That they beg His Majesty to declare himself to this effect, and that whatever sacrifice he may require from Lombardy in men and money shall be freely granted ; as no sacrifices are too great to ensure the liberation of their brethren and the independence of Italy.”

His Majesty in reply declared the war, at the head of which he had put himself, to be Italian, and which he could not call finished until every part of the Italian territory was evacuated by the enemy ; confirmed his former pledge not to lay down his arms until the Austrians are driven beyond the Alps ; showed the greatest concern at the unfortunate state of affairs on the Venetian territory ; and expressed his conviction that, when Verona is conquered, Venice would be free. In that quarter, he said, the greatest efforts are required, and to that quarter he will direct them ; and ended by assuring the deputation of his deliberate intention to spare no means that this great “ Italie ” war might be brought to a speedy conclusion.

ON arriving on the bank of the Adige, our sympathies and our thoughts were turned to you, people of Venice, to you all of whom we comprised on the breaking out of the war in the expressions we were inspired with, by the condition of the Venetian Provinces, which are gradually freeing themselves from foreign oppression.

We have taken up arms to ensure the independence of Italy. God has hitherto blessed the holy enterprise; but to complete it, confidence and firmness are required in all those who take a share in it. Determined as our intention is to bring the enterprise to the happy conclusion of which we have undertaken the high mission, we have every confidence that you will second our views and endeavours in this great work. Our whole aim is the liberation of our common country from the foreign yoke.

Such is the view of all Italy, such is the necessity of the times, such is the high duty which we have resolved to fulfil.

Let your confidence then respond to mine, and the cause for which we fight will be crowned by a complete victory.

Given at our head-quarters-general, at Somma Compagna, the 23rd May, 1848.

HER Majesty's Government having received information that it is the intention of the combined Sardinian and Neapolitan squadron to go to Trieste, I have to instruct you to express to the Sardinian Government the hope of Her Majesty's Government, that any operations which this combined squadron may be ordered to undertake will be confined to the sea, and that no bombardment or cannonade of Trieste will take place; for that town contains a great quantity of British property which would, of course, be destroyed by such an attack, and thus British interests would suffer severely by such an operation, and feelings hostile to the Italians, and especially to the Sardinian Government, would be excited in the public in this country, not to mention claims to which losses so occasioned might give rise.

LETTERS received here this morning by a commercial house contain the following information:

Trieste, 23rd May.—The Austrian fleet has returned to this port, and has taken up its position in the form of a crescent before the town.

The combined Neapolitan and Sardinian fleet, consisting of 28 sail, is now outside the port of Trieste.

The immediate surrender of the Austrian fleet is demanded by the enemy, a stipulation to that effect being contained, it is said, in the capitulation made by General Zichy at Venice. All the foreign Consuls met on board Her Majesty's steam-vessel Terrible, and drew up a protest against the bombardment of Trieste. That town is quiet, and the inhabitants, troops, and national guards are all animated by the best spirit.

The return of the Austrian fleet to Trieste is regarded as a fatal error.

Venice, May 25, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Lordship a copy of a note which I addressed, on the 20th instant, to Signor Manin, the President of the Provisional Government, calling his attention to the situation of 2 individuals, Marshal Bianchi, and the daughter of General Nugent, Austrian subjects, detained as hostages in the town of Treviso.

Both these persons were arrested some time ago: Marshal Bianchi, who has long retired from the service, while living on his property near Treviso; the daughter of General Nugent, whose husband is in the Austrian army, while on her way with her child into Germany.

The fate of the 3 individuals massacred by the populace of Treviso, as reported to your Lordship in my despatch of the 17th instant, and the threats which were known to have been uttered of an intention to put to death General Nugent's daughter, in the event of the General persisting in the attempt to take Treviso, made me consider it my duty to address this note to Signor Manin, in the spirit of your Lordship's instructions of the 5th ultimo.

I inclose a copy of a translation of the answer which I have received from Signor Manin and the Provisional Government.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

(Inclosure 1.)—Consul-General Dawkins to Signor Manin.

SIR,

Venice, May 20, 1848.

It is with unfeigned regret that I have read in the "Gazette of Venice," published yesterday evening, a gazette purporting to be the official organ of the Venetian Republic, the bulletin of the war, dated Treviso, the 18th May, and signed Manaresi, sub-lieutenant director of the official bulletin, in which the following paragraph occurs: "Noi teniamo in ostaggio il vecchio Maresciallo Bianchi, e la figlia del Generale Nugent."

I have read this paragraph, Sir, not only with a feeling of regret, but with a feeling of horror, in consequence of the atrocity committed a few days ago at Treviso, upon the persons of 3 prisoners, who were cruelly and barbarously murdered at that place by the populace, for no other reason, as it seems, than because they had formerly served an Austrian Prince; and, incredible as it appears, this proceeding is described in a letter quoted in a newspaper of Lombardy as a deserved punishment.

Looking, then, to the fate of the 3 individuals above-mentioned, and considering the spirit in which their treatment appears to be regarded, I hasten, Sir, to bring under your notice the situation of Marshal Bianchi, and that of the daughter of General Nugent, and I have the honour to inform you that I have received instructions from the Government of the Queen my Sovereign, desiring me to represent to the authorities established in Venice the great injury that must accrue to their cause, and to the character of their country, by acting cruelly, or even harshly, towards any Austrian subjects who, in the performance of their duty towards their own Sovereign, might fall into the hands of the Venetians; and I am desired still more strongly to point out that in all wars the utmost possible respect is shown, and the greatest protection is afforded, to women and children whom the chances of events may place within the power of the enemies of their husbands, fathers, brothers, or sons.

I am instructed, Sir, to add, that Her Britannic Majesty's Government cannot believe that the Venetians will show themselves in this or in any other respect less generous than the people of other countries in Europe are accustomed to be; and I cannot for a moment doubt, Sir, that you will at once do full justice to the spirit of these observations, and that you will lose no time in causing such orders to be given as shall immediately provide at least for the removal of the persons I have mentioned, as well as of any others who may be similarly situated, from a place where there is too much reason to fear their lives cannot be considered in safety, and thereby prevent the possibility of the reproach being cast upon Venice of acting in a manner unworthy of a civilized nation.

I have, &c.

Signor Manin.

(Translation.)

Venice, May 20, 1848.

You must be fully persuaded, Sir, that we participate in the sentiments of humanity expressed in your letter, and we think that during the brief period of the existence of our authority we have given proofs, not only of respect, but also of generosity, towards an enemy from whom we have received so much harm, and whose cruelties daily increase.

The atrocities committed by him in the Friuli and the province of Treviso, and particularly on the persons of the aged, of women, and children, will not, however, justify our acting in a similar manner. And we trust, Sir, that as you have expressed your horror and regret for the fate of the 3 prisoners at Treviso, in like manner all the representatives of the Powers of Europe, and their Governments likewise, but especially the British Government, will give expression to the feeling of indignation which must be excited in every honest mind at the barbarous warfare carried on by Austria, contrary to every usage among civilized people.

With respect to Marshal Bianchi, and the daughter of General Nugent, more effective measures to ensure their personal safety shall be taken.

Had it been possible to ascertain who were the individuals among the excited populace who committed the murders on the persons of the 3 prisoners (not merely guilty, as you, Sir, state, of serving Austria, but being the bearers of letters from the enemy with no other duty but that arising from a wish to favour the enemy, to the detriment of their country), they would have met with the merited punishment at the hands of the military authorities under whose jurisdiction the town of Treviso is solely at present.

We thank you, Sir, for your humanity, and beg you to extend its influence to all Italian families afflicted and destroyed by an unjust war.

By the Provisional Government of the Venetian Republic.

No. 424.—The Secretary to the Admiralty to Lord Eddisbury.

MY LORD,

Admiralty, June 2, 1848.

I AM commanded by my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to send your Lordship herewith, for the information of Viscount Palmerston, a copy of a letter dated the 23rd May, from Captain Ramsay, of Her Majesty's steam-vessel Terrible, requesting instructions as to the line of conduct he should pursue in the event of an attack being made on Trieste by the combined Sardinian, Neapolitan, and Venetian squadrons, without sufficient time being allowed for the removal of British property ; also a copy of their Lordships' letter in reply to Captain Ramsay dated this day.

I am, &c.

Lord Eddisbury.

H. G. WARD.

(Inclosure 1.)—Captain Ramsay to the Secretary to the Admiralty.

SIR,

Terrible, Trieste, May 23, 1848.

I HAVE to inform you that the following squadron, namely, 5 frigates, 2 corvettes, 6 brigs, 1 schooner, and 5 steam-vessels of war, Sardinian, Neapolitan, and Venetian, are now off Trieste, apparently with the intention of attacking this town. The Austrian squadron took refuge here during last night and this morning. Preparations are being made here for resistance.

This morning I was joined by Her Majesty's ship Spartan and sloop Harlequin.

I have sent a letter to the Admiral commanding the foreign squadron, asking his intentions.

As the answer is hostile to Trieste, an important question arises: What time will be given to remove British shipping and property ; and if there is not sufficient time, am I justified in using force to resist the attack ?

I have, &c.

The Secretary to the Admiralty.

WM. RAMSAY.

SIR,

Admiralty, June 2, 1848.

IN return to your letter of the 23rd May, requesting to be informed as to the line of conduct you should pursue in the apprehended attack on Trieste, I am commanded by my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to acquaint you that the case upon which you have consulted their Lordships is one with regard to which every naval officer must exercise his own discretion, when it actually occurs ; but that, assuming a sufficient time to be allowed for the removal of British property, my Lords cannot conceive the likelihood of anything occurring at Trieste to require a forcible interference of any kind on the part of one of Her Majesty's ships of war.

I am, &c.

Captain Ramsay.

H. G. WARD.

No. 425.—Viscount Palmerston to Baron Hummelauer.

SIR,

Foreign Office, June 3, 1848.

I HAVE not failed to make known to my colleagues and to Her Majesty the written and verbal communications which you have made to me upon the affairs of Italy, and the desire which, on the part of the Austrian Government, you have expressed that the British Government should endeavour, by the employment of its good offices to effect an amicable settlement of the conflict now going on in the North of Italy.

I beg to assure you that the Cabinet of Vienna have not misjudged the sentiments of Her Majesty's Government in believing that it would afford Her Majesty's Government the sincerest pleasure to be able to be useful in these matters to His Imperial Majesty, and to have an opportunity of proving the great interest which they take in the well-being of the Austrian Empire, and the high value which they set upon the alliance which has so long, and so honourably to both parties, united the Imperial and British Crowns.

Her Majesty's Government will therefore cheerfully undertake the office which you have been instructed to propose to them, and will gladly exert their utmost endeavours to bring about by negotiation an amicable settlement of the conflict between Austria and her revolted provinces in Italy.

But before Her Majesty's Government can take steps in this matter, it is necessary that they should come to an understanding with the Austrian Government as to the basis upon which such a settlement could be made.

In considering this point there are two considerations which require to be well weighed and examined; the first is, what arrangement would, in the present state of things, be best for the true interests of Austria; and the second is what, in the present state of things, may be looked upon as practically attainable.

At first sight it might appear that it would be best for the interests of Austria that she should recover the whole of her Italian provinces; but even if this could by any possible means, either of compulsion or persuasion, be effected, well-founded doubts might be entertained whether such an arrangement would contribute to the real power and strength of the Austrian Empire. The spirit of separate nationality has become so universal and so strong among the Italians, that to keep those provinces in subjection would require on the part of Austria an employment of military force and an expenditure of money for which any advantages of any kind to be derived from the occupation of those provinces would afford an inadequate compensation. It is indeed understood that an opinion of this kind with regard to Lombardy was entertained by the Austrian Government itself at the Congress of Vienna; and that it was against his own inclination that the late Emperor was induced to include Lombardy in the Imperial dominions.

But it appears from the communications which you have made to me, that although the Austrian Government would be willing to treat for an arrangement by which Lombardy should be set free to dispose of itself as it might choose, provided it took upon itself a fair proportion of the aggregate debt of the empire of which it has formed a part, yet the Austrian Government wishes to propose an arrangement by which the Venetian province will still continue to hold a modified connection with the Imperial Crown.

If such an arrangement were practicable, it might in many respects be advantageous not only to Austria, but even to the Venetian Province itself. But Her Majesty's Government fear that, however reasonable such a proposal may be in itself, and however calculated to have been acceptable to the Venetians, if it had been proposed to them some months ago, things have now gone too far to allow of there being any probability that such an arrangement would be accepted by the Venetians, or could be brought about by any means except absolute military conquest.

Her Majesty's Government therefore would be unwilling to enter upon a negotiation which, in their opinion, offered no prospects of success; and to make a proposal which they feel confident, beforehand, that one of the parties would positively refuse to accept.

It is for the Austrian Government to consider what the chances may be that a prolongation of the war would lead to the permanent re-conquest and to the secure and useful retention of the Venetian province. Upon this matter it would be presumptuous for Her Majesty's Government to offer an opinion; but they are convinced that, in calculating the chances of future events, the Cabinet of Vienna will not cast out of the account the number and the nature of the forces of all kinds which might eventually be brought to bear upon the Austrian troops, and the difficulty of converting again into submissive subjects a population which would have been almost universally engaged in hostilities against the Austrian arms.

If then, upon a full consideration of all the circumstances of the present case, the Austrian Government should feel disposed not to withhold its assent to an arrangement which, being framed upon the principles stated in your memorandum of the 24th ultimo, with reference to Lombardy, should include also such portions of the Venetian territory as may be agreed upon between the respective parties, Her Majesty's Government would lose no time in setting on foot a negotiation founded upon such a basis.

I am, &c.

Baron Hummelauer.

PALMERSTON.

No. 426.—The Hon. R. Abercromby to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received June 3.)

MY LORD,

Turin, May 29, 1848.

No further accounts of the operations of the Italian naval squadron in front of Trieste have been received at Turin since those of Saturday last, to the effect that the Austrian naval squadron had been chased by the united naval squadrons of Sardinia and Naples, from Pola to Trieste, and that the commanders of the united Italian squadrons had summoned the commander of the Austrian ships of war to surrender, allowing him 24 hours to return an answer.

The Austrian frigate Bellona, forming part of the Austrian naval squadron, having fired some shots at the town and fort of Chioggia, and the Austrian naval squadron having exercised belligerent rights in declaring Venice in a state of blockade, the Sardinian Government have, in some degree, altered their line of policy in regard to the conduct of the naval portion of the war, as announced in the Marquis Pareto's note to me of the 29th March, and the commanding officer of the Sardinian squadron has now received orders, if possible, to capture the Austrian squadron.

In reply, however, to my question—whether any change had been made in the orders of the Sardinian naval officers with regard to the mercantile marine of Austria, the Marquis Pareto this morning at once informed me that the dispositions announced in his above-mentioned note to me, with reference to merchant-vessels sailing under the Austrian flag, remained exactly as they were, and that no impediment would be offered by Sardinian vessels of war to the free navigation of Austrian merchant-ships.

I took occasion, in the course of my interview this morning with the Marquis Pareto, to ask him what degree of truth there was in the report of the Sardinian naval commander off Trieste having threatened to bombard the town unless the Austrian squadron was surrendered to him; and I observed to the Marquis that a measure of this nature was a most questionable one, as it might afford a pretext for the armed interference of the German Confederation in the question of the Italian War of Independence.

It was, however, with much pleasure that I received from the Marquis Pareto positive assurances that no intention to bombard the town of Trieste existed, nor had any orders been given for such a measure, the Sardinian Government having been fully alive to the difficulties and complications to which an event of such a nature might very possibly give rise.

No. 427.—Vice-Consul Campbell to Visc^t. Palmerston.—(Rec. June 4.)

MY LORD,

Milan, May 28, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that this day, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, the people of Milan in great numbers, and bodies of the national guard in uniform with their colours flying but without their arms, met together in the Piazza San Fedele, and demanded the following guarantees from the Provisional Government:

1. The indissolubility of the national guard as it is now established.

2. The right of association.

3. The liberty of the Press.

4. The Constituent Assembly.

The President as the organ of the Provisional Government, declared that all the rights of freedom should be inviolate; but the people insisting on a more decided answer he came forward and repeatedly addressed them. These addresses were interrupted sometimes by applause, sometimes by signs of disapprobation. The President, on finding the multitude did not stir from the Piazza, and were becoming more and more impatient, promised them at last that to-morrow the 4 above-mentioned Articles should be embodied in a decree. On this being announced they all dispersed quietly, the national guard marching off in military order.

MY LORD,

Milan, May 29, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that, in consequence of the demonstration that took place yesterday in the Piazza San Fedele, and agreeably to the promise of the President of the Provisional Government (as stated in my despatch of yesterday), a decree was issued this morning to the following effect :

“The people of Lombardy enjoy at present :

“1. The liberty of the press ;

“2. The right of association ;

“3. The national guard.

“The people of Lombardy shall preserve these privileges in their actual extent and form until the Constituent Assembly regulates the political condition of the people.

“The law by which the Constituent Assembly is to be convoked, shall be on the basis of universal suffrage.

“The Provisional Government of Lombardy places these its declarations under the safeguard of the honour of the country and of the patriotism of the national guard.”

ROBERT CAMPBELL.

No. 429.—Vice-Consul Campbell to Visc^t. Palmerston.—(Rec. June 4.)

MY LORD,

Milan, May 30, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to submit to your Lordship a statement of events that took place during the afternoon and the night of yesterday. My despatches of the 28th and 29th instant will have made your Lordship aware of what had occurred between the Provisional Government and the people on the 28th up to noon of the 29th, the time I usually post my letters.

Between 11 and 12 o'clock small groups of people began to assemble in the Piazza S. Fedele, which at noon amounted to about 3,000, and which never exceeded that number. They called on the President to present himself to them, but he did not comply with their request. On which a party of the people, headed by a man named Urbino, rushed up stairs into the Marino Palace, invading the rooms occupied by the Provisional Government. The people who accompanied him seemed to have been led there more by curiosity than by a feeling of hostility to the Government. Among them were many of the populace, and several young men of a respectable condition of life. Urbino attempted to possess himself of the President's insignia of office, but was prevented by some members of the Provisional Government then present. Urbino then proceeded to the balcony of the Marino Palace overlooking the Piazza S. Fedele, and bawled out, "The Provisional Government is dissolved." He then pulled out a paper containing the names of a new Provisional Government, which he attempted to read to the people underneath; but a bystander snatched it from him and tore it. The people who followed him into the apartments did not offer the slightest violence to the members there assembled, or attempt to injure or carry away anything. Some few of the young men used vehement language in the name of the sovereign people, but so wild and incoherent, that although the members of the Government were inclined to listen to them, no sense could be made out of what they meant. The common people of the party in the meantime sauntered about the rooms, or looked out of the windows, while a number of students, who happened to be in the Marino Palace at the time on business relating to the regiment that had lately been formed of them, surrounded the tables and prevented any of the papers lying there from being touched. Urbino, after remaining in the Marino Palace for half an hour, came down into the square with his followers, and called out to the people, "The Provisional Government has resigned!" Cries of "No! no!" resounded from all quarters, with "Viva Casati! Viva il Governo Provvisorio!" The President then appeared on the balcony with his badge of office, when he was received with loud cheers. He addressed them in a firm and decided manner, saying that if any class of people had cause of complaint against the Government, they should send a deputation with whom they might consult; that it was impossible to confer from a balcony on grave political matters, nor was it decorous that he should be called upon to do so.

This determined tone exasperated the leaders of the movement, which, besides Urbino, consisted of 2 other persons, named Brescianino and Romani, who called out, "Abasso il Governo Provvisorio!" and inveighed strongly against all the measures of the Government. The greater part of the people who, as was before stated, never amounted altogether to more than about 3,000, attempted to seize them. They fled. Brescianino, who is also said to have laid violent hands on the President, was taken in the vicinity of the Piazza, in Contrado S. Vittore e S. Martin. Urbino was arrested about 8 o'clock in the evening. Romani is still at large. I should mention that Urbino is a Genoese, only lately returned to Italy, from which he has been absent for 20 years. He is by profession an advocate. Brescianino is a native of Mantua, an unlicensed lawyer, commonly termed at the tribunal "Faccendiere" or "Imbroglione." Romani, who too is a native of Mantua, has been from his earliest years a comedian, a theatrical correspondent, and what is called here, a "sensale di virtuosi" (agent for dancers and singers). The universal opinion is, that these men are in the pay of the Austrians. When the news became generally known throughout the city of the disgraceful scene that had occurred at the Provisional Government, meetings of the national guards were held in all the different parishes, who having arranged that a body from each parish should proceed to the Piazza S. Fedele, and testify their disapproval of the insult offered to the Government and to themselves by an insignificant number of the people, led on by a few adventurers, went in military order, with their colours flying, but without arms, accompanied by the archbishop and the higher clergy, to the Piazza S. Fedele. On their arriving there enthusiastic cheers burst out on all sides, with cries of "Viva il Governo Provvisorio! Viva Casati!" The President came forward, and addressing the national guard, said, "The liberties you have acquired by your courage, shall be handed down to you unimpaired. Continue to confide in us as you do at this moment. Our endeavours are all directed to the common good; and should we fall short of your expectation, you must assist us and defend us." After this the national guard marched off to their different guard-houses, where they were dismissed. During the night the town was illuminated, and the greatest joy, combined with the most orderly conduct, pervaded all classes.

I have the honour to inclose the translation of an order of the day from the Provisional Government to the national guard, which has just been issued. I must here mention that at an early hour yesterday, the anniversary of the battle of Legnano, at which the Germans under the Emperor Federico Barbarossa were defeated and driven out of Lombardy, in the year 1167, was celebrated in the ancient metropolitan church of S. Ambrogio. The Provisional Government, the national guard, and deputations from the different institutions in Milan, were present at the ceremony.

(Translation.)

Milan, May 29, 1848.

CITIZENS of the national guard, you have saved the country, you have vindicated the sovereignty of the people from the outrages of a few evil-designed persons, who wished to render it a slave to anarchy. A day which commenced so dark and threatening, finished in one of those patriotic festivals which is enough for the glory of a people, and places their character in its true light. You showed yourselves this morning to be inspired with holy sentiments at the sublime recollections of the battle of Legnano, of which you celebrated the anniversary with such touching solemnity.

This day completes the days of March, once more you have conquered the Austrian, once more you have expelled him from your glorious walls.

Those few misled and unprincipled men, who imagined to make this heroic city the seat of insane and guilty riots, will no more dare to abuse the holy name of the people. You have shown who and where the people are.

The Government thanks you in the name of our common country, Italy. It does not renew to you the promise that your institutions shall be preserved in all their integrity. You have openly demonstrated that it would be a thing, not only stupid but impossible, any attempt to alter or suppress them. The 29th of May seals the inviolability of your right.

MY LORD,

Trieste, May 27, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inclose your Exceellency copies of the various communications made from this city to the combined Sardinian and other squadrons of this port. I have not a copy of the communication made by Captain Ramsay, of Her Majesty's ship Terrible; neither have I a copy of one made exclusively by the French Consul, on behalf of that nation, on the 24th instant. The French steamer Asmodée arrived in this port on the 25th instant, from Venice.

The combined Sardinian squadron was in sight this morning at 8 o'clock, and is approaching this port. From the appearance of the same, it is supposed to consist of Sardinian and Venetian vessels only, no Neapolitan colours being visible; and the reduced number leads us to believe this to be the case.

to their different nations were concerned, "what were the intentions of the squadron at present off this port." Would you inform these gentlemen of my proceeding which I had taken before receiving their application? Would you also state to them, that although there will be no interference on my part in the political questions now pending, I shall always be most happy to use my best endeavours for the preservation of the different individual interests of the nations that these gentlemen represent, being fully convinced that any officer of those different nations, placed as I am now, would do the same for British subjects; I need hardly add that the truth of the latter remark has been verified more than once within the last few years.

M. L'AMIRAL, Trieste, le 24 Mai, 1848.

AYANT eu connaissance de la communication que vous avez faite hier au commandant de la frégate-à-vapeur de Sa Majesté Britannique Le Terrible, les Soussignés, Consuls-Généraux, Consuls, et Agents Consulaires, trouvent de leur devoir de vous présenter les observations suivantes.

Vous déclarez, M. l'Amiral, que les forces navales sous vos ordres ne se trouvent dans ces eaux que seulement pour la défense de votre commerce.

Mais le commerce de toutes les nations a jusqu'à ce jour joui à Trieste d'une liberté et d'une protection parfaite qui n'a été troublée ni pour les personnes ni pour les propriétés, et nous en avons vu jouir au milieu de nous jusque aujourd'hui les sujets de Sa Majesté Sarde et de Sa Majesté Napolitaine et leurs navires.

Pour ce qui regarde le commerce des sujets Sardes en particulier, il est garanti par la déclaration de Sa Majesté le Roi Charles Albert publiée ici le 8 Avril dernier par son Consulat, à laquelle répondit une contre-déclaration de Sa Majesté l'Empereur d'Autriche dans le même sens satisfaisant. Cet état heureux de tranquillité se trouve au contraire gravement compromis, M. l'Amiral, par l'attitude que les forces navales sous vos ordres ont prise devant ce port, et la promesse verbale que vous avez faite à M. le Commandant du Terrible de n'entreprendre aucune mesure hostile contre la ville sans en donner un avis préalable, ne suffit pas pour rassurer le commerce.

Considérant l'importance des intérêts divers que nous sommes appelés à protéger, nous ne pouvons nous dispenser de vous demander une manifestation rassurante plus explicite. Trieste est port franc et presque toutes les nations y ont des intérêts majeurs; si des faits hostiles venaient à compromettre le port et la ville, les conséquences en seraient incalculables, et au nom des Puissances que nous représentons, nous protestons, dès-à-présent de la manière la plus solennelle contre toutes les suites funestes qui pourraient en résulter aux intérêts que nous sommes en devoir de protéger en vous tenant responsable, M. l'Amiral, et les Gouvernemens auxquels appartiennent les forces navales sous vos ordres, de tous les dommages et préjudices qui seraient causés à ces intérêts.

No. 432.—Sir G. Hamilton to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. June 5.)
 MY LORD, Florence, May 29, 1848.

I REGRET to have to inform your Lordship that Florence was the scene of a disgraceful outrage on Friday evening. The Neapolitan General Statella arrived about 4 o'clock charged with verbal explanation for the Neapolitan Government from General Pepe, probably to the effect that if he obeyed the King's orders and marched his troops through Romagna from the scene of war, that they would be cut off in detail by the enraged inhabitants of the countries through which they must pass.

The population of Florence who only saw in the return of General Statella to Naples, an officer who had deserted the Italian cause, and also obeyed the orders of his unpopular Sovereign, menaced his life, but the master of the hotel had him conveyed privately to the fortress for his security.

In the course of the evening the mob got possession of the General's carriage, dragged it to the same part of the city where the arms of the Neapolitan Minister's residence had been burnt, and where the carriage and all its contents shared the same fate. The people did not discover until it was too late, that General Statella was dispatched to Naples by General Pepe.

This outrage was perpetrated in the presence of 160 national guards, who had not received orders to act, and who quietly looked on.

No. 433.—Lord Napier to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received June 5.)

MY LORD,

Naples, May 28, 1848.

SINCE I had the honour to address your Lordship on the 19th instant, public tranquillity has not for a moment been disturbed at Naples, and although several parts of the country have manifested some agitation and disquietude, it is only, as far as I know, at Ariano, and at Cosenza and other chief towns of Calabria, that any formal defiance of the royal authority has taken place.

At the former, an insignificant place of the "Principato Ultra," a Provisional Government was declared, but was quickly suppressed; and the national guard, which had connived or assisted, has been dissolved by Royal ordinance.

At Cosenza the movement was more serious, and was accompanied by the levy of a large force of the surrounding peasantry, a people always ripe for mischief. There, too, a Provisional Government was appointed, but the disorder seems to have remained stationary or to have subsided, and we are assured that the Committees of Public Safety have been dissolved.

In the vicinity of Reggio there have been disturbances of the lower orders, perhaps without any definite political purpose, but involving of course some danger to the possessions of rich and peaceful proprietors and a demoralizing cessation of rural labour.

It appears that these partial outbreaks were in some measure previously prepared by the instigation of the same parties who directed the revolt at Naples, and partly they have been produced by a misunderstanding of the causes and character of the latter; but on the whole the crisis has passed over with less harm than might have been predicted, the designs of the ill-disposed have been frustrated, and the apprehensions of those who were solicitous for the preservation of the constitution, have been allayed by the temperate course pursued by the King, and by the convocation of the electoral colleges on the 15th of next month, and of the new Parliament on the 1st of July.

Of the numerous prisoners confined in the arsenal and the castles on the 15th instant, not more than six have been retained for trial, the rest having been freely enlarged after a few days' detention. Their liberty will be confirmed, it is said, by a declaration of amnesty on the approaching name day of His Majesty the King.

By a Royal ordinance of the 24th instant, the decree of April 5th, which granted a somewhat indefinite enlargement to the original electoral statute, has been repealed, but the electoral qualification prescribed by that law has been reduced to one-half, so that those who have an annual income rated to the property tax of 12 ducats (2*l.*) or enjoy an interest of the same amount in the public funds, will exercise the electoral franchise, while a revenue of 120 ducats (20*l.*) derived from the same sources will entitle the possessor to be chosen a Deputy.

This qualification is no doubt sufficiently low, but it rejects a number of tenants, tradesmen, and professional persons, who may not happen to be holders of real property, or Government securities, and who may yet be more intelligent and wealthier than many who are so, and as the former classes were especially favoured by the Decree of the 5th of April, now abrogated, some discontent may be occasioned by their exclusion.

A decree was also issued in the Government journal of the 25th instant, for the better order of printing. It contains provisions for the suppression of political placards, and the hawking of broadsides and caricatures, which are now only to be vended by persons authorized to that effect by the police, and intimates that copies of all newspapers and other journals are to be supplied to that department, and to the public prosecutor at the criminal court, on the day of their distribution, but not before it.

A power is also reserved to Government to suspend the publication of any journal in case of serious offence, with the condition, however, that the matter is to be brought before the criminal court of appeal, for definitive adjudication, within 10 days.

It may be hoped that no occasion will occur for the exercise of the latter power; the tone of the journals which have survived the late convulsion is greatly mitigated, whilst certainly not less than 30 of the most obnoxious newspapers have expired, and it will be one of the first duties of Parliament to pass a permanent statute for the regulation of the free press.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

No. 434.—Lord Eddisbury to the Secretary to the Admiralty.

SIR,

Foreign Office, June 6, 1848.

I AM directed by Viscount Palmerston to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 2nd instant, requesting to be informed what line the commanders of Her Majesty's ships of war should take if an attack were to be made on Trieste by the squadrons of Sardinia and Naples.

In reply, I am directed to transmit to you, for the information of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Turin, from which their Lordships will perceive that there is no intention on the part of the Sardinian Government of attacking the town of Trieste, and all that is meant is to take, if possible, the Austrian squadron. I likewise transmit to you the accompanying copy of an instruction which Viscount Palmerston addressed to Mr. Abercromby previously to the receipt of the despatch above referred to, directing him to dissuade the Sardinian Government from making any attack upon the town of Trieste.

In submitting these papers to the Lords Commissioners, you will inform their Lordships that their substance may be communicated to Sir William Parker, but that British officers commanding off Trieste would not be justified in interfering forcibly to prevent an attack, though they should remonstrate against it if likely to be made, and should represent that much of the loss which would be thereby occasioned, would fall on British merchants whose property would be destroyed.

I am, &c.

The Secretary to the Admiralty.

No. 435.—Consul-General Dawkins to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received June 6.)

MY LORD,

Venice, May 28, 1848.

ON the receipt of the inclosed letter from Captain Ramsay, of Her Majesty's ship Terrible, transmitting copies of his correspondence with the Governor of Trieste respecting the intentions of the Neapolitan squadron in regard to the steam-boats of the Austrian Lloyd's Company, having English mails and passengers on board, I wrote a letter to the Neapolitan Consul in Venice, asking him to give me information on this subject, and I have now the honour to transmit a copy of my letter, and a copy and translation of the answer which I have received, from which your Lordship will perceive that the Neapolitan Admiral declares that, unless he receives different orders, the steam-boats in question have nothing to fear for their commercial operations provided they be not armed with artillery and do not carry on any military operation, or transport troops or munitions of war of any kind. I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

CLINTON G. DAWKINS.

(Inclosure 1.)—Captain Ramsay to Consul-General Dawkins.

SIR,

Terrible, Trieste, May 20, 1848.

I INCLOSE a copy of a correspondence that I have had with his Excellency Count de Salm, Governor-General at Trieste.

If you are enabled to obtain information whether the Neapolitan squadron intend interfering with the vessels of the Austrian Lloyd's Company, it would certainly be advantageous.

I have, &c.

Consul-General Dawkins.

WM. RAMSAY.

(Inclosure 2.)—The Governor of Trieste to Captain Ramsay.

SIR,

Trieste, May 19, 1848.

AFTER the conversation I had with you, as you honoured me yesterday with a visit, I received the inclosed instance from the Directors of the Austrian Lloyd's Steam Company, of which I beg your Honour kindly to take notice.

Your Honour will see what it may be in your power to do according to your instructions, or perhaps will find the case worthy of requesting some ulterior instructions to depend upon.

If I may venture some opinion I would suggest that a single declaration made to the commander of the Neapolitan squadron by the commander of a British man-of-war, that he would not suffer the steamers in question to be injured, would be quite a sufficient protection for them.

I have, &c.

Captain Ramsay.

THE COUNT DE SALM,
Governor of the Littoral.

(Inclosure 3.)—The Directors of the Austrian Lloyd's to the Governor of Trieste.

SIR,

Trieste, May 18, 1848.

WE, the Undersigned, have the honour to inform you that as the Italia, commanded by Captain Florio, will return from Alexandria on or about the 24th instant, with the Anglo-Indian mail and passengers from Bombay, and the British Government having been informed that from the 10th instant a direct monthly communication would be kept up between Trieste and Alexandria, it must naturally be anxious that this important line is not interrupted from any untoward event.

We further beg to point out that a regular steam communication is kept up between this port and Corfu, from whence the English mails, cargo, and passengers are conveyed by our steamers.

Under these circumstances we feel ourselves quite justified to request you, Sir, to call upon the senior officer commanding Her Britannic Majesty's vessels at this port, to take such measures regarding our steamers plying from this to Corfu and to Alexandria, as to prevent them from being stopped by the Neapolitan squadron cruising in the Adriatic Sea, as the British Government, for the reasons stated above, is a party much interested in the matter.

We have, &c.

ZACCARIAH BRINSLEY.

H. SHAFER.

The Governor of Trieste.

(Inclosure 4.)—Captain Ramsay to the Governor of Trieste.

SIR,

Terrible, Trieste, May 19, 1848.

I HAVE had the honour of receiving your letter of this day's date, with the inclosed one from the Directors of the Austrian Lloyd's Company, and I shall forward these communications by the first opportunity to Vice-Admiral Sir William Parker, Bart., G.C.B., Commander-in-chief of Her Britannic Majesty's ships in the Mediterranean, and also to Her Britannic Majesty's Consul-General at Venice.

With every wish that such an unjust proceeding (a proceeding that I can hardly believe possible) as the seizure of any of the Austrian Lloyd's vessels by the Neapolitan squadron should not take place, I cannot make that declaration to the Neapolitan Admiral to which your Excellency alludes without being prepared to follow it up by giving effectual protection. I have, &c.

The Governor of Trieste.

WILLIAM RAMSAY.

(Inclosure 5.)—Consul-General Dawkins to the Neapolitan Consul in Venice.

SIR,

Venice, May 21, 1848.

It is doubtless well known to you that the steam-vessels belonging to the Company of the Austrian Lloyd's run regularly between Trieste and Alexandria, and between Trieste and Corfu, and that these vessels are in the habit of conveying English mails and passengers; and I have the honour, Sir, to request, that you will be pleased to acquaint me, for the information of my Government, whether, under existing circumstances, the Admiral commanding the squadron of His Majesty the King of Naples, cruising in the Adriatic, and now off the port of Venice, has any intention of interfering with the vessels of the Austrian Lloyd's Company above mentioned.

I have, &c.

G. Campana, Esq.

CLINTON G. DAWKINS.

SIR,

Venice, May 22, 1848.

THE absence of the squadron of His Majesty the King my Sovereign at the date of the receipt of the letter which you did me the honour to address me, prevented the possibility of my furnishing you with the information which you therein requested.

And this morning, on the return of the squadron off this port, while preparing to have a communication with the Admiral, I was disappointed, as the squadron got under weigh on the arrival of the Sardinian squadron, and both stood out to sea together.

Having thus been prevented, Sir, from replying sooner to your letter, I hasten to acquaint you with the cause, reserving to myself the satisfaction of affording you the required information as soon as the squadron shall return to its anchorage off this port.

I have, &c.

Consul-General Dawkins.

G. CAMPANA.

SIR,

Venice, May 27, 1848.

I HASTEN to transmit to you a copy of the letter in which Rear-Admiral Baron de Cosa, commanding the Royal Neapolitan squadron in the Adriatic, replies to the questions you put to me in your letter of the 21st instant.

Receive, &c.

Consul-General Dawkins.

SIR,

IN reply to your letter of the 22nd instant, I hasten to inform you for my part, that unless I receive different orders, the steamboats of the Lloyd's Company will have nothing to fear for their commercial operations, provided the said boats be not armed with artillery, and do not carry on any military operation, or transport troops or munitions of war of any kind.

No. 436.—Consul-General Dawkins to Viscount Palmerston.
(Received June 6.)

MY LORD,

Venice, May 28, 1848.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 24th instant, I have the honour to transmit to your Lordship the accompanying copy of the "Bulletin of the Fleet," published last night, from which your Lordship will perceive that the 5 steamers forming part of the Neapolitan squadron had returned from the opposite coast to Venice for the purpose of taking in coal, and that two of them were about to return to Naples, while the other 3 would rejoin the allied Italian squadrons off the Istrian coast.

It is asserted and believed here, that the King has sent orders to the whole of his fleet to return to Naples, and this belief gave rise to the correspondence which your Lordship will find in the accompanying number of the "Venice Gazette," wherein Signor Leopardi, the Neapolitan Envoy at the Court of Sardinia, writes to the Neapolitan Admiral from Venice, stating that although ignorant of the instructions the Admiral may have received from the King, he (Signor Leopardi) orders the Admiral to remain in the Venetian waters, and holds him responsible to the Neapolitan nation and to all Italy for the consequences of disobeying this order.

The Neapolitan troops which were on their march to these provinces under Generals Pepe and Stratella, received at Bologna orders to suspend their march and return to Naples. General Pepe and a large body of the troops refused to acknowledge this order, while General Stratella signified his intention of obeying it, the consequence was that the latter General was arrested and placed in confinement at Bologna, the inhabitants of which town sided with General Pepe.

General Pepe is now on march from Bologna hitherwards, but with a very reduced body of men, as a great many have availed themselves of the King's orders to return to their own country.

It appears that the Austrians have been again repulsed in a fresh attack upon Vicenza, and that they have withdrawn to Verona.

In this attack it is asserted that the Austrians suffered considerably from the Swiss troops under General Durando.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

CLINTON G. DAWKINS.

(Inclosure 1.)—Bulletin of the Fleet.

(Translation.)

Venice, May 27, 6 P.M.

On the 24th instant the new corvette named La Lombardia, sailed from our port under the flag of Rear-Admiral Bua, and on the same day joined the Italian fleet in the Gulf of Trieste.

The announcement that the Neapolitan squadron was recalled to Naples had caused the suspension of the plan of operations which had been settled.

The Italian fleet left Trieste on the night of the 24th instant, sailing towards the coast of Istria, and at the moment of departure the sentinels of Trieste fired some gun shots and 6 cannon shots.

The appearance of the Italian flags produced some movement among the inhabitants of Istria.

The 5 Neapolitan war-steamers arrived at the anchorage of Pelorosso to take in water and coals. 2 of them are gone to the Kingdom of Naples, and others are preparing to join the allied squadrons, which are animated by the best spirit, and which already command the Adriatic, the enemy's squadron no longer daring to leave the roads of Trieste.

By order of the Provisional Government,

J. ZENNARI, Secretary-General.

(Inclosure 2.)—Correspondence from the "Gazzetta di Venezia," of May 25, 1848.

The Provisional Government to the Neapolitan Envoy.

(Translation.)

EXCELLENCY,

Venice, May 24, 1848.

THE fine Neapolitan fleet reached our port a few days ago, welcomed and fêted by all our population, because the moment it was descried the city was liberated from the blockade which it had begun to suffer from the Austrian squadron, supported at Trieste by steamers and ships furnished and armed for the injury of our common Italian country.

But the expression of public gratitude had hardly begun when the unexpected news was spread about, that orders had been sent to the fleet to return to the Neapolitan ports; and this report, believed in a thousand ways, occasioned a feeling of profound sorrow and astonishment in the minds of all.

Excellency, we know you to be the depository of the high designs of your august Sovereign, who was desirous of uniting with the other Princes of Italy, and of sending his generous contingent by land and sea to the holy war of Italian independence. We have all reckoned upon this contingent; and the expedition which followed by sea and land proved that we had justly depended on the word of your King, corroborated by his deed.

Now, if the report which is spread abroad were well-founded, we should see overturned the plans we have formed for our defence, and we should also see our enemy's plans so much the more promoted for want of the help which we had begun to make use of, as we are less able now to supply its place.

Excellency, we are not unacquainted with your noble and firm resolution not to hinder the advance of the Neapolitan army towards these provinces; we cannot then doubt that you will, in the like case, oppose an equally effectual resistance to the return of the fleet.

Strong by the command you bear from your Sovereign,—zealous for the triumph of Italian independence,—we expect from your high mission and bold patriotism the assurances which may avail to destroy fears which are perhaps ill-founded.

Receive, &c.

From the Provisional Government of the Venetian Republic.

MANIN, President.

ZENNARI, Secretary.

PINCHERLE.

The Neapolitan Envoy to the Provisional Government.

(Translation.)

Venice, May 24, 1848.

I CANNOT satisfy the Provisional Government of the Republic of Venice with respect to the good intentions of His Sicilian Majesty towards the most holy cause of Italian independence better than by the inclosed copy of a letter from me to his Excellency Admiral de Cosa, commanding the Neapolitan squadron in the Adriatic, to be sent to him in Venice, or wherever he may be.

As, however, I have no official mission with the Venetian Republic, I must, with much regret, declare that the present officious reply has no connection with my diplomatic capacity.

In the meantime I pray, &c.

PIETRO LEOPARDI.

The Neapolitan Envoy to the Neapolitan Admiral.

(Translation.)

Venice, May 24, 1848.

THE withdrawal of the Neapolitan troops of His Sicilian Majesty sent to Lombardy at the request of His Sardinian Majesty, together with the fleet commanded by your Excellency, with the object of actively co-operating in the war which is now carrying on for the independence of Italy, has not been effected, and his Excellency Lieutenant-General Pepe passes the Po to-morrow, to occupy the honourable post assigned to him by the King of Sardinia in the great Italian army which is before the enemy.

Having proceeded to Venice, in anticipation of advice from his Excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs, to take measures for the reception of our troops in the Venetian Provinces, where they are intended to act, the Provisional Government of the Venetian State has addressed to me a letter, copy of which I inclose, from which it appears that a report is spread that the Neapolitan squadron under command of your Excellency is about to return to Naples.

I know not if your Excellency has received any despatches relative to this matter; but in this doubt, as by express command of His Sicilian Majesty, I have had to assure His Sardinian Majesty that the fleet would accompany the land troops until Italy should be delivered from the stranger; and as I am especially directed to develope and improve, on every occasion, the lofty feelings of Italian patriotism testified by His Sicilian Majesty in the proclamation of the 7th of April last, I think it my duty to request your Excellency—and, if required, to command you in the King's name—to remain in the neighbourhood of Venice with at least the greater part of the fleet; solemnly declaring your Excellency, and all the officers of the said fleet who shall receive notice of these my directions, responsible, not only before His Majesty, but before the Neapolitan nation and the whole of Italy, for all damage which may accrue from their not being followed.

I must observe to your Excellency, that the words underlined are extracted from my instructions signed by His Sicilian Majesty with his own hand, and constitutionally countersigned by his Excellency the Minister of Foreign Affairs.

PIETRO LEOPARDI.

No. 439.—Vice-Consul Campbell to Visc^t. Palmerston.—(Rec. June 6.)

MY LORD,

Milan, June 1, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that the following extraordinary bulletin was issued yesterday:

"30,000 Austrians attacked our positions of Goito; 15,000 of ours defended them.

"There was a brisk fire of artillery, which lasted six hours. At the end of it, our cavalry drove back the enemy, and followed him up towards Mantua.

"In a regular battle the Italian army routed entirely the Austrian.

"The King, as usual, and more than usual, was exposed to the continual fire of artillery, and was slightly wounded in the eye. The Duke of Savoy was also wounded in the thigh; but neither the one nor the other dismounted from their horses.

"General Bava led our troops, and showed great gallantry.

"At the departure of the courier, 2 regiments of cavalry were still in pursuit of the enemy.

"At this moment the news has arrived that Peschiera has surrendered."

The news of the victory gained by his Majesty Charles Albert, and the surrender of Peschiera, caused the greatest joy throughout this city. Salutes in consequence of these events were fired in different parts of the bastions. In the afternoon the national guard, the Regiment of Students, and the regiment called Della Speranza (composed of youths from 12 to 16 years of age), defiled under the balcony of the Marino Palace, in the presence of the Provisional Government, and were repeatedly addressed by the President. During the night the town was illuminated.

This morning a "Te Deum" was chanted in the Cathedral, at which the Provisional Government, the national guard, and deputations from different institutions were present.

This morning the following bulletin was published towards noon, though dated 31st of May :

" On the 29th instant a numerous body of Austrian troops made a sudden sortie from Mantua, attacking the extreme right of our army between Le Evazie and Curtatone, which were occupied by the Tuscans. The brave Tuscans, although much inferior in number, gallantly resisted the first onset of the enemy. The University battalion fought heroically ; but their valour was obliged to succumb to overpowering numbers. The Tuscans retired beyond the Mincio, losing about 180 killed and 300 wounded on the field of battle.

" On the same day (29th), the enemy, rushing against the left wing of the army, attacked our troops on the plain of Rivoli, in the belief by such endeavour to succour Peschiera, already reduced to the greatest straits. But the Piedmontese Brigade sustained the shock with undaunted firmness, and made the enemy repent of his presumption, who was driven back with great slaughter.

" In the meanwhile, towards Goito, General Bava, commanding the right wing, had reunited the flower of his troops. On the morning of the 30th, His Majesty Charles Albert proceeded from his head-quarters, at Valleggio, to the camp, seeing the hour of a great battle was come ; for if the Austrians succeeded in crossing the Oglio and throwing themselves into the Cremonese, the whole of Lower Lombardy and Milan itself would have been threatened. The Austrians amounted to 30,000 men, with 130 pieces of cannon.

" Our troops amounted to not more than 20,000 men, with 46 pieces of artillery. The battle was tremendous. The fire of the artillery lasted continually for seven hours on both sides. His Majesty Charles Albert and the Duke of Savoy both issued their orders amidst the cannon and grape-shot of the enemy, animating the soldiers by their example.

" At the approach of night the enemy was driven back along the whole line.

" In the same moment of the victory, the news arrived that the fortress of Peschiera had capitulated, and the King ratified the honourable conditions which the Duke of Genoa had stipulated for its surrender.

" Two regiments of cavalry continued to follow up the enemy, when the King, about midnight, returned to his head-quarters. Valleggio, on the re-entry of the King, was illuminated to celebrate a victory which will perhaps decide the fate of Italy."

I beg leave to correct an error in my despatch of the 31st ultimo. It was not the Duke of Genoa, but the Duke of Savoy, who has been wounded.

I have, &c.

MY LORD,

Vienna, June 1, 1848.

I INCLOSE herewith the copy of a despatch, with its inclosures, which has been received here to-day from Her Majesty's Vice-Consul at Trieste, announcing the re-appearance off that port on the 27th ultimo, of the "combined squadrons."

Although Mr. Raven does not state so, I have reason to believe that by the expression "combined" he means the Sardinian and Venetian squadrons alone, and that the Neapolitan ships which formed part of the blockading force had not returned; it is reported that they have gone back to Naples upon learning what had occurred there on the 15th ultimo.

I have, &c.

MY LORD,

Trieste, May 29, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Excellency that the combined squadrons re-appeared off this port on the 27th instant, and sent into this port a steamer, with a flag of truce, bearing the answer to the protest marked No. 6, of my last communication, which answer I now forward, marked No. 9. The same opportunity brought a despatch addressed to the Governor here, contained in the printed paper marked No. 8. I also forward the copy of protest made by the French Consul, marked No. 7; the answer has been received, but I have not yet obtained a copy. The Consuls of the various foreign Powers have prepared a reply to the answer received, and I have also prepared a protest in conformity with your Excellency's instructions, which will be delivered I believe to-morrow, as a steamer will be despatched to convey those and the Governor's answer, as well as to make an application from Lloyd's Austrian Steam Company for permission to keep open the route to Corfu, Greece, Constantinople, and Alexandria.

Yesterday arrived an American schooner of war. The Terrible and Spartan are in port; also the French steamer Asmodée. Without further to communicate,

I have, &c.

Viscount Ponsonby.

(Inclosure 2.)—Protest of the French Consul in Trieste.

M. L'AMIRAL,

Trieste, le 24 Mai, 1848.

AYANT eu connaissance de la déclaration que vous avez faite au commandant de la frégate Britannique Le Terrible.

Considérant qu'il résulte de cette communication une éventualité possible d'agression contre la ville de Trieste ;

Considérant que s'il est du droit évident du Gouvernement Sarde d'agir comme il l'entendra contre un port transformé par l'Autriche en place de guerre, ce droit ne saurait porter atteinte à ceux des Puissances amies ou alliées des Etats Italiens que vous représentez ;

Attendu qu'une agression inattendue compromettrait à coup sûr les intérêts que le Soussigné défend ;

Attendu que tout dommage ou préjudice des Français établis ou de passage à Trieste doit être réparé ;

Le Soussigné afin de rendre efficaces ses intentions et désirs en faveur de ses concitoyens, entend protester, comme de fait il proteste par la présente note, contre toute attaque non préalablement annoncée de la part de l'escadre que vous commandez.

Il demande qu'un délai de 48 heures au moins soit accordé dans le cas d'agression, à partir du moment où le projet de sévir lui aura été communiqué officiellement, délai dont il ne manquera pas d'user en faveur de ses nationaux.

Il déclare en outre mettre sous la responsabilité de votre Gouvernement, M. l'Amiral, toute atteinte aux intérêts quels qu'ils soient des citoyens Français.

Espérant que le but de la présence de votre escadre ici n'est qu'un but pacifique en ce qui touche la cité, et tout en exprimant le vif désir de ne voir dans l'attitude de votre flotte qu'une attitude calme et rassurante, le Soussigné a l'honneur d'être, &c.

(Inclosure 3.)—Rear-Admiral Albini to the Governor of Trieste.

(Translation.)

EXCELLENCY,

Trieste Roads, May 27, 1848.

THE writer has been informed by the Venetian Rear-Admiral Signor Georgia Bua, that various merchant-vessels are under sequester in the port of Trieste, which, being bound for Venice, were compelled by the Austrian ships of war to proceed to Trieste. This violation of commercial rights committed by the Austrian squadron,—which affects not only the interests of the subjects of Powers now belligerent, but likewise those of neutrals, and from which the squadron of His Majesty the King of Sardinia, as also that united to it, have always abstained, the latter, on the contrary, acting with the greatest moderation and consideration in respect to the mercantile marine, not excluding that belonging to Austria, although bound for ports under her rule,—cannot be endured; and therefore the writer in the meantime requests your Excellency to arrange that the aforesaid vessels (a part of which are specified in the note hereunto annexed) may, without delay, be allowed to proceed to their original destination; the said arrangement not, however, debarring the parties interested in those vessels from the right of requiring from that Government indemnification for the loss occasioned to them by the aforesaid violation.

The Undersigned requests your Excellency to be pleased to honour him, in the shortest time possible, with a distinct reply on this matter for his corresponding direction, and in the meanwhile he has the honour, &c.

The Governor of Trieste.

ALBINI.

(Inclosure 4.)—Reply of Admiral Albini to the Protest of the Consular (Translation.) Body in Trieste.

MOST ILLUSTRIOUS SIR,

Trieste Roads, May 27, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge to you the receipt of the note which, signed by the different Consuls of the foreign Powers residing in Trieste, you delivered to me on the 24th instant on board the royal frigate Saint Michele, over which floats the ensign of my command.

In reply to the same, I do myself the honour to communicate to you that the naval forces of His Majesty the King of Sardinia, as well as those joined to them, while they will respect the law of nations in all its parts, are, however, resolved to renounce none of those rights conferred upon them by the belligerent character in which they are placed in regard to Austria, which has converted the city and port of Trieste into a place of war.

In giving you to understand this, I must further point out to you that a part of Mr. Lloyd's steamers having been armed by the Austrian Government, they will accordingly henceforth be considered as ships of war of the enemy.

I request you to have the goodness to communicate my present note to the Consuls who honoured with their signatures the above-mentioned note, and be pleased at the same time, &c.

No. 442.—Count Lobzeltern to Count Dietrichstein —(Communicated to Viscount Palmerston by Count Dietrichstein, June 8.)

M. LE COMTE,

Vienne, le 20, Mai, 1848.

PAR une dépêche du 22 Avril dernier, M. le Comte Ficquelmont a fait connaître à votre Excellence les ouvertures que nous avait fait faire le Cabinet de Turin à l'égard de son intention de maintenir avec nous la paix maritime, tout en continuant les hostilités sur la terre ferme.

Vous avez également été prévenu, M. le Comte, qu'envisageant le parti pris par le Gouvernement Piémontais comme le premier pas dans une meilleure direction, nous nous étions empressés d'adhérer à sa proposition et de lui faire parvenir l'assurance que nous userions d'une parfaite réciprocité envers la marine Sarde.

A notre grande surprise, nous reçûmes peu de tems après du Chargé d'Affaires de l'Empereur à Munic, un rapport que j'ai l'honneur de transmettre ci-près en extrait à votre Excellence.

La première déclaration de la Cour de Turin nous avait semblé trahir un sentiment d'humanité et une pensée de conciliation. Nous ne pouvions dès lors point hésiter à l'accueillir avec faveur et dans un esprit analogue à celui qui, nous l'espérons, l'avait dictée. Les explications que le Marquis Pallavicini reçut plus tard l'ordre d'ajouter aux premières ouvertures qui nous étaient parvenues par son intermédiaire, étaient de nature à nous inspirer des doutes fort graves sur les véritables intentions de la Cour de Turin et sur la valeur qu'il nous était permis d'attacher à ses premières déclarations, dont votre Excellence a été chargé de faire part à Lord Palmerston. Comment concilier, en effet, la teneur des instructions données à l'escadre Sarde envoyée dans l'Adriatique, avec les assurances antérieures du Gouvernement Sarde de vouloir maintenir avec nous la paix maritime ?

Dans le discours d'ouverture prononcé le 8 Mai par le Prince Eugène de Savoie, Lieutenant du Roi, dans la première séance du Parlement Piémontais, nous avons remarqué le passage suivant :

“ Notre escadre a appareillé de Gênes. J'ai la ferme confiance que lorsqu'elle rencontrera l'ennemi, elle se montrera digne de notre glorieux Roi et de notre armée glorieuse.”

Ce langage, nous ne pouvons nous le dissimuler, n'indique que trop clairement que le Cabinet de Turin ne compte point rester fidèle à ses premières inspirations. Nous devons dès lors nous attendre à de nouveaux conflits nullement favorables aux chances de paix que nous appelons de tous nos vœux. Nous le regrettons sincèrement dans un moment surtout où nous venons de faire un appel au concours amical de la Grande Bretagne dans le but de rendre la paix à l'Italie.

Je prie votre Excellence de donner communication de cette dépêche et de son annexe à M. le Principal Secrétaire d'Etat de Sa Majesté Britannique.

Recevez, &c.

M. le Comte Dietrichstein.

(Extrait.)

Munic, le 26 Avril, 1848.

M'ETANT rendu cet après-dîner à une nouvelle entrevue que m'avait demandée M. le Marquis de Pallavicini, celui-ci me donna lecture à cette occasion d'une dépêche qu'il venait de recevoir de sa Cour en date de Turin le 18 Avril, dont voici la substance.

Cette dépêche commence par reproduire les motifs d'humanité et de nationalité qui avait déterminé Sa Majesté Sarde à prendre les dispositions relatives aux rapports maritimes entre l'Autriche et la Sardaigne, telles qu'elles se trouvaient énoncées dans la circulaire annexée à mon rapport du 5 Avril. Elle passe ensuite à blâmer le Marquis Pallavicini d'avoir mal compris les intentions de son Cabinet.

"En faisant parvenir," continue la dépêche, si ma mémoire est fidèle, "la circulaire susdite à la connaissance du Gouvernement Impérial, nous voulions seulement constater un fait, mais nous n'entendions nullement provoquer des dispositions analogues de la part de l'Autriche. L'extrait de dépêche que vous a remis M. de Brenner comme une réponse à votre communication, ferait croire que nous ayions pris un engagement et sollicité de l'Autriche de s'y associer.

"Notre but était uniquement de diminuer autant qu'il est en notre pouvoir, les maux que pourrait amener la guerre, et d'en éloigner tout ce qui tendrait à lui ôter son caractère d'humanité et de générosité. Nous aimons à croire que l'Autriche partageât ces sentiments. Mais si nous avons ordonné à nos bâtiments de guerre de s'abstenir de tout acte d'hostilité contre la marine Autrichienne, à moins d'y être provoqués, nous entendions nous réserver une entière liberté d'action pour le cas où une telle provocation dût avoir lieu. Nous voulons donc qu'on sâche dans ce moment où notre flotte a reçu l'ordre de se rendre dans la Mer Adriatique que si, par exemple, l'Autriche jugeait à propos d'employer des moyens agressifs contre les populations Italiennes du Littoral, nos forces maritimes seront tenues de procéder à des voies d'hostilités contre la marine militaire Autrichienne et les bâtiments qu'elles y rencontreront.

"Il nous importe de vous faire connaître nos vues à cet égard, pour qu'on ne puisse pas nous reprocher plus tard d'avoir violé un engagement que nous n'avions jamais eu l'intention de prendre."

THE accompanying report from the Military Governor at Trieste, Count Giulay, which I have the honour to transmit, in original and translation, appears to me to be of importance, as showing the intention of the French Government to observe, for the present at least, a strict neutrality in the contest going on in Italy.

THE following extract from a report dated May 29th, of Count Giulai, Military Governor of Trieste, to the Minister of War, is made known to the public.

On the arrival of the French steamer Asmodée, on the afternoon of the 25th instant, the captain signified his intention of saluting the place. The officer sent by Captain Kudriaffsky on board the Asmodée, and who was received with the greatest politeness, stated that, under existing circumstances, salutes might cause some anxiety to the people, and that it would therefore be desirable to dispense with them. Upon this the French captain declared that he had positive orders from his Government to observe the strictest neutrality towards Austria and Italy, and he considered it the more necessary on that account that this should be shown by the intended salute.

I therefore acceded to his wish on the following day, in order that information might in the meantime be given at the different positions of the intended firing, and gave orders that the French salute should be returned from the castle; and the salute and its acknowledgement was in consequence fired as above ordered.

MY LORD,

Vienna, June 4, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith a copy of a despatch and its inclosures, which has been received here to-day from Her Majesty's Vice-Consul at Trieste.

Your Lordship will learn from it that the Sardinian Admiral has promised not to molest or capture the steam-boats of the Austrian Lloyd's carrying the mails to the East, provided they are not armed or do not convey troops or military stores.

I have, &c.

MY LORD,

Trieste, June 1, 1848.

THE Sardinian squadron yesterday again approaching this port, it was deemed advisable for several reasons to communicate with the same. Captain Ramsay, senior officer, ordered Her Majesty's ship Locust (which arrived here on the afternoon of the 30th instant from Civita Vecchia, with an Austrian Ambassador and his family from the Court of Rome) to proceed to the squadron about 12 miles distant from this port; the squadron was in sight of the port yesterday afternoon, approaching nearer, and is now at a very short distance.

The Governor sent despatches to the Admiral, see printed paper marked No. 10. A deputation from the foreign Consuls presented the reply to the Admiral's answer, marked No. 11. An application was forwarded me, marked No. 12, and presented to Captain Ramsay. The great inconvenience and interruption arising to commerce from the stoppage of the communication by Austrian Lloyd's Steam Company's vessels, have induced the foreign Consuls to request the Sardinian squadron to allow without molestation or fear of capture those vessels of the following routes to continue to ply; from here to Alexandria direct, from here to the Greek Islands, from here to the coast of Dalmatia, also the line from here to Corfu, Smyrna, and Constantinople.

The Admiral has promised not to molest or capture the same, providing they only carry mercantile letters, passengers, and merchandize; prohibiting their being armed, or conveying troops or munitions of war, and the Admiral requires a declaration or certificate from myself, the Turkish, and Greek Consuls giving an assurance that they are not armed nor are there any troops or munitions of war on board. And he will also order the Sardinian Consuls at the different ports to give them a pass to return.

He has further agreed to the return to this port without molestation of the 3 Austrian Lloyd's Steam Company's packet steamers which have put into the port of Pola coming from Alexandria, Corfu, and the Greek Islands.

I have just received the letter, marked No. 13, which is the first communication in regard to the re-opening of the several routes.

I have, &c.

Viscount Ponsonby.

(Inclosure 2.)—Vice-Consul Raven to the Admiral in command of the Sardinian and Neapolitan Fleet off Trieste.

SIR,

Trieste, May 27, 1848.

IN consequence of the reappearance and position taken up by the squadron under your command, I am apprehensive that the intentions of the said squadron are hostile to this port and city, therefore I feel it my duty to advise you that I have received instructions from his Excellency Viscount Ponsonby, G.C.B., Her Britannic Majesty's Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary at the Court of Vienna, that in the event of any attack being about to be made by the Neapolitan squadron alone, or in conjunction with a Sardinian squadron, or any other squadron or squadrons, to take the most effectual measures for making known to the commander or commanders of the above-mentioned squadron or squadrons, that there is an immense amount of British property in the port, harbour, lazaret, stores, magazines, and dwellings of this port and city, exposed to danger of destruction by an attack, and that if the attack by the squadron or squadrons should take place, and property of British subjects be thereby destroyed, Great Britain will demand full indemnity for the losses sustained by her subjects, which losses will probably be of vast amount.

I therefore forewarn you of the consequences which may take place if an attack be made, and solemnly protest against any measures being adopted by you, whereby the lives or property of any British subjects either in the port, harbour, city, or elsewhere, may be destroyed or endangered.

And if in any way injured, the most full and entire restitution and indemnification will be demanded by Great Britain from each and every such Power, Kingdom, or State which may be instrumental in such destruction.

I further beg to state that my previous communication was antecedent to the instructions received from Her Britannic Majesty's Ambassador. With every assurance and consideration.

I have, &c.

HENRY RAVEN.

LA missive que votre Excellence a adressée en date du 27 de ce mois à M. le Consul des Etats Unis d'Amérique a été communiquée par lui aux Soussignés, conformément à votre désir.

Cette dépêche leur donne motif à confirmer leurs protêts du 24 de ce mois en toute leur extension.

Les Consuls des Etats qui forment partie de la Confédération Germanique en leur spécialité, confirment à votre Excellence qu'une agression quelconque contre le port de la ville de Trieste serait une agression contre toute la Confédération Germanique. Votre Excellence nous donne l'occasion, par ce qu'elle dit au sujet du Lloyd Autrichien, à émettre l'opinion qu'à l'exception de 3 navires que le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté l'Empereur a exigé pour son service, les vapeurs de cet établissement ne peuvent être regardés comme bâtiments de guerre, et que tous les Gouvernements sont vivement intéressés à ce que le service de poste et de transport de passagers de ses pyroscaphes pour la Grèce, la Turquie, et les Indes, ne souffrent aucune interruption.

DEAR SIR,

Trieste, May 30, 1848.

As it is of the utmost consequence to nearly all the States of Europe, but principally to Turkey, Greece, the Ionian Islands, England, and the whole of Germany, that the steam navigation of the Austrian Lloyd's, which has been interrupted in consequence of the united Italian fleet having appeared with hostile intentions in the Adriatic, should be re-established, we the Undersigned Consuls beg you to inform us if the commander of the English fleet in our harbour would have perhaps the utmost kindness to send one of Her Britannic Majesty's vessels to the Sardinian Admiral, for the purpose of conveying a despatch or one of the directors of the Austrian Lloyd's Steam Navigation Company, to communicate with Rear-Admiral Albini on the subject, as we have no other means of doing it, and as by this you would certainly do one of the greatest services to Trieste and to the several Governments which we represent in this place.

MOST ILLUSTRIOUS CONSUL,

Under sail, May 31, 1848.

IN compliance with the request which you have addressed to me, I do myself the honour to inform you, that being desirous, as far as I can, of causing no impediment to commerce, I will allow the Lloyd's steamers to pass to and fro between Trieste and Corfu, provided that the commanders thereof are furnished for each voyage either way with a certificate of Her Britannic Majesty's Consulate in Trieste and of the local authority in that port, stating the day of their departure, and that they only have on board mercantile correspondence, merchandize, and passengers,—not arms, munitions of war, or troops of any kind.

In case the said steamers should be found by one of the vessels of the Italian squadron acting in contravention of the above-mentioned conditions, to allow the visit of which it shall be obligatory, I notify that in such case the same will be captured, and I should be obliged to suspend the present permission.

Be pleased, &c.

 MY LORD, Milan, June 3, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit, for your Lordship's information, the translation of a bulletin of this day, containing the articles of the capitulation of Peschiera.

From my own private resources I learn that the Austrians occupy a line from Gazzoldo to Medola, near Castiglione della Stiviere. His Majesty the King of Sardinia does not follow their movements, but is concentrating his forces at Volta and Goito, with the intention of piercing their line and cutting off the retreat from Mantua. His Majesty has not less than 40,000 of his troops around him.

The town of Peschiera is a heap of ruins from the shells, but the fortifications are very little injured.

I have, &c.

Milan, June 3, 1848.

We publish the capitulation of Peschiera.

HIS Royal Highness the Duke of Genoa entrusted by His Majesty the King with the siege of Peschiera, on one part, and Major d'Ettingshausen commanding the frontier regiment Ottocani, the latter fully empowered by his Excellency the Lieutenant-Marshal Baron Rath, commander of the fortress, on the other, have agreed on the following conditions for the surrender of the fortress.

I. This evening the troops of His Majesty the King shall occupy the fort Mandella.

IV. The infantry shall preserve their drums, the hussars their trumpets, with the permission to use them.

V. The hussars shall keep their horses till the place of embarkation, where they will be delivered to the person delegated by His Majesty the King to receive them.

and all materials of war, shall to-morrow be given up to the officers delegated by His Royal Highness the Duke of Genoa.

VII. With respect to the route, the troops with their officers shall pass by Desenzano, Brescia, Cremona, Piacenza, Parma, Modena, Bologna, and Ancona, where they will be embarked for Croatia, and landed as soon as possible at Segna.

VIII. With respect to his Excellency and the other officers belonging to the troops, as well as the civil officers, they will take the road they may think most convenient.

IX. The troops all promise, on their word, not to serve during the present war, neither against the armies of His Majesty the King, nor against those of his Italian allies.

X. The Government of His Majesty the King undertakes to supply every necessary means of transport for the officers, the sick, and the baggage.

XI. During the march the officers shall be treated, with respect to lodging, the same as those of His Majesty; likewise the soldiers shall be put under cover and supplied with straw to sleep upon.

XII. The non-commissioned officers and soldiers shall receive, during the march, the rations and the treatment as the soldiers of His Majesty the King.

XIII. The officers shall be treated according to their respective ranks, the same as in the army of His Majesty the King in the field.

XV. His Royal Highness is, in justice, pleased to acknowledge the brave defence of the garrison of Peschiera.

J'ai reçu la note du 3 du courant par laquelle vous avez bien voulu me faire part de la détermination du Gouvernement Britannique de se rendre au vœu exprimé par le Gouvernement Impérial par rapport à une intervention amicale dans la complication qui désole le nord de l'Italie.

Je suis sur le point de partir pour soumettre moi-même cette communication à Sa Majesté l'Empereur à Inspruck, qui, je prie votre Excellence de vouloir bien en être persuadée, appréciera la preuve d'amitié qu'elle renferme.

Comme l'intérêt le plus urgent c'est celui de faire cesser l'effusion du sang, peut-être jugeriez-vous convenable, Milord, d'accorder à Lord Ponsonby une facilité éventuelle, en cas où le Gouvernement

No. 451.—Consul-Genl. Dawkins to Visc^t. Palmerston.—(Rec. June 12.)

(Extract.)

Venice, June 4, 1848.

I TRANSMIT to your Lordship herewith a copy and translation of a letter dated 31st ultimo, addressed to the Provisional Government of the Venetian Republic by the deputies of the departmental committees of Padua, Vicenza, Rovigo, and Treviso, in which, after stating their entire concurrence in the reasons which induced the Provisional Government of Lombardy to hasten the declaration of the Lombard Provinces for their immediate fusion with Piedmont, they add that the provinces they represent had thought fit to adopt a similar course by opening registers for the inscription of votes, and they call upon the Provisional Government of Venice to follow this example without delay, threatening in case of non-compliance, to separate themselves completely from Venice, and to establish "a new centre of Government in the Venetian Provinces on the mainland." The Deputies require an answer to this summons within 3 days, at the expiration of which the representatives to be chosen by the committees of their 4 provinces will depart for Milan.

To this address the Provisional Government of Venice has replied in the letter, dated the 2nd instant, of which I likewise transmit a copy and translation, stating that it has decided upon appealing to the sense of the people through an assembly of representatives to be convoked on the 18th instant, and that in the meantime the Envoy of Venice to the Provisional Government of Lombardy will be instructed to represent the interests of Venice as occasion may require, in the deliberations about to be carried on.

2 decrees have been issued subsequently by the Provisional Government here, bearing date the 3rd instant, the one announcing the convocation of the Assembly for the purpose of deliberating, a. Whether the question relative to the political condition of the country shall be decided now, or at the conclusion of the war?

b. Whether in the event of an immediate decision being agreed upon, it will be expedient to form an independent State, or to unite with Piedmont?

c. Whether the members of the existing Provisional Government shall be changed or confirmed?

The other decree provides for the electoral qualifications, according to which all persons who have attained the age of 21 years have the right of voting, and all those who have attained the age of 25 are eligible as deputies. Electors can exercise the right of voting only in the parishes in which they reside, and the deputies are to be chosen in the different parishes in the proportion of 1 deputy for every 2,000 inhabitants.

There is no doubt that the majority of the inhabitants of Venice, comprising by far the greatest part of the upper and middle classes, and the whole of the marine, a very influential body, are in favour of a junction with Piedmont, rather than a continuation of a Republican Government, even supposing the Venetian Republic could exist, confined as it would be to Venice and the islands of the Lagunes by the separation from it of the provinces on the mainland. Indeed, of the members of the existing Provisional Government, it is understood that the President, Signor Manin, is the only one who is desirous that the Republic, reduced to the dimensions above mentioned, should be carried on.

The capitulation of Peschiera and the successes of the King of Piedmont as reported here, will doubtless contribute very much to the power of his adherents in Venice, who appear very sanguine of the success of their cause.

Recent accounts from Vienna seem to render it more than doubtful whether Austria can continue to carry on war in the Lombardo-Venetian provinces, but in the meantime Marshal Radetzky has still a large force at his disposal, and we hear of the uninterrupted advance of troops through the Friuli, and their concentration in force on the Piave.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

CLINTON G. DAWKINS.

(Inclosure 1.)—The Deputies of the Committees of Padua, Vicenza, Rovigo, and Treviso, to the Provisional Government of Venice.—May 31, 1848.

(Translation.)

To the Provisional Government of the Venetian Republic.

THE independence of Italy would be no more than a vain idea, if that union, whence national dignity and strength are derived, were not to be realized. The necessity of this union is equally felt by all, and the endeavours of all the States of the Peninsula tend to the accomplishment of it.

When you thought fit to declare, in the most unqualified manner, the indivisibility of Venice from Lombardy, to the end that the political destinies of the former should be those of the latter, we rejoiced to recognise in so auspicious a declaration, the sanction of the principle, that the one sole Assembly was to be the only means of determining the future political existence ; all, however, in relation to the acknowledged interests of the majority.

In the calm state of public opinion, the Government of Milan, as well as the committee of the Venetian Provinces, would have left it to the Constituent Assembly called together after the triumph of the cause, to decide upon the political condition of the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom.

But the efficacious aid which His Majesty King Charles Albert brought to the cause of the national independence, and the glory of the Piedmontese arms, excited throughout the greater part of the country the warmest desire to pronounce for the immediate union with the Sardinian States.

Influenced by this, and by other powerful motives of war, finance, and diplomacy, the Central Government of the provinces of Lombardy found it necessary to afford their fellow-citizens the opportunity of legally registering their suffrages even before the convocation of the Constituent Assembly, and provided for this by their decree of the 12th of May.

The motives which induced the adoption of this measure were common to, if not more imperative on, the Venetian Provinces, as the latter have been made in a more especial manner the principal point of invasion by the enemy, and are worse provided with the means of making a vigorous resistance.

Hence the same excitement among the population of the mainland, and the same necessity for the committees (in the silence of the Venetian Government), to open, in their respective provinces, the same way for their fellow-citizens to express their wishes without delay, as that established by Lombardy.

The period fixed for signing the registers opened for the purpose mentioned having expired on the 29th instant, the committees after a scrutiny of the signatures are to publish the result, which cannot but be in conformity with the general desire, which, in fact, was the original motive for the measure.

It is therefore a subject of deep affliction to the committees, to think that the proposed scrutiny, which would induce the immediate fusion of these provinces with Piedmont, may possibly separate them from Venice, to whom they are attached by so many bonds of common interest, grateful affection, and glorious reminiscences.

Such a separation, though it is to be hoped that it would only be temporary, would occasion the inevitable consequence of the immediate institution of a new centre of Government in the Venetian Provinces of the mainland. Nor would this take place without prejudice to the common cause, as well in a material as in a political point of view. And the other Powers of Europe would find in this proceeding, fresh cause to reproach us with incapacity to regenerate Italy, which will never be great until regenerated by union.

And if the foreseen want of union would redound to the disgrace of Venice on the one hand, on the other it would be injurious to the provinces of the mainland, which, together with Lombardy, uniting their destinies to the destinies of Piedmont, would leave behind that precious gem, that beloved sister, who, in the new political combination should re-assert her boast of being the Queen of the Adriatic.

A vast State comprehending the Sardinian States, the ex-Duchies of Parma and Modena, and all the Lombard and Venetian Provinces, would be in a condition, from its own resources, to preserve the Peninsula from foreign invasion, and raise it to an eminence of power so as to influence honourably the political balance of Europe.

And yet Venice would form no part of this State, if the Government which at present rules her persists in the idea of maintaining its Republican form, unsupported by the desire of the nation, unfavoured by political considerations, and repugnant to the cause and to the intentions of the Prince who is assisting us to rid the country of the stranger.

In the ardent desire to prevent the grief and prejudice we should mutually suffer if Venice were not to participate with us the destinies of the new State, the committees of Padua, Vicenza, Treviso, and Rovigo, through the undersigned, their delegates, demand and entreat this Government to take into mature consideration the actual condition of the provinces, and to proceed to that fusion in which we see our safety and glory.

Already 2 of these provinces engaged with the enemy have given proofs that our ancient valour is not extinguished in our breasts. Already do the sister provinces long for the moment to emulate their example. And it is because we feel ourselves strong in courage, that we consider ourselves worthy to ally ourselves in one family to the valiant Piedmontese. But oh ! let not Venice, who on the 22nd of March gave the signal of the grand redemption, oh ! let her not be absent from the family banquet.

In case the system of registration adopted in Lombardy and followed by the committees of Padua, Vicenza, Treviso, and Rovigo, should seem, in your particular case, ill calculated to ascertain the public opinion with that promptitude which the pressure of the time demands, adopt whatever other method you deem better calculated to arrive at that end.

The urgency and the importance of the case are equal. A commission has been charged by the Government of Lombardy, with the duty of preliminary deliberation on the subject of providing the mode of transition between the vote and the Constituent Assembly, and of the organization of the Government during the state of transition. The committees of Padua, Vicenza, Treviso, and Rovigo, were invited by the said Government, by their decree of the 25th of May, No. 784, to take part in these deliberations, and the expediency of the Venetians having some one in the commission of Lombardy to be the interpreter of the special conditions of their provinces, was pointed out. The committees have therefore decided on sending each one member to Milan, in order to take part in these deliberations, and represent the interests of his respective province.

It would be lamentable were Venice alone to have no voice in this commission. The power of benefitting the common weal by the aid of their experience and talents in the ranks of the Ministry about to be formed, would possibly thereby be taken from the men who have deserved so well of the Venetian Government. And be it said that Venice ought to send a representative without delay, even during the interval that will elapse while she is taking measures to collect the votes of the people upon the proposed fusion with Piedmont. Not to do so, would show a tendency to disunion, and, abandoned, without protection, her particular interests would be liable to suffer, even though she might afterwards decide upon the union.

Under the present urgent circumstances, the delegates will wait till Saturday the 3rd of June next, for the declaration, which they hope for, of the adhesion of the Government to the fusion desired by the 4 sister provinces. A longer delay would subject them to too serious responsibility, to avoid which, the members who shall have been elected by the committees will on the 4th proceed direct to Milan.

Doubtless, there is not a citizen who would hesitate to make every sacrifice in order to ensure the glory and independence of Italy. Wherefore, the provinces represented by us, entertain the firm hope that Venice and her rulers will know how to sacrifice private opinion to that of the great majority of the citizens of the mainland; they will know how to sacrifice it, in order that the triumph of Italian nationality may be more secure, more precious, and more splendid.

ABSTAINING for the moment from all consideration of the motives which occasioned your letter of the 31st May, and of the actual condition of the Venetian Provinces during the continuance of which you have written it, we limit ourselves to a declaration to you, that we have decided upon appealing to the opinion of the people by the means of an Assembly of Representatives which we are about to convoke for the 18th instant; and in the meantime we write to citizen Calucci, our Envoy to the Central Provisional Government of Lombardy, in order that in the deliberations to which you allude in your said letter, he may represent our interests as occasion may require.

MY LORD, Vienna, June 5, 1848.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 3rd instant, informing your Lordship of the advance of Marshal Radetzky on the night of the 27th ultimo in the direction of Mantua, I have now the honour to inclose in translation his report to the Minister of War, dated Mantua, May 30th, detailing the complete success of his movement.

The Marshal reached Mantua by a forced march on the evening of the 28th of May; crossed the Mincio, under the protection of that fortress, on the 29th, and carried the intrenched positions of the enemy at Curtatone and Montanara (on the right bank of the Mincio), making 2,000 prisoners, and taking 5 pieces of cannon.

The position of the Piedmontese army appears to be very critical, as Marshal Redetzky has thus turned their right wing, and it is at their rear on the right bank of the Mincio.

Nothing more is known of the fate of the fortress of Peschiera, but it is supposed that the Marshal, by this successful movement, will oblige the Piedmontese to raise the siege of that place.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

(Inclosure.)—Report of Marshal Radetzky of the passage of the Mincio. Mantua, May 30, 1848.

THE Minister of War makes known to the public the following report, which has just been received from Field Marshal Radetzky's head-quarters at Mantua (dated May 30).

"I had the honour to make known to the Minister of War, in my report of the 26th instant, my resolution to commence operations on the 27th or 28th instant.

"In conformity with that resolution, I began a hazardous, but nevertheless a completely successful flank movement, immediately in the front of the enemy, on the 27th instant in the evening. My gallant army marched the whole of that and of the next day, 28th, in 3 columns on Mantua, where, although much fatigued by the forced march, but notwithstanding that eager for action and in perfect order, they arrived on the evening of that day.

"At the same time I sent a brigade of the Division Lichnowsky, under the command of Colonel Baron Zobel, to the upper valley of the Adige, to make a false attack on the evening of the 28th and the morning of the 29th on the enemy's left flank towards Pastrengo, in order to deceive him, and to conceal the march of my army towards Mantua.

"I succeeded by this manœuvre in quickly concentrating my forces on the extreme right of the enemy, upon which I yesterday, the 29th instant, under the protection of the fortress of Mantua, which covered my rear, crossed the Mincio, and thus have turned and rendered harmless on the right and left banks of the Adige, from Lake Garda to Mantua, all the outworks and entrenchments of the enemy.

"But in order fully to be able to turn the flank of my adversary, and to debouch with the army on the plain, I was obliged to attack and take his fortified positions before Mantua and Curtatone.

"The army gloriously accomplished this difficult undertaking on the eve of the Saint's-day of our well-beloved Emperor. After 3 hours' hard fighting, the lines of Curtatone were taken;—about 2,000 men; among whom were a colonel and 66 officers, a whole Neapolitan battalion were taken prisoners, with 5 pieces of cannon, 4 powder waggons, and 1 standard.

"This, together with the assured possibility of being able to act with greater freedom in the plain, on the flank and rear of the enemy, were the fruits of this day.

"This action was fought by the 1st corps d'armée, with the divisions under the 2 Princes Charles and Felix Schwarzenberg of the first, and the brigade of Prince Frederick Liechtenstein of the 2nd corps d'armée, the whole under the command of Lieutenant-General Count Wratislaw. The further particulars will be given in a detailed despatch. I must, however, now mention General Count Wratislaw, the Princes Schwarzenberg, as well as the Generals Strassoldo, Wohlgemuth, Clam, and Liechtenstein, also Colonels Benedek, Dod, and Reischach, the 3 last of whom, at the storming of the lines of Curtatone and the trenches at Montanara, most particularly distinguished themselves. It is still difficult to name the bravest of the brave, among all the leaders and subalterns. The zeal of all was only equalled by their self-devotion. On this account, the loss among the soldiers is less considerable than that of the officers, who were everywhere with heroic courage at the head of their troops. The total loss is between 200 and 300 killed and wounded, among whom are 40 officers. To-day, the 30th, I shall advance up the Mincio towards Goito and Ceresara, with the 1st and 2nd corps, and leave the reserve corps in the centre, to follow up the rear of both and defend itself."

In consequence of this bold and successful manœuvre, the most decisive results may be expected, as the Field-Marshal with his collected forces is now on the flank and rear of the enemy's entrenched position.

SIR,

Foreign Office, June 13, 1848.

I HEREWITH transmit to you, for your information, copies of 2 despatches addressed by Baron Lebzeltern to Count Dietrichstein, and communicated by the latter to me; the one referring to an apparent intention of the Sardinian Government to act in opposition to their previous declaration with respect to maritime hostilities, the other directing Count Dietrichstein to ask for the assistance of Her Majesty's naval forces against an apprehended attack from the Neapolitan squadron.

In reply to the latter application, I have informed the Austrian Government that Her Majesty's Government, with every desire to evince on all possible occasions the friendly feelings of the British Government towards Austria, yet find it impossible to give orders to the British ships of war in the Adriatic to interfere in any way in the naval operations which may take place between the Austrian and the Neapolitan squadrons, beyond what may be necessary for affording proper and legitimate protection to the persons and property of British subjects.

M. DE LA COUR, who was appointed Chargé d'Affaires here by the present French Government, upon the departure of Count de Flahault, left Vienna this morning for Innsbruck.

WE learn from a despatch of Field-Marshal Radetzky, dated Rivolta, the 1st instant, which was received at the War Office this day (June 7th) by the common post, that he had attempted to carry the position of Goito, which is strongly fortified and defended with heavy artillery; the attempt was however unsuccessful, as the army was not sufficiently concentrated to make the necessary impression.

The Marshal having concentrated, on the 31st, the whole of his army round Goito, intended to renew the attempt, but a heavy rain set in at midday and continued through the whole night, which in those low grounds so interrupted the communication, that the battering train could not come up. The Field-Marshal was expecting impatiently the return of more favourable weather to reassume the offensive.

MY LORD,

Turin, June 7, 1848.

IMMEDIATELY on receiving your Lordship's despatch of the 31st ultimo, I called upon the Marquis Pareto, in order to represent to him, according to your Lordship's instructions, the prejudicial effect that might result to British interests, should the officers commanding the Sardinian and Neapolitan naval squadron proceed to bombard the town of Trieste.

I am happy to be able in reply to inform your Lordship that I received from the Sardinian Minister for Foreign Affairs distinct assurances that no measure such as the bombardment of Trieste had been ordered by the Government of his Sardinian Majesty, nor would such an act of hostility be attempted by the officers commanding the Italian naval squadrons before the port of Trieste.

MY LORD,

Turin, June 9, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith to your Lordship the votes of the following places :

			Immediate Union.			Deferred.
Milan 130,040	228
Brescia 85,334	35
Pavia 36,560	9

It is calculated that out of the whole population of each of the above-mentioned towns and districts, there were entitled to vote,

For Milan	132,882
„ Brescia	88,644
„ Pavia	38,173

The immediate union with Piedmont may therefore be said to have been almost unanimously voted.

There is little doubt that the votes throughout the rest of Lombardy and the continental districts of the Venetian territory will be nearly in the same proportion.

For the city of Venice the Provisional Government have called together a Representative Assembly for the 18th instant, to decide the question whether the political condition of the State is to be fixed immediately, or at the termination of the war.

The decision will probably be to follow the example of Lombardy and of the Venetian continental districts, for as the latter have already announced to the Venetian Government their determination to make common cause with the rest of Italy, it will be impossible for the city of Venice to attempt to continue as a separate and independent State.

A deputation composed of members of the Provisional Government at Milan is expected to arrive at Turin to-day or to-morrow, for the purpose of combining with the Sardinian Government measures for the administration of the newly-annexed provinces during the interval that must elapse between the moment of their union to Piedmont and the final organization of the new institutions which are to govern this kingdom under its new form.

the purpose of settling with the Sardinian Government the measures requisite for carrying on the administration of the provinces of Lombardy until the future institutions of the whole country shall have been established on an uniform and permanent system.

A deputation, at the head of which is Count Casati, President of the Provisional Government of Milan, has proceeded to the headquarters of His Sardinian Majesty at Peschiera, for the purpose of laying before His Majesty the result of the votes of the population of Lombardy, for their immediate union with Piedmont and the States of His Majesty King Charles Albert.

The numbers are, for immediate union 561,000; for deferred union, 625.

(Extract) Florence, June 6, 1848.

I HAVE received information this morning from Ancona, that the return of the Neapolitan troops from Ferrara has excited great indignation against them, and a deputation had left the town to forbid their passing through it. The whole country is represented as being in a ferment against them, and should they not keep together, they run a great risk of being massacred.

The mob at Ancona are impressed with the idea that England is aiding Austria, and that the English fleet in the Adriatic had saved the Austrian fleet from capture.

The Neapolitan Consul's arms had been pulled down and dragged about the town in the most ignominious manner, and the English Consul was not without alarm that a similar demonstration might be made against Her Majesty's arms.

The liberal press here at present is certainly not favourably disposed towards England, and a very violent article appeared in the "Patria" a few days ago relative to Lord Napier's conduct at Naples, insinuating that he was the chief supporter of the King in the late counter-revolution.

A riot has taken place at Leghorn, in which the mob vociferated "Viva Carlo Albert, King of Italy;" "Down with Leopold the Second!"

The mob was speedily dispersed by the interference of the national guard.

It is believed that the loss of the Tuscan army has been very considerable in the defeat which they have lately sustained from the Austrians.

I HAVE the honour to transmit for your Lordship's information, a translation of an address to the Lombards respecting the incorporation of Lombardy with Piedmont.

By this document, published to-day, your Lordship will perceive there are 561,002 votes for an immediate incorporation, and only 681 for its delay. (Inclosure.)—Proclamation of the Provisional Government of Lombardy.
 (Translation.)

LOMBARDS!

Milan, June 8, 1848.

THE nation, in the full and free exercise of its sovereignty, has decided on its political condition.

To-day, at a solemn meeting, in the presence of the archbishop of this metropolis, of the chiefs of the highest rank in the magistracy, of the national guard, and of the army, the Provisional Government has published the result of the registers containing the signatures of the inhabitants in all the parishes of all those parts of Lombardy freed from the enemy, besides those of the citizens belonging to the regular troops and corps of volunteers in the Lombard and Venetian territory, agreeably to the system of voting promulgated in the law of 12th May, 1848.

This result has been embodied in a notarial act by the citizens Tomasso Grossi and Giuseppe Alberti, notaries in Milan; an act which will be preserved in the national archives of S. Fedele. The votes are as follows:

Votes.—561,002 signatures for the immediate incorporation.

„ 681 signatures for its delay.

The people of Lombardy have therefore sanctioned almost unanimously the following proposition:

“We, the undersigned, yielding to the paramount necessity, that the whole of Italy should be freed from the foreign yoke, and that the war of independence should be continued with every possible effort, as Lombards, in the name and for the interest of those provinces, and, as Italians, for the interest of the whole nation, do vote from this moment for the immediate incorporation of the Lombard Provinces with the Sardinian States, on the understanding that a common Constituent Assembly shall be convoked of the above-mentioned States, and of all the others as shall assent to be incorporated on the basis of universal suffrage; which Assembly shall discuss and establish the basis and forms of a new Monarchical Constitution with the dynasty of Savoy."

Lombards! you have consummated an act of profound civil prudence; you have laid the foundation of that edifice which so many centuries have laboured in vain to erect, and which the present age shall see spring up on a solid basis to the eternal glory and safety of the whole nation. That judgment, that patriotism, which were your guides and support in bringing forward this great work will not diminish when you are bringing it to completion.

Now, while the Provisional Government (as laid down in the XIVth Article of the Law of 12th May) hastens to make public the vote of the nation, they announce that they will communicate it to the Government of His Sardinian Majesty, in order that, when agreed to by the King and the Chambers, it may be immediately carried into effect.

At the same time, the Provisional Government mindful of their own engagements, declare that they will actively occupy themselves in framing laws for the present administration of Lombardy, in concert with the Government of Sardinia, until the Constituent Assembly shall adopt such definite measures as may be deemed necessary. For this purpose a special commission will set off immediately for Turin.

They declare also that in the interval, till the meeting of the Constituent Assembly, the people of Lombardy shall preserve intact their franchises, viz.:

The Liberty of the Press;

The Right of Association;

The National Guard;

in the form and extent both "de jure et de facto;" and that the law on which the Constituent Assembly shall be convoked will be based on universal suffrage.

Lombards! after having gloriously gained independence and liberty, you have determined to consolidate them by a fraternal union with one of the great parts of the Italian family under the constitutional sceptre of a dynasty so well deserving of all Italy. And all Italy, from the Alps to the 2 seas, will applaud your wise resolution, and the brave army of the magnanimous King Charles Albert will exult in the certainty of being joined to you in an indissoluble bond, strengthened by mutual esteem and mutual affection.

No. 461.—Mr. Magenis to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received June 16.)

MY LORD,

Vienna, June 9, 1848.

ACCOUNTS which were received yesterday evening at the War Office from Marshal Radetzky, dated Rivolta, the 3rd instant, announce that having ascertained that the Piedmontese army amounted to nearly 60,000 men, independently of the Crociati and Civic Guard, he had deemed it advisable to concentrate his army in the strong position between Rivolta and Goito, and there to await either the attack of the King of Sardinia, or, should a favourable opportunity offer, to resume the offensive.

The Piedmontese army holds Goito with a force of from 10,000 to 15,000 men, and has strong posts commanding the high road from Goito to Castiglione. The main body of the army occupies the position of Volta, behind that road, which is called in Marshal Radetzky's report "almost unattackable and commanding."

Marshal Radetzky also announces the surrender of Peschiera to the King of Sardinia on the 30th ultimo, after a siege which had lasted from the 26th April.

It appears from this report that Marshal Radetzky is in a much less favourable position than was supposed after his passage of the Mincio, and that the Sardinian army have their retreat open, if necessary, to Brescia. They are also most accurately informed by the peasantry, which is favourable to their cause, of every movement of the Austrian army; whilst the latter find great difficulty in obtaining any knowledge of the movements of their enemy, a difficulty which the nature of the country increases. I have thought it right to forward to your Lordship these accounts, although it is possible that Lord Ponsonby may have already made them known to you from Innspruck. I have, &c.

No. 462.—Despatches received by Prince Castelcicala from his Government.—(Communicated to Viscount Palmerston by Prince Castelcicala, June 17.)

(Translation.)

Naples, May 25, 1848.

WE cannot remain indifferent to the statements of so many Italian journals, which generally are translated, exaggerated, and commented upon in foreign papers, which all, or almost all, seem to be disposed and ready to disfigure the facts which relate to us, and to assert the most extravagant falsehoods, and to get from them reasons to slander and abuse our Royal Government by all sorts of insult and vituperation. The King has faithfully performed everything he promised on the 29th January, and always in the mildest way, perhaps too mild for the results which were to follow. The noble and patriotic feelings expressed by His Majesty, in his proclamation of the 7th April, amply demonstrate his sentiments by the lively interest taken by him in the holy cause of Italian independence; nor was his Royal mind satisfied with expressing his feelings in words alone. These were followed by deeds not limited to the dispatch of a few soldiers, but to the successive and rapid sending forth of several bodies of volunteers, of a land army of 12,000 to 14,000 men, and of a squadron of many steam and sailing ships of war.

And what effects have resulted from all this? Abroad, inexplicable hatred and aversion, and at home, plots, conspiracies, and unions to overturn the State and to substitute the Republic and Communism to the Constitution which was sworn to and received with joyful and enthusiastic acclamations. Yes, the Republic and Communism were not only the inclinations but the acts of that faction which desired at any cost to prevent the opening of the Parliament, which, cavilling on the form of oath to be taken by the Deputies, wished to reduce the Government to the impossibility of making further concessions, and which, surprised that everything was yielded by the King that could be granted, could find no other argument to annoy him than by exciting themselves to insult the Royal troops and to provoke them to battle. Those facts are known to all the inhabitants of this capital, and the guilty alone dare not state them to themselves such as they really happened, but disfiguring them according to their own fancy, they have published so many false tales throughout Italy, that the real facts are no longer recognizable.

But the Royal Government, strong in its sense of justice, soon and truly stated and established the facts as they took place, which unhappily demonstrated the perfidious intentions of wicked men to overthrow the Constitution, and to threaten not the kingdom only but the whole of Italy with the most frightful anarchy.

The unhappy result of what I have stated to you is that these plots and conspiracies have rendered it impossible for the Royal Government to concur, as it has hitherto done, in defence of the holy cause of Italian Independence, it being obliged, not less for its own defence than for that of all the Constitutional Governments of Italy, to recall the troops from Lombardy, and to combat the hydra of anarchy under the forms of the Republic and of Communism.

(Translation.)

Naples, May 25, 1848.

THE King's Government, anxious to reassure the minds of all persons to restore that calm and tranquillity within the kingdom which is disturbed unhappily by furious demagogues, and to contradict in foreign countries the calumnies which have been incessantly circulated against the King and the nation, notwithstanding the decrees, concessions, and sacrifices made by both, has thought fit to publish the proclamation and the 3 decrees hereunto annexed.

Subsequently to what I have written to you relative to the lamented occurrences of the 15th May, the Royal Government, with the view of remedying so far as it is in its power the disastrous acts alluded to and their fatal results, has thought it of the utmost urgency to bring out this publication, in which the good faith of the King's sentiments is made manifest in the most noble way, as well as his firm resolution to carry into effect and to maintain the Constitution, and to call the Legislative Chambers together again with all due haste, appointing the 1st day of July next for the opening of the Parliament.

I request you will give to this printed paper all the publicity and employ all the means which are in your power to give the lie to the false clamours and untruths of the newspapers, and to the sophistry and machinations by which the reputation of the King and of the Royal Government is shamefully defamed.

You will use every effort to convince the public that a band of insurgents attempted to overthrow the present Government with the sole object of substituting Republican and Communist forms in its stead; and that they are the only and true cause of the sufferings of the kingdom and of the Italian cause, to which it is now become impracticable to continue to render assistance as it was intended; and no reasonable man can deny the urgent necessity of defending our constitutional institutions, which in their fall would drag down with them the Constitutions of the entire Peninsula.

Proclamation and Decrees issued by the King of Naples.—May 24, 1848.
(Translation.)

NEAPOLITANS,

Naples, May 24, 1848.

DEEPLY afflicted by the horrible occurrence of the 15th of May, our most sincere desire is to alleviate its consequences, as far as that is humanly possible. Our most decided and unchangeable desire is to maintain the Constitution of the 10th of February pure and immaculate from every kind of excess; which being the only one compatible with the real and existing wants of this part of Italy, shall be the sacred ark upon which the destinies of our most beloved people and of our Crown will rest.

The Legislative Chambers shall be convoked again immediately; and the wisdom, firmness, and prudence which we expect from them will powerfully aid us in all those branches of the public service which have need of wise and useful reforms. All resume, then, your ordinary occupations. Confide unreservedly in our sincerity, our religion, and our sacred and spontaneous oath, and remain in the fullest assurance that the most incessant efforts of our mind are directed to the speedy termination of the exceptional and temporary state in which we are placed, and at the same time to abolish, as far as possible, the memory of the fatal disaster which has been inflicted upon us.

FERDINAND II, &c.

Naples, May 24, 1848.

SEEING the Royal Decree of the 17th May instant, by which we determined, in consequence of the imperious vicissitudes of the times, with great grief of heart, to dissolve the Chamber of Deputies, announcing that we should as soon as possible assemble another, after new elections :

Considering that no other means are offered to us of proceeding to the same without delay, than again to give most complete effect to the provisional Electoral Law of the 29th day of February preceding, and to make a considerable modification in the amount only of the census therein fixed for electors and eligible, and to revoke in all its parts the decree issued on the 5th day of April last, which, subverting its letter and spirit, violated the political constitution of the monarchy in one of its fundamental features :

Considering that such measure would be most conducive to hasten the electoral operations, inasmuch as the first lists of the electors and eligibles, made according to the provisions of the aforesaid law of February 29, were already in existence in the different townships of the kingdom ; and that nothing is now wanting to complete them, but to add as a supplement the names of those persons who must belong to them by the reduction of the property qualification, which is the object of the present decree :

Considering that by the definitive Electoral Law provision may subsequently be made for a new territorial division in appointed colleges, distinct from that of the existing administrative districts, to which from pure necessity the aforesaid Law of the 29th February must be limited in the election of Deputies (of which new territorial division the urgency of the times has precluded us from obtaining proper, adequate, and safe elements, in spite of our utmost solicitude), and that thus a basis may be settled for a permanent system, for the simplification and expedition of such important kinds of elections :

Considering that the difficulty before raised with regard to the circumstance that the chief towns of some few districts cannot furnish buildings capable of receiving the number of electors which should meet in them, may be easily obviated by determining that the electors shall meet to give their votes and to obtain the preparatory result in the chief place of the township to which they belong, and that the definitive scrutiny may be completed in the chief town of the district, so that the full result may be made known there of the choice of the different townships of which the district is composed :

Considering that, if it is necessary to post up the lists of electors in the places appointed by the Law of the 29th February, it is necessary to give a more extensive publicity to the list of the eligibles, in order that the electors, being informed of the names of those who possess the qualification required to be Deputies to the Chambers, may have full time to consider previously, and to give their votes prudently to those most capable and fit, by intelligence and civil honesty, to represent them successfully in the legislative discussions :

On the proposition of our Minister Secretary of State for the Interior ;

Having heard our Council of Ministers ;

We have resolved to decree and we decree as follows :

ART. I. Saving the modifications to be stated hereafter, the new election of Deputies shall take place according to the previous rules established by the provisional Electoral Law of the 29th February of the present year.

The Decree of the 5th April last, which changed the substance of the same, is wholly repealed ; and at the same time all the subsequent provisions which may refer to the said decree are also repealed.

II. The amount of taxable income required to be included in the lists which are the object of Article II of the said Law of the 29th of February, is reduced to 12 ducats per annum for electors, and to 120 for the eligible.

This new limitation of census must be applied to the various provisions contained in the second paragraph of Article II and in the other subsequent Articles of the said Law ; and on the same principle the first lists must be completed which were already formed for the occasion in the month of March last, in the various townships of the kingdom.

III. On the day named in the Decree of Convocation, the electors shall meet in the chief places of their respective townships, and shall there proceed to all the operations mentioned in the 20th and following Articles of the Law of the 29th of February.

But the scrutiny of votes given for the election of deputies there shall be only preparatory ; and the minute recording the result of the same shall be presented by the president of the college to the electoral junta of the chief town of the district ; which junta, assisted by the various presidents of the colleges of the townships, shall proceed to the definitive scrutiny with the same rules, in order to make known the names of those who shall have obtained the absolute majority of votes ; in failure of this, the election shall be understood as made by the simple relative majority, provided that this shall represent at least one-third and one more of the number of voters.

IV. In addition to the forms required by Article 14 of the said law of the 29th of February for publishing the lists, and after the expiration of the periods fixed for claims in the subsequent Articles 15, 16, and 17, the list of the eligibles shall be printed or distributed in all the townships of the respective district, to give means to the electors for obtaining a more accurate and easy acquaintance with the same.

Our Minister Secretary of State for the Interior is charged with the execution of the present decree.

Considering that both with respect to the formation of the lists and to the discussion of the claims upon the same, all the electoral operations may from this day be supposed terminated by the middle of the month of June proximo ;

On the proposition of our Minister Secretary of State for the Interior ;

Having heard our Council of Ministers ;

No. 463.—Mr. Magenis to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. June 17.)
 MY LORD, Vienna, June 11, 1848.

It appears from a despatch dated Trieste, June 8th, received here this day, from Her Majesty's Vice-Consul at that port, that the Sardinian Admiral blockading Trieste, notwithstanding his previous assurance, and the exact compliance on the part of the Austrian Company of Lloyd's with the conditions which he had prescribed, had not allowed their steam-boat, which left that port on the evening of the 6th, to continue her voyage to the Levant.

Later on the same evening the Sardinian fleet approached within the range of the batteries of Trieste, and some shots were exchanged but with little serious consequences, when it again stood off.

The best feeling appears to have been manifested on that occasion by all classes of the inhabitants. I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B. ARTHUR C. MAGENIS.

No. 464.—Viscount Ponsonby to Visc^t. Palmerston.—(Rec. June 16.)
 MY LORD, Innsbruck, June 7, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inclose the official report of the engagement which took place near Mantua on the 28th ultimo. The loss on the side of the Austrian army amounted to between 200 and 300 killed and wounded, among whom there were 40 officers.

The fortress of Peschiera was obliged to surrender on the 30th ultimo, after the garrison had suffered the greatest privations.

The attack made by the Field-Marshal Radetzsky the same day upon the tête-de-pont at Goito was unsuccessful, owing to the want of heavy artillery, which could not be advanced on account of the state of the roads; and the further operations on the part of the Field-Marshal have since been interrupted by incessant rains. His head-quarters on the 1st of June were at Rivalta.

I have the honour to transmit to your Lordship a further bulletin which has just been published by His Imperial Highness the Archduke John, containing accounts from the army to the 3rd instant.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B. PONSONBY.

(Inclosure 1.)—Official Account of the Engagement at Mantua.
 (Translation.) Verona, May 30, 1848.

THE Field-Marshal quitted Verona on the evening of the 27th, with a considerable part of the army, and by a bold and successful flank manœuvre marched by the enemy's line during the night and the following day in three columns towards Mantua. The Imperial troops, though much fatigued by this forced march, arrived on the evening of the 28th, eager for the engagement. At the same time a feint was made on the evening of the 28th, and during the 29th, by Colonel Zobel, under orders from General Count Lichnowsky, in order to deceive the enemy and cover the march of the army towards Mantua.

By this manœuvre the Field-Marshal succeeded in bringing his force to bear upon the extreme right of the enemy in passing the Mincio, and in thus turning all those strong entrenchments which had been thrown up during the last six weeks between Mantua and the Lake of Garda.

In order to take the enemy effectually in flank, and to reach the level country, it was necessary to attack and carry their fortified position at Curtatone in front of Mantua. After three hours' severe fighting, the lines of Curtatone were taken, about 4000 prisoners made (among whom were a colonel, 66 officers, and a whole battalion of Neapolitan troops), and 11 guns and a great amount of arms seized.

(Inclosure 2.)—Bulletin of the Austrian Army in Italy.—June, 1848.
(Translation.)

FIELD-MARSHAL RADETZKY has communicated to me the following intelligence from his head-quarters at Rivalta, dated June 3rd.

In consequence of the continued stormy weather, the roads were become impassable. The Field-Marshal employed the whole of the 1st of June, and part of the next day, to secure his position towards the Oglio on the west and Castelfreddo and Medole on the north-west, and to obtain intelligence of the enemy's position by extended reconnoitring parties.

By those which were placed under command of Major-General Prince Edmund Schwarzenberg he learnt that there were 10,000 men at Curtatone, of whom 3,000 were marching towards Marcaria beyond the Oglio, and the rest towards Brescia by Castiglione; that reinforcements had crossed the Po fourteen days previously, and had joined the army at Somma Campagna, and that Goito was defended by a force of 10,000 to 15,000 men, while the main body of the army was on the heights of Volta.

The Field-Marshal caused the second division of his army to make a strong reconnoitring movement on the evening of the 2nd June in the flat country near Cerlungo; but as the roads were still much out of order, and much time was required to reach the open ground, the advance of the troops towards Cerlungo could only be effected on the 3rd.

The result was, that the King, though he had a much superior force to that of the Field-Marshal, did not venture to leave his head-quarters on the elevated ground, and that Goito, Cerlungo, Quidizzolo, and Cereta, which are defended by strong detachments, form the advanced guard of his army.

The Field-Marshal will first strengthen his position at Curtatone, and so fortify the ground which he there makes himself master of for future offensive operations, that the enemy will not be able again to gain possession of it.

June 3, 1848.

AFTER the garrison had been forced, since the 12th May, to content itself with extremely scanty rations of roasted Indian corn, to which a little saltpetre instead of salt was added, after their supply of meat was exhausted on the 20th May, and their wine on the 29th, after the artillerymen had, without relief for 2 months, been obliged to serve day and night upon the fortifications, in the proportion of 1 man to each gun, and the number of sick and wounded had increased to 136, for whom neither sufficient medical attendance or relief could be procured, and after a forced contribution of 15,000 lire had been raised from the town for current expenses, which, though the inhabitants were poor and had suffered considerably by the bombardment, had become a matter of necessity, the commandant considered it his duty to preserve to the State a body of men who had so distinguished themselves, and, as he could entertain no hopes on any side of being rescued, entered into negotiations, through the medium of Major Ettingshausen, with the Duke of Genoa, for the surrender of the fortress, in consequence of which the capitulation was actually concluded at Cavalcarello, near Peschiera.

No. 466.—Viscount Ponsonby to Visc'. Palmerston.—(Rec. June 16.)
(Extract.) Innsbruck, June 9, 1848.

AT a late hour this afternoon, I had the honour of a conversation with His Imperial Highness Archduke John, and I have only time to repeat to your Lordship very briefly the main points.

After having passed in review the existing state of the circumstances of the empire, the question of Lombardy was determined by the declaration of His Imperial Highness that peace is to be made; and his reply to my inquiries as to its terms, "that they were not to be considered."

His Imperial Highness said that the Lombards might have the absolute disposal of their own fate, they might take Charles Albert for their King, or any other person, or do what they liked as to their Government. I referred to a well-known phrase, and said, "Your Imperial Highness, then, will accept peace quand même;" to which he replied, "Yes, so far as Lombardy is concerned; but we must keep Verona and the line of the Adige; it is necessary in order to protect Trieste, which is a key to our Illyrian Provinces."

It is impossible for me to communicate with Baron Wessenberg in time to send off my despatch, but I have reason to believe that no Minister will be able to control the action of the Archduke in favour of peace.

The Archduke authorized me to acquaint your Lordship with his opinion and views respecting peace, and I presume that what I have stated may afford grounds for preliminary steps, if it should be your Lordship's wish to forward a pacification. I am unwilling to intrude my opinion at any time upon any subject, but I will say that I think the Archduke is right both in leaving the Lombards free to take their own measures, and in the desire to retain the territories within the line of the Adige, for I believe that a cession of those would lead to a renewal of the contest in that part of Italy where it is so desirable to establish peace on some solid basis. The Lombards, by the retreat of the Austrians from all interference, will be at liberty to complete the union of the Duchies of Parma and Modena with the Milanese. All pretence for jealousy of Austrian aggression will cease, because Austria will have no interest to cause it; and there will not be, I am inclined to think, any strong feeling in the Venetian Kingdom against the proposed arrangement.

I NEGLECTED yesterday to say that, supposing Venice should again be under the Austrian Crown, that kingdom would enjoy a free constitution. The towns of Bassano and Feltre have already surrendered, and Field-Marshal Radetzky is at present advancing upon Vicenza.

MY LORD,

Milan, June 11, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that, on the 10th instant a body of 12,000 Piedmontese troops, commanded by the Duke of Genoa and General Broglia, surprised the Austrians on the heights of Rivoli, and gained possession of those heights with scarcely any resistance. The Austrians fled precipitately, part of them into the Tyrol, and part across the Adige.

The Piedmontese now occupy the strong positions of Rivoli, Caprino, and San Martino.

This important intelligence was published to-day in an official bulletin, which further states that a large body of Austrian troops, with numerous pieces of artillery, had left Verona to reinforce those already before Vicenza.

ROBERT CAMPBELL.

No. 469 —The Hon. R. Abercromby to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received June 18.)

MY LORD,

Turin, June 8, 1848.

IN the course of my interview yesterday with the Marquis Pareto, I inquired whether it was true that Monsignor Morichini had arrived at the head-quarters of His Sardinian Majesty on his way to Innspruck, charged with a mission from His Holiness the Pope to the Emperor of Austria, on the subject of the affairs of Italy, and with instructions to negotiate, if possible, the terms of an arrangement between Austria and the Sovereigns of Italy.

The Marquis informed me that it was true that Monsignor Morichini had arrived at His Sardinian Majesty's head-quarters; that he was charged with a mission to the Emperor of Austria; and that he expected that the Papal Envoy would come to Turin before he commenced his journey to Innspruck.

I took occasion to observe to the Sardinian Minister for Foreign Affairs, that I considered the surrender of Peschiera, and the late successes of the Sardinian troops at Goito on the 30th ultimo, as events coming most opportunely in aid of negotiations for a settlement of the Italian question, and that they appeared to me to afford to the Government of His Sardinian Majesty facilities for terminating the war now carrying on, which I trusted would not be lost sight of.

The Marquis Pareto having expressed his belief that Monsignor Morichini would shortly arrive at Turin, I did not deem it necessary to say more upon the subject at that moment, intending to press it further when the Marquis should have had an opportunity of learning from Monsignor Morichini in person the exact nature of his instructions.

Yesterday evening, however, I learnt upon what seemed to me to be good authority, that Monsignor Morichini had already quitted the Sardinian head-quarters on his way to the Tyrol.

I therefore called this morning at the Foreign Office, but I was unable to see the Marquis Pareto himself, as he was with His Serene Highness the Prince of Carignan. I however had an interview with the Chevalier Ricci, the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

I begged the Chevalier Ricci to inform the Marquis Pareto that my object in calling upon him this morning, had been to urge upon him the expediency of enabling me to report to your Lordship, as exactly as I could, the precise object of Monsignor Morichini's mission and the nature of his instructions; that I felt convinced that neither the Marquis Pareto nor himself required any fresh assurances on my part of the sincere desire of Her Majesty's Government to contribute, as far as possible, towards a satisfactory termination of the contest going on in Lombardy; that if a settlement of this question could be brought about by the sole intervention of His Holiness the Pope, an Italian Sovereign, Her Majesty's Government would regard such a result as a most fortunate circumstance; but that if trusting to the known friendship of Great Britain, the Sardinian Government were desirous that Her Majesty's Government should by their advice help to effect so desirable an end, it could only be by keeping your Lordship fully informed of the proposals which Monsignor Morichini is authorized to make to the Austrian Government; and that having heard that the Papal Envoy had quitted the King's head-quarters, I presumed that the Sardinian Government were now acquainted with the details of Monsignor Morichini's mission and instructions.

The Chevalier Ricci, however, told me that according to the information received, Monsignor Morichini was still expected at Turin, but that at all events he hoped by to-morrow or next day to be fully acquainted with the details of his instructions.

I gathered from the conversation of the Chevalier Ricci, that the principle of the Papal mediation is the complete and entire evacuation by Austria of the Italian provinces, and that the Sardinian Government were not disposed to listen to any propositions that did not admit of such a basis.

The present moment is so favourable for negotiations for peace, that it is greatly to be wished that every exertion should be made to effect so desirable an end; and should your Lordship consider the basis laid down by the Italian Courts, a just and fair one upon which to found a settlement of the Italian question, I entertain the belief that the Government of His Sardinian Majesty will gratefully acknowledge any assistance that your Lordship may be disposed to afford towards a satisfactory termination of the present struggle for Italian nationality and territorial independence.

M. LEOPARDI, the Neapolitan Minister at this Court, having addressed an official letter to the naval officer commanding the Neapolitan squadron in the Adriatic, requiring him to continue to act in concert with the Sardinian squadron, and to disobey any orders he might have received from the Neapolitan Government instructing him to return to Naples, has been recalled from his post as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at this Court from His Majesty the King of Naples.

I learn that a portion of the Neapolitan naval squadron has returned to Naples, and another portion has remained in the Adriatic.

The same division has occurred amongst the troops sent to co-operate with the Sardinian army for the expulsion of the Austrians from Italy, part having obeyed the order to return to Naples, and part, under General Pepe, having continued their march to join the forces of King Charles Albert.

I HAVE the honour to transmit 2 despatches to your Lordship from Mr. Petre at Rome.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

GEORGE B. HAMILTON.

(Inclosure 1.)—Mr. Petre to Sir G. Hamilton.

SIR,

Rome, June 5, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint you, for the information of Viscount Palmerston, that a decree (Motuproprio) of His Holiness on the political liberty of the press was published this morning.

His Holiness having reserved to himself by Article LXIV of the Fundamental Statute for the Temporal Government of the States of the Church, the right of regulating the political liberty of the press, freed from all previous political censure, declares the press free, under certain regulations as to the responsibility of printers, publishers, and authors.

All insults against religion, morality, the Church, and its ministers, will be punished by imprisonment for the space of from 6 months to a year, and by a fine of from 60 to 100 dollars.

Attacks directed against the temporal power of the Sovereign Pontiff, his mode of election, and the present form of Government, against the sacred person of the Pontiff, and the sacred College, against Sovereigns, or Heads of Foreign Governments, their Ambassadors, Ministers, and Diplomatic Agents, against the Upper and Lower Chambers, &c., will be punished by imprisonment of from 3 to 6 months, and by a fine of from 30 to 60 dollars.

All writings on ecclesiastical history, canon law, natural theology, ethics, &c., remain subject to a previous censorship by the ecclesiastical authorities.

Until the publication of the new law on criminal proceedings, the present mode of criminal procedure will remain in force against the crimes and offences declared punishable by the present decree.

Some curb to the licence of the press is felt to be necessary by most. I doubt the power of the Government in any attempt to put the new law into execution, as far as concerns political publications.

I have, &c.

Sir George Hamilton.

WILLIAM PETRE.

(Inclosure 2.)—Mr. Petre to Sir G. Hamilton.

SIR,

Rome, June 6, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint you, for the information of Viscount Palmerston, that the Legislative Councils met yesterday, when Cardinal Altieri, specially delegated by His Holiness for the opening of the Councils, delivered a speech, of which the following is a translation:

“Gentlemen of the High Council, Gentlemen Deputies,

“His Holiness our Lord sends me to you with the joyful and honourable office of opening, in his name, the 2 Legislative Councils.

“The Holy Father desires me to signify to you at the same time how such an act of his sovereignty satisfies his heart, from the confidence which he has of seeing, by your assembling, the system of the public administration bettered.

“He rejoices with you, and thanks God that he has been able to effect the introduction into his States of those political forms called for by the exigencies of the times, and which are reconcileable with the nature of his Pontifical Government. Now, it belongs to you, gentlemen, to endeavour to draw from the new institutions those benefits which His Holiness has wished for in granting them.

“The Holy Father will not cease to pray the Author of all lights to instil into your understanding true wisdom, and that the institutions and the laws on which you are about to enter may be endowed with that spirit of justice and of religion which are the solid and true foundation of all liberty, of all security, of all progress.

"The Holy Father has directed his Ministers to inform you, and to report to you chiefly concerning the state of our legislation and administration; he has in a particular manner directed that you be made acquainted with the state of the public treasury, in order to propose the means best adapted to amend it with the least possible pressure on the population.

"He has moreover directed his Ministers to present to you within a short time the projects of laws which the Fundamental Statute promises.

"The Holy Father entrusts to your good faith and unceasing care, internal order and concord. With these, gentlemen, liberty will turn to the advantage of all; with these, the best laws, liberal reforms, wise institutions, will be gradually formed. Instructed by long and painful experience, upholders of the Holy Religion which has its seat in this city, you will have to hope that no fulness of good will be denied to you by God, in order the better to be able to emulate the glory of your ancestors."

The day passed off in the greatest tranquillity. There was no great crowd, and little interest seemed to be taken in the proceeding.

The Cardinal went in great state from the Quirinal Palace to the Palace of the "Cancelleria," in the great hall of which, destined for the future sittings of the Deputies, the 2 Councils received his Eminence with much ceremony, as officially appointed by the authorities. 100 guns were fired from the Castle of St. Angelo during his progress. The members of the 2 Councils went in procession from the Piazza del Popolo in carriages lent by the Roman nobles, accompanied by the Senator and Municipal Counsellors, and by the clubs with their flags and banners, specially invited by the municipality.

The Chamber of Deputies consists of 100 members, but as half that number has not as yet reached Rome, no further business can be transacted; not even the verification of the elections. There are many double and triple nominations. It will therefore be some days before the Ministry can make known the principles which are to guide its conduct. Out of upwards of 4000 electors, not 800 could be induced to vote.

Cardinal Orioli, President ad interim of the Council of Ministers, has resigned on account of his age and health, and His Holiness has appointed Cardinal Loggia Cerroni, Bishop of Osimo and Cingoli, Secretary of State and President of the Council of Ministers.

I have, &c.

MY LORD,

Naples, June 8, 1848.

By a letter from Ancona, we are informed that a division of the Neapolitan army is in full retreat through the Papal States, marching in good order with cavalry and artillery, and paying for its subsistence, but avoiding the great towns. It is said to be between 5,000 and 6,000 strong, under the command of General Zola. It is reported from the same source, that another body of troops, which were at first inclined to obey the inspirations of General Pepe and join the army of the King of Sardinia, have been since confirmed in their allegiance, and having failed in securing the person of their Commander-in-chief, are also on the road to the Abruzzi.

The Neapolitan Government have been enabled to send about 3,000 men to Calabria, where the presence of a powerful force is required, both to confront the threatened invasion from Sicily, and to maintain the lawful authorities. At Messina some fighting has occurred, of which I have not ascertained the particulars.

NAPIER.

No. 478.—Viscount Ponsonby to Visc^t. Palmerston.—(Rec. June 19.)

(Extract.)

Innsbruck, June 12, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to report to your Lordship the substance of my conversation with Baron Wessenberg this day.

The Baron told me that the Austrian Government would immediately send to the Austrian Minister at Paris such an official declaration of the intentions of Austria as would put it into the power of the French Ministry to make known officially that Austria is ready to agree to the absolute independence of the Milanese, and to treat with them for amicable arrangements between the two countries; and in confirmation of this pacific disposition and attention, that this evening full powers should be sent to Marshal Radetzky, to make an armistice with the Lombards.

I venture to say that it is very desirable that peace should be made on a solid basis. I think it may be best for attaining that end, that there should be care taken to make the frontiers of each Power strong. I presume that the line of the Mincio, including Mantua and that of the Adige from near Verona, would give the Milanese great strength, and place them, as the Austrians would be in their position behind the Adige, in circumstances of locality, which would check any disposition to attack the one or the other by the difficulties which might present themselves.

Baron de Wessenberg will see M. de la Cour this afternoon. I have told M. de la Cour that I had spoken to the Baron, who appeared to me to be well satisfied to make an official declaration very fully in the sense desired by M. de la Cour.

In reply to my question, Baron Wessenberg assured me in the most positive terms, that if the Venetian Kingdom should remain connected with Austria, the Imperial Government would admit of the establishment there of a constitution upon the most liberal basis; extremely liberal were the words he used, and he repeated them.

No. 479.—Mr. Magenis to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. June 19.)
(Extract.) Vienna, June 12, 1848.

I INCLOSE herewith, in translation, the last official intelligence from Marshal Radetzky, dated Sanguinetto, the 5th instant.

It appears from this account that the Marshal had re-crossed the Mincio, and was retreating from his former position at Verona, having failed in his attempt to turn the Piedmontese army. He purposes passing the Adige at Legnano, which is but a short distance from Sanguinetto, and so avoids returning by the road which he took on his advance, and will join the reserve under Lieutenant-General Baron Welden now attacking Vicenza.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

ARTHUR C. MAGENIS.

(Inclosure.)—Extract from the "Vienna Gazette," of June 12, 1848.
(Translation.)

THE Minister of War has just received intelligence from Field-Marshal Radetzky, brought by a courier from the head-quarters, Sanguinetto, the 5th instant, according to which the Marshal had decided upon retreating to Verona, being convinced that his movement upon the rear and flank of the enemy by Mantua could no longer produce the object which he had desired. As, however, the direct road to Verona was not without danger, the Marshal had determined to pass the Adige at Legnano, and during this movement to attack at the same time Vicenza, by which means he would unite his army with the reserve under Lieutenant-General Baron Welden.

The Minister of War has also ordered that considerable reinforcements should be sent to our Italian army without delay.

No. 481.—Viscount Palmerston to Viscount Ponsonby.
(Extract.) Foreign Office, June 20, 1848.

I HEREWITH transmit to your Lordship copies of notes which have been addressed to me by M. de Hummelauer, requesting Her Majesty's Government to mediate between Austria and her revolted provinces in Italy, and inclosing memoranda of the points which form the basis of such negotiation.

I also inclose a copy of the note which I addressed to M. de Hummelauer in reply. I have now to say to your Excellency, with reference to your despatch of the 9th instant, that undoubtedly the arrangement which Archduke John has expressed his wish of obtaining would be the best for Austria if it could be obtained by the consent of the parties concerned, and if it could be securely maintained when once established; but, unfortunately, things seem now to have gone too far to admit of the practicability of such a plan, and if the war continues, the probable result will be that the Austrians will be driven entirely out of Italy, and that they will obtain no compensation of any kind for their loss of territory.

Hitherto, the military forces of the contending parties have been nearly balanced, and though the general result of the war has been in favour of the Italians, there has been no great advantage gained by them in any battle. But the Austrians are acting at a distance from their resources, and in a country the population of which is universally hostile to them. The Italians are at home, and are backed and aided by all the inhabitants of the country; large levies are forming in Lombardy, which will soon be ready to take the field in conjunction with the troops already under the command of the King of Sardinia; and time is in favour of the Italians and against the Austrians. It seems then to Her Majesty's Government that it would be wise for the Austrian Government to negotiate upon the basis proposed in my letter to M. de Hummelauer, and if the Austrian Government should consent to do so, your Excellency should take any step which might be conducive to that end, and go to any place where you might be able most efficiently to act, and you should of course place yourself in that case in communication with Mr. Abercromby, to whom a copy of this instruction will be sent.

No. 482.—Vice-Consul Campbell to Visc' Palmerston.—(Rec. June 20.)

MY LORD,

Milan, June 13, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that a deputation from the Provisional Government here, formed of Count Casati, the President, and Messrs. Turrone and Beretta, members of the same, returned this day from head-quarters, to which they had proceeded, and presented to His Majesty Charles Albert containing the votes for the immediate incorporation of Lombardy with Piedmont.

The deputation, which was received with manifest emotion by His Majesty, read an address to him to the purport that "Lombardy having decided on its political condition, they had the honour to present to His Majesty the act containing the votes of the people for the immediate incorporation of Lombardy and Piedmont, and that people waited with impatience till the Chambers and the Government of His Majesty should render the act valid."

To which the King replied, "What you now express is most dear to me. When I entered Lombardy, my only aim was to establish the independence of Italy without regard to family interests. I shall hasten to transmit the act to my Ministers, and order that it may be presented by them to the Chambers. I doubt not that the Piedmontese, the Genoese, and the Savoyards will greet the Lombards as brothers, and that the wished-for incorporation will immediately take place, the franchises be guaranteed, and such united efforts adopted as cannot fail to ensure the final liberation of Italy."

At the ceremony of the presentation of the act of incorporation, there were present the Duke of Genoa, the Count of Castegnato, First Secretary of State, the Marquis La Marmora, First Equerry of the King, the Lieutenant-Generals Salasco and Oliveri, Major-Generals Lazzeri, Robillan, D'Arvillars, and Rossi, and the officer on guard, Lieutenant Scatti. Franzini, the Minister of War, could not attend as he was confined by sickness to his bed. Signor Beretta, one of the deputation, remains at head-quarters as Envoy Extraordinary to His Majesty the King of Sardinia, instead of Count Henry Martini, who has resigned on his being raised to the rank of a Captain in the Sardinian navy.

MY LORD, Milan, June 14, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that last night an official bulletin announced the surrender of Vicenza to the Austrians on the 11th instant. The following is an extract from it:

Monfelicce, June 12, 1848.

"Since Friday last (the 9th), an imposing force presented itself before the city towards Camisano, converging on the road to Bassano. Early in the morning of Saturday (the 10th) Mount Berico was attacked. At 2 P.M. it was taken by the enemy in spite of the efforts of Colonel Azeglio and Colonel Cialdini, who were both slightly wounded: 50 pieces of artillery bombarded and fired grape-shot into the city. The fire continued from daylight till sunset, which was very destructive, particularly from 4 batteries on Mount Berico. The ammunition in the city being exhausted, General Durando, to save the city, proposed to capitulate, which was agreed to. The garrison went out with the honours of war, promising not to serve for 3 months during the present war. The lives and property of the inhabitants were guaranteed to them. The Austrian forces consisted of 30,000 men, with 60 pieces of artillery, and a strong body of cavalry, all in excellent order. The city has suffered little in the interior, but greatly in the ramparts.

MY LORD,

Milan, June 16, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to transmit, for your Lordship's information, some extracts from the official bulletin of this day :

"The city of Padua, seeing the impossibility of resisting the shock of upwards of 20,000 men with about 90 pieces of cannon, which were on the point of attacking it, has capitulated. The Lombard battalion there, and the Milanese sharpshooters at Treviso were called to Venice, where all the means of defence are now concentrated.

"A courier, arrived this day from the Valtelina, brings the intelligence that the Austrians in considerable numbers had attacked the heights of the Stelvio; but it has been officially reported to the Government here that although the Austrian forces in our front have been increased to upwards of 1,000 men, no engagement has as yet taken place.

"To-morrow a part of the battalions belonging to the first Lombard division, under the command of General Perrone, will leave for the camp."

The same bulletin declares the city of Trieste in a state of blockade by the Italian fleet, from the 13th instant.

THE Undersigned Admirals have the honour to inclose to your Excellency the declaration of the blockade of Trieste, in order that you may be pleased to make it known to the trade, and likewise to inform your Government. They have, &c.

Declaration of the Blockade of Trieste.

(Translation.)

THE 2 Admirals commanding the Sardinian and Venetian naval divisions, guided by the philanthropic intentions of their respective Governments, and moved by that respect for the sacred rights of people which honours and distinguishes civilized nations, have laid down for their principal object, while cruising in the Adriatic, to defend the cause of Italian independence, that of not causing any impediment to commerce, nor molestation to the trade of any merchant-vessels, including those of Austria.

And hence, in conformity with such principles, they would consider themselves bound to show every kind of regard in favour of the city of Trieste, provided the latter, intent upon her commercial affairs, remaining in her pacific character, had abstained from all military operations.

Considering now, however, that the city of Trieste, far from remaining exclusively commercial, has assumed the character of a place of war :

Being fortified by a castle, and by various batteries :

Having a numerous garrison :

Harbouring a division of ships of war, which, flying from the Italian squadron by the help of the steamers of the Austrian Lloyd's, now remains drawn up in the port, in a position to attack :

Fortifying with cannon the shore and the heights, in order to strengthen the system of cross fire :

Availing themselves of the assistance of the Commercial Company of the Lloyd's, armed for war, to maintain the blockade of Venice, and to assist in every way warlike undertakings :

Having been until now the centre of hostile operations against the Venetian shores, and the point of departure of troops, provisions, and munitions of war :

Having, on the night of the 6th June, opened a fire upon the Italian squadron, without the least provocation, while the latter was proceeding to take up an anchorage with the view of opening communications with the Government on the following day :

Continuing, notwithstanding the silence of the batteries of the fleet, to fire many cannon-shot, some of which reached, by ricochet, the Sardinian frigate San Michele :

Considering, moreover, with what ferocity the Austrian armies fight upon the soil of Italy :

The 2 Admirals, strong in their rights of war, and relying upon the opinions of the most celebrated and well-known publicists, declare the blockade of the city and port of Trieste, for all vessels under the Austrian flag, from and after the 15th of the present month of June.

Declare definitively the blockade for all other flags to commence on the 15th of July.

SIR, June 11, 1848.

THE Undersigned Admirals have the honour to transmit to you a copy of the proclamation addressed to the Governor of Trieste, by which they declare that they have established de facto, the blockade of the port and city of Trieste.

As it is possible, during the blockade, that the united Italian naval divisions may undertake some sort of military operation against Trieste, for that reason the Admirals have the honour to give you notice, in order that you may take those measures that you may think proper.

The Sardinian Admiral, for his part in particular, acquaints you that on the night of the 6th instant some cannon shots were fired from the forts of the city, some of which reached, by ricochet, the Sardinian frigate San Michele, and then the crews most courageously and ardently sought permission to fire. With the particular desire to prevent any harm from occurring to the Consuls or to the inhabitants, the desired permission was not granted, nor was a single cannon fired in return.

We have, &c.

No. 487.—Viscount Ponsonby to Visc'. Palmerston.—(Rec. June 23.)
MY LORD, Innsbruck, June 14, 1848.

A COURIER arrived here last night from Italy, bringing the important intelligence of the capitulation of General Durando at Vicenza. The Austrian troops, it appears, stormed 2 fortified heights in the neighbourhood, and threw shells from thence into the town, which surrendered after about 80 shells had thus been thrown. The terms of the capitulation are, that the troops under General Durando, amounting to 15,000 men, shall retire beyond the River Po, and that they shall not serve again against Austria for the space of 3 months.

The Austrians lost 40 officers and 600 men.

By the latest accounts from the army, Field-Marshal Radetzky was at Longare, with the first division of his army, at 9 A.M. on the 11th June, and was marching to Verona. The second division of the army remains for the present at Vicenza, for the purpose of establishing a junction with the corps d'armée of Baron Welden.

The Field-Marshal had also dispatched a brigade to Schio, in order to keep open the communication with Roverido, in case the Piedmontese, who have made themselves masters of Rivoli and of the road between Verona and the Tyrol, should make a move in that direction.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

PONSONBY.

(Inclosure.)—Ninth Bulletin of the Army of Italy.

(Translation.)

Innsbruck, June 14, 1848.

I HAVE received the following communication from Field-Marshal Count Radetzky, of the 11th instant, 9 o'clock A.M. from his headquarters at Longare, respecting the occupation of Vicenza.

The day before yesterday at 9 in the evening, I reached Vicenza with my army, and yesterday by 10 o'clock A.M. I had gained with my brave troops all the positions, entrenchments, and heights about the city, and to-day, I marched into the city of Vicenza, which is well provided with artillery and provision, in accordance with a capitulation concluded at 6 o'clock in the morning by Field-Marshal Von Hess, with the Papal troops, by which these troops of 15,000 men evacuate the city, cross the Po, and engage not to serve against us during 3 months.

Yesterday was a day of great glory for the troops of His Majesty. The 1st and 4th corps, and the division of Culoz, vied in bravery and intelligence, and the officers of the army covered themselves with renown, as they have always done, as well as the men. But the loss of the former is considerable. Their names and number, with that of the men, I shall not be able to communicate until I can send a more detailed account (about 20 officers, and 500 to 600 privates; of the enemy about 1,800). Generals Count Vratislaf and Baron d'Aspre, as well as the chief of division Culoz, whom I dispatched with his troops from Verona to Vicenza, have deserved my especial thanks; also the chiefs of division, and the brigadiers, of whom Major-General Prince William of Taxis was wounded, and Count Clam had a horse shot under him. Among the brave colonels of the army, who all did their duty, I must not omit Colonel Ropal of the 10th battalion of chasseurs, and Reischach, who were both wounded, and Kavanah, who was killed at the head of his regiment in this affair.

The captain of cavalry Prince Rudolph Liechtenstein was also slightly wounded, and 8 officers of the brave 10th battalion of chasseurs were wounded like their brave commander.

I march this evening for Verona with the first corps d'armée and the division of Culoz, in order to cover with my principal force that place, which after the occupation of Vicenza is my chief point. I leave the second corps here at Vicenza, to garrison this city in the meantime, and to regulate and secure the provisions and any subsequent movements. I also dispatch this night a strong brigade of this corps to Schio, to open for me the communication with Roveredo through the Val Arsa, and in case the position of Rivoli shall be occupied by the enemy, and the communication through the Etschthal shall thereby be endangered for the moment, to open it for me again by further movements.

I have also directed the corps which remains here in Vicenza, to put itself in communication by detached parties with the corps of Baron Welden at Montebelluno.

Finally, in order to the lasting interruption of communications between this place and the revolutionary Padua, I have caused a bridge of the railway on the road to that place near Pojano, to be blown up by Captain Molinary.

I have just received the following details, with the report of Colonel Von Melzer of the 9th instant, relative to the attempt made on the 7th instant under that officer, to open a communication through the Val Arsa, with 5 companies of Latour, 2 companies of the Grand Duke of Baden, the body of the Zöttel Militia, a part of the first company of Klausner Militia, another division of militia, a train of cavalry, a division of pioneers, and 5 rockets.

The troops were assembled in Chiesa at 6 o'clock in the evening, and set in motion in 3 columns; and the enemy was resolutely attacked on the heights of Pietra la Favella, where he had protected his whole position by stone walls and trenches, and defended it by rocks; he was driven back, and the steep heights, strongly garrisoned, and defended by a cross-fire were taken by storm, in spite of a heavy shower of bullets; we then removed by the greatest exertions, the almost insuperable obstacles placed in the way, consisting of stoppages in the valley 8 feet thick, walls built up of enormous blocks, roads dug up to the length of 200 paces, hollows excavated and bridges broken. A party sent out to make a reconnissance reported, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, that nothing could be heard of the lateral column of Baron Welden, and that the road in the direction of Valle de' Signori also was broken up. This, and the intelligence that the commanding heights both in front and rear were again held by the enemy who came in all directions, as well as the entire exhaustion of the troops, who since the preceding day had been on the march and without food, imposed the necessity of gaining the heights in the rear, which was not done until half-past 6 o'clock after continual fighting.

The fight was ended by the coming darkness, when our position was taken up about 11 at night, near Piano, when first the troops were able to take the necessary refreshment. Our loss consists of 1 dead and 10 wounded: that of the enemy, who nearly always fought in crevices of rocks, and behind blocks of stone, from 20 to 30 men.

The militia have shared with glory in the efforts of the regulars, as far as the frontier; the company of Zöttel a good bit beyond the border.

The officers and men both of the regulars and militia have performed wonders of constancy, bravery, and intrepidity. I have especially to mention the 7th and 8th companies of the Grand Duke of Baden, the latter of which, brought from Ala, was 32 hours incessantly marching or fighting; the 7th company engaged in covering the left flank (advancing up the Gems) performed its task in a way that nothing better could be desired. But I must particularly mention the skilful guidance and intelligence of Captain Kopal, who commanded this Company, and of Lieutenant Hofschuher under his command, who constantly preceded the troops, animating them with their example. Lieutenant Adolf Wunschheim, of the infantry of Latour, was much remarked for resolution and coolness at the same time.

I must in conclusion bear honourable testimony to the behaviour of the chaplain Amon, of the 1st militia company of Klausner, who, being dispatched by me on several commissions, conveyed them to the divisions in the midst of danger, and during the entire fight was a pattern of coolness to all.

According to a report from the Commandant of the station at Trafoi, on the Stilfser-Joch of the 11th instant, a body of insurgents of 300 to 400 men, chiefly Austrian deserters from the Regiments of Ferdinand Victor D'Este and Haugwitz, came down at half-past 8 o'clock in the morning from the heights of Ferdinand towards the place called the Cantoniera del Bosco, down the French heights, rolled great stones upon a building, which had been 8 days occupied by a forlorn post of 30 men, and attacked the post in front, and on the left flank; the detachment, too far from Trafoi to expect succour in time retreated to Trafoi, the insurgents followed on the ridge, and threatened to outflank the position of Trafoi. Lieutenant Bruder took up a position in face, returned the heavy fire of the enemy, and by climbing the heights, compelled him to desist from the attack, and to go back again to his first position on the heights of Ferdinand. The fight lasted from 9 o'clock until 2 P.M. In spite of the heavy fire of the insurgents, who advanced with flag and a mountain gun, no one on our side was wounded; but to judge from the loud cries and groans, many of the enemy must have been struck. The Chasseurs showed especial daring, and excited the general admiration of the musketeers, who also exhibited the most praiseworthy ardour.

Captain Halloy, of the Imperial Chasseurs, wished at the same time to make an attack upon the heights of Ferdinand, but the large quantity of soft snow would not permit the attempt. The insurgents burned the Cantoniera and a wooden hut on the French heights, and occupied their former position; but appeared to have intended to burn Trafoi, from which they were prevented simply by the prudent arrangements of Lieutenant Bruder, and the bravery of the garrison.

The enterprise of Count Radetzky against Vicenza has caused the Piedmontese army to march to the Etschthal, relative to which I have received the following announcement:

The enemy has attacked the position of Rivoli with his concentrated forces, after occupying Garda, Bardolino, and Affi. Colonel Baron Zobel, who held the command there, was in consequence induced to retreat to the Etschthal.

When afterwards on the 11th instant there had been fighting all day near Coronna, and it was ascertained that the enemy was advancing with all his forces towards our little troop there, the troops were marched to Vo and Avio; Madonna della Neve was occupied, and it was not without the utmost exertions that the passage to Ala and that of Roverido could be effected at high water.

The 12th passed without disturbance in the position mentioned. The communication with Verona for carriages is interrupted, because the roads from the right bank are exposed to the enemy's cannonade; but the pass is carried through the Val Fredda by Hugo.

The operations remaining to be effected by the brigade dispatched by Field-Marshal Radetzky to Schio, are, 1st, the restoration of the entirely free communication with Verona through the Val Arsa; and, 2ndly, the reinforcement of the brigade of Zobel, left in the Etschthal to keep off the enemy, while the Field-Marshal, who has reached Verona in the meantime, will direct the further operations in aid of his object.

The following communication has also been received from Baron Welden on the 21st instant, at 10 o'clock, A.M., from his headquarters at Spressiano before Treviso, relative to the operations of the corps of the army of reserve under his command, on the 9th and 10th instant.

The advance of the column under Colonel Wolf took place on the 9th, at 6 o'clock, P.M., after a severe fight and the storming of the enemy's position at Enego, where 4 guns, some mortars, provisions, arms, pikes, pistols, &c., fell into our hands. The details of this important affair, which has opened to us another road to Tyrol through Valsugana, driven the insurgents from their most advantageous positions, and given into our hands their guns and other ammunition, were as follows: when the attacking column, consisting of 8 companies of Haynau infantry under Colonel Wolf, reached the heights above Primolano, at 7 in the evening, it was received by a heavy fire from the enemy's guns, which, however, did not prevent it from occupying Primolano. As before arranged, a division was detached in the night under the command of Captain Vanderstät towards the right, over the Tyrolese border to Le Tezze, another down the valley of the Cismon, and a company over Rocca to Cismon and Incin.

These 2 lateral columns were to turn the position of the enemy on the 8th, and then the principal column, under Major Weigel, to attack in front. A heavy rain which fell on the 8th delayed the execution. It is true the left column reached Cismon, but found the bridges broken along the road to Incin, and occupied in force by the enemy. It suffered some loss by the rolling down of stones, and afterwards retired towards Arcié.

The column proceeding to the right, found in Le Tezza 2 companies of H. H. Ludwig and of Tyrolese riflemen from the Grobnor valley, and of the 1st Innsbruck academic company, under Captain Aigner, belonging to the militia of Tyrol. This captain immediately offered to place his detachment under the orders of Captain Vanderstät, with the Hayman division, which added to the strength of the whole expedition, and to this large reinforcement the success of the enterprise is chiefly to be ascribed. During the night, in the midst of a frightful shower of rain, they climbed up the Col di Fredur, the head of which they reached on the 9th at 5, A.M., and were immediately received by a sharp fire from the enemy, but, notwithstanding this, they descended in the rear of the position of Enego. Under a constant fire which lasted 3 hours, the enemy was at last compelled to retreat, and as now, the principal column, under Major Weigel stormed the position in front, after the broken bridge at Piovega di Sopra had been rapidly restored under a heavy fire of the enemy, Enego and the surrounding batteries were taken; by this affair, the middle column obtained 2 guns, that of Captain Vanderstät 1, the 2 companies of Ludwig, and the brave Tyrolese militia also 1, and the before-mentioned trophies. All the commanders speak highly of the willing and courageous behaviour of the young Tyrolese academicians and militia, of whom 2 were wounded. No prisoners were brought in of the enemy, but several were found dead at the batteries.

The whole affair took place under the heaviest pouring of rain, which, however, was as little able as the enemy to check our advancing columns.

I immediately gave orders to leave the captured guns and all the trophies with the brave Tyrolese, to occupy Primolano and Enego with 2 companies, to go down with 2 others to Bassano in the canal of the Brenta, and with the 4 others to "cotoyer" these movements on the hills.

On the 10th, the minds of the people in the neighbourhood of Bassano were observedly very much calmed. The magistrate of the town of Castelfranco, whom I had directed to issue a proclamation of a tranquillizing tendency, in relation to the murder of some of our wounded men at that place, replied to this with hearty thanks, and stated his readiness to afford our troops every assistance.

The parties dispatched in various directions from the brigade of Liechtenstein, fell in with a strong body of the enemy near Postuma, which had advanced from Treviso, but a flag of truce, whom I sent with a reply to the Commandant at Treviso, did not see the enemy until the porta San Tomaso; he was introduced into the city with great ceremony, where Colonel Zainpeccari commanded an inconsiderable body of Papal troops, and could reckon upon better treatment than was experienced by the veteran hero Field-Marshal Lieutenant Baron Bianchi, who was shamefully retained in Treviso as hostage.

On the evening of the 10th I received intelligence that during an incessant fall of rain, the columns from Cadore and Belluno dispatched in the direction of Toldo and Agordo, had taken this last lurking-place of the insurgents, and that the latter had been dispersed in all directions, by which also 2 guns fell into our hands.

At the conclusion, the following was added by Field-Marshal Lieutenant Baron Welden.

"I have now invested Treviso, and summoned the city to surrender; if this does not follow within one hour, no further negotiations shall take place, and the bombardment shall be begun."

(Inclosure.)—Baron Wessenberg to Count Casati.

Innsbruck, le 13 Juin, 1848.

SA Majesté Impériale et Royale, guidée par des sentiments d'humanité et de paix, désire vivement voir mis bientôt un terme à la guerre qui désole les provinces Italiennes.

A cet effet je suis autorisé à ouvrir avec le Gouvernement Provisoire établi à Milan une négociation qui serait basée sur la séparation et l'indépendance de la Lombardie. Le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Impériale et Royale n'y rattachera que des conditions équitables, lesquelles comprendraient principalement le transfer d'une partie proportionnelle de la dette de l'Empire d'Autriche à la charge de la Lombardie, plus un règlement qui assurerait certains avantages au commerce Autrichien, et quelques stipulations par rapport aux propriétés particulières de la Famille Impériale et aux pertes qu'ont éprouvées les employés militaires et civils à la suite des derniers événements.

Vous voyez, M. le Comte, que j'aborde dès le commencement la question avec toute la franchise possible.

Je vous informe en même temps que Sa Majesté Impériale vient de donner des ordres pour la conclusion d'un armistice à laquelle le Gouvernement Provisoire aimera sans doute à concourir.

Il ne restera qu'à nommer de part et d'autre des Plénipotentiaires pour conduire la négociation en question au but désiré.

Recevez, &c.

GEORGE B. HAMILTON.

(Extract.) Rome, June 10, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to report to you, for the information of Viscount Palmerston, that 52 Deputies being assembled in Rome, the Councils met again yesterday, when Count Mamiani, Minister of the Interior, read a speech to the Deputies about the nationality and the independence of Italy, and the justice and right of carrying on the war as long as a stranger shall occupy any portion of the Italian soil.

The speech concludes with the following passage:

"Gentlemen, the times are more than ever stormy. Amongst the people is an excessive impatience to change the course and even the principles and foundations of Government. All that which ages have accomplished and established with toil and length of time, is now threatened with sudden destruction. But after having levelled, it behoves to rebuild with great solidity, and with singular skill; and from this work will it alone be possible to judge of the value of modern political wisdom. The Ministry is fully confident that you, assembled in the eternal city, by the side of the unmovable seat of Christianity, will be able to accomplish the most difficult task of rebuilding and reconstructing; that you, in these arts of peace and policy, will know how to equal the glory of our armed brothers, who there on the banks of the Mincio and of the Adige, hold up against the insolent foreigner who hurled on our unarmed and innocent head, the lying accusation of disloyalty, of sloth, and of cowardice."

Venice, June 12, 1848.

I HAVE the honour to inclose a bulletin published this afternoon, announcing the capitulation of Vicenza to the Austrians.

It appears that Marshal Radetzky in person, having left Verona some days since, with the apparent object of giving battle to the Piedmontese, suddenly retired through Mantua and Legnago across the Mincio and Adige, and advanced by a forced march to Montenagna on the road from Legnago to Padua.

After refreshing his troops, said to amount to about 15,000, including a considerable force of artillery, Marshal Radetzky marched upon Vicenza, and compelled General Durando, who was in command there with a body of from 4,000 to 5,000 Swiss and some Papal regular troops, both infantry and cavalry, to capitulate.

The Austrians are now masters of the Vicenza end of the railroad, and there seems nothing to prevent their being on the shores of the Lagune at any moment. Padua is not expected to make any resistance, and neither that town nor Treviso are garrisoned by regular troops, but by free corps and civic guards.

The Austrians are represented as having received considerable reinforcements from the Tyrol and the Friuli.

By the merchant steamer Vesuvius has arrived the adjutant of the King of Naples, the Brigadier of the Marine Cavalcante, dispatched by His Majesty, the bearer of a peremptory order for the return into his dominions of the Neapolitan division which was united with the Sardinian and Venetian divisions, by very orders of the King, to fight in the cause of Italian independence. Accordingly, on the night of the 11th, the 3 steam-frigates and the brigantine departed, and in the following night the other 2 frigates.

Meanwhile we are happy to announce that the 2 Admirals commanding the Sardinian and Venetian divisions have formally declared the blockade of the city and roadstead of Trieste, to commence from the 15th of the present month for vessels under the Austrian flag, and on the 15th of July next for those of other nations.

Yesterday the Sardinian steamer Daino opened its fire on the battery of Caorle, and silenced it after 80 or 100 shots. It received 7 shots which did no injury.

This morning the same steamer and 6 pinnaces returned to port.

Venice, June 14, 1848.

IN acknowledging the receipt of the note from the Venetian Provisional Government, communicating to me the declaration and circular letter respecting the blockade of Trieste, I have thought it my duty to call the attention of the Venetian authorities to a paragraph contained in the last-mentioned document, and to protest, in the note of which a copy is herewith inclosed, against any attack being made upon the town and port of Trieste, on the part of the vessels acting under the orders of the Venetian Admiral, whereby the lives and properties of British subjects should be endangered, unless a further and more specific notice than that contained in the above-mentioned paragraph, of any such intended attack, be previously given by the Venetian Admiral.

I have forwarded copies of these papers to Her Majesty's Minister at Turin.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

CLINTON G. DAWKINS.

(Inclosure.)—Consul-General Dawkins to Signor Manin.

Venice, June 14, 1848.

THE Undersigned, Her Britannic Majesty's Consul-General, has had the honour to receive the note of Signor Manin, President of the Provisional Government of Venice, in date of yesterday, inclosing some copies of the declaration dated the 11th instant, of the blockade of the city and port of Trieste, issued by the Admirals Albin and Bua, commanding respectively the Sardinian and Venetian squadrons.

Signor Manin likewise transmits to the Undersigned a copy of a note addressed by the Admirals above-named to the Consular body at Trieste, communicating to that body the declaration of the blockade in question.

The Undersigned will transmit these papers to Her Britannic Majesty's Government, in compliance with the request of Signor Manin.

In the meantime the Undersigned begs leave to call the attention of Signor Manin to a paragraph in the letter already referred to from Admiral Albin and Admiral Bua to the Consular body at Trieste, which states as follows :

"As it is possible, during the blockade, that the united Italian naval divisions may undertake some sort of military operation against Trieste, for that reason the Admirals have the honour to give you notice, in order that you may take those measures that you may think proper."

"(Siccome potrebbe darsi il caso che durante il blocco le divisioni navali Italiane riunite intraprendessero una qualche azione militare sopra Trieste, perciò gli Ammiragli hanno l'onore di avvertirla per quelle misure che crederà opportune.)"

The Undersigned takes leave to state that he cannot consider the above indefinite notice as alone sufficient to authorize the adoption by the vessels acting under the orders of Admiral Bua, at any moment which that officer may think fit, of any military operation in the nature of a bombardment, or otherwise, against the city and port of Trieste, by which the lives and property of British subjects may be endangered.

The Undersigned, therefore, must protest against any such interpretation of the notice above cited on the part of the Venetian authorities; and the Undersigned demands, in so far as such military operations may be conducted by the vessels acting under the orders of Admiral Bua, that due and specific notice be given to the British Consul at Trieste by the said Admiral Bua, of his intention to undertake any such operations, in order that the British Consul may have time to provide for the safety of the lives and property of British subjects: in default of which it is the duty of the Undersigned to declare that he will hold the Provisional authorities of Venice responsible to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty for all injury and damage sustained by British subjects and property, in so far as the same may be occasioned by the vessels acting under the orders of Admiral Bua.

The Undersigned, &c.

Venice, June 13, 1848.

YESTERDAY was put forth a pressing address to the Provisional Government of the Venetian Republic, covered in a few hours with about 500 signatures, in which, taking advantage of the generous dispositions of the French Republic, its powerful succour was demanded in our favour.

Those who are of the same opinion, which is inspired by a pure love for the country, are invited to affix in the course of the day their signatures to some of the registers which for this purpose are opened in the undermentioned places.

ACCOUNTS have been received here that Treviso surrendered on the 14th, after having been bombarded during 12 hours.

The prisoners amount to 4000 troops, who are allowed to retire beyond the Po, on the condition of not serving against the Austrians before the expiration of 3 months. There are reports also of disturbances at Prague. It is said that Prince Windischgrätz has made himself master of the city.

I HAVE heard from good authority, that Marshal Radetzky, after providing for the necessary garrisons, has a force of 30,000 men, and that the Piedmontese amounts to 50,000.

These armies each of them occupy an extremely strong position, and are supposed at present to be unattackable with any fair prospect of success for the assailants. Radetzky has demanded a supply of 25,000 men, and promises with that increase to compel the enemy to make peace. It appears that the Austrian Government will not send the reinforcements. The pecuniary difficulty, were there no other, would prevent it; for at Vienna, they pay 20,000 workmen every day for doing no work, but for the purpose of keeping that part of the population quiet.

I informed your Lordship some time ago, that Baron Wessenberg told me he had sent full powers to Marshal Radetzky to make an armistice. The Baron ought to have said that he had sent orders to the Marshal to propose an armistice. The Marshal has remonstrated against that mode of proceeding, saying that his own position is inexpugnable; and that time must operate greatly and quickly in favour of peace, by the heavy expense which falls upon the Italians, and which is already the cause of much discontent and murmuring.

I have endeavoured to obtain a renewal and pursuit of the measure of your Lordship's mediation under such terms, and by such means as might enable you to succeed in procuring peace; and I have proposed sending to your Lordship some one authorized to learn at Paris the views of the French Government, and to proceed from Paris to London.

BARON WESSENBERG called on me this morning. He told me that the Milanese had formally offered the union of Lombardy with Piedmont; that King Charles Albert replied that he would communicate the facts to his Government at Turin, and that he did not doubt of the satisfaction which would be there felt. I took occasion to renew the expression of my opinion that Her Majesty's Government might be useful in bringing about a settlement which would produce peace. He asked what the British Government was doing. I said, "waiting for some reply from you to Lord Palmerston's last communication."

MY LORD,

PRINCE FELIX SCHWARZENBERG, who received a sharp wound at the late engagement, has been sent here to give an account of the military affairs in Italy. His report shows things in a more favourable light for the Austrians than was expected, and the Ministers here will combine when they reach Vienna, in 3 or 4 days, the measures necessary or fit to be taken under existing circumstances. As it is, 10,000 men are already on their route to join Radetzky, and I am informed that 15,000 more can be sent. With the 55,000 men which Radetzky would have upon the junction with him of these 15,000, he is confident in his being able to obtain very great advantages over Charles Albert. I think the Austrians will try their fortune. If their expectations are realized, their condition will, they think, be extremely improved, and peace may be made upon better terms than can now be had; if they fail, they think they shall not even then be much worse as to peace than they would be were it concluded. The question of whether or not the plan of Radetzky is to be adopted will be resolved at the time I have mentioned.

I think that if any part of the events and results expected by the Austrians should not take place, they will immediately send to your Lordship through Paris, as I have before mentioned.

M. DE HUMMELAUER est arrivé ici il y a 3 jours. Le résultat de sa mission ne nous laisse aucun espoir pour un appui direct du Gouvernement Anglais dans la Question Italienne, et les explications que viennent de donner les Ministres dans les 2 Chambres en effacent toute perspective. Néanmoins nous sommes trop habitués à la bienveillance du Gouvernement Anglais pour ne pas nous flatter encore qu'elle saisira toute occasion où elle pourra, sans compro-mettre ses intérêts, exercer son influence en notre faveur dans l'affaire en question, ne fut-ce que pour appuyer les conditions que nous devons mettre à une transaction avec la Lombardie.

Entretems, le Gouvernement Français a fait une démarche auprès de nous par l'organe de son Chargé d'Affaires à Vienne, M. de la Cour.

Avec la démarche du Chargé d'Affaires de France a coïncidé l'arrivée de Mgr. Morichini, chargé d'une mission particulière auprès de Sa Majesté l'Empereur. Cette mission n'est à ce qu'il paraît qu'une démonstration qui a été imposée au Saint Père par le parti dominant à Rome. Mgr. Morichini est chargé d'employer tous les moyens de persuasion auprès de Sa Majesté pour l'engager à une prompte pacification, et d'exposer en même temps que celle-ci serait impossible si l'Empereur ne consentait à l'abandon de toutes ses provinces Italiennes contre quelque indemnité pécuniaire. Une pareille démarche a le caractère de la dérision.

The Austrians are now in possession of Padua and Treviso, in fact of the whole of the mainland up to the shores of the Lagune.

Padua made no resistance whatever, but gave up on the first summons. Treviso made a show of resistance, but very soon capitulated. Venice is now full of free corps from every part of Italy.

No. 503.—The Hon. R. Abercromby to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received June 28.)

MY LORD,

Turin, June 21, 1848.

HER Majesty's Consul-General at Venice having communicated to me a copy of the declaration published on the 11th instant by Admirals Albini and Bua, commanding the naval squadron of Sardinia and Venice before the port of Trieste, by which those officers declare the town and port of Trieste to be in a state of blockade from the 15th instant, for vessels under the Austrian flag, and from the 15th July for vessels of all other nations; and also copy of the notice of the same date, addressed by the above-mentioned Admirals to the Consuls of foreign nations resident at Trieste, as to the possibility of hostile operations being undertaken during the blockade against the town of Trieste, I considered it my duty to seek an interview with the Marquis Pareto, but which his duties in the Chamber of Deputies prevented him from granting me before last night.

I stated to the Sardinian Minister for Foreign Affairs that my desire to see him arose from a communication I had received from Her Majesty's Consul-General at Venice, with regard to the contents of a paragraph in a notice sent by the Italian Admiral commanding off Trieste to the foreign Consuls residing at that port, from which it was feared that the Italian naval squadrons were likely to attack the town and port of Trieste; and I remarked to him the serious consequences that might follow the adoption of such a course, and how gravely the affairs of Italy and the position of Sardinia might be complicated by a proceeding that might call forth against her the energies and resources of the German Confederation.

I said to the Marquis that the declaration with which the Sardinian Government had commenced the war, that it was not their intention to excite hostilities at sea, or to impede commerce, had been generally applauded; that I willingly gave Admiral Albini every credit for his forbearance in not returning the fire of the forts of Trieste on the night of the 6th instant; and that I hoped I should receive an assurance that the same forbearance would be continued, and that the fears which the letter of the Italian Admirals had raised were unfounded. I should not be just to the Marquis Pareto were

I not to declare that he fully admitted the great increase of difficulty that an attack upon a town belonging to the German Confederation might create to the Italian cause, and the great importance of avoiding, if possible, all additional embarrassment on that score.

The Marquis informed me that the forts of Trieste had opened their fire on the Sardinian Admiral's ship in consequence of the current having set him in nearer to the shore than he had intended when coming to anchor, but that, notwithstanding this unprovoked attack, he had not fired a shot in return; and that the Italian Admirals entertained in general the most moderate views with respect to the execution of their duties.

It would appear from the information given to me yesterday evening by the Marquis Pareto, that according to his latest accounts from the squadron, the commanding officers of the English and French vessels of war at Trieste had made some overtures to Admiral Albini for raising the blockade of Trieste, provided certain Venetian vessels claimed by him were given up to him by the Austrian authorities, but without their crews: and that Admiral Albini in reply had told those officers that he was ready to accept any reasonable proposals that might be made to him to that effect.

This negotiation had not terminated when the last letters from the Admiral were dispatched, and it is to be hoped that since then it may have been conducted to a successful termination, and that all fears of an attack upon Trieste may have been removed.

The Sardinian Admiral had already consented to allow the vessels belonging to the Austrian Lloyd's to enjoy free passage, provided they were not employed for the transport of warlike stores or troops, and confined themselves to mercantile operations and to the carrying of passengers.

This permission appears, however, to have been abused, for a Lloyd's vessel being visited was found to have warlike stores on board, and was consequently ordered to return.

I did not fail to urge upon the Marquis Pareto as strongly as I could the expediency of abstaining from any attack upon the town of Trieste; and as he could not deny the embarrassment that any dispute with the German Confederation would occasion to the Italian cause, I am in hopes that such orders will be sent to Admiral Albini as may prevent any unfortunate collision.

I have nevertheless thought it right to transmit in the inclosed note to the Marquis Pareto, a copy of Mr. Dawkins' communication to the Provisional Government of Venice.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

M. LE MARQUIS,

Turin, June 21, 1848.

THE inclosed copy of a note addressed by Her Britannic Majesty's Consul-General to the Lombardo-Venetian Provinces and for the port of Trieste to the Provisional Government of Venice, being a reply on his part, as far as his jurisdiction extended, to the communication made to him by Admirals Albin and Bua, commanding the united naval squadrons of Sardinia and Venice before the port of Trieste, I think it right to communicate it also to you, for the information of His Sardinian Majesty's Government, although the conversation which we had together yesterday evening upon the subject to which the inclosed note of Mr. Dawkins refers, gives me every hope that the fears which the communication of Admirals Albin and Bua was calculated to excite, of an intention on the part of those officers to undertake hostile operations against the town and port of Trieste, will prove to be unfounded; and that the Government of His Sardinian Majesty, adhering to their generous and humane declaration at the commencement of the war, not to carry on hostilities by sea, or to impede the progress of maritime commerce, will in addition, by refraining from any attack upon the town and port of Trieste, avoid the evils which must result therefrom to the commercial interests of all nations, the embarrassments which might be created for Sardinia by such a proceeding, and the complications which might reasonably be expected to follow an act of hostility against the German Confederation.

RA ABERCROMBY.

No. 504.—The Hon. R. Abercromby to Viscount Palmerston.

(Received June 28.)

MY LORD,

Turin, June 22, 1848.

THE following financial measures have been proposed by the Count de Revel, Minister of Finance, for the approbation of the Sardinian Parliament.

These measures are intended to procure for the Sardinian Government pecuniary resources for the extraordinary expenses occasioned by the war.

A loan for 12,000,000 francs, guaranteed by mortgage on the estates belonging to the Order of St. Maurice and St. Lazarus, estimated to value 60,000,000.

A tax on house-rent and rent on apartments, estimated to produce 13,000,000 francs.

A tax on land-rent, estimated to produce 7,000,000 francs.

A tax on salaries, estimated to produce 3,000,000 francs.

Sale of rents belonging to the Government, estimated to produce 7,000,000 francs.

There is, besides, still remaining on the reserved fund 8,000,000 francs, which, added to the sums now proposed to be raised, will place 50,000,000 francs at the disposal of the Government.

The monthly expenditure for the army, and for the necessities of the war, is calculated to amount to about 5,500,000 francs per month; and allowing for an increase in the effective force of the army, it is reckoned that sufficient money will thus be provided to cover the expenses of the war for the next 6 or 7 months.

I have, &c.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

RA. ABERCROMBY.

No. 505.—Viscount Palmerston to the Hon. R. Abercromby.
(Extract.) Foreign Office, June 28, 1848.

It appears from the latest accounts received from Innspruck, that the Austrian Government have for the present given up the intention of employing the good offices of Great Britain for a negotiation with the people of Lombardy, and that the Imperial Cabinet means to enter into direct communication with the Provisional Government of Milan, and has with this view instructed Marshal Radetzky to propose an immediate armistice.

As Her Majesty's Government has not been asked to interfere in this negotiation, you will of course abstain from taking any part in it, except in as far as you may be invited to do so by the Piedmontese Government. But if the 2 parties should appear disposed to negotiate, with a desire that an armistice should be concluded, and you should find that you could be useful in smoothing any difficulties which may arise, you will not hesitate to do what you properly can for such a purpose.

It is not indeed very likely that the Italians will agree to an armistice unless accompanied by the proposal of an acceptable basis for a final settlement of the main questions at issue; because an armistice, unaccompanied by such a proposal, would probably be looked upon by the Italians as merely a means for enabling Marshal Radetzky to bring up his reinforcements; but that objection might be obviated by a stipulation that the reinforcements on both sides should be halted during the suspension of hostilities.

There is no doubt that the Austrians are prepared to offer acceptable terms to the people of Lombardy, and are willing to evacuate the whole of the country and to renounce all further claim upon it, provided the Lombards will consent to take upon themselves a fair proportion of the debt of the empire.

Such an arrangement would seem to be very desirable for the Lombards, who would be gainers by purchasing an immediate release from the Austrian claims and a cessation of war, even at a considerable pecuniary sacrifice; and I have been told that it is likely that the people of Lombardy would be found ready to agree to very liberal terms in this respect.

The only difficulty as to a final settlement will probably be found to consist in the decision to be come to as the Venetian State, which Austria will want to keep, and which the Italians will insist upon having set free.

If this State could be left to Austria with the consent and goodwill of the people, and with a prospect of its being an useful possession to Austria, Her Majesty's Government, anxious for the well-being and strength of the Austrian Empire, would see such an arrangement with pleasure. But it is to be feared that the war has gone too far, and that the hostile feeling of race has spread too wide, and has sunk too deep, to allow such an arrangement to be any longer practicable.

Her Majesty's Government, as you are already aware, have declined opening a negotiation in the capacity of mediators on such a basis, because they thought the attempt would have no chance of success, and they did not like to propose a scheme which they had reason to believe was sure to be rejected by one of the parties.

If the Venetians themselves should manifest a disposition to conclude such an arrangement with Austria, and you could be useful as a negotiator between these 2 parties, you might take any steps with that view which any communication that you might receive from the Venetians might suggest.

You will be at liberty to go from Turin, if you should see occasion to do so, to any other place where your presence may, in your own opinion, be useful, with reference to the matters to which these and your other instructions relate.

No. 507.—Mr. Milbanke to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. June 28.)

MY LORD,

Munich, June 21, 1848.

INSTRUCTIONS have been sent to the Bavarian Minister at Turin, to make strong representations to the Sardinian Government on the subject of the hostile attitude assumed at Trieste, both towards vessels leaving that port under German colours and towards the port itself, by the Sardinian fleet which now blockades it; and I believe M. d'Abel has been directed, in case the explanations given should not prove satisfactory, to demand his passports and leave Turin. I am not at present able to say with certainty, whether the step thus resolved upon was the result of a concert with other German Cabinets or not, but appearances have certainly indicated the prevalence of a general feeling of animosity against the Sardinian Government, ever since the blockade was established, and the public press in Bavaria has been active in fomenting it. Even the audience granted by the King to my Sardinian colleague for the purpose of presenting his new credentials, was sharply commented upon in the capital.

An interchange of communications took place some time ago between the Marquis Pallavicini and Count Bray, in which the former gave assurances intended to allay the suspicions which were then beginning to gain ground as to the probable designs of the Admiral in command. At that time Count Bray told me that circumstances might arise which would render the interposition of the Germanic Confederation a matter of duty and necessity, but he did not say to what extent that interposition would be carried.

MY LORD,

Naples, June 20, 1848.

IN consequence of the spread of disaffection in Calabria, and the apparent consolidation of a kind of Provisional Government at Cosenza in that country, the Government of Naples have sent several detachments of troops by sea to act against the insurgents.

General Nunziante has conveyed one part of the force to Pizzo, from which he has marched to Montelone on the high road between Cosenza and Reggio, and to the south of the former while General Busacca landed at Maratea, from which he will be enabled to attain the same road to the north of Cosenza. The insurgents will thus, should the combination be effected, find themselves attacked in front and rear, in a territory so confined, as scarcely to allow of escape on the flanks.

I am still under the impression that the revolt in Calabria will be suppressed by the Royal forces, but the rebels have certainly obtained a stronger footing than was at first predicted, and they have devised some colour for their proceedings by pleading the arbitrary dissolution of the Chambers before they met, and they affect to be in arms merely for the defence of the constitution, the integrity of Parliament, and of the rights conceded by the programme of M. Troja's Ministry now in part abrogated by the change of the Electoral Law.

THE electoral colleges, contrary to the expectation of many persons, have actually met in the greater part of the provinces, and the elections as far as can be guessed at, have resulted either in the choice of the same members, who were sent to the first Parliament, irregularly dispersed, or persons of similar political opinions.

In a few cases, the electors have merely asserted the validity of their previous acts, declared their delegates already appointed, and abstained from repeating the formalities required.

No. 510.—Mr. Magenis to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received June 30.)
(Extract.) Vienna, June 22, 1848.

FREQUENT reproaches have for some days past been addressed to the Minister of War through the newspapers, for his apathy in conducting the war in Italy, and appeals made to him,—in some of which the regiments which could be spared were designated,—to send such reinforcements to Marshal Radetzky, as would put the Austrian army upon a numerical equality with their adversaries in Lombardy.

These newspaper articles have drawn forth the accompanying reply from the Minister of War, which I inclose in translation.

Great sympathy and interest are felt here for the Austrian troops in Italy, and the papers contain daily lists of patriotic gifts, in the shape of money, clothes, &c., which have been sent to the Ministry of War for their use.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

ARTHUR C. MAGENIS.

(Inclosure.)—Reply of the Minister of War to reproaches of not conducting war in Italy with sufficient energy. (From the "Vienna Gazette" of June 21, 1848.) (Translation.)

FOR some time past repeated demands have been addressed to the Minister of War through the public journals to send 20,000, nay even 40,000 men to reinforce our army in Italy. The patriotic writers of those articles cannot take for granted in a cheaper mode that the Minister of War is animated with a less ardent desire than themselves to place our brave army in Italy, by every means in his power, in a position to obtain decisive advantage against an enemy who has hitherto been our superior in numbers. These well-intentioned counsellors may not, however, be exactly in a position to pass judgment on the means which the Minister of War has at his disposal for this object, nor are they acquainted with the obstacles which prevent him giving a destination which is certainly so much desired by all our troops to the regiments which they designate. According to the resolutions of the last Hungarian Diet, which since then have received a wider extension, the Minister of War can no longer dispose of the various troops in the Kingdom of Hungary, Transylvania, and the neighbouring countries, which form the military frontiers; he has even been obliged, in pursuance of an Imperial order, to send 2 regiments of hussars and 1 of infantry to Hungary, on account of the agitation which prevails there.

Recent events in Bohemia prevent likewise the breaking up of those troops which were ordered to proceed from thence to Italy; while the Government has deemed it expedient to maintain larger garrisons in another province (Gallicia) than is customary in peaceable times.

The not yet regulated march of affairs, which has manifested itself more or less everywhere, has exercised a prejudicial influence on the warlike preparations; as well as the stagnation of many commercial and industrial establishments has further necessitated, on the pressing representations of the Provisional Governments, leaving the troops required in every province for the maintenance of security.

These circumstances will convince the reflecting and reasonable authors of such articles, that it is easier to find fault than to prove the justice of their complaints. The augmentation of our army actually in progress (by the formation of reserve battalions, by which means such reinforcements will shortly be sent to our army in Italy as its glorious leader himself proposed), may serve to comfort all parties. Our last successes have diminished, for the period of 3 months, the force of our enemy by 22,000, namely, the garrisons of Vicenza and Treviso, which, according to the capitulations, are to retire beyond the Po. The Field-Marshal himself does not estimate the enemy higher than 60,000, consequently not nearly so high as our esteemed friends of their country, who do not cease to complain of the Ministry of War, and who do not take into consideration the present circumstances of the empire, which are totally different from those during our last war with France.

This is the reply of the Minister of War to all the interpellations addressed to him. He is prepared at every moment to justify his conduct to the proper authorities; he does not, however, think it necessary to come into the lists upon every isolated complaint.

THE MINISTER OF WAR.

No. 512.—The Hon. R. Abercromby to Visc^t. Palmerston.—(Rec. May 30.)
 (Extract.) Turin, May 22, 1848.

I HAD more than once been urged to endeavour, if possible, to assist this country in getting safely through the complicated position in which she stands. I considered what it might be possible and safe to do, because at the present moment there is such a jealousy of England, and belief among the public in her desire to support Austria against the Italians, that much caution is necessary not to do more harm than good. It seemed to me, after the unsatisfactory reception which our proposals for an armistice had met with here, that the only way in which England could really serve the Italians, was by her representations at Vienna, for there and in Germany the question of Italian independence will practically be decided. But to enable England to do so with effect, it was necessary to discover whether the Sardinian Government were disposed to listen to negotiations. For this purpose, I sounded ———, as being likely to be reasonable in their opinions. I stated to both of them that I spoke entirely on my own responsibility; that I took this step from a sincere desire to render every assistance in my power towards a termination of the present war, and to help to ward off the dangers which a continuance of it was likely to entail; but that I must, in the first place, know what would be the opinion of the Government with regard to a settlement of the dispute by way of negotiation instead of by the sword.

Both of them concurred in the desire to see the objects for which the war was originally commenced terminated by negotiation, and that speedily, rather than prolong the period of hostilities; but they both agreed in stating that nothing short of the complete evacuation of the Italian territory by Austria would satisfy the Italians. I cannot say that in this opinion they are unsupported, for I believe that any Italian Government attempting to negotiate with Austria upon other terms, would be looked upon and treated by the rest of Italy as traitors to the cause.

No. 514.—The Hon. R. Abercromby to Visc^t. Palmerston.—(Rec. June 30.)
 (Extract.) Turin, June 13, 1848.

THE Lombard deputation returns to Milan to-morrow or next day. The Provisional Government will resign in a few days, and commissioners, appointed by the King, will be sent to reside at Milan, and to conduct public affairs until the uniform system of administration shall have been established by the Constituent Assembly. 50,000 men have been voted in Lombardy for the service of the army, 25,000 of which are nearly organized, armed, and equipped, and will form part of the reserve now collecting on the Adda.

An extraordinary contribution of 25,000,000 livres has also been decreed in Lombardy, and will commence to be levied on the 1st July. The Provisional Government reserve to themselves the right of being consulted with regard to any extraordinary law that may be required to be passed in consequence of any unforeseen emergency. In all other respects they will cease to act in a few days. It is thought that the Constituent Assembly may be able to meet on the 1st of August, and that in 2 months from that time they may have terminated their labours.

I cannot find out the details of M. Morichini's instructions. In substance they are, I believe, such as I have described them, namely, complete evacuation of Italy by the Austrians, as the basis of the negotiation, with an offer of a financial arrangement for the benefit of Austria, and possibly the concession of commercial advantages to the Austrians.

Radetzky has moved in the direction of Vicenza. Some people say it is a retreat; and as he is said to be accompanied by the whole of his staff, and the Archduke is still with the army, it is possible that it may be so. The King is about to cross the Adige, and to enter the Venetian territory.

I took occasion, in consequence of some rumours that I had heard, to warn the Marquis Pareto of the serious danger there would be in allowing any act of hostility to be committed against the territory of the German Confederation; and I told him that any attempt to capture the Austrian ships in the waters of Trieste might at once have the effect of bringing the troops of the Confederation upon the Piedmontese army. His reply was perfectly satisfactory; and I hope that all risk of such a complication is at an end.

No. 515.—Viscount Palmerston to the Hon. R. Abercromby.

SIR,

Foreign Office, June 30, 1848.

I HAVE to remind you of the assurances given to you by the Marquis Pareto, and reported in your despatch of the 7th instant, "that no measure such as the bombardment of Trieste had been ordered by the Government of His Sardinian Majesty, nor would such an act of hostility be attempted by the officers commanding the Italian naval squadrons before the port of Trieste;" and I have to inform you that, when the Representatives of Germany have of late spoken to me on this subject, I have stated to them that such promise had been made to Her Majesty's Government.

I am, &c.

The Hon. R. Abercromby.

Between whom, the said Plenipotentiaries, the following Treaty has been concluded, subject to ratification :

ART. I. The Grand Duchy of Baden accedes to the Union formed by the kingdoms of Prussia, Bavaria, Saxony, and Wirtemberg, the Electorate of Hesse, the Grand Duchy of Hesse, and the United Thuringian States for the establishment of a common system of customs and commerce, and on the basis of the Treaties concluded for this purpose under date of 22nd and 30th of March, and 11th of May, 1833, on the understanding that the said Treaties, with such modifications as have been agreed upon on account of peculiar circumstances, shall be applied also to the Grand Duchy of Baden, and that the latter State, on consenting to submit to equal obligations, shall participate likewise in the same rights as the other States of the Union.

The stipulations of the said Treaties, together with the modifications, are contained in the following Articles.

II. In this collective Union are also especially included those States which have previously joined the system of customs and commerce of one or other of the Contracting States, either with their whole territory or with part of it, due regard being had to their special relations to those States with which they have concluded Treaties of Accession.

III. But those particular parts of the Contracting States which are not, on account of their position, suitable for admission into the collective union, remain for the present excluded therefrom.

Those regulations, however, which now exist relative to the facilities of commercial intercourse between such parts and the principal territory will be maintained.

Any further concessions of this nature can be granted only by joint consent of the Members of the Union.

IV. Corresponding laws relative to import, export, and transit duties shall prevail within the dominions of the Contracting States, but with such modifications as are not prejudicial to the common interests, and which from peculiarities in the general legislation of any one of the participating States, or in consequence of local interests, may appear necessary.

With reference however to import and export duties on certain special articles less adapted for commercial traffic on a larger scale, and with reference to transit duties in cases where the course of the commercial roads may require it, such deviations from the generally adopted rates as may appear peculiarly desirable to particular States, shall not be excluded from the Customs' tariff, provided that they do not operate injuriously on the general interests of the Union.

In like manner the administration of the import, export, and transit duties, and the organization of the requisite authorities in all the countries of the General Union, shall be put on an equal footing, with due regard however to the peculiar circumstances existing in such countries.

V. Alterations in the Customs' Laws, including the Customs' Tariff and the Customs' Regulations, as well as additions to and exceptions from them, can be effected only in the same manner as the introduction of the laws, and with the like consent of all the Members of the General Union.

The same rule also applies to all regulations involving a general change in the arrangements relative to the administration of the Customs.

VI. From the date of the execution of the present Treaty, freedom of commerce and intercourse, and at the same time a common interest in the Customs' revenues, shall commence between the Contracting States of the Union and the Grand Duchy of Baden, as stipulated in the following Articles.

VII. From the said date all import, export, and transit duties shall be abolished on the common boundaries of the States hitherto forming the Customs' Union, and of the Grand Duchy of Baden, and all articles which are already free to pass to and fro in the one territory shall reciprocally be imported free and without restriction into the other territory, with the following exceptions only :

a. Such articles as belong to the State monopolies (playing cards and salt), in accordance with §§ 9 and 10.

b. Articles of home production upon which at present either duties of different amount are levied within the Contracting States, or which are exempt from duty in one State but not in another, and which are therefore subject to an equalizing duty, according to § 11. And, lastly,

c. Articles which cannot be imitated or imported without infringing the patents of invention or the privileges granted by one of the Contracting States, and which therefore must remain excluded from importation into the State which has granted them during the continuance of the patents or privileges.

VIII. Without prejudice to the freedom of commerce and to the exemption from duties settled in § 7, the transport of those articles of commerce which, according to the common tariff, are subject to an import or export duty on the external boundaries, and from the territories of the Kingdom of Bavaria, the Kingdom of Wirtemberg, and the Grand Duchy of Baden, into the territories of the King of Prussia, the King of Saxony, the Elector of Hesse, and of the Grand Duke of Hesse, as well as into the territory of the Thuringian Union, and vice versa, shall take place only on the usual roads and highways and upon the navigable rivers; and there shall be established on the intermediate boundaries common station houses, where the carriers of goods, upon presentation of their freight-letters and transport warrants, shall report the goods which are to be conveyed from one territory into the other.

The preceding stipulations shall not apply to the traffic in raw products in smaller quantities, nor in any case to the minor traffic on the frontiers and at the town markets, nor to the luggage of travellers, neither shall any kind of examination of merchandize take place, except so far as may be necessary to ensure the payment of the Differential Duty (§ 7, c).

IX. Respecting the importation of playing cards, the existing laws of prohibition or restriction in the Contracting States of the Union remain in force. ♦

X. Respecting salt, the Government of the Grand Duchy of Baden accedes to the arrangements made by the Contracting Governments of the Union as follows:

a. The importation of salt, and of all substances, from which culinary salt is usually extracted, from foreign countries not belonging to the Union, into the States of the Union, is prohibited, unless it be on the special account of one of the confederated Governments, and for the purpose of immediate sale in their salt offices, factories, or depôts.

b. The transit of salt, and of the above-mentioned substances, from countries not belonging to the Union, into other countries similarly situated, shall take place only with the consent of those States of the Union whose territory is to be passed in the transit, and under such measures of precaution as they may think necessary to enforce.

c. The exportation of salt into foreign countries, not belonging to the Union, is free.

d. With respect to the trade in salt within the States of the Union, the importation of that article from one State into another shall be allowed only in case of special Treaties to that effect existing between the respective Governments.

e. If one Government should desire to import salt from another Government within the general Union, either from the public or from private salt works, such transmission of salt must be accompanied by pass-warrants issued by the public authorities.

f. If a State of the Union desires to import its supply of salt through the medium of another such State, either from abroad or from a third State of the Union, or if the first State desires to export salt through the same channel into foreign countries not belonging to the Union, no impediment shall be offered thereto; but, so far as no regulations on this point shall have been adopted by previous Conventions between the States concerned, the roads for the transport, and the requisite measures of precaution for the prevention of smuggling, shall be agreed upon.

g. If there should be such a disparity between the prices of salt in the Grand Duchy of Baden and in one of the adjacent States of the Union that danger of the smuggling of salt would probably arise for one or the other of those States, the Governments thus concerned will agree upon measures to avoid this danger, as much as possible, without causing impediments to the free circulation of other goods.

XI. With reference to those productions respecting which a difference of legislation still exists among the various States of the Union with regard to the imposts laid on them in the interior (§ 7, b), the Grand Ducal Government of Baden also acknowledges it to be desirable that a uniformity in the legislation and in the Customs' tariffs of such imports should be established, and the said Government will exert itself to accomplish this object. Until this end has been attained, and in order to avoid the disadvantages which might result from an unequal scale of imposts to the manufacturers of its own State, in relation to the manufacturers in other States of the Union, supplementary or differential duties may be levied upon the following articles:

A. In the States which hitherto formed the Union.

a. On beer, spirits, tobacco, must, and wine, in the kingdom of Prussia.

b. On beer, spirits, bruised malt, in the kingdom of Bavaria (exclusive, for the present, of the Rhenish circle).

c. On beer, spirits, tobacco, must, and wine, in the kingdom of Saxony.

d. On beer, spirits, and bruised malt, in the kingdom of Wirtemberg.

e. On beer, spirits, tobacco, must, and wine, in the Electorate of Hesse.

f. On beer, in the Grand Duchy of Hesse.

g. On beer, spirits, tobacco, must, and wine, in the States belonging to the Thuringian Union.

B. In the Grand Duchy of Baden.

On beer:

The said duties shall be fixed and levied, according to the following principles:

(1.) The differential duties shall be estimated by the difference between the legal duties in the country of destination and those to which the same article is subject in the country of its origin, and consequently such duties will be inoperative with reference to those countries of the Union where the same production is subject to an equally high or to a higher duty.

(2.) Any alterations which are made in the duties upon home productions of the States respectively concerned shall also be followed by alterations in the differential duties, but constantly with the application of the principle previously established in § 1.

If, in consequence of such an alteration, any differential duty would have to be increased, and in case such an increase be actually demanded, a negotiation on this point must previously take place between the States concerned, and sufficient proof must be given of the admissibility of the increase, according to the stipulations of the present Treaty.

(3.) The duty Tariffs at present legally existing in Prussia on must, and wine of home growth, on the cultivation of tobacco, and on spirits, as well as the duty at present existing in Bavaria on bruised home-grown malt, and on beer (malt tax), shall in every case form the highest rate of differential duties which it is permitted to raise on the importation of the above articles from a country where no duty is levied on the same productions, into any State of the Union where such duty has been or may in future be introduced; even if the duty in question, levied in the State which receives the compensation duty, should exceed the highest rate fixed.

(4.) No return of inland duties shall be granted on the transport of duty-paid articles into another country of the Union, unless the adjacent States thus interested shall have agreed upon exceptions from this principle, on account of peculiar local circumstances.

(5.) Under no circumstances shall differential duties be imposed upon any other products than beer and malt, spirits, tobacco-leaves, must and wine.

(6.) In all the States in which a differential duty is levied on tobacco, must, and wine, no further imposts of any kind on these products shall in any case be retained or introduced, either on account of the States or on account of the communes.

(7.) Articles proved in the manner prescribed in the Customs' Regulations to be foreign import or transit goods, and which, as such, have already been, or are still, under official cognisance at some Custom-House of the Union, and also those articles produced within the boundaries of the Union which are passing on transit only through a State of the Union, in order to be exported either into another such State, or into foreign countries, shall not be subject to differential duties.

(8.) The differential duty shall be for the benefit of that State into which the consignment is being sent; should it not have been previously levied in the exporting country, on account of the State entitled thereto, it shall be levied in the territory of this latter.

(9.) In each of the contracting States certain arrangements shall be adopted for levying the differential duty in that State of the Union from which the consignment takes place, either at the place from whence the goods are sent off, or else at the nearest and most conveniently situated Customs' office, or where payment of such duties can be ensured by proper notice.

(10.) Until such arrangements shall have been adopted by special agreement, the traffic in articles subject to a differential duty shall be in so far restricted, that they must, without distinction as to the quantities transported, be imported into the territory of the State entitled to such duty, upon such roads only as are stated in § 8, or as may be further defined elsewhere; and at the Customs-Houses which are to be established there, such goods must be respectively reported, or duty be paid on them; without however on this account subjecting the transport of goods, on which no differential duty is to be levied, to any further supervision than that which is prescribed in the before-mentioned Article.

XII. With regard to the excise levied within the dominions of the Union upon other articles than those which are mentioned in § 11, or upon the same articles in those countries where no differential duty is levied upon them, a reciprocity of treatment shall be observed as well by the Contracting States of the Union as by the Grand Duchy of Baden, in such manner, that the productions of any one State of the Union shall on no account be more heavily taxed in another State than the productions of that State itself.

The same principle shall also apply to additional tolls and excise levied on account of single communes: provided that this kind of impost be not altogether inadmissible, according to the stipulation No. 6 in § 11.

XIII. Highway or other similar dues, as well as paving and dyke rates, bridge and ferry tolls, or under whatever denominations such dues may exist, and without difference whether they be levied on account of the State or in virtue of private rights, for example those of a commune, shall be respectively maintained, or new ones introduced, whether for causeways or other ways, high roads, or communication roads, only to such an amount as may be proportionate to the usual expenses of the construction and maintenance thereof.

The highway-dues at present existing in Prussia, according to the general Tariff of the year 1828, shall be regarded as the highest rate, and shall not henceforth be exceeded in any one of the Contracting States.

Special charges for town-gate dues and for paving on causeways shall be abolished wherever they may still exist, according to the preceding principle; and the local paving dues shall be included in the tracts of the high roads or causeways in such manner that the highway-dues alone shall be levied according to the general Tariff.

XIV. The Contracting Parties will take measures to bring into operation a common system of moneys, measures, and weights, and they will cause special negotiations to be forthwith opened for this purpose.

The Grand Duchy of Baden accedes to the Convention already existing among the members of the Union, according to which the Hessian hundred-weight, or quintal, which is equal to the quintal of the Grand Duchy of Baden, and to one-half quintal in Rhenish Bavaria (50 kilogrammes), has been adopted as a standard for the common Customs' weight; consequently, the entry, weighing, and clearing at the Customs of all goods chargeable by weight, shall be made exclusively after the standard already legally established in Baden.

The entry, as well as the admeasurement and clearing at the Customs, of articles chargeable by measurement, shall take place there in the legal admeasurement of the country, until a common standard of admeasurement shall also have been agreed upon. To facilitate the transmission of goods, and for the readier dispatch of such consignments at the Customs' stations the Government of the Grand Duchy of Baden will publish officially for use at the Customs' offices in the Grand Duchy of Baden as well as for the commercial public generally, a comparative statement of the weights and measures which have been adopted in the tariffs of the other contracting States. Until the latter shall have agreed upon a common system of coinage, the payment of the Customs' duties in the Grand Duchy of Baden shall be made according to usage in the other States of the Union, and in such currency as the payment of any other home contribution or taxes is made there.

The gold and silver coins, however, of all the contracting States, with the exception of the small coinage, shall meanwhile be received at all the Customs' stations of the general Union, and without any distinction, from all persons who have to make payments; and for this purpose the valuation Tables, in respect of which an agreement has already been made among the members hitherto forming the Union, shall be published in the Grand Duchy of Baden, and vice versâ, the valuation of the coins of the Grand Duchy of Baden, computed according to those Tables shall be published in the other States of the Union.

XV. The water tolls on rivers, or way fees, including such dues as are chargeable on the body of the vessel (recognition fees), shall continue to be levied in future on those rivers to which the stipulations of the Act of the Congress of Vienna, or special State Treaties apply, provided that no other special arrangements shall be made on this point.

In respect to this latter point, and more especially in regard to the Rhine and its tributary rivers, the States of the Union which are concerned in the navigation of these rivers, will enter without delay into negotiations, in order to conclude an agreement, by virtue of which the importation, exportation, and transit, on the said rivers, of the produce of all the countries of the Union, shall be (though with a constant reservation of the recognition fees), if not entirely freed, at least relieved as much as possible from navigation dues.

Every concession granted by a State of the Union to the navigation of its own subjects upon the above-mentioned rivers, shall in like manner be conceded to the navigation of the subjects of the other States of the Union.

Upon the other rivers, to which neither the Act of the Congress of Vienna, nor any other public Treaties of State apply, the river dues shall be levied according to the private regulations of the respective Governments concerned; but the subjects of the Contracting States, and their goods and craft, shall likewise invariably be treated on equal terms everywhere on these rivers.

XVI. From the day on which the common Customs' Regulations of the Union are brought into operation, all the staple and package rights, which may still exist in the Grand Duchy of Baden, shall cease; as such rights have been abolished already in the other territories belonging to the Customs' Union; and no one shall be compelled to any stoppage, loading, or warehousing of goods, except in the cases admitted or prescribed by the common Customs' Regulations, or by the rules of navigation.

XVII. All dues for canals, locks, bridges, ferries, harbours, weighing machines, cranes, and warehouses, and all fees for arrangements intended to facilitate commerce, shall be levied only for the use of such actually existing arrangements; these dues shall, as a general rule, not be increased at all, but should they be so, in no case shall they be increased beyond the amount of the ordinary cost of construction and maintenance; and they shall be levied everywhere from the subjects of the other contracting States in a perfectly equal degree with their own subjects, and likewise without any distinction as to the destination of the goods.

No charge of fees is to be made for the use of weighing machines if used only for the purpose of ascertaining the Customs' duties, or for the general purposes of official Customs' control.

XVIII. The Government of the Grand Duchy of Baden will also on its part co-operate with the Contracting States of the Union to promote trade and industry by the adoption of uniform principles, and to see that the utmost freedom of action be given to the right of the subjects of one State to seek work and employment in the other.

The subjects of one of the Contracting States carrying on trade or commerce, or seeking employment in the territory of another of these States, shall not, from the period when the present Treaty comes into force, pay any taxes which are not paid by the subjects of the latter State, similarly circumstanced.

In like manner, manufacturers and tradesmen who are only making purchases for their business, or travellers who do not carry goods but only samples of them, for the purpose of obtaining orders, shall not be compelled to pay any further tax on this account, if they have acquired in the State of the Union where they reside, the licence for carrying on this trade by payment of the legal dues, or if they are in the employ of native merchants or tradesmen so privileged.

The subjects of any of the Contracting States who attend the markets and fairs in the other States in pursuit of trade, and for the disposal of their productions or manufactures, shall also be treated on equal terms with the subjects of the States thus visited.

XIX. The Prussian seaports shall be open to the trade of the subjects of the Grand Duchy of Baden as well as those of the other States of the Union, upon payment of precisely the same duties as are paid by the Royal Prussian subjects; and the Consuls of one or another of the Contracting States appointed at foreign seaports and commercial places shall be bound to afford aid and assistance to the subjects of the other Contracting States whenever it may be necessary.

XX. His Royal Highness the Grand Duke of Baden hereby accedes to the Customs' Convention,—concluded under date of 11th May, 1833, among the members hitherto forming the Union, for the purpose of protecting their common Customs' system against smuggling, and their duties upon articles of domestic consumption against fraud,—for the remaining period of the said Convention, and will order that such articles of that Convention as concern him be published in his dominions simultaneously with the latter. The other members of the Union will also on their part take the necessary steps to ensure the general execution of the stipulations of this Customs' Convention in their reciprocal relations with the States of the Union.

XXI. The common participation in the receipts of the Contracting States, consequent upon the present Treaty, has reference to the proceeds of the import, export, and transit duties in the Royal Prussian States, the Kingdoms of Bavaria, Saxony, and Wirtemberg, the Grand Duchy of Baden, the Electorate of Hesse, the Grand Duchy of Hesse, and of the Thuringian Customs and Trade Union, including also those countries which have hitherto joined the Customs' systems of the Contracting States.

The revenue arising from the following sources is excepted from the community of receipt, and reserved for the private benefit of the State Governments interested, unless separate Conventions between particular States of the Union determine otherwise:

(1.) The taxes which are levied on home productions within each State, including the differential duties, according to § 11.

(2.) The river tolls.

(3.) Highway rates, paving, dyke, bridge, ferry, canal, lock, and harbour dues, as well as weighing and warehouse fees, or any similar impost of whatsoever denomination.

(4.) Customs' fines and forfeitures which, belong to each Government within its own territory, after payment of the share reserved for the informers.

XXII. The amount of the duties which are to become common property shall be divided among the members of the Union in proportion to the populations with which they form part of the general Union, after deducting :

- (1.) The expenses which are mentioned hereafter in § 30 ;
- (2.) The restitution of erroneous levies ;
- (3.) The indemnifications and reductions of Customs which have been made by virtue of special joint agreements.

The population of such States as have acceded or may hereafter accede to the Customs' Union by virtue of an agreement with one or other of the Contracting States, guaranteeing an annual payment to be made by such State, as their share in the common Customs' revenue, shall be included in the population of the State which makes the payment.

The census of the population of each separate State of the Union shall be taken every 3 years, and the result shall be reciprocally communicated by the members of the Union to each other.

XXIII. Concessions to tradesmen respecting the payment of Customs' duties, which are not founded on the Customs' laws, shall be chargeable to the Treasury of that Government which has granted them. The circumstances under which such concessions may be granted are reserved for special agreement.

XXIV. Conformably with the object of the Union, which is the promotion of a free and natural movement in general commercial intercourse, special concessions in connection with the Customs, which are enjoyed by certain places where fairs are held, more particularly the privileges of discount, shall not be extended in those States of the Union where they at present exist, but rather be limited as far as possible, and be brought, as speedily as possible, to a total extinction, with due regard to the circumstances under which the maintenance of such hitherto favoured places, in their previous commercial relations with foreign countries, depends. In no case however, shall any new concession be granted without general consent.

XXV. Articles which are imported for the service of the Court Household of the Sovereigns and their reigning houses, or for the foreign Ambassadors, Envoys, Chargés d'Affaires, &c., accredited to their Courts, shall not be exempt from the payment of Customs according to the tariff; and if any remission be made for the same, it shall not be charged to the general account.

In like manner such indemnities as are payable in one or other State to the former immediate estates of the Empire, or to communes, or to privileged private individuals for abolished toll-rights, or for exemptions repealed, shall not be charged in account. But, on the other hand, every State shall be at liberty to allow, by means of warrants, the free ingress, egress, and transit of single articles, without the payment of duties. Such articles, however, shall be dealt with according to the Customs' Laws, and shall be recorded in Free registers, which shall be kept in the same manner as the other Customs' registers, and the duties which would have been leviable on them shall be deducted at the next adjustment of the revenue accounts, from the share of the State by which the free warrants have been granted.

XXVI. The right of remission and commutation of punishment shall be reserved to each of the Contracting States within its own dominions. Periodical returns of indulgences, and remissions thus granted, shall be reciprocally communicated on demand.

XXVII. The appointment of officials at the local and central district stations for receipt and control of customs, who, according to special agreement on this point, are to be appointed and instructed upon uniform principles, is left to the Grand Ducal Government of Baden, as well as to all the other members of the General Union within their own territories.

XXVIII. In like manner, the service at the local and district Customs' stations, in the Grand Duchy of Baden, shall also be under the direction of a Customs' Board, which Board shall be subordinate to the respective ministerial departments, and shall carry into general effect the joint Customs' Laws. The formation of this Board, and the regulation of its proceedings, is reserved by the Grand Ducal Government, but its jurisdiction, so far as it is left undecided by the present Treaty, and in the joint Customs' Laws, will be defined in common instructions to be agreed upon.

XXIX. The returns to be made up quarterly by the Receiving Officers of the Customs, and the final adjusted accounts, which are to be rendered at the end of the year, when the books are closed and balanced; as well as the accounts which have become due respectively in the course of each quarter, and during the whole financial year, shall, after previous examination, be made up in general statements by the Customs' Board of the Grand Duchy of Baden, in the same manner as by the respective Customs' Boards of the Contracting States of the Union, and these statements shall be transmitted to the central office at Berlin, to which Baden, like every member of the Collective Union, is entitled to nominate an officer.

From the said statements this Central Board shall make up, every 3 months, the provisional accounts current of the Confederated States, transmitting them to the central Finance Offices of the latter, and preparing the definitive annual balance account for the year.

Should it appear from the quarterly accounts that the actual receipts of any member of the Union have remained below its proportionate share in the general revenue by more than the average amount of 1 month, the necessary measures must forthwith be taken to make up this deficiency, by payments to be made by any State or States wherein a surplus receipt has taken place.

XXX. With respect to the expenses of levying the duties, and the charges of management, the following principles shall also be observed in the relations of the Grand Duchy of Baden with the Contracting States of the Union :

(1.) No community herein can be allowed, but each Government shall defray all expenses of levying the duties, and all charges of management incurred in its own territory, whether such expenses be for the establishment and maintenance of the Chief and Sub-Customs' Offices, the Inland Tax-Offices and Warehouses, the Customs' Boards, the provision for the staff employed therein, or for pensions to be granted to the latter ; or, lastly, for any other requirements resulting from the administration of the Customs.

(2.) Respecting that portion of the expense, however, which is necessary for the Customs' officers employed in levying duties, in supervision and control, or in watching on the external frontiers next foreign countries, and within the boundary district belonging thereto, an agreement shall be made for the payment of inclusive sums, which each of the Contracting States may deduct from its annual gross receipt of Customs, of which it has to render account to the Union.

(3.) On ascertaining this proportion of expenses, and where the collection of private taxes is combined with the levying of Customs, the salaries and official expenses of the Customs' officers shall be chargeable to the joint account only in proportion to their occupation in the Customs' service, as compared with their official duties generally.

(4.) An agreement will be made with the Grand Ducal Government of Baden upon general rules to bring the rates of salary of the officers employed in levying Customs' duties, in supervision, and at the Customs' Boards, as much as possible into conformity, having reference also to the Grand Duchy of Baden.

XXXI. The Contracting Parties reciprocally concede to each other the right of appointing Comptrollers at the Chief Customs' offices on the frontiers of other States of the Union, who shall take cognizance there, and at the Sub-Offices, of all matters connected with the dispatch of business, the guarding of the boundaries, the observance of lawful proceedings, and the removal of defects ; but who, for the rest, are to abstain from any individual interference.

It is reserved for decision of a service regulation to be more particularly agreed upon, whether, and in what degree, the above-mentioned Comptrollers are to take part in the transaction of the current business.

XXXII. The Grand Ducal Government of Baden shall have the right to delegate officials to the Customs' Boards of the other members of the Union, and vice versâ the latter to the Grand Ducal Customs' Board of Baden, for the purpose of acquiring a perfect knowledge of all business connected with the administration, or having reference to the community of interest agreed upon by the present Treaty.

The relative position and duty of these officers, which shall be similar to those of the delegates at the Customs' Boards of the other members of the Union, shall be further defined in a special instruction based on the consideration of unreserved candour on the part of the administration where these delegates exercise their functions, relative to all matters connected with the management of the joint Customs' administration, and the facilitating of every means of acquiring information on this subject; whilst, on the other hand, the solicitude of the delegates must be directed, no less sincerely, to the settlement of any doubts and differences of opinion which may arise, in a manner appropriate to the common object, and to the relations of confederated States.

The Ministerial Departments or the Supreme Boards of Administration of all the States of the Union shall reciprocally communicate to each other, when requested, all desirable information upon the common affairs of the Customs; and if it should be resolved to delegate, temporarily or permanently, a superior officer for this purpose, or to commission a Plenipotentiary otherwise accredited to the Government, every opportunity, according to the above expressed principle, shall be readily afforded to such delegate, in order to enable him to make himself perfectly acquainted with the affairs of the management of the joint Customs.

XXXIII. A meeting of Plenipotentiaries from the members of the Union shall be held annually at the beginning of June, for the purpose of deliberation in common, to which meeting each member is entitled to appoint a Plenipotentiary. For the formal direction of the proceedings at the discussions, the Plenipotentiaries will choose from amongst themselves a President, who shall not, however, enjoy any preeminence over the other members.

At the close of each annual meeting the place for the next meeting shall be agreed upon, taking into consideration the nature of the objects expected to be discussed at the ensuing Conference.

XXXIV. The attention of the Plenipotentiaries at the Conference shall be directed to

a. The consideration of all complaints and defects which have been perceived in one or other of the States of the Union, relative to the execution of the fundamental Treaty, of the special Conventions, and of the Customs' laws, regulations, and tariffs,—which may not have been settled and disposed of in the course of the year by correspondence upon the subject between the Ministerial Department and the Chief Boards of Direction.

b. The definitive settlement among the members of the Union of the common receipts, founded on such statements as are as necessary for the purpose of a proper examination, agreeable to the common interest, which statements are to be rendered by the principal Customs' authorities, and to be submitted by the Central Office.

c. The consultations respecting wishes and propositions for the improvement of the Customs' administration, which may be submitted by the Governments of particular States.

d. The negotiations respecting alterations of the Customs' laws, the Customs' regulations, the Customs' tariff, and the organization of the administration, which may be proposed by any of the Contracting States; and generally all matters referring to the suitable development and accomplishment of the common system of commerce and customs.

XXXV. If any extraordinary events should occur in the course of the year, at any other period than that of the ordinary meeting of the Plenipotentiaries at the Conference, which call for immediate measures or dispositions on the part of the States of the Union, the Contracting Parties will decide upon them by diplomatic means, or they will convoke an extraordinary meeting of their Plenipotentiaries.

XXXVI. The expenses of the Plenipotentiaries and of their assistants shall be defrayed by the members of the General Union by which they are deputed. The Staff of the Secretariat and the place of Assembly shall be furnished free of expense by the Government in whose territory the meeting of the Conference takes place.

XXXVII. The duties at present existing on many kinds of merchandise in the Grand Duchy of Baden being considerably lower than the future tariff of the Union, the Government of the Grand Duchy of Baden engages to take such measures as may be necessary to guard against any loss which the revenues of the general Union might incur from the importation and accumulation of large stocks of goods imported at a lower rate of duty.

XXXVIII. In case any other German States should intimate their wish to be admitted into the Customs' Union established by the present Treaty, the High Contracting Parties declare themselves ready to comply with such wish by concluding Treaties for that purpose, as far as it may be compatible with the regard due to the peculiar interests of the members of the Union.

XXXIX. They will also exert themselves to facilitate and to extend as much as possible the commerce of their connexions, by means of Treaties with other States.

XL. Whatever is necessary for the execution in detail of the stipulations of the present Treaty, and of its Supplements, shall be prepared by common Commissioners.

XLI. The present Treaty shall continue in force provisionally until the 1st of January, 1842. If, during this period, and at the latest 2 years before its expiration, no notice of its cessation be given, it shall be considered as prolonged for 12 years, and so on afterwards from 12 years to 12 years.

This latter arrangement shall, however, be observed only in case all the States of the Germanic Confederation should not in the meantime agree upon adopting such common measures as may fully accomplish the object of the present Customs' Union, as being in accordance with the intention of Article XIX of the Act of the Germanic Confederation.

Should any general regulations be adopted relative to a free trade in provisions, in all the States of the Germanic Confederation, the stipulations on this subject in the tariff of the Union at present in force conformably with the present Treaty, shall be modified accordingly.

The present Treaty shall be forthwith submitted for ratification by the High Contracting Courts, and the interchange of the ratifications shall take place at Berlin, within 6 weeks at the latest.

Wirtemberg, and of the Order of the Zähringian Lion of the Grand Duchy of Baden ; and, on the other part,

The Senate of the Free City of Frankfort ; represented by George Frederick of Guaita, Sheriff and Senator ; and Conrad Adolphus Bansa, Senator.

By whom, the said Plenipotentiaries, the following Treaty has been concluded, subject to ratification :

ART. I. The Free City of Frankfort, with its territory, accedes to the Union formed for the purpose of a common system of Customs and Commerce, by the kingdoms of Prussia, Bavaria, Saxony, and Wirtemberg, the Grand Duchy of Baden, the Electorate of Hesse, the Grand Duchy of Hesse, and the States united in the Thuringian League of Customs and Commerce, as existing on the basis of the Treaties concluded for this purpose, under date of the 22nd and 30th March, and 11th May, 1833, and of the 12th May, 1835 ; in such manner that the said city submits to equal obligations, in accordance with the stipulations defined by the present Treaty, and participates in equal rights with the other States of the Union.

II. In consequence of this accession, the Free City of Frankfort will cause the Customs' laws agreed upon on its part, together with the Customs' regulations and the Customs' penal-laws, as well as the Customs' tariff, which are to be considered as integral parts of the present Treaty, to be published and to be carried out simultaneously with this latter, abolishing at the same time the laws and regulations at present in force in its territory in respect of import, export, and transit duties, and the administration thereof, at present in force in its territory.

III. Alterations in the Customs' legislation of the Union, including the Customs' tariff and the Customs' regulations, as well as additions to and exceptions from them, can be effected only in the same manner as the introduction of the laws, and with the consent of all the members of the Customs' Union.

The same rule likewise applies to all regulations involving a general change in the arrangements relative to the administration of the Customs.

IV. From the date of the complete execution of the present Treaty, freedom of commerce and intercourse, and at the same time a common interest in the Customs' revenues, shall commence between the Contracting States of the Union and the Free City of Frankfort, as stipulated in the following Articles :

V. With the commencement of free intercourse all import, export, and transit-duties on the common boundaries of the Customs' Union as existing hitherto, and of the Free City of Frankfort, shall cease, and all articles already free to pass to and in the one territory shall be imported free, and without restriction into the other territory, with the following exceptions only :

a. Of such articles as belong to the State monopolies (playing cards and salt), in accordance with §§ 6 and 7.

b. Of articles of home production upon which at present either duties of different amount are levied within the Contracting States, or which are exempt from duty in one State, but not in another, and which are therefore subject to a differential duty according to § 8. And lastly,

c. Of articles which cannot be imitated or imported without infringing the privileges of invention (patents) granted by one of the Contracting States, and which, therefore, during the continuance of the privileges (patents) must remain excluded from importation into the State which has granted them.

VI. Respecting the importation of playing cards, the laws of prohibition or restriction at present existing in each of the contracting States remain in force.

VII. Respecting salt, the Free City of Frankfort accedes to the agreement made between the contracting Governments of the Union, as far as such agreement is applicable to its local circumstances, as follows :

a. The importation of salt, and of all substances from which culinary salt is usually extracted, from foreign countries not belonging to the Union, into the States of the Union, is prohibited, unless it be on account of one of the confederated Governments, and for the purpose of immediate sale in their salt offices, factories, or dépôts..

b. The transit of salt, and of the above-mentioned articles from countries not belonging to the Union, into other countries similarly situated, shall take place only with the consent of those States of the Union whose territory is to be passed in the transit, and under such measures of precaution as they may think it necessary to enforce.

c. The exportation of salt into foreign countries, not belonging to the Union, is free.

d. With respect to the trade in salt within the States of the Union, the importation of that article from one State into another shall be allowed only in case of special Treaties to this effect existing between the respective Governments.

e. If one Government should desire to import salt from another Government within the general Union, either from the public or from private salt works, such transmission of salt must be accompanied by pass-warrants issued by the public authorities.

f. If a State of the Union desires to import its supply of salt through the medium of another such State, either from abroad or from a third State of the Union, or if the first State desires to export salt through the same channel into foreign countries not belonging to the Union, no impediment shall be offered thereto; but, so far as no regulations on this point shall have been adopted by previous Conventions between the States concerned, the respective roads for the transport, and the requisite measures of precaution for the prevention of smuggling, shall be agreed upon.

g. If there should be such a disparity in the prices of salt in States immediately adjacent to each other, that danger of salt smuggling would probably arise for one or the other of those States, the Governments thus concerned will agree upon measures to avoid this danger as much as possible, without causing impediments to the free circulation of other goods.

VIII. Respecting the inland duties in which there is still a difference of legislation, even between the various Contracting States of the Union (§ 5, b), the free city of Frankfort also acknowledges it to be desirable that uniformity of legislation and of the Customs' tariffs should be established on this point; and the said Government will exert itself to accomplish this object.

Until this end shall have been attained, and in order to avoid the disadvantages which would arise to the manufacturers of one country in their relation to the manufacturers in the other States of the Union, from an unequal system of taxation, differential duties may be levied upon the following articles, viz.,

A. In the States hitherto forming the Union :

a. On beer, spirits, tobacco, must, and wine, in the Kingdom of Prussia.

b. On beer, spirits, bruised malt, in the Kingdom of Bavaria (exclusive for the present of the Rhenish Circle).

c. On beer, spirits, tobacco, must, and wine, in the Kingdom of Saxony.

d. On beer, spirits, and bruised malt, in the Kingdom of Wirtemberg.

e. On beer, in the Grand Duchy of Baden.

f. On beer, spirits, tobacco, must, and wine, in the Electorate of Hesse.

g. On beer, in the Grand Duchy of Hesse.

h. On beer, spirits, tobacco, must, and wine, in the States belonging to the Thuringian Union.

B. In the city of Frankfort.

On beer :

The said duties shall be fixed and levied according to the following principles :

1. The differential duties shall be estimated by the difference between the legal duties in the country of destination, and those to which the same article is subject in the country of its origin, and consequently such duties will be inoperative with reference to those countries of the Union where the same production is subject to an equally high or to a higher duty.

2. Any alterations which are made in the duties upon home productions of the States respectively concerned, shall also be followed by alterations in the differential duties, but constantly with the application of the principle previously established in § 1.

Where on account of such an alteration any differential duty would have to be increased, and in case such an increase be actually demanded, a negotiation on this point must previously take place between the States concerned, and sufficient proof must be given of the admissibility of the increase, according to the stipulations of the present Treaty.

3. The duty-tariffs at present legally existing in Prussia on must and wine of home growth, on the cultivation of tobacco, and on spirits, as well as the duty at present existing in Bavaria on bruised home-grown malt and on beer (Malt Tax), shall in every case form the highest rate of differential duties which it is permitted to raise on the importation of the above articles from a country where no duty is levied on the same productions, into any State of the Union where such duty has been or may in future be introduced; even if the duty in question, levied in the State which receives the compensation duty, should exceed the highest rate fixed.

4. No return of inland duties shall be granted on the transport of duty-paid articles into another country of the Union, unless the adjacent States thus interested shall have agreed upon exceptions from this principle, on account of peculiar local circumstances.

5. Under no circumstances shall differential duties be imposed upon any other products than beer and malt, spirits, tobacco-leaves, must, and wine.

6. In all the States in which a differential duty is levied on tobacco, must, and wine, no further imposts of any kind on these products shall in any case be retained or introduced, either on account of the State or on account of the Communes.

7. Articles proved in the manner prescribed in the Customs' Regulations to be foreign import or transit goods, and which as such have already been, or are still under official cognizance at some Custom office of the Union, and also those articles produced within the boundaries of the Union which are passing on transit only through a State of the Union, in order to be exported either into another such State, or into foreign countries, shall not be subject to differential duties.

8. The differential duty shall be for the benefit of that State into which the consignment is being sent. Should it not have been previously levied in the exporting country on account of the State entitled thereto, it shall be levied in the territory of this latter.

9. In each of the Contracting States certain arrangements shall be adopted for levying the differential duty in the State of the Union from which the consignment takes place, either at the place from whence the goods are sent off, or else at the nearest and most conveniently situated Customs' Office, or where payment of such duties can be ensured by proper notice.

10. Until these arrangements shall have been determined upon by special agreement, the traffic in articles subject to a differential duty shall be in so far restricted, that the said articles, without any difference as to the quantity of them thus transported, can be imported into the territory of the State which is entitled to the duty, and respectively reported and cleared at the Customs' stations to be established there for the purpose, on such roads only as shall be appointed for the purpose, and on the navigable rivers.

IX. Respecting the excise levied within the dominions of the Union upon other articles than those which are mentioned in § 8, or upon the same articles, in the countries where no differential duty is levied on them, a reciprocity of treatment shall be observed between the Contracting States of the Union and the Free City of Frankfort, in such manner that the productions of any State of the Union shall, on no account, be more heavily taxed in another State than the indigenous productions of that State itself.

The same principle shall also apply to additional tolls and excise, which are levied on account of single Communes, provided that this kind of impost be not altogether inadmissible according to the stipulation No. 6 in § 8.

X. Highway or other similar dues, as well as paving and dyke rates, bridge and ferry tolls, or under whatever denominations such dues may exist, and without difference whether they be levied on account of the State or in virtue of private rights, for example those of a commune, shall be respectively maintained, or new ones introduced, whether for causeways or other ways, high roads, or communication roads, only to such an amount as may be proportionate to the usual expenses of the construction and maintenance thereof.

The highway dues at present existing in Prussia, according to the general Tariff of the year 1828, shall be regarded as the highest rate, and shall not henceforth be exceeded in any one of the Contracting States.

Special charges for town-gate dues, and for paving on causeways, shall be abolished wherever they may still exist, according to the preceding principle, and the local paving dues shall be included in the tracts of the high roads or causeways, in such manner that the highway-dues alone shall be levied according to the general tariff.

XI. The Free City of Frankfort will co-operate to bring into operation in all the countries of the Contracting Governments a common system of moneys, measures, and weights, and will participate in the negotiations to be opened on this point.

The said city accedes to the Convention already existing among the members of the Union, according to which the Grand-Ducal Hessian hundred-weight or quintal has been adopted as the unit-standard for the common Customs' weight.

Therefore, from the time of the execution of the Treaty, the weighing of goods in the Free City of Frankfort shall take place according to that Customs' quintal, the payment of Customs' dues however, shall be made in money of the 24-florin standard.

The entry, admeasurement, and clearance at the Customs, of goods on which duty is payable by measurement, shall take place there in the legal manner which has been hitherto in practice, until a common standard of admeasurement shall likewise have been agreed upon.

To facilitate the transmission of goods, and for the readier dispatch of such consignments at the Customs' stations, the Senate of the Free City of Frankfort will cause to be published officially, for the use as well of the Customs administration at Frankfort, as of the commercial public generally, a comparative statement of the weights and measures which have been adopted in the tariffs of the other Contracting States.

The gold and silver coins, however, of all the Contracting States, with the exception of the small coinage, shall meanwhile be received at the Customs' Receipt Offices of the Free City of Frankfort, in the same manner as at all the Customs' Receipt Offices of the General Union, without exception, in payment of duties according to tariff; and to this end, Valuation tables, upon which the members hitherto forming the Union have already agreed, shall be published in the Free City of Frankfort.

XII. The water-tolls, or way-fees, including such dues as are chargeable on the body of the vessel (recognition fees), shall continue to be reciprocally levied in future on those rivers to which the stipulations of the Act of the Congress of Vienna or special State Treaties apply, provided that no other special arrangements shall be made on this point.

In the latter respect, more especially with reference to the Main as a tributary river of the Rhine, the Contracting parties will forthwith enter into negotiations in order to conclude an agreement by virtue of which the importation, exportation, and transit, on the said rivers, of the produce of all the countries of the Union shall be (though with a constant reservation of the recognition fees), if not entirely freed, at least relieved as much as possible from navigation dues.

Every concession granted by a State of the Union to the navigation of its own subjects upon the above-mentioned rivers, shall be in like manner conceded to the navigation of the subjects of the other States of the Union.

Upon the other rivers to which neither the Act of the Congress of Vienna, nor any other State Treaties apply, the river dues shall be levied according to the private regulations of the respective Governments concerned; but the subjects of the Contracting States, and their goods and craft, shall invariably be treated on equal terms everywhere on these rivers.

XIII. All tolls for canals, locks, bridges, ferries, harbours, weighing-machines, cranes, and warehouses, and all fees for arrangements intended to facilitate commerce, shall be levied only in cases where such arrangements are actually in existence, and in use for their purposes; these dues shall, as a general rule, not be increased at all, but should they be so, they shall in no case be increased beyond the amount of the usual cost of construction and maintenance, and they shall be levied everywhere from subjects of the other Contracting States in a perfectly equal degree with their own subjects, and likewise without any distinction as to the destination of the goods.

No charge of fees is to be made for the use of weighing machines if used only for the purpose of ascertaining the Customs' duties, or for the general purposes of official Customs' control.

XIV. The Free City of Frankfort will also on her part co-operate with the Contracting States of the Union to promote trade and industry by the adoption of uniform principles, and to see that the utmost freedom of action be given to the right of the subjects of one State to seek work and employment in the others.

The subjects of one of the Contracting States carrying on trade and commerce or seeking employment in the territory of another of these States, shall not, from the period when present Treaty comes into force, pay any taxes which are not paid by the subjects of the latter State, in a similar position as to trade or business.

In like manner, manufacturers and tradesmen who are only making purchases for their business, or travellers who do not carry goods, but only samples of them for the purpose of obtaining orders, shall not be compelled to pay any further tax on this account, if they have acquired in the State of the Union where they reside, the licence for carrying on this trade by payment of the legal dues, or if they are in the employ of native merchants or tradesmen so privileged.

The subjects of any of the Contracting States who attend the markets and fairs in the other States in pursuit of trade, and for the disposal of their productions or manufactures, shall also be treated on equal terms with the subjects of the States thus visited.

XV. The Prussian seaports shall be open to the trade of the inhabitants of the city of Frankfort, equally with those of the other States of the Union, upon payment of precisely the same duties as are paid by the Royal Prussian subjects, and the Consuls of one or the other of the Contracting States at foreign seaports and other commercial places, shall be bound to afford aid and assistance, as far as possible, to the subjects of the other Contracting States whenever it may be necessary.

XVI. The Free City of Frankfort hereby accedes to the Customs' Convention (Kartel), concluded under date of 11th May, 1833, among the members hitherto forming the Union, for the purpose of protecting their common Customs' system against smuggling, and their duties upon articles of domestic consumption against defraudation,—for the duration of the present Treaty, and will cause the Articles of that Convention which concern it to be published simultaneously with the latter. The other members of the Union will also on their part take the necessary steps to ensure the general execution of the stipulations of this Customs' Convention in their reciprocal relations.

XVII. The community of receipts which is to take place between the Free City of Frankfort and the States of the Union, in consequence of the present Treaty, has reference to the nett proceeds of the import, export, and transit duties in the Royal Prussian States, the Kingdoms of Bavaria, Saxony, and Wirtemberg, the Grand Duchy of Baden, the Electorate of Hesse, and the Grand Duchy of Hesse, and in the Thuringian Customs' and Trade Union, including the countries which have hitherto joined the Customs' system of the Contracting States, and in the Free City of Frankfort.

The revenue arising from the following sources is excepted from the community of receipt, and is reserved for the private benefit of the State Governments interested, unless separate Conventions between particular States of the Union determine otherwise :

1. The duties which are levied in the interior of each State on home production, including the differential duties reserved in § 8.
2. The river tolls.
3. Highway-rates, paving, causeway, bridge, ferry, canal, lock and harbour dues, as well as weighing and warehouse fees, or any similar imposts of whatsoever denomination.
4. Customs' fines and forfeitures, which belong to each Government within its own territory, after payment of the share reserved for the informers.

XVIII. The amount of the duties which are to become common property, shall be divided among the members of the Union in proportion to the populations with which they form part of the General Union, after deducting :

1. The expenses which are requisite for the protection and for the levying of the Customs on the boundaries next to foreign countries and within the district of such boundaries.

2. The restitution of erroneous levies.

3. The indemnifications and reductions of Customs which have been made by virtue of special joint agreements.

The populations of such States as have acceded, or may hereafter accede to the Customs' Union by virtue of agreements, with one or other of the Contracting States, guaranteeing an annual payment to be made by such State, as their share in the common Customs' revenue, shall be included in the population of the State which makes the payment.

The census of the population of each separate State of the Union shall be taken every 3 years, and the result shall be reciprocally communicated by the members of the Union to each other.

On account of the very peculiar circumstances which prevail in the Free City of Frankfort with regard to the consumption of articles which are subject to the common duties of the Union, the Contracting States will make a special arrangement with the said city about an annual total sum.

XIX. Concessions to tradesmen respecting the payment of Customs' duties, which are not founded on the Customs' laws, shall be chargeable to the Treasury of that Government which has granted them; the circumstances under which such concessions may be granted are reserved for special agreement.

XX. Conformably with the object of the Union, which is the promotion of a free and natural movement in general commercial intercourse, special concessions in connection with the Customs which are enjoyed by certain places where fairs are held, more particularly the privileges of discount, shall not be extended in those States of the Union where they at present exist, but rather be limited as far as possible, and brought to a speedy total extinction, with due regard to the circumstances upon which the maintenance of such hitherto favoured places, as to their previous commercial relation in regard to their trade with foreign countries, depends; in no case however, shall any new concession be granted without general consent.

XXI. Articles which are imported for the service of the Court households of the Sovereigns, and their reigning houses, or for the Ambassadors, Envoys, Chargés d'Affaires, &c., residing within the territory of the Union, shall not be exempt from the payment of Customs according to the tariff; and if any remission be made for the same, it shall not be charged to the general account.

In like manner, such indemnities as are payable in one or other State to the former immediate estates of the Empire, or to communes, or to privileged private individuals for abolished toll-rights, or for exemptions repealed, shall not be charged in the account.

On the other hand, every State shall be at liberty to allow, by means of warrants, the free ingress, egress, and transit of single articles, without the payment of duties. Such articles, however, shall be dealt with according to the Customs' laws, and shall be recorded in Free-registers, which shall be kept in the same manner as the other Customs' registers, and the duties which would have been leviable on them, shall be deducted, at the next adjustment of the revenue accounts, from the share of the State by which the free-warrants have been granted.

XXII. The right of pardon and commutation of punishment is also reserved to the Free City of Frankfort. Periodical returns of remissions of punishment thus granted, shall be reciprocally communicated on demand.

XXIII. The appointment of the officials and servants for the levying and control of Customs, who are to be appointed and instructed according to regulations uniform with those of the other States of the Union, shall remain with the City of Frankfort, but with due regard to the peculiar circumstances prevailing there.

XXIV. The direction of the Customs' service, and the execution of the common Customs' laws, is subordinated in the Free City of Frankfort to the Senate.

XXV. All the States of the Union will reciprocally communicate to each other every desirable information respecting the joint Customs' affairs, and if for this purpose it should be decided to delegate temporarily a superior Official, or to charge a Plenipotentiary otherwise accredited to the respective Governments of the Union, all the facilities to take complete cognizance of the state of the common administration of the Customs shall be afforded to him.

XXVI. Annually, within the first days of the month of June, a meeting of the Plenipotentiaries to be deputed by the States of the Union, shall take place for the purpose of deliberation in common.

For the formal direction of the proceedings, the Plenipotentiaries at the Conference will elect from among themselves a President, who, however, is not to enjoy any pre-eminence over the other members.

At the close of each annual meeting the place for the next meeting shall be agreed upon, taking into consideration the nature of the objects expected to be discussed at the ensuing Conference.

XXVII. The attention of the Plenipotentiaries at the Conference shall be directed to :

a. The consideration of all complaints and defects which have been perceived in one or other of the States of the Union relative to the execution of the fundamental Treaty, of the special Conventions, and of the Customs' laws, regulations, and tariffs,—which may not have been settled in the course of the year, by correspondence upon the subject between the Ministerial Department and the Chief Boards of Direction.

^f b. The definitive settlement among the members of the Union of the common receipts, founded on such statements as are necessary for the purpose of a proper examination agreeable to the common interest, which statements are to be rendered by the principal Customs' authorities, and to be submitted by the Central Office.

c. The consultations respecting wishes and propositions made by certain Governments for improvements in the administration.

d. The negotiations respecting alterations of the Customs' Laws, the Customs' Regulations, the Customs' Tariff, and the organization of the administration, which may be proposed by any of the Contracting States; and generally all matters referring to the suitable development and accomplishment of the common system of commerce and customs.

XXVIII. If any extraordinary events should occur in the course of the year, at any other period than that of the ordinary meeting of the Plenipotentiaries at the Conference, which call for immediate measures or dispositions on the part of the States of the Union, the Contracting Parties will decide thereon by diplomatic means, or they will convoke an extraordinary meeting of their Plenipotentiaries.

XXIX. The Free City of Frankfort engages to take such measures as may be necessary to guard against any injury which might arise to the Customs' revenue of the Collective Union, at the time the present Treaty comes into execution, from importations or accumulation in the said city of large stocks of goods on which no duty, or duty at a lower rate of Customs than that contained in the tariff of the Union, has been paid.

XXX. The Free City of Frankfort accedes also, on her part, to the agreement made for the event of other German States expressing their wish to be admitted into the Customs' Union, established by the Treaties of the 22nd and 30th March, and 11th May, 1833.

XXXI. The Free City of Frankfort agrees likewise with the Contracting Governments that they shall endeavour to promote, by means of Commercial Treaties with other States, every possible facilitation and extension of the commercial intercourse of their connexions.

XXXII. Whatever is necessary to the execution in detail of the stipulations of the present Treaty, and of its supplements, shall be prepared by common Commissioners.

XXXIII. The present Treaty shall continue in force provisionally, until the 1st of January, 1842. If, during this period, and at the latest 2 years before the expiration of it, no notice of its cessation is given, it shall be considered as prolonged for 12 years, and so on afterwards from 12 years to 12 years.

The latter arrangement shall, however, be observed only in case all the States of the Germanic Confederation should not, in the meantime agree upon adopting such common measures as may fully accomplish the object of the present Customs' Union, as being[§] in accordance with the intention of Art. XIX of the Act of the Germanic Confederation.

Should any general regulations be adopted, relative to a free trade in articles of food in all the States of the Germanic Confederation, the stipulations on this subject in the existing tariff of the Union, conformably to the present Treaty, shall be modified accordingly.

The present Treaty shall be forthwith submitted for ratification by the respective High Contracting Parties, and the interchange of the ratifications shall be effected at Berlin as speedily as possible.

Et les dits Plénipotentiaires, après avoir échangé leurs pleins pouvoirs, trouvés en bonne et due forme, sont convenus des règlements suivants, qu'ils ont signés en double original, conjointement avec les secrétaires.

REGLEMENT pour l'Exécution de l'Article IX du Traité du 19 Avril, 1839, et du Chapitre II, Section I, du Traité du 5 Novembre, 1842, relativement à la Navigation de l'Escaut, et de ses embouchures.

ART. I. Le payement du droit unique sur la navigation de l'Escaut et de ses embouchures, fixé par l'Article IX, § 3, du Traité du 19 Avril, 1839, savoir: de f.1.12 par tonneau, pour les navires qui, arrivant de la pleine mer, remonteront l'Escaut occidental pour se rendre en Belgique par l'Escaut ou par le canal de Terneuzen, et de f.0.38 par tonneau, des navires qui, arrivant de la Belgique par l'Escaut ou par le canal de Terneuzen, descendront l'Escaut occidental pour se rendre dans la pleine mer, se fera à Anvers et à Terneuzen, aux bureaux de l'agent Néerlandais, contre quittance conforme au modèle lettre A, annexé au présent règlement.

II. Ces bureaux qui seront, autant que possible, situés à proximité des bassins, seront ouverts aux-mêmes jours et heures que ceux fixés par l'Article CCCXVI de la Loi générale du 26 Août, 1822.

Dans les cas extraordinaires ou d'urgence, l'agent ne se refusera pas, hors des jours et heures fixés pour l'ouverture de ses bureaux, à contribuer, en ce qui le regarde, à la prompte expédition des navires.

III. Le paiement se fera en monnaie ayant cour légal dans le pays où il devra avoir lieu, le franc calculé à 47 $\frac{1}{4}$ cents des Pays-Bas. Les monnaies inférieures à 50 centimes de Belgique, ou à 25 cents des Pays-Bas, ne seront toutefois admises que pour solde de fractions au dessous de cette somme.

IV. Le tonnage des navires sera calculé à raison de un mètre cube et demi, ou une aune cube et demie, mesure des Pays-Bas, conformément au § 2 de l'Article CCXCII de la Loi générale du 26 Août, 1822, et d'après les instructions du 20 Octobre, 1819, No. 1, modifiées par celles du 21 Février, 1823, No. 173, et du 12 Avril, 1825, No. 40.

Quant au tonnage des bateaux à vapeur, il ne sera calculé que relativement à la partie de leur capacité destinée aux marchandises.

Pour établir cette capacité, on mesurera les parties de la cale destinée au chargement des marchandises, et l'on suivra dans ce mesurage le mode prescrit par les instructions précitées, sauf qu'au lieu du tiers, stipulé dans l'instruction du 21 Février, 1823, il ne sera déduit qu'un-sixième.

V. Tous certificats de jaugeage, exprimant le tonnage des navires d'après les principes établis à l'Article précédent, et délivrés par l'autorité compétente, en quelque pays que ce soit, seront exhibés aux agents Néerlandais à Anvers ou à Terneuzen, et seront par eux admis pour servir de base à la perception du droit de navigation. Ces certificats ne seront valables que pendant le terme de 2 ans, depuis la date de leur délivrance.

VI. Il pourra néanmoins être procédé, contradictoirement avec la partie intéressée, à la vérification du jaugeage du navire, aux frais des dits agents, chaque fois que ceux-ci auront des motifs spéciaux et plausibles pour la requérir dans l'intérêt du trésor Néerlandais.

Dans ces cas, la demande et l'opération seront faites en temps utile et de manière qu'il n'en résulte aucune entrave ni aucun retard, autres que ceux inséparables de l'opération.

Ces vérifications pourront réciproquement, et pour les mêmes motifs, être demandées par les parties payantes. Elles auront lieu alors aux frais de ces dernières et contradictoirement avec les agents Néerlandais.

Dans tous les cas de désaccord entre les 2 experts-vérificateurs, il leur sera adjoint, pour les départager, un tiers expert, à désigner par le sort entre 2 personnes présentées à cet effet de part et d'autre.

Le frais résultant de cette contre-expertise seront à la charge de la partie succombante.

VII. La vérification dont il s'agit ne devant occasionner ni entraves ni retards, autres que ceux inséparables de l'opération, et ne pouvant se faire convenablement à Terneuzen, alors surtout que les navires sont chargés, aura lieu pour tous les navires, chargés ou sur lest indistinctement, dans les portes Belges de déchargement ou de chargement.

Les frais de déplacement, comme les frais de jaugeage, sont à la charge de la partie, qui aura demandé la vérification. Ces frais seront les uns et les autres calculés d'après le tarif annexé au présent règlement sous la lettre B.

Lorsqu'il s'agira de jager pour la première fois un navire lancé en Belgique, l'administration des douanes préviendra les agents Néerlandais respectifs, au moins 2 jours d'avance, du jour et de l'heure des opérations du jaugeage, pour que ceux-ci puissent en faire reconnaître l'exactitude. Dans ce cas les frais de déplacement seuls seront à la charge de l'agent Néerlandais.

VIII. Pour les navires venant de la pleine mer et entrant en Belgique par le canal de Terneuzen, sans être munis de certificats de jaugeage conformes aux stipulations de l'Article V, il sera fourni caution solvable au gré de l'agent, pour une somme proportionnée au montant du droit de navigation, évalué approximativement par le dit agent.

La caution sera déchargée dans le délai d'un mois, moyennant paiement sur présentation d'un certificat de jaugeage en due forme délivré par l'autorité compétente.

IX. Lorsqu'un navire de mer aura péri sur l'Escaut ou à son embouchure, avant d'avoir atteint le territoire de la Belgique ou la pleine mer, et que sa cargaison sera transportée en Belgique par des allèges, ou en mer par un autre navire, on observera, pour la fixation du droit de navigation, les dispositions suivantes : dans le premier cas ce droit sera perçu sur le tonnage des allèges, calculé conformément à l'Article IV, et par chaque voyage qu'elles feront ; dans le deuxième cas le droit perçu sera restitué, si les marchandises sauvées retournent en Belgique ou sont exportées par un autre navire assujéti au péage ; si au contraire elles sont exportées par un navire non assujéti au péage, il n'y aura pas lieu à restitution du droit.

X. Le droit de navigation de l'Escaut sera payé à l'agent des Pays-Bas à Terneuzen, avant que le navire quitte le lieu, soit pour la pleine mer, soit pour le territoire Belge, sauf le cas prévu à l'Article VIII ; et à celui d'Anvers :

1°. Pour les navires venant de la pleine mer, dans le délai d'un mois après leur arrivée ou passage à Anvers ;

2°. Pour les navires allant à la pleine mer, avant leur départ.

XI. Les navires partis de la Belgique pour la mer, et pour lesquels le droit de navigation aura été payé, ne seront pas sujets une deuxième fois au même droit, ni à la rentrée, ni à la sortie, s'ils rentrent de la mer par force majeure et retournent dans un port Belge, où la force majeure et l'identité de la cargaison devront être dûment constatées.

Pour les navires rentrant en Belgique par le canal de Terneuzen, il sera fourni caution à la demande de l'agent, jusqu'à ce que les pièces justificatives lui aient été communiquées.

XII. Seront exempts du droit unique stipulé à l'Article I, les navires de guerre, ceux uniquement employés à la pêche, les yachts et les navires d'agrément, ainsi que les bateaux à vapeur servant à la remorque (remorqueurs).

XIII. Si le droit avait été mal à propos payé, en tout ou en partie, soit par erreur, soit parce que le navire n'aurait pas pris la route qui l'assujettissait au péage, soit par toute autre circonstance, le porteur de la quittance ne pourra répéter ce qui aurait été indûment perçu, qu'en déans les 6 mois à dater du payement.

Réciproquement, l'agent ne pourra recouvrer le payement du droit dû, qui n'aurait pas été payé soit par erreur, soit parce que le navire aurait pris une route qui l'assujettissait au péage, soit par toute autre circonstance, qu'en déans les 6 mois, à dater du jour que le droit aurait dû être payé.

XIV. Pour faciliter l'exécution de l'Article précédent, le Gouvernement Belge fera remettre à l'Agent Néerlandais à Anvers la liste des navires de mer, qui auront été déclarés en destination de la Belgique ou de la mer, pour autant que ces navires sont soumis au droit unique.

De son côté le Gouvernement Néerlandais fera remettre au Gouvernement Belge la liste des navires, munis de lettres de mer, ayant fait déclaration aux bureaux de Bath, Sas de Gand et Terneuzen, soit à l'entrée, soit à la sortie des Pays-Bas.

Les administrations de pilotage Néerlandais et Belge à Flessingue se communiqueront réciproquement la liste des navires qu'elles auront pilotés tant à l'entrée qu'à la sortie par mer. Ces diverses communications se feront respectivement de quinzaine en quinzaine.

XV. Il est entendu que, moyennant le droit unique mentionné à l'Article I, il ne pourra, directement ni indirectement, être établi sur la navigation de la pleine mer en Belgique par l'Escaut occidental, et vice-versa, d'autres droits, péages ou indemnités quelconques, sous quelque titre que ce soit, sauf ce qui est réglé pour le pilotage et les fanaux.

XVI. Pour les bâtiments soumis au droit de navigation, il ne pourra être délivré aucun document à la sortie, ni acte effectif ou négatif de décompte, qu'après qu'il aura été justifié du paiement de ce droit.

Les navires munis de lettres de mer, qui se déclareront à la sortie par les eaux intérieures des Pays-Bas, devront fournir caution du droit à la descente. Cette caution sera déchargée du moment que leur entrée par Bath aura été constatée.

XVII. Tout capitaine d'un navire assujetti au droit de navigation, venant de la Belgique pour se rendre à la pleine mer, devra être muni de la quittance de paiement à la descente, ou de la preuve du cautionnement du dit droit, pour être exhibée par lui au pilote chargé de le conduire en mer, lequel devra faire connaître à son administration la nature, la date et le numéro du document exhibé.

A défaut de cette exhibition, le navire pourra être retenu en rade de Flessingue, de Rammekens ou de Terneuzen, jusqu'à ce qu'il soit justifié du paiement ou du cautionnement.

Il est défendu aux pilotes, à quelque administration qu'ils appartiennent, et ce sous peine d'être personnellement responsables du montant du droit non payé, qui sera retenu sur leur salaire, de prêter leurs services pour conduire en mer un navire non muni de la quittance susmentionnée ou de la preuve du cautionnement fourni.

XVIII. Tout navire, venant de la pleine mer pour se rendre en Belgique, ou venant de la Belgique pour se rendre à la mer, pourra, si les vents, les glaces ou d'autres circonstances l'exigent, stationner librement dans toutes les eaux de l'Escaut occidental et de ses embouchures.

XIX. Les navires se rendant de la pleine mer en Belgique, et vice-versâ, ne seront assujettis à aucune formalité par rapport aux douanes Néerlandaises, durant le trajet de l'Escaut occidental et de ses embouchures, ou pendant le temps qu'ils y séjourneront.

La surveillance contre la fraude pourra être exercée par le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas, tant sur les rives qu'au moyen d'embarcations sur le fleuve même.

Si, après une expérience de 2 années, l'insuffisance de ces moyens était démontrée, les 2 Gouvernements s'entendraient pour aviser, d'un commun accord, à un mode de surveillance plus efficace, par l'adoption d'autres mesures les plus propres à mettre cette surveillance en harmonie avec les intérêts de la navigation, laquelle ne pourra, dans aucun cas, être exposée, de ce chef, à des entraves, frais ou retards.

XX. Les navires, allant de la Belgique à la mer par le canal de Terneuzen et l'Escaut occidental, et vice-versâ, seront exempts de toute visite et formalité de la douane Néerlandaise, à leur entrée, à leur sortie et pendant le parcours du canal de Terneuzen, sauf l'apposition des plombs ou scellés aux écoutilles et aux autres issues, ou la mise à bord de gardiens, dont le nombre ne dépassera pas celui de deux.

Les gardiens participeront au feu, à la lumière et à la nourriture de l'équipage, mais il leur est défendu de recevoir aucune rétribution, indemnité ou salaire des capitaines.

XXI. Il est interdit aux navires, venant de la mer pour se rendre en Belgique et vice versa, de communiquer directement ou indirectement avec les côtes et rives, par d'autres endroits que ceux déterminés par le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas, pour prendre charge ou décharger.

Toutefois il sera loisible aux capitaines de se munir à terre des provisions dont ils auraient besoin pour l'usage de l'équipage ou du navire, et de s'y rendre pour demander ou recevoir des ordres, pourvu que le navire reste éloigné des côtes et rives, et que, dans ces cas, les communications ne se fassent qu'au moyen de chaloupes, soit à Flessingue, soit aux autres lieux désignés à cet effet par le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas.

Le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas fera connaître au Gouvernement Belge, dans le mois de l'échange des ratifications du présent règlement, les autres ports et endroits qu'il aura déterminés pour les communications prévues par cet Article ; si plus tard il jugeait convenable de faire à cet égard des changements, il en informerait le Gouvernement Belge au moins un mois d'avance.

XXII. Toute communication avec les côtes ou rives non autorisée, ou dans des endroits non désignés, et hors les cas de force majeure, sera punie d'une amende à la charge du capitaine du navire.

Cette amende sera de 50 à 100 florins, si la communication a eu lieu directement par le navire, et de 10 à 25 florins, si elle s'est faite au moyen de chaloupes ou autres embarcations.

XXIII. Lorsque, pour cause d'avarie ou autre circonstance extraordinaire, un capitaine sera obligé de transborder des marchandises sur le fleuve ou à son embouchure, ou d'en décharger sur les rives et côtes, ces marchandises seront exemptes de tous droits d'entrée, de sortie ou de transit, pourvu que le capitaine se soit adressé préalablement aux employés des douanes les plus voisins ou, à leur défaut, à l'autorité locale la plus voisine, et qu'il se soumette aux mesures que ces employés ou ces autorités jugeront nécessaires pour prévenir l'importation clandestine d'une partie de la cargaison.

Les mesures que le capitaine aurait prises de son chef, sans en avoir préalablement averti les employés, ou, en leur absence ou à leur défaut, l'autorité locale, et sans attendre leur intervention, ne seront excusables qu'autant qu'il prouvera d'une manière incontestable que le salut du bâtiment ou de la cargaison en a dépendu.

Les marchandises déchargées quitteront le territoire des Pays-Bas, soit après avoir été rechargées dans le même navire d'où elles ont été retirées, soit au moyen d'allèges.

XXIV. Toutes importations ou exportations de denrées et marchandises, par les rives et côtes de l'Escaut occidental ou de ses embouchures, ainsi que tous allègements ou transbordements de denrées et marchandises, pratiquées sur l'Escaut occidental ou ses embouchures, sans que l'autorisation ait été obtenue, ou que les formalités, requises par l'Article précédent, aient été observées, seront punis des peines prononcées par la législation des Pays-Bas, en matière de droits d'entrée, de sortie et d'accises.

Le capitaine ne pourra pas, dans ces cas, invoquer la liberté de la navigation de l'Escaut, pour mettre, soit sa personne, soit les denrées ou marchandises, qu'il aurait importées, exportées, transbordées ou déchargées frauduleusement, à l'abri des poursuites dirigées contre lui de la part des employés des douanes, sans cependant qu'il puisse y avoir lieu de la part des employés des douanes, sans cependant qu'il puisse y avoir lieu à saisir, pour cause d'un pareil fait, le reste du chargement, qui n'aurait pas été l'objet de cette fraude, non plus que le navire, s'il n'a pas servi directement à l'importation ou à l'exportation frauduleuse, ni en général à sévir contre le capitaine d'une manière plus rigoureuse que ne l'ordonnent les lois générales en vigueur.

XXV. Toute tentative d'importation ou d'exportation frauduleuse par les rives et côtes de l'Escaut occidental et de ses embouchures, qui aura été manifestée par des actes extérieurs et suivie d'un commencement d'exécution, si elle n'a été suspendue ou n'a manqué son effet que par des circonstances fortuites ou indépendantes de la volonté de l'auteur, est considérée et punie comme l'importation ou l'exportation frauduleuse même.

XXVI. Les navires venant de la Belgique par l'Escaut ou le canal de Terneuzen, qui, après avoir mis en mer, seraient forcés, par suite de vents contraires ou par toute autre cause de force majeure, de rentrer en rade de Flessingue, Rammekens ou Terneuzen, sans avoir touché un autre port, seront affranchis de toutes formalités, par rapport aux douanes Néerlandaises, autres que celle d'une déclaration indiquant les motifs de la rentrée. Cette déclaration devra se faire en deans les 24 heures aux bureaux de Flessingue ou de Terneuzen. Faute de faire cette déclaration et de justifier, s'ils en sont requis, des motifs de la rentrée, les capitaines seront passibles des peines comminées par la législation des Pays-Bas contre ceux qui entrent en relâche forcée sans remplir les formalités prescrites par la loi.

XXVII. Les navires arrivant de la mer et venant stationner en rade de Flessingue ou de Rammekens, pour y recevoir des ordres, ne seront assujettis, pendant le délai de 3 fois 24 heures, à aucune formalité par rapport aux douanes. Si, en déans ce délai, ils n'ont pas continué leur route par l'Escaut vers la Belgique, ils devront remplir les formalités prescrites par la loi à l'égard des navires entrant en relache forcée dans les ports des Pays-Bas.

XXVIII. Les navires venant de la pleine mer pour se rendre en Belgique, et vice-versâ, seront admis dans le port de Flessingue, en cas de relache forcée, soit pour hiverner, soit pour y opérer un déchargement partiel ou total pour cause de force majeure.

Ils y jouiront de toute la protection et de tous les avantages qui sont assurés par la législation en vigueur dans les Pays-Bas, aux bâtimens de toutes les autres nations, en se soumettant aux mesures de précaution contre la fraude, prescrites par la même législation.

Il est expressément entendu que le séjour dans ce port ne donnera lieu à aucun droit d'entrée, de sortie ou de transit.

XXIX. Les navires chargés de poudre à canon arboreront un pavillon rouge pour indiquer la nature de leur cargaison ; ils resteront, autant que faire se pourra, éloignés des côtes et rives, et ne pourront, sans autorisation, mouiller devant les villes, villages ou forts, situés sur les rives de l'Escaut ou de son embouchure, le tout sous peine d'une amende de 50 à 150 florins.

Les dispositions qui précèdent ne seront pas applicables aux navires qui n'auront à bord que les provisions ordinaires de poudre à canon pour leur usage particulier.

XXX. Le capitaine sera, dans tous les cas, responsable des amendes encourues pour contravention au présent règlement, par les gens de son équipage, sauf son recours contre ceux qui, par leurs faits ou omissions, y auront donné lieu.

XXXI. Si, pour cause de contravention aux dispositions du présent règlement, il y a lieu à saisie de marchandises, denrées, navire, chaloupe ou autres embarcations, il sera accordé, sans retard, mainlevée à la demande de la partie saisie, moyennant bonne et valable caution pour la valeur des objets saisis, et élection de domicile dans le Royaume des Pays-Bas.

Cette caution sera convenue entre l'employé le plus élevé en grade dans l'endroit où la saisie aura été pratiquée, et celui à charge de qui elle a été faite.

Si les contraventions n'entraînent qu'une amende, le contrevenant obtiendra de continuer immédiatement sa route, en donnant caution pour le montant de l'amende et en faisant élection de domicile.

XXXII. Toutes contestations au sujet du droit à percevoir sur la navigation de l'Escaut et de ses embouchures, des navires allant de la pleine mer en Belgique, ou vice versa, seront décidées en dernier ressort par des arbitres, sans qu'il puisse y avoir lieu à opposition, appel, pourvoi en cassation, ou requête civile contre le jugement arbitral.

XXXIII. Les arbitres sont nommés, l'un par l'agent chargé de la perception du droit de navigation, l'autre par la partie qui refuse le paiement du droit réclamé, ou qui en demande la restitution.

En cas de refus de l'une des parties de nommer son arbitre, il est nommé d'office par le Président du Tribunal de Première Instance ci-après indiqué.

En cas de partage, les arbitres nomment un sur-arbitre, s'il n'est nommé par le compromis; si les arbitres sont discordants sur le choix, le sur-arbitre est nommé à la requête de la partie la plus diligente, par le Président du Tribunal de Première Instance, dans le ressort duquel est situé le bureau de perception.

XXXIV. La nomination des arbitres peut se faire par acte notarié, ou sous signature privée, ou par procès-verbal devant les arbitres choisis.

L'acte de nomination des arbitres désignera, à peine de nullité, les objets en litige et les noms des arbitres.

XXXV. Le siège du tribunal arbitral est dans la localité où est établi l'agent de la perception avec lequel la contestation est engagée.

Relativement aux contestations dont il s'agit, le Gouvernement Néerlandais est représenté par l'agent de la perception et choisit domicile à son bureau.

XXXVI. La procédure est instruite sommairement; les parties remettent leurs pièces ou mémoires aux arbitres sans aucune formalité de justice; la partie en retard de remettre les pièces et mémoires est sommée de le faire en déans les 8 jours.

XXXVII. Le jugement arbitral est motivé; il est déposé, en déans les 8 jours de sa date, au greffe du tribunal civil sus-indiqué; il est rendu exécutoire sans aucune modification et transcrit sur les registres, en vertu d'une ordonnance du Président du Tribunal.

L'opposition à l'ordonnance d'exécution, et la demande de nullité de l'acte qualifié jugement arbitral, pourront avoir lieu dans les cas et dans les formes tracés par les lois du pays où l'ordonnance aura été rendue.

XXXVIII. Les navires pourront, même en cas de contestation, continuer leur voyage, sans retards ou entraves, pourvu qu'il soit fait élection de domicile dans la localité où est établi le bureau de perception, et qu'il soit fourni, contradictoirement avec l'agent, caution solvable ou suffisante pour le paiement du droit.

XXXIX. En ce qui regarde la nomination, l'acceptation, la récusation et la révocation des arbitres, les délais, formalités, frais et autres conditions de l'arbitrage, on suivra les lois sur la matière, respectivement en vigueur dans le pays où le jugement arbitral sera rendu, pour autant qu'il n'y ait pas été pourvu ou dérogé par les dispositions qui précèdent.

XL. Les dispositions du présent règlement ne seront applicables qu'aux navires venant de la mer pour se rendre en Belgique, ou vice versa, et ne concerneront que la partie de l'Escaut occidental dont les rives appartiennent au Gouvernement des Pays-Bas.

REGLEMENT pour l'Exécution de l'Article IX du Traité du 19 Avril, 1839, et du Chapitre II, Section II, du Traité du 5 Novembre, 1842, relativement au Pilotage et à la surveillance commune.

CHAPITRE I.—De l'Etablissement et de l'Administration des Services de Pilotage.

ART. I. Il sera au choix de tout navire, se rendant de la pleine mer en Belgique, ou de la Belgique en pleine mer, par l'Escaut ou le canal de Terneuzen, de prendre un pilote Néerlandais ou Belge, et il sera loisible, d'après cela, aux 2 pays, d'établir dans tout le cours de l'Escaut et à son embouchure, les services de pilotage qui seront jugés nécessaires pour fournir les pilotes.

Les 2 Gouvernements se procureront réciproquement toutes les facilités convenables, pour l'établissement sûr et commode de ces services.

II. Sans préjudice aux droits des 2 Gouvernements, résultant de l'Article IX, § 2, du Traité du 19 Avril, 1839, le Gouvernement Belge pourra établir une administration de pilotage à Flessingue, et en détacher à Terneuzen tel nombre de pilotes que les besoins de cette station lui paraîtront réclamer, pour les navires allant de la mer à Anvers ou à Gand, et vice-versa.

De son côté, le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas pourra établir une station de pilotes à Anvers, pour le service des navires à la descente.

Ces établissements seront légalement reconnus par les Gouvernements respectifs, qui leur accorderont aide et protection.

III. Celui des 2 pays qui établira de nouveaux services de pilotage, dans le cours de l'Escaut ou à son embouchure, en fera la notification à l'autre pays, par l'intermédiaire des commissaires chargés de la surveillance commune. Il lui donnera, en même temps, connaissance de tout ce qui pourra faire reconnaître et respecter les bateaux et les pilotes employés à ces services, et notamment des marques distinctives mentionnées aux Articles VII et X.

IV. Chacun des 2 Gouvernements aura la faculté d'admettre au pilotage de l'Escaut et de ses bouques, des pilotes de ses stations non situées sur ce fleuve, après qu'ils auront satisfait à ce qui est prescrit par l'Article V. Dans ce cas, ces pilotes seront aussi brevetés comme pilotes de l'Escaut.

Les Gouvernements se communiqueront réciproquement, de la manière indiquée à l'Article III, ces admissions et le signe adopté pour indiquer les bâtiments qui seront pourvus de semblables pilotes, comme aussi la marque distinctive des pilotes eux mêmes.

V. Les pilotes, soit de mer, soit de rivière, pour pouvoir être admis, par l'une ou l'autre des 2 administrations, au pilotage de l'Escaut et de ses bouques, devront remplir les conditions d'admission exigées par les règlements en vigueur dans le pays auquel appartiendra l'administration.

VI. Tout pilote, avant d'entrer en fonctions, devra s'engager par serment à se conformer strictement, dans son service, aux obligations qui lui sont imposées par le présent règlement, et à se conduire en bon, digne, honnête, et fidèle pilote.

Il sera fait mention sur le brevet, de la prestation de ce serment.

VII. Pour être reconnus en leur qualité, les pilotes porteront une marque distinctive ; la forme, les dimensions et les accessoires en seront déterminés par les règlements de chaque pays.

Les pilotes, dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions, seront tenus de porter cette marque d'une manière ostensible, et d'être munis de leur brevet, ainsi que des extraits des règlements sur le service du pilotage.

VIII. Il est laissé à la prudence de chaque administration d'arrêter telles dispositions qu'elle jugera convenables, quant à la faculté de piloter de nuit, en observant toutefois ce qui est prescrit au Chapitre IV concernant le service sanitaire.

IX. Les administrations respectives veilleront scrupuleusement à ce que les pilotes et autres individus attachés à leur service et chargés de piloter, ne s'abandonnent point à l'abus des liqueurs spiritueuses, mais surtout à ce qu'ils ne se permettent pas, étant en état d'ivresse, d'entreprendre le pilotage d'un bâtiment. Elles puniront rigoureusement les délinquants des peines prononcées par les règlements pour ces cas.

X. Les bateaux-pilotes porteront dans la partie supérieure de leur grande voile, sur les 2 côtés au-dessus de la bande du premier ris, le nom du lieu de leur station, visiblement peint en lettres noires, de 4 décimètres de hauteur, ou, si la voile n'a pas assez de largeur, seulement la lettre initiale de ce nom, plus le numéro donné au bateau.

Ce signalement sera répété sur l'arrière du bateau, et devra être repeint chaque année.

Les bateaux-pilotes arboreront, au haut de leur mat, un pavillon de 4 lès ordinaires de large, et de 3 mètres 20 centimètres de long, dans lequel sera cousu le même numéro, afin d'indiquer à quelle nation ils appartiennent. Ce pavillon sera bleu avec un numéro blanc pour les bateaux-pilotes Néerlandais, et rouge avec un numéro blanc pour les bateaux-pilotes Belges.

Ces bateaux pourront en outre arborer leur pavillon national.

XI. Les bateaux, canots et autres embarcations, servant uniquement à l'exploitation du pilotage, portant enseigne et légalement reconnus comme tels, seront exempts de tous droits de port, quai et autres quelconques, imposés sur la navigation dans les 2 pays.

Ces mêmes embarcations pourront monter et descendre la rivière de nuit comme de jour.

XII. Les 2 administrations de pilotage auront la faculté d'introduire en franchise de tous droits de douane et autres, dans leurs stations respectives, les cordages, voilures, avirons, cables, chaines, ancres et autres objets de ce genre, appartenant au matériel du service de pilotage, pourvu que l'importation se fasse par des bateaux de ce service, et que le déchargement soit justifié au moyen d'un certificat du chef de l'administration locale du pilotage, énonçant la nature et la quantité des objets importés. Ce certificat sera, avant le déchargement, présenté aux employés des douanes, qui y apposeront leur visa, après en avoir reconnu l'exactitude.

Les objets ainsi introduits sur le territoire de l'un ou l'autre des 2 pays, seront déposés dans un local séparé; il en sera fait un inventaire sur lequel les mutations seront exactement annotées, de telle sorte que l'existant en magasin puisse toujours être reconnu par les employés des douanes qui, sur un ordre écrit de l'employé supérieur du lieu, se présenteront pour en faire le recensement.

XIII. Il sera tenu dans les bureaux des 2 pilotages, un registre, où les capitaines pourront inscrire les plaintes qu'ils se croiront en droit de faire contre les pilotes.

Les capitaines pourront aussi adresser leurs plaintes, par écrit, au chef de service du pilotage, qui les fera annexer au registre; il en sera donné connaissance aux pilotes inculpés, pour qu'ils puissent se justifier et, au besoin, inscrire ou faire annexer leur défense au même registre.

XIV. Chacun des 2 pays pourra prendre, à l'égard de son pilotage, telles dispositions particulières qu'il jugera utiles dans l'intérêt du service et de la navigation, pour autant qu'elles ne dérogent pas au présent règlement, et qu'elles ne constituent ni faveur ni immunités, de nature à faire accorder la préférence à l'un des 2 pilotages.

CHAPITRE II.—Des Devoirs des Pilots et des Obligations des Capitaines.

XV. Les pilotes des 2 nations se comporteront avec convenance, les uns envers les autres, dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions; ils éviteront soigneusement toute occasion de collision et tout sujet de plaintes mutuelles. Il leur est recommandé de se porter mutuellement, le cas échéant, secours, aide et assisance.

XVI. Le signal d'appel d'un pilote sera, pour les bâtiments de l'Etat, le pavillon destiné à cet effet. Les batiments marchands, non pourvus de ce pavillon, hisseront leur pavillon national au tenon du mât de misaine, s'ils ont plus d'un mât, et au grand tenon, s'ils n'ont qu'un mât.

Les capitaines, pendant leur séjour en rade, ont la faculté d'adopter, de commun accord avec le chef des pilotes, un signal d'appel à convenir pour le bateau pilote.

XVII. Aucun pilote ne montera à bord d'un navire pour le piloter, avant d'y avoir été engagé par le capitaine ou patron. Lorsque des pilotes des 2 nations se présenteront en même temps pour offrir leurs services, ils attendront, avant de passer sur le navire, que le capitaine ou patron ait fait son choix entre eux.

XVIII. Aussitôt que le pilote sera à bord d'un navire, il fera amener le pavillon d'appel, pour faire connaître que le bâtiment est déjà pourvu d'un pilote ; faute de quoi il sera opéré, sur son salaire, une retenue de 6 florins (12 francs 70 centimes), au profit de chaque pilote qui se sera présenté pour conduire le navire.

XIX. Les pilotes seront tenus, en arrivant à bord, de faire constater, d'accord avec le capitaine, la hauteur où se trouve le navire. Ils s'informeront de son tirant d'eau, de sa marche, de la longueur des semelles de dérive, s'il en a, ainsi que de ses qualités et défauts, afin de pouvoir se régler en conséquence pour la manœuvre. Ils ne pourront jamais s'excuser d'avoir ignoré ces particularités.

Si les capitaines ne donnent pas ces indications avec la précision nécessaire, ils seront responsables des conséquences qui en résulteront.

XX. Il est expressément enjoint aux pilotes de se servir, autant que de besoin, de la sonde, ou de veiller à ce qu'on en fasse usage, lorsqu'ils sont chargés de piloter des navires. Tout pilote qui n'aura pas observé cette mesure de précaution, et qui, par là, ou par quelque autre négligence, aura occasionné quelque accident ou avarie au navire, pourra être poursuivi devant les tribunaux.

Dans tous les cas d'avaries graves, arrivées au bâtiment par la faute du pilote, il ne lui sera alloué aucun salaire ; l'administration en fera la restitution, si le droit de pilotage avait été payé à l'avance. Elle pourra également restituer la portion de ce droit qui lui revient.

Il en sera de même dans les cas prévus à l'Article XXVIII.

XXI. Il est interdit aux pilotes de former aucune association, soit pour naviguer à bénéfice commun, soit pour partager le salaire de pilotage, acquis par l'équipage d'un bateau, avec celui d'un autre bateau.

Toutefois, lorsque des bateaux-pilotes des 2 nations, se trouvant ensemble en mer, dans les bouques ou dans la rivière, rencontreront ou découvriront des navires en détresse ou ayant besoin de secours, les pilotes auront la faculté de leur prêter, concurremment, aide et assistance ; au besoin ils s'entendront pour déterminer lesquels des bateaux-pilotes resteront sur les lieux, pour donner les secours ultérieurs.

Les salaires qui leur en reviendront, comme aussi les salaires acquis, pendant cette circonstance, par ceux des bateaux susmentionnés qui auront été désignés pour servir d'autres bâtiments se trouvant en mer, pourront être partagés d'une manière égale entre les équipages de ces divers bateaux, en raison du nombre d'hommes dont ils seront composés.

XXII. Tout pilote conduisant un navire aura soin, dès qu'il sera en vue de la station où il doit être relevé par un autre pilote, de faire arborer le pavillon d'appel, ainsi qu'il est prescrit à l'Article XVI, afin que le pilote de tour se prépare et n'occasionne aucun retard au navire.

Le pilote fera la manœuvre convenable pour faciliter l'arrivée à bord de celui qui doit le relever.

XXIII. Le pilote ne permettra pas qu'il soit mis du lest, des cendres ou des résidus de houille sur le pont, ou à portée d'être jetés à l'eau. Il s'opposera formellement à ce qu'il en soit versé dans les passes, rades, ports ou dans la rivière, et s'il s'aperçoit que, malgré sa défense, il en a été jeté à l'eau, il en rendra compte, aussitôt que possible, au chef de l'administration à laquelle il appartient.

Les pilotes qui négligeraient de faire immédiatement rapport de cette contravention, seront punis, selon l'exigence du cas.

Les capitaines délinquants seront punis d'une amende de 23 florins, 60 cents, ou 50 francs.

Il est défendu, sous la même peine, à tout capitaine de navire, d'embarquer dans le cours de fleuve du sable ou toute autre matière servant de lest, et d'augmenter ainsi le tirant d'eau de son bâtiment.

XXIV. Il est expressément enjoint aux pilotes de porter secours, par tous les moyens possibles, aux navires en détresse ou en danger, en observant toutefois ce qui est prescrit à l'Article XXV. Il leur est défendu de faire au préalable, pour cet objet, aucune stipulation de salaire, ou d'exiger aucune promesse, lesquelles, en tout cas, seront nulles.

Néanmoins une récompense extraordinaire est due par le capitaine du navire aux pilotes et à leurs aides, qui auront sauvé d'un péril imminent, à l'aide d'un ou de plusieurs bateaux pilotes, un navire démâté, privé de son gouvernail ou de ses ancres, ou ayant d'autres avaries graves.

Cette récompense, toujours proportionnée aux travaux qu'ils auront faits et aux dangers qu'ils auront courus, sera, autant que possible, réglée de gré à gré, entre les parties intéressées, par l'intervention de l'administration à laquelle appartiennent les pilotes, et par les commissaires permanents, dans le cas de concours des pilotes des 2 pays.

Les capitaines ayant besoin de secours ne pourront refuser les pilotes de l'une ou l'autre des 2 nations, qui se seront présentés les premiers pour les secourir.

XXV. Il est sévèrement interdit à tous pilotes, pêcheurs ou autres marins, de monter, sous quelque prétexte que ce soit, à bord d'un navire, même en détresse, à moins d'y être autorisés par le capitaine ou par les gens de l'équipage qui seraient restés à bord.

Les susdits pilotes, pêcheurs ou autres marins se garderont surtout de mettre la main aux mâts, cordages ou autres agrès, et de s'arroger aucune autorité, quand même le bâtiment serait échoué ou rempli d'eau, sans en avoir obtenu l'autorisation expresse du capitaine ou des gens de l'équipage restés à bord. Sans cette autorisation, les pilotes ou autres individus appelés ne pourront se permettre de démonter les écoutilles, de débarquer et transporter des objets qui se trouvent à bord.

XXVI. Tout pilote sera tenu de demander aux capitaines ou commandants des navires qui arrivent, s'ils ont de la poudre à canon à bord, et en quelle quantité; il en fera immédiatement rapport, s'il y a lieu, au capitaine du port de destination, sans préjudice des obligations imposées par les lois sur le transport des poudres à tirer.

Les pilotes seront tenus, en outre, d'avertir les capitaines qu'avant d'entrer en rivière ou en rade, ils aient à faire ôter la charge à boulets ou autres projectiles des bouches à feu, dont leurs bâtiments pourraient être armés.

XXVII. Il ne pourra passer à bord d'un navire qu'un seul pilote, à moins que, pour plus de sûreté, le capitaine n'en demande expressément un second, pour lequel il ne sera dû que la moitié du droit de pilotage. La demande du capitaine devra être constatée par écrit.

XXVIII. Sous peine d'encourir la retenue prévue à l'Article XX, et sans préjudice des peines à leur infliger par les tribunaux compétents, les pilotes ne pourront quitter le navire qu'ils conduisent, sans le consentement du capitaine, avant qu'il soit en sûreté là où ils sont obligés de le conduire.

Il leur est de même interdit d'abandonner les navires allant à la mer, avant qu'ils soient au-delà des dangers ou des dernières bouées.

Les capitaines, de leur côté, ne peuvent retenir les pilotes au delà du passage des dangers, ainsi qu'au-delà de l'endroit où ceux-ci doivent les conduire.

XXIX. Lorsqu'un pilote, à bord d'un navire destiné pour la Belgique, ne sera plus qu'à une lieue (de 20 au degré) de distance de la dernière bouée de la passe de l'Escaut occidental, par laquelle il veut entrer, il fera arborer à ce navire son pavillon national, mais non au haut du mât, où s'arbore le signal d'appel d'un pilote.

De même au passage de chaque station de pilotage de l'un ou de l'autre pays, tant à la remonte qu'à la descente de la rivière, le navire devra arborer son pavillon national.

Les capitaines auront à se conformer à ces dispositions.

XXX. Tout pilote, conduisant un navire venant de la mer, sera tenu, si le capitaine lui en fait la demande, de le conduire directement en rade de Rammekens.

De même les navires à la descente qui voudront aller stationner, soit en rade de Flessingue, soit à Rammekens pour y attendre un vent favorable à la sortie, y seront conduits directement par les pilotes de rivière.

Dans l'un comme dans l'autre cas de conduite directe du navire en rade de Rammekens, il n'y aura pas lieu à augmentation de droits.

XXXI. Les capitaines et leurs équipages doivent traiter les pilotes avec égards. Pendant leur séjour à bord, les capitaines seront tenus de leur fournir gratis la nourriture nécessaire et de pourvoir à leur logement. Ils s'abstiendront particulièrement de les entraver dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions; si cependant les capitaines agissent contrairement aux indications du pilote, et que celui-ci déclare, en présence de l'équipage, qu'il ne répond plus de la sûreté du navire, ils seront, dès ce moment, responsables de tous accidents quelconques. A son retour, le pilote en fera rapport au chef du pilotage de sa station.

XXXII. Les capitaines, à l'entrée comme à la sortie, seront tenus de remplir et de signer le certificat que leur présentera le pilote, constatant qu'ils ont été dûment pilotés. Ce certificat sera conforme au modèle arrêté par les règlements du pays auquel appartient le pilote.

Si le bâtiment a été mal piloté, ou s'il a touché, le capitaine devra en faire mention sur le certificat.

XXXIII. Les pilotes sont obligés de veiller à ce que, autant que faire se pourra, les ancres abandonnées soient convenablement garnies de bouées et d'orins.

Immédiatement après leur retour, ils feront rapport de cet abandon à leur administration, qui en donnera, s'il y a lieu, connaissance à l'administration du pays dans les eaux duquel se trouvent les ancres. Cette administration se chargera de faire lever ces ancres, si les intéressés, ou les personnes à ce commises par eux, ne l'ont pas fait dans les 15 jours; même après ce délai, les intéressés pourront encore faire lever leurs ancres aussi longtemps que l'administration du pilotage ne se sera pas mise en devoir de le faire.

Si des ancres non réclamées par les ayants-droit sont accidentellement levées dans les eaux Néerlandaises par des pilotes Belges, ceux-ci seront obligés de les délivrer à l'administration maritime des Pays-Bas, pourvu qu'il soit reconnu que ces ancres proviennent d'elle et, dans le cas contraire, aux fonctionnaires Néerlandais de l'administration de sauvetage des épaves. Dans l'un et l'autre cas, les dits pilotes obtiendront la récompense à laquelle ils ont droit.

Réciproquement, si les pilotes Néerlandais ont accidentellement levé des ancres non réclamées par les ayants-droit, dans les eaux de la Belgique, ils en feront la délivrance à l'autorité compétente de ce pays, contre la récompense fixée à cet effet.

XXXIV. Les administrations des 2 pays veilleront à ce que les pilotes sondent de temps à autre les passes de l'Escaut et de son embouchure, pour se tenir exactement au courant des variations des profondeurs, ainsi que de la configuration des bancs. Cette opération devra surtout avoir lieu après de grandes tempêtes et à la suite des grandes marées de l'équinoxe.

De même les pilotes porteront leur attention sur les bouées et balises, et dans le cas où ils remarqueront que les passes sont changées, ou que des bouées ou balises ont disparu ou sont mal placées, ils en donneront connaissance immédiate aux employés supérieurs de la station à laquelle ils appartiennent.

Les pilotes seront également chargés d'observer les feux des côtes et autres, et de porter à la connaissance de leurs supérieurs le résultat de leurs observations.

CHAPITRE III.—Du Payement des Droits de Pilotage, de Séjour et autres.

XXXV. Tout capitaine ou patron de navire, se rendant de la pleine mer en Belgique, ou de la Belgique en pleine mer, par l'Escaut ou le canal de Terneuzen, ne se trouvant pas dans les cas exceptionnels prévus par l'Article XLVIII, sera tenu de prendre un pilote de l'un ou de l'autre des 2 pays, sous peine de répondre de toutes les conséquences de son refus. S'il ne prend pas un pilote qu'il a été à même de se procurer, il n'en sera pas moins tenu au payement des droits établis par le tarif, lesquels seront partagés, par moitié, entre les administrations des 2 pilotages.

La même disposition s'appliquera au cas où un capitaine, après avoir refusé le pilote qui se présentait à lui, pour faire choix d'un pilote de l'autre nation, n'aura pas trouvé de pilote de cette dernière nation.

Tous navires entrant dans l'Escaut et n'ayant pas une destination déterminée et définitive pour un port Néerlandais, seront censés se rendre en Belgique.

XXXVI. Le droit de pilotage, sauf les cas exceptionnels prévus au présent règlement, sera payé conformément au tarif annexé au présent règlement, en raison du tirant d'eau des navires, et d'après les saisons d'hiver et d'été.

La saison d'hiver commence au 1er Octobre et celle d'été au 1er Avril, de manière que le pilotage d'été sera payé pour une course commencée avant le 1er Octobre, et celui d'hiver pour une course entreprise avant le 1er Avril.

Les bâtiments qui, se trouvant dans la Manche ou dans le Pas de Calais, prendront un pilote, pour être conduits aux stations de l'Escaut de l'un ou de l'autre pilotage, auront à payer moitié en sus du droit de pilotage ordinaire de la mer à Flessingue, plus 30 florins ou 63 francs 50 centimes, quel que soit le tirant d'eau du navire.

Des droits de pilotage seront les mêmes pour les navires de toutes les nations.

XXXVII. Le tirant d'eau, d'après lequel se règlera le droit de pilotage, sera constaté aux stations respectives d'Anvers, tant pour les navires partant de là pour la mer, que pour ceux qui viennent de la mer en destination de ce port.

Le tirant d'eau des bâtiments destinés pour Gand sera pris aux stations de Terneuzen; quant à ceux qui seront destinés pour un port Belge en amont d'Anvers, ou qui en viendront, ce tirant d'eau sera constaté à leur passage devant Anvers.

Cette opération se fera, dans ces divers lieux, en présence du capitaine ou de son second, et par un mesureur préposé à cette fin par l'administration du pilotage auquel appartient le pilote. Elle aura lieu, autant que faire se pourra, dans une eau tranquille, et il sera payé de ce chef un droit de 25 cents (53 centimes) par navire.

Les administrations de pilotage des stations de mer se rapporteront réciproquement à la déclaration que leur fourniront les pilotes de rivière, quant au tirant d'eau constaté à Anvers ou à Terneuzen, des navires destinés pour la mer.

XXXVIII. Si, pendant la course de pilotage, le bâtiment se trouve dans la nécessité de charger ou de débarquer des marchandises, le droit de pilotage sera calculé sur le tirant d'eau qu'aura eu le navire, après avoir chargé ou avant d'avoir débarqué ces marchandises.

XXXIX. Les capitaines ou patrons de navires, prenant des pilotes hors des bouques, payeront le droit de pilotage entier; s'ils n'ont pas voulu faire usage des pilotes stationnés hors des bouques, ils n'en payeront pas moins le droit entier.

S'il ne se trouve point de pilotes hors des bouques, ou s'il est démontré que les capitaines ou patrons ont été dans l'impossibilité d'employer leurs services, aucun droit de pilotage ne sera dû.

Si les capitaines sont parvenus jusqu'en deçà de la dernière bouée sans avoir rencontré un pilote, et qu'ensuite ils en prennent un à leur service, ils seront tenus de payer la moitié du droit total de pilotage ; s'ils ne font pas usage des pilotes qui se présentent à eux en deçà de la dernière bouée, ils n'en payeront pas moins la moitié du droit.

S'il est prouvé, que le capitaine ou patron d'un bâtiment n'a point trouvé de pilote en deçà de la dernière bouée, ou qu'il a été dans l'impossibilité de s'en servir, il sera exempt du paiement du droit.

XL. Les pilotes ne pourront exiger une plus forte somme que celle portée au tarif. S'il leur avait été payé davantage il serait fait restitution des sommes perçues en trop, sans préjudice des peines à leur infliger, s'il y a lieu.

Pareillement, il leur est interdit de réclamer aucune gratification, sous quelque prétexte que ce soit.

Si par suite de services extraordinaires, les pilotes ont mérité une récompense, elle sera fixée de la manière prescrite à l'Article XXIV.

XLI. Si des pilotes appartenant à d'autres localités, et admis en même temps au pilotage de l'Escaut, y conduisent un navire, il leur sera payé par le capitaine ou patron, outre les droits de pilotage, des frais de voyage à raison de 47 cents ou un franc par lieue (de 20 au degré) de distance entre l'endroit où le navire aura été amené et leur résidence.

XLII. Les bâtiments qui, ayant été pilotés à la sortie, seront obligés de revenir, en déans les 24 heures, en relâche forcée, dans le port d'où ils ont appareillé, ou seulement de rentrer dans la rivière, après avoir mis en mer, sans avoir rompu charge, ne payeront au même pilotage, tant à la rentrée qu'à la seconde sortie, que les 3 quarts du droit.

Dans ce cas, l'administration de l'autre pilotage aura la faculté de ne percevoir aussi que les 3 quarts du droit.

XLIII. Si un bateau pilote, soit par le mauvais temps, soit par d'autres circonstances, n'a pu faire passer de pilote à bord d'un bâtiment, mais l'a néanmoins piloté en navigant avec lui, le droit de pilotage en entier sera dû.

Tout navire qui, n'ayant pas de pilote à bord, est cependant piloté par un bâtiment sous voile à bord du quel se trouve un pilote, ne payera que les 3 quarts du droit de pilotage.

XLIV. Outre la table et un logement convenable, tout pilote aura droit à 2 florins ou 4 francs 23 centimes par jour, dans les cas suivants :

1°. Lorsqu'un capitaine se décidera, pour la sûreté de son navire, à prendre ou à conserver à bord un pilote ;

2°. Lorsque le pilote ayant achevé sa course de pilotage, sera empêché par le gros temps de quitter en rade le bord du navire ;

3°. Lorsqu'un bâtiment, pendant la course de pilotage, échouera ou sera retenu par le gros temps ou autres accidents, sans qu'il y ait de la faute du pilote, mais seulement dans le cas où la durée de ce séjour forcé dépassera 3 jours, le payement des frais de séjour ne devenant obligatoire qu'à dater de la quatrième journée ;

4°. Lorsqu'un capitaine, ayant déjà le pilote à bord, différera de mettre à la voile quoique les circonstances permettent son départ ;

5°. Lorsque les pilotes seront forcés de rester en quarantaine avec des navires ; dans ce cas, la rétribution de 2 florins ou 4 francs 23 centimes sera exigible du moment où le pilote de mer, resté à bord, aurait dû être relevé, et il lui sera de plus alloué, à titre de frais de route pour son retour à sa station, 36 cents ou 75 centimes par lieue (de 20 au degré).

6°. Lorsque, par suite de son fort tirant d'eau, un bâtiment se trouvera forcé d'alléger, ou que, pendant sa course de pilotage, il s'arrêtera pour embarquer encore des marchandises ;

7°. Lorsqu'un pilote n'aura pu être débarqué, et que le capitaine, par suite du temps ou du vent, se trouvera dans l'obligation de le mener en mer avec lui. Dans ce cas, si le séjour du pilote à bord se prolonge au delà d'un mois, il n'aura plus droit qu'à un florin 42 cents, ou 3 francs par jour.

Le capitaine est tenu de débarquer sans frais le pilote dès que l'occasion s'en présentera, et de lui payer, pour frais de route et de nourriture jusqu'au lieu de sa station : 47 cents, ou 1 franc par lieue (de 20 au degré), s'il le dépose dans un port de sa nation ; 1 florin (2 francs 12 centimes) par lieue, s'il le dépose en pays étranger ; 47 cents (1 franc) par lieue, si le pilote passe en mer à bord d'un bâtiment se rendant au port d'où dépend le pilote, et 1 florin (2 francs 12 centimes), s'il se rend dans un autre port de la nation à laquelle il appartient.

Les pilotes de rivière qui conduiront les navires de Flessingue à Terneuzen ou à Anvers, et vice versa, n'auront droit à aucune indemnité pour frais de retour.

XLV. Si un capitaine a engagé un pilote, et que plus tard il le congédie, ou que, sans en être empêché par les vents contraires, il tarde à mettre à la voile, le pilote aura droit à 2 florins ou 4 francs 23 centimes par jour, à partir de celui où il aura été retenu jusqu'au jour où il aura été congédié, ou jusqu'à celui où le navire aura pu appareiller.

XLVI. Si, par suite de circonstances imprévues, telles que vents contraires, mauvais temps, avaries, gelées, charriage de glaces, un pilote se trouve dans l'impossibilité d'atteindre le terme de sa course, soit en allant à la mer sans être arrivé en travers de la dernière bouée, soit en naviguant sur la rivière, et qu'il soit obligé, de l'aveu du capitaine, de retourner au point de départ, le droit de pilotage sera payé en raison de la distance parcourue. Cependant, si, ne sortant, le navire est arrivé en travers de la dernière bouée, et qu'il soit contraint de revenir, il sera payé la moitié du droit de pilotage fixé par le tarif pour la sortie.

XLVII. En cas de charriage de glaces, le droit de pilotage sera double.

Il est bien entendu que charriage de glaces signifie non pas l'existence de quelques glaçons flottants, mais d'une quantité de glace assez considérable, pour que la marche des navires en soit sensiblement entravée, et qu'il en résulte quelque danger pour la course de pilotage.

Il sera également payé double droit de pilotage pour les navires très difficiles à gouverner, faute d'une quantité suffisante de lest, ou par quelque avarie au gouvernail ou aux agrès, laquelle, sans compromettre sérieusement le navire, rend le pilotage beaucoup plus dangereux.

L'appréciation des cas dont il s'agit au présent Article, est laissée à l'arbitrage de l'administration du pilotage auquel appartient le pilote.

XLVIII. Ne seront pas soumis à l'obligation de prendre un pilote :

- 1°. Les bâtiments de guerre ;
- 2 . Les navires ou bâtiments de mer sur lest, dont le tirant d'eau n'atteint pas 15 décimètres ;
- 3°. Les navires faisant le cabotage dans le fleuve ;
- 4°. Les navires ou bateaux des 2 nations, faisant la pêche du hareng, de la morue, ou du poisson frais, ou servant au transport de la marée fraîche, ou de poisson salé. Si les patrons des bâtiments de cette dernière catégorie préfèrent se servir d'un pilote, ils payeront la moitié du droit fixé.

XLIX. Il ne sera perçu aucun droit ou aucune autre somme relatif au pilotage, sans qu'il en soit délivré quittance dûment signée aux capitaines ou à leurs consignataires.

L. Afin d'assurer aux administrations respectives le payement des droits de pilotage, les receveurs des douanes ne délivreront aux capitaines ni décharge, ni déclaration de sortie, aussi longtemps qu'ils n'auront pas payé ces droits, tant pour l'entrée que pour la sortie, ou fourni caution satisfaisante au profit de qui il appartiendra.

Si un capitaine, ayant fait choix d'un pilote de l'un des 2 pays pour le conduire jusqu'en mer, se décidait, avant de mettre en mer, à prendre un pilote de l'autre pays, il en fera la demande ou l'appel conformément à l'Article XVI. Dans ce cas le droit payé ou cautionné pour le pilotage de mer passera en faveur de l'administration qui aura fourni le pilote, et ce sur la production du certificat exigé par l'Article XXXII.

LI. Les capitaines auront la faculté de former, dans le délai de 6 mois après le payement du droit, toutes les réclamations qu'ils jugeront convenables, pour obtenir la restitution de ce qu'ils croiraient avoir été indûment perçu.

Réciproquement, l'administration du pilotage pourra réclamer des capitaines ce qui n'aurait pas été payé, soit par erreur, soit par toute autre circonstance, en déans les 6 mois, à dater du jour que le droit aurait dû être payé.

CHAPITRE IV.—Du Service Sanitaire.

LII. Le régime sanitaire, appliqué aux provenances suspectes, sera, autant que possible, le même pour les 2 pays.

Les commissaires chargés de la surveillance commune se communiqueront réciproquement, aussitôt qu'ils leur auront été notifiés, tous les arrêtés ou instructions de leurs Gouvernements respectifs, déterminant les pays dont les provenances par mer doivent être habituellement ou temporairement considérées comme suspectes de contagion, ainsi que les mesures de précaution que chacun des 2 Gouvernements aura jugé convenable de prendre à l'égard de ces provenances.

LIII. En conséquence de ce qui aura été statué par le Gouvernement de l'un et de l'autre pays, des ordres seront donnés aux pilotes des 2 nations par les administrations auxquelles ils appartiennent, pourqu'ils aient à se conformer aux dispositions de l'Article LIV, à l'égard de tout bâtiment arrivant de pays dont les provenances sont déclarées soumises à un régime sanitaire quelconque, soit par les 2 Gouvernements, soit seulement par l'un d'eux.

Si les navires sont destinés pour Anvers, il sera loisible au Gouvernement Néerlandais de les faire accompagner, sur son territoire, d'un garde de santé. Il lui sera également loisible de faire rester à bord le pilote de mer, jusqu'à l'admission à libre pratique par l'autorité Belge.

Cependant, au cas où le bâtiment n'est sujet à quarantaine qu'en Néerlande, ou bien seulement en Belgique, le pilote, s'il appartient au pilotage Néerlandais, sera débarqué en rade de Flessingue, pour, dans le premier cas, y être assujéti aux mesures sanitaires jugées convenables. Les navires destinés pour la Belgique, par le canal de Terneuzen, subiront, en rade de Rammekens, ou dans tout autre endroit sûr et commode à convenir, les mêmes mesures de quarantaine ou d'observation auxquelles seront assujétis les bâtiments destinés pour la Néerlande; et si, en raison de leur provenance, ils n'ont qu'à subir la simple visite sanitaire, elle aura lieu à leur passage devant Flessingue avec toute la promptitude possible. Toutefois il sera facultatif aux bâtiments se rendant en Belgique par le canal de Terneuzen, d'aller de préférence à la station Belge sur l'Escaut purger la quarantaine qu'ils auraient dû subir dans les Pays-Bas, après quoi ces bâtiments pourront passer librement par le susdit canal.

LIV. Tout pilote, pêcheur ou autre marin, avant de passer à bord d'un navire qui se trouve en mer, ou qui en vient, soit à l'effet de le piloter, soit pour tout autre motif, est tenu de le hêler et de s'enquérir de son nom, de celui du capitaine, du port d'où il vient et du lieu de sa destination, ainsi que de toutes autres circonstances qu'il importe de connaître.

Si le navire vient d'un pays considéré comme suspect de contagion, d'après les lois et arrêtés de l'un ou de l'autre Gouvernement, le pilote qui le conduira, soit en naviguant devant lui, soit après être monté à bord, aura soin de faire hisser immédiatement le pavillon de quarantaine décrit à l'Article LV. Si'il est destiné pour Anvers, le pilote, à son arrivée devant Flessingue, se conformera à ce qui est prescrit par l'Article LVI, pour faciliter l'accompagnement du navire par un garde de santé, et le bâtiment, muni de son pilote de rivière, pourra immédiatement continuer sa route pour la station Belge, destinée aux visites et précautions sanitaires. Si le navire se rend en Belgique par le canal de Ternouzen, le pilote de mer le conduira directement soit à la station Néerlandaise de quarantaine indiquée à l'Article LIII, soit à la station Belge, conformément à la stipulation du même Article, à moins que le bâtiment ne doive être soumis qu'à la simple visite d'observation en rade de Flessingue.

Tout pilote, soit de mer, soit de rivière, conduisant un navire venant d'endroits suspects sous le rapport sanitaire, empêchera, pendant sa course de pilotage, toute communication avec ce bâtiment. Faute par lui d'observer scrupuleusement les mesures de précaution prescrites, il sera puni, selon l'exigence des cas, sans préjudice des peines prononcées par les lois et arrêtés concernant le service sanitaire. La même disposition est applicable à tout pêcheur ou marin faisant fonctions de pilote.

Les capitaines seront tenus, en tout ce qui les concerne, de se conformer exactement aux dispositions du présent Article.

LV. Le signal de quarantaine consiste en un pavillon jaune, arboré au grand tenon. Les navires qui sont dépourvus de ce pavillon, feront flotter leur pavillon national dans les haubans du petit perroquet ou du petit hunier; s'ils n'ont qu'un mât, ce pavillon sera arboré dans la partie supérieure des bas-haubans.

LVI. Les navires arrivant de la pleine mer pour se rendre à Anvers par l'Escaut occidental, et venant d'endroits suspects sous le rapport sanitaire, ayant la faculté de continuer leur route, sans entrave ni retard, accompagnés d'un garde de santé, les pilotes sont tenus de commander ou de faire commander les manoeuvres, les plus convenables à cet effet. Si, non-obstant les dites manoeuvres, le garde de santé ne se présente pas, les susdits navires pourront continuer leur route pour leur destination.

LVII. Les frais et formalités relatifs aux mesures de quarantaine, ainsi qu'aux visites d'observation auxquelles les bâtiments, se rendant en Belgique par le canal de Terneuzen, sont assujettis dans les eaux Néerlandaises, seront les mêmes que pour les navires en destination des ports Néerlandais.

CHAPITRE V.—Du Contentieux et de la Juridiction.

LVIII. Les contestations relatives aux droits de pilotage, salaires et indemnités des pilotes, seront, autant que possible, terminées à l'amiable par l'intervention des chefs respectifs du pilotage. Dans le cas où les efforts de ces derniers seraient infructueux, les parties seront engagées, par tous les moyens possibles de persuasion, à soumettre la décision à des arbitres. En cas de refus d'arbitrage, ces contestations seront jugées par le tribunal de commerce dans le ressort duquel est le siège principal de l'administration à laquelle les pilotes appartiennent. Si les contestations intéressent les 2 pilotages, elles seront décidées par le tribunal de commerce d'Anvers. Si l'une des 2 administrations seulement veut contester, les frais seront à sa charge exclusive; dans le cas contraire, les frais et les conséquences seront supportés en commun.

LIX. Les contraventions au présent règlement commises par les pilotes ou autres personnes employées au service du pilotage, seront jugées et punies d'après les dispositions de la loi du 6 Mars, 1818, par le tribunal correctionnel dans le ressort duquel est le siège principal de l'administration à laquelle appartiendront les contrevenants, sans préjudice des peines de discipline que chaque administration pourra infliger à ses pilotes.

Les amendes infligées à l'équipage d'un bateau pilote seront supportées proportionnellement par tous les hommes qui en font partie, en raison de la quote-part attribuée à chacun d'eux dans les salaires de pilotage.

LX. Les contraventions au présent règlement, commises par les capitaines ou patrons de navire et leurs équipages, pour lesquelles aucune peine spéciale n'a été prononcée, seront punies, selon la gravité des cas, d'une amende de 9 florins 45 cents à 47 florins 25 cents, ou 20 à 100 francs. Les dites peines, ainsi que celles spécialement déterminées au présent règlement, seront infligées par le tribunal correctionnel du port de départ ou d'arrivée en Belgique.

LXI. Une expédition de tous les jugements et arrêts, rendus en matière de pilotage par les tribunaux et cours de l'un des deux pays, sera adressée au Gouvernement de l'autre pays, pour autant que celui-ci ait intérêt à les connaître.

CHAPITRE VI.—Dispositions Générales.

LXII. Sauf les cas prévus ci-après, il est interdit à quiconque n'est pas breveté de pilote, aux termes du présent règlement, de se présenter aux navires, en quelque occasion que ce soit, pour les piloter et surtout d'y remplir les fonctions de pilote.

Tout individu non pourvu de brevet, qui n'observerait pas les dispositions du présent Article, et par la faute duquel un navire aurait éprouvé quelque accident ou avarie, sera puni, suivant l'exigence du cas, de la manière que le serait un pilote breveté, et le droit de pilotage qu'il aurait reçu sera restitué pour être partagé par moitié entre les 2 pilotages.

Toutefois il est permis aux pêcheurs et autres gens de mer, lorsqu'aucun bateau-pilote n'est en vue, de piloter les navires à l'entrée, pourvu que les capitaines désirent faire usage de leurs services.

Tout capitaine piloté par un pêcheur ou autre marin sera tenu, dès qu'un pilote breveté se présentera, de la prendre à bord. S'il s'y refuse, ou s'il fait ou ordonne des manoeuvres pour esquiver le bateau-pilote, il sera passible du droit de pilotage comme si le pilote l'eût conduit.

LXIII. Les pilotes non admis au pilotage de l'Escaut, ou autres gens de mer qui, en conformité de l'Article LXII, auraient entrepris de piloter un navire dans les passes de ce fleuve, seront tenus de faire les manoeuvres convenables pour faciliter l'arrivée à bord du pilote qui se présenterait pour les remplacer, et ce sous peine de la retenue de leur salaire au profit de ce même pilote et de la caisse du pilotage.

LXIV. Tout pêcheur ou marin qui aura piloté un navire, est tenu d'en donner connaissance aux chefs respectifs des stations de pilotage où il aura abordé.

LXV. Il est défendu à tous pêcheurs ou gens de mer d'arborer le pavillon distinctif des pilotes de l'un ou de l'autre pays, ou tout autre pavillon qui y ressemble.

LXVI. Toutes épaves, tout navires et bâtiments abandonnés seront fidèlement délivrés par les pilotes aux fonctionnaires préposés à cet effet dans le pays dans les eaux duquel ces épaves auront été trouvées. Si elles sont rencontrées en mer, la délivrance s'en fera par les pilotes à l'autorité de leur pays, et au cas de concours dans les opérations de sauvetage par les pilotes des 2 nations, les épaves seront délivrées à l'autorité du lieu, où, d'après les circonstances, on pourra les conduire avec le plus de facilité et de promptitude. Les pilotes pourront faire valoir leurs droits à la récompense de sauvetage, qui sera fixée par le juge si les partis ne peuvent en convenir.

CHAPITRE VII.—De la Surveillance Commune.

LXVII. La surveillance commune, ainsi qu'elle se trouve définie au § 2 de l'Article IX du Traité du 19 Avril, 1839, sera applicable tant à ce qui existe qu'à ce qui sera établi ultérieurement. Elle sera exercée, soit conjointement, soit séparément, par les commissaires institués à cette fin, et de la manière déterminée ci-après.

LXVIII. Les commissaires se réuniront au moins une fois par trimestre, alternativement à Anvers et à Flessingue. Ces réunions auront lieu à des jours convenables et à déterminer entre eux d'un commun accord.

Elles auront principalement pour but l'inspection générale, tant des bouées, balises et passes navigables, que des services de pilotage dans les limites tracées par les Articles LXIX et LXXI ci-après. Dans ces réunions, les commissaires arrêteront en commun toutes les mesures que l'intérêt de ces divers services pourra réclamer, en tant que ces mesures rentrent dans le cercle de leurs attributions. Si elles excèdent leurs pouvoirs, il en sera par eux référé à leurs Gouvernements respectifs.

Outre ces réunions périodiques, les Commissaires de l'un et de l'autre pays pourront, lorsqu'ils le jugeront utile, provoquer d'autres assemblées, qui se tiendront aussi alternativement à Anvers et à Flessingue ; dans ce cas ils seront tenus de convoquer réciproquement 8 jours à l'avance, en faisant connaître le but et les motifs de la réunion.

LXIX. Les 2 Gouvernements s'étant engagés à conserver les passes navigables de l'Escaut et de son embouchure, et à y placer et y entretenir les balises et bouées nécessaires, chacun pour sa partie du fleuve, les commissaires, dans leurs inspections à faire toutes les fois qu'ils le trouveront convenable, soit conjointement, après s'être concertés à cet effet, soit individuellement, observeront avec soin tous les changements qui pourraient s'être opérés dans les fonds et passes ordinaires, en examinant si, par suite de ces changements, les bouées et balises se trouvent encore placées convenablement et en nombre suffisant. Ils s'assureront également si, par d'autres causes des bouées ou balises ne se trouvent plus à leur place, ou pourraient être mieux et plus sûrement établies.

Lorsque les Commissaires des 2 Gouvernements se trouveront réunis, il sera dressé procès-verbal en double expédition du résultat de leur inspection, et, s'il y a lieu, ils y consigneront leurs propositions relatives aux améliorations à introduire dans ce service, après avoir, pour autant que de besoin, consulté à cet égard les chefs ou les pilotes les plus expérimentés de l'un et de l'autre pilotage.

En cas de désaccord entre les Commissaires des 2 Gouvernements, sur la manière de voir, ainsi que sur les mesures à prendre, il sera fait mention au procès-verbal de l'opinion des uns et des autres. Si les Commissaires du Gouvernement auquel incombe l'obligation d'entretenir les bouées et balises, reconnaissent qu'il est urgent de prendre des mesures, ils auront soin d'y faire procéder le plus promptement possible, soit par l'administration du pilotage appartenant au dit Gouvernement, soit par l'entrepreneur du balisage. S'il n'y a point d'urgence, les Commissaires en référeront respectivement à leurs Gouvernements.

Les commissaires des 2 Gouvernements, dans leurs inspections individuelles, trouvant quelque dérangement dans le balisage ou des changements dans les fonds et passes navigables, en informeront, sans délai, leurs collègues, et, en cas de besoin se réuniront, afin de reconnaître le fait signalé et d'agir de concert pour les mesures à prendre, ainsi qu'il est prescrit ci-dessus et dans l'Article LXVIII.

LXX. Tous les changements que les commissaires conviendront d'opérer dans le système de l'établissement des bouées et balises, en aval d'Anvers jusqu'en pleine mer, seront par eux marqués sur le plan du relevé qu'ils en ont fait conjointement, afin que ce plan indique toujours la situation existante des bouées et balises.

Ce plan, fait en double et signé par les commissaires respectifs, sera de part et d'autre gardé en dépôt.

LXXI. La surveillance commune du pilotage ne s'étendra pas au delà du service actif des pilotes. En conséquence cette surveillance aura seulement pour but de s'assurer que les pilotes de l'un et de l'autre Gouvernement remplissent leurs devoirs, conformément aux dispositions réglementaires communes aux 2 pays.

Les Commissaires s'entendront pour faire conjointement les enquêtes nécessaires, à l'effet, s'il y a lieu, de constater l'inconduite, les négligences, l'impéritie, les délits et toutes contraventions des pilotes au présent règlement.

Il sera dressé procès-verbal de ces enquêtes, en y consignant, s'il y a lieu, les dépositions des témoins sur les faits à constater.

Si ces faits sont de nature à n'attirer aux pilotes qu'une punition disciplinaire, les commissaires de leur nation auront soin qu'il en soit fait l'application par l'administration du pilotage auquel appartiennent ces pilotes. Si, au contraire, la punition des délits ou contraventions excède le pouvoir ou la compétence de la dite administration, il en sera référé par elle à son Gouvernement.

Les commissaires de l'un ou de l'autre Gouvernement, ayant pris isolément connaissance d'une contravention ou d'un fait quelconque contraire aux devoirs des pilotes qui n'appartiennent point à leur nation, établiront, pour autant que de besoin, le fait par des preuves et dénonceront officiellement les pilotes coupables aux commissaires de leur nation, pour leur faire infliger les peines ou punitions qu'ils auraient méritées, ou pour en rendre compte au Gouvernement qui doit en connaître, sauf, à ces derniers commissaires, le droit de requérir au préalable une enquête par les commissaires réunis des 2 pays.

LXXII. En cas d'échouement et de naufrage d'un bâtiment ou de tout sinistre de cette nature, les commissaires seront tenus de se rendre, aussitôt que possible, sur les lieux, si faire se peut conjointement, afin de s'enquérir des causes et circonstances de l'événement, tant par eux mêmes que d'après les dépositions à recueillir contradictoirement du capitaine ou patron du navire, de son équipage et du pilote, s'il en existe à bord ; de tout quoi il sera dressé procès-verbal en double, pour servir et valoir où besoin sera. A défaut de comparition simultanée des commissaires des 2 Gouvernements sur les lieux, à l'effet de faire l'enquête dont il s'agit, ceux qui s'y trouveront les premiers auront néanmoins la faculté de procéder aux investigations qu'ils jugeraient nécessaires, sauf aux commissaires absents le droit de requérir ensuite, si bon leur semble, une nouvelle enquête, conjointement avec les autres commissaires, qui ne pourront se refuser à cette nouvelle instruction.

LXXIII. Les commissaires auront soin dans leurs inspections, soit générales, soit particulières, d'être munis de leurs lettres de service, délivrées par les Gouvernements respectifs, afin de pouvoir, au besoin, se faire reconnaître par les autorités des 2 pays, et avoir droit aux égards et aux prérogatives attachés à leurs fonctions. Le bâtiment qu'ils monteront portera une marque distinctive, et sera exempt de toute visite de douane et de police.

Les commissaires pourront s'adresser leur correspondance officielle par les voies qu'ils jugeront les plus convenables.

LXXIV. Le présent règlement, qui ne pourra être changé ni modifié que d'un commun accord, sera imprimé en Hollandais et en Français, et déposé dans chacun des bureaux de pilotage à l'inspection de qui il appartiendra.

Anvers, le 20 Mai, 1843.

ANNEXE B.—Stipulations relatives au Tarif des Droits de Pilotage, arrêté le 20 Mai, 1843.

ART. I. Le tarif ci-joint est adopté pour le terme de 2 ans. Après l'expiration de ce terme, il pourra, d'un commun accord, être arrêté définitivement, ou continué pour un nouveau terme à convenir.

Si les parties ne s'entendent pas à cet égard, elles s'occuperont immédiatement d'établir un tarif définitif au vœu du premier alinéa du § 2 de l'Article IX du Traité.

En attendant le pilotage retombera sous l'empire du Tarif du 11 Juin, 1839, établi en vertu du 2^{me} alinéa du dit paragraphe.

II. Si les tarifs de la Meuse sont réduits, avant le terme précité de 2 ans, le tarif d'essai adopté pour l'Escaut sera dès-lors réduit de pleine droit dans la même proportion.

REGLEMENT pour l'Exécution de l'Article IX du Traité du 19 Avril, 1839, et l'Article XVIII du Traité du 5 Novembre, 1842, relativement aux Fanaux.

ART. I. Le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas s'engage à établir de nouveaux fanaux à Terneuzen et à la pointe sud de Borselen, comme aussi à entretenir en bon état d'éclairage ces 2 feux et ceux déjà existant à Flessingue et à West-Kapelle.

Cet engagement à l'égard du fanal de Borselen, remplacera celui contracté à l'Article XVIII du Traité du 5 Novembre, 1842, relativement au fanal de Bath.

Ces 2 feux seront établis de telle façon qu'ils communiquent directement avec celui existant à Flessingue et soient visibles tous deux de ce dernier point.

II. Le droit de 3 cents par tonneau, établi par le § 2 de l'Article XVIII précité, ne pourra être augmenté, ni directement ni indirectement, pas même par l'usage du papier timbré ou par la perception d'autres subventions quelconques.

Le recouvrement de ce droit se fera d'après les mêmes principes et des mêmes navires, que le droit unique de navigation mentionné au § 3 de l'Article IX du Traité du 19 Avril, 1839.

III. Il sera délivré quittance du paiement du droit de fanaux d'après le modèle suivant :

Droit de Fanaux.—Quittance No.

Reçu pour le navire
 capitaine mesurant tonneaux, suivant certificat de jauge No.
 allant à la mer
 venant de la mer la somme de

. le 1800.

*L'Agent chargé de la perception du droit sur la

IV. Afin d'assurer le paiement des droits de fanaux, les receveurs des douanes ne délivreront aux capitaines ni décharge, ni déclaration de sortie, aussi longtemps qu'ils n'auront pas payé ces droits, tant pour l'entrée que pour la sortie, ou fourni caution satisfaisante.

V. Toutes les contestations qui pourraient surgir à l'occasion de ce droit, seront jugées d'après les dispositions admises à l'égard du droit unique de navigation.

VI. Le Gouvernement Belge fera connaître au Gouvernement des Pays-Bas, avant la mise à exécution du présent règlement, s'il entend faire usage de la faculté de rachat qui lui est laissée par le § 3 de l'Article XVIII précité, sauf, dans ce cas, le droit de percevoir par lui-même sur son territoire.

Si plus tard le Gouvernement Belge désire remplacer l'un de ces deux modes de rétribution par l'autre, il ne pourra le faire pour un terme moindre qu'une année, et il en préviendra chaque fois le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas, 3 mois avant le 1er Janvier de l'année avec laquelle le changement prendra cours.

VII. La somme de 10,000 francs, fixée par le § 3 de l'Article XVIII, sera, en cas de rachat du droit de feux, versée par le Gouvernement Belge, à l'expiration de chaque année, entre les mains de l'agent Néerlandais à Anvers, chargé de la recette du droit sur la navigation de l'Escaut.

VIII. Si par les rapports des pilotes ou par tous autres moyens, les Commissaires permanents Belges reconnaissent que le service des feux laisse à désirer, ils en informeront sans délai leurs collègues des Pays-Bas, afin qu'il soit pris des mesures pour faire cesser sans retard tous sujets de plainte.

REGLEMENT pour l'Exécution de l'Article IX du Traité du 19 Avril, 1839, relativement à la Pêche et au Commerce de Pêcherie.

ART. I. Les habitants des 2 pays sont admis à l'exercice de la pêche, conformément aux stipulations du présent règlement, dans toutes les eaux, anses, criques, bancs et dépendances du fleuve, compris dans les limites ci-après désignées et renseignées à la carte annexée en double expédition au procès-verbal de la séance de la commission mixte de navigation, du 25 Octobre, 1841, savoir :

Sur l'Escaut en aval d'Anvers, à partir de la ligne censée tracée d'une rive à l'autre du fleuve, aux endroits où se trouvent situés les 2 embarcadères pour le passage d'eau d'Anvers à la tête de Flandre ;

Sur la continuation de ce fleuve, jusqu'au fort de Bath, d'où la ligne de délimitation correspondra directement à la pointe la plus septentrionale de la digue de mer du polder de Hoogewerf, commune d'Ossendrecht ;

Sur l'Escaut occidental, jusqu'à la mer :

Sur les eaux du Hellegat, jusqu'au passage d'eau entre Zaamslag et Stoppeldijk ;

Sur le Braakman, jusqu'à la limite à tracer en ligne directe de Philippine au ci-devant fort Maurice ;

Sur le Zwin, jusqu'à la ville de L'Ecluse, et

Sur le Sloe, jusqu'à la ligne tracée du fort de Rammekens à la tour de 's Heerenhoek.

S'il est reconnu plus tard que dans les eaux du Hellegat, du Braakman et du Zwin, la pêche est exercée par les pêcheurs Néerlandais, au-delà des limites susindiquées pour ces eaux, ces limites seront reculées jusqu'aux endroits où la pêche sera trouvée praticable, de manière que toujours elles soient les mêmes pour les pêcheurs des 2 pays.

II. La pêche sera exercée sur le pied d'une parfaite réciprocité et égalité ; de telle manière qu'aucune faveur ou immunité, en fait de pêche, ne pourra directement ou indirectement être accordée aux pêcheurs nationaux, dont ne jouiront en même temps les pêcheurs sujets de l'autre pays.

En conséquence les 2 Gouvernements s'engagent à ne pas affermer la pêche dans les limites désignées à l'Article I.

III. Celui qui voudra exercer la pêche sera tenu de justifier de sa qualité de sujet de l'un des 2 pays, au moyen d'un certificat de l'autorité communale du lieu de son domicile.

IV. Muni de ce certificat, le pêcheur se présentera une fois par an à l'agent que chaque Gouvernement désignera sur son territoire, savoir : pour la pêche dans la partie Belge de l'Escaut, à Anvers, et pour la pêche dans la partie Néerlandaise du fleuve, à Bath, et fera la déclaration du bâtiment et de l'équipage avec lesquels il est habitué ou se propose d'exercer sa profession.

Cette formalité devra être remplie pendant la première quinzaine des mois de Décembre, Mars, Juin, ou Septembre de chaque année. Si elle a eu lieu plus tard, le pêcheur sera censé, relativement au paiement de la rétribution fixée par les règlements particuliers de chaque pays, avoir fait la déclaration dans la première quinzaine de l'un de ces 4 mois, le dernier échu.

V. Par suite de cette déclaration et moyennant paiement de la rétribution fixée par le règlement particulier du pays que cela concerne, il sera délivré au pêcheur, par l'agent et à l'endroit susmentionnés, un permis pour la pêche de toutes sortes de poissons, qui sera valable pour une année entière, à compter du 1^{er} du mois qui suivra celui dans lequel il a fait ou est censé avoir fait sa déclaration.

En aucun cas, la rétribution pour les permis de pêche sur l'Escaut occidental ne pourra être plus élevée que celle pour les permis sur l'Escaut oriental. De même, la rétribution pour les permis de pêche Belges sur l'Escaut en aval d'Anvers, ne pourra être plus élevée que celle pour les permis sur l'Escaut en amont.

VI. Ce permis énoncera le nom du pêcheur et un numéro, que celui-ci sera tenu de faire peindre distinctement, à l'huile et en chiffres noirs de la longueur de 15 centimètres, au milieu d'un fond circulaire blanc de 25 centimètres de diamètre sur la poupe de son bâtiment, aux 2 côtés du gouvernail, de manière à ne pouvoir être détaché ni enlevé, et à pouvoir être reconnu à quelque distance.

Si le bâtiment sert en même temps à l'exercice de la pêche dans les eaux des 2 pays, le numéro du permis Néerlandais sera peint à la droite, et le numéro du permis Belge à la gauche du gouvernail.

VII. Tout pêcheur sera tenu d'avoir à bord de son bâtiment ses permis de pêche, et d'en faire exhibition aux surveillants de la pêche à leur demande. Les surveillants, dans ces cas, seront tenus de se faire reconnaître en arborant un pavillon, dont les 2 Gouvernements se communiqueront réciproquement la description.

Nul pêcheur ne pourra se soustraire ou tenter de se soustraire à la visite des surveillants, lorsqu'ils se présenteront à lui à cet effet.

VIII. La disposition de l'Article II ne portera pas atteinte au droit que se réservent respectivement les 2 Gouvernements, d'accorder des concessions de bancs artificiels de moules; bien entendu que l'établissement de ces bancs ne pourra être accordé qu'aux endroits où les bancs de moules ne se forment pas naturellement. Elle n'empêchera également pas les concessions pour l'exercice de la pêche au moyen de gords.

Cependant, dans l'un et l'autre cas, les sujets des 2 pays concourront sur un pied de parfaite égalité, et le sort décidera au besoin entre ceux qui se seront présentés dans le délai utile pour être admis aux dites concessions.

Les annonces relatives à ces concessions seront transmises par l'administration de la pêche d'un pays à l'administration de la pêche de l'autre pays, au moins un mois avant l'expiration du délai fixé pour faire la demande en obtention de ces concessions.

IX. Dans tous les cas, le Gouvernement qui accordera ces concessions, s'assurera préalablement qu'elles ne pourront préjudicier à la navigation du fleuve ou produire des atterrissements nuisibles. Si plus tard de semblables inconvénients se faisaient remarquer, les commissaires permanents les signaleront, et le Gouvernement qui aura accordé la concession sera tenu de la retirer et de faire immédiatement cesser les obstacles.

X. Tout individu qui, pendant la durée d'une des concessions mentionnées à l'Article VIII, aura détruit ou endommagé les bancs artificiels de moules, ou les gords d'un autre pêcheur, ou qui aura pêché ou tenté de pêcher des moules sur les dits bancs, ou enlevé ou tenté d'enlever le poisson des filets des gords, sera puni d'après les lois du pays où ce délit aura été commis.

XI. La pêche se fera aux conditions prescrites par les règlements particuliers en vigueur dans le pays où elle s'exercera, et les 2 Gouvernements s'engagent à se communiquer réciproquement les dispositions réglementaires arrêtées ou à intervenir, au moins 15 jours avant leur mise à exécution, pour être portées à la connaissance de ceux que la chose concerne.

XII. Les avertissements que les administrations respectives de la pêche jugeront nécessaire de porter à la connaissance des pêcheurs, seront envoyés immédiatement de la part de l'administration dont ils émanent, à l'agent désigné pour la pêche dans l'autre pays, pour, par les soins de celui-ci, être affichés dans les lieux de domicile ordinaire des pêcheurs.

XIII. Les pêcheurs des 2 nations pourront respectivement, pendant le terme de 2 ans à dater du jour de la mise à exécution du présent règlement, employer les filets dont ils sont en possession, quoique non conformes à ce qui pourrait, à cet égard, être prescrit par les lois et règlements de l'autre pays.

XIV. Toute contravention au présent règlement sera poursuivie et punie conformément aux lois du pays où elle aura été commise.

XV. Chaque fois que, dans l'un des 2 pays, une contravention en matière de pêche aura été constatée à la charge d'un sujet de l'autre pays, et que l'administration de la pêche du pays où cette contravention aura été commise trouvera qu'il y a lieu de poursuivre, elle enverra à l'administration de la pêche du pays auquel appartient le prévenu, une copie du procès-verbal et de la citation en justice.

Elle donnera également connaissance à cette administration du jugement qui sera intervenu.

XVI. Les produits à désigner ci-après, provenant de la pêche exercée par les habitants des 2 pays, dans les limites indiquées à l'Article I du présent règlement, jouiront indistinctement de toutes les faveurs de la pêche nationale dans les ports et lieux situés dans ces mêmes limites, pourvu que l'importation en soit faite sous pavillon national.

Ne seront considérées comme poissons provenant de la pêche précitée que les espèces suivantes :

Eperlan—Spiering.	huitres de Zélande Zeeuwsche
Anchois—Ansjovis.	Oesters.
Sardines—Sardijnen.	Moules—Mosselen.
Anguilles—Paling.	Chevrettes—Steurkrabben.
Carrelet—Bot.	Salicoques—Garnalen.
Huitres, dites—Oesters, genaamd	Limaçons—Kreukels.
	Pctites Crabes—Kleine Krabbeh.

XVII. Celui qui exercera la pêche conformément au présent règlement sera tenu, s'il en est requis, de justifier, aux employés des douanes des Etats respectifs qui se présenteront à lui, de sa qualité de pêcheur, par l'exhibition du permis qui lui aura été délivré en vertu de l'Article V. A défaut de cette exhibition il ne pourra en aucune manière jouir des faveurs accordées par l'article suivant, à moins qu'il ne justifie, en déans la quinzaine, qu'il avait obtenu un permis antérieurement à la contravention ; il ne sera passible, dans ce dernier cas, que des frais du procès-verbal de contravention.

XVIII. Les bateaux marqués de la manière prescrite et servant uniquement à l'exercice de la pêche, pourront passer librement, de nuit comme de jour, les bureaux des douanes établis par les Gouvernements respectifs, sans y être assujettis à aucune déclaration.

XIX. Tout bateau servant à la pêche ne pourra avoir à bord d'autres objets que ceux destinés à la consommation journalière de l'équipage, ainsi que les agrès et ustensiles nécessaires à la pêche et les produits de la pêche même.

Toute autre denrée ou marchandise sera saisie et confisquée, et le patron sera en outre puni d'une amende égale au décuple des droits et accises auxquels les objets saisis sont soumis, sauf l'application des peines prononcées par les lois des Etats respectifs, si une importation ou exportation frauduleuse avait été commise ou tentée sur les côtes ou rives du fleuve.

XX. Les bateaux-pêcheurs se trouvant sur le fleuve ou à son embouchure, y seront assujettis à la visite et à la surveillance des employés du service actif des douanes, toutes les fois que ceux-ci se présenteront à eux à cet effet.

Les patrons ou conducteurs seront tenus de faciliter cette visite et d'arrêter ou de ralentir à cet effet la course de leur bateau, à la réquisition des employés.

Celui qui se soustrairait ou tenterait de se soustraire à cette visite, sera puni suivant la loi en vigueur dans le pays où cette contravention aura été commise.

XXI. Il est défendu aux patrons ou conducteurs des bateaux pêcheurs, hors le cas de force majeure dûment constaté, de prendre terre ou d'amarrer sur les côtes ou rives du fleuve, ailleurs qu'aux lieux ou ports désignés par les Gouvernements respectifs, sous peine d'une amende de 10 florins (10 francs).

XXII. Les patrons sont responsables des amendes encourues pour contraventions au présent règlement, et les embarcations pourront être retenues en garantie des dites amendes, à moins qu'il ne soit fourni caution valable avec élection de domicile dans le pays où la contravention aura été commise.

ARTICLE ADDITIONNEL, ajouté au Règlement pour l'Exécution de l'Article IX du Traité du 19 Avril, 1839, relativement à la Pêche et au Commerce de Pêcherie, arrêté et signé à Anvers, le 20 Mai, 1843.

LES lieux ou ports d'amarrage et de décharge seront les mêmes pour les pêcheurs des 2 pays.

Les moules, salicoques et limaçons, pêchés dans le Braakman et déchargés aux endroits d'amarrage désignés par le Gouvernement Néerlandais, pourront de là être transportés par la route la plus directe jusqu'en Belgique, par le bureau de Bouchaute ou tout autre qui sera désigné par le Gouvernement Belge, sans être assujettis à aucuns droits ou formalités dans leur parcours sur le territoire Néerlandais.

Les produits susmentionnés de la pêche dans le Braakman seront sous tous les rapports Traités dans les 2 pays comme les produits de la pêche nationale.

Le présent Article Additionnel aura la même force et valeur que s'il était ou avait été inséré mot à mot dans le susdit règlement, et il aura la même durée.

Arrêté et signé à la Haye, le 7 Août, 1843, entre le Baron Huyssen de Kattendijke, Ministre des Affaires Etrangères de Sa Majesté le Roi des Pays-Bas, et le Général Prisse, Envoyé Extraordinaire et Ministre Plénipotentiaire de Sa Majesté le Roi des Belges.

(L.S.) HUYSSSEN VAN KATTENDIJKE.

REGLEMENT pour l'Exécution de l'Article IX du Traité du 19 Avril, 1839, et du Chapitre II, Section III, du Traité du 5 Novembre, 1842, relativement à la Navigation des Eaux Intermédiaires entre l'Escaut et le Rhin.

ART. I. La navigation et le transit des eaux intermédiaires des Pays-Bas, entre l'Escaut occidental et le Rhin, sera, pour arriver de la Belgique au Rhin et vice versa, réciproquement libre; bien entendu que l'on se conformera aux règlements de police exigés pour le maintien de la sûreté générale, et aux dispositions arrêtées par le présent règlement.

II. Toutes les voies navigables communiquant de l'Escaut occidental au Rhin, y compris le Sloe, l'Escaut oriental et la Meuse, seront considérées comme eaux intermédiaires entre ces 2 fleuves, et il sera ainsi loisible aux patrons ou conducteurs de navires de se servir de celles de ces voies navigables qui leur paraîtront les plus convenables.

III. Les navires employés à la navigation entre l'Escaut et le Rhin, appartenant aux sujets des Hautes Parties Contractantes, ne seront point obligés de transborder ou de rompre charge en passant des eaux de l'Escaut dans celles du Rhin, et vice versa, par le Royaume des Pays-Bas.

IV. Toutes les marchandises qui seront transitées de la Belgique vers le Rhin, et vice versa, par les eaux indiquées à l'Article II, payeront, en remplacement de tous droits de transit, de péage et autres de cette nature, un droit fixe, comme suit : 13 $\frac{1}{4}$ cents, argent des Pays-Bas, en remonte de l'Escaut occidental au Rhin; 9 cents, argent des Pays-Bas, à la descente du Rhin à l'Escaut occidental, par quintal de 50 kilogrammes.

L'augmentation et la réduction de ce droit stipulées dans les tarifs I et II de la liste A de la Convention de Mayence du 31 Mars, 1831, seront également appliquées à la navigation des eaux intermédiaires.

Le droit fixe sur le bois de charpente et de construction se payera au mètre cube des Pays-Bas, en suivant les proportions fixées par l'addition au tarif litt. C, annexé à la dite Convention.

Il sera néanmoins libre au Gouvernement des Pays-Bas d'ajouter à ce droit fixe telle partie des droits de navigation du Rhin, qu'il jugera convenable de ne pas faire percevoir pour les distances de Lobith jusqu'à Krimpen ou Gorcum, et vice versa.

V. Le droit fixe ne pourra être augmenté directement ni indirectement, pas même par l'usage du papier timbré ou autres droits de ce genre.

VI. Le droit fixe mentionné à l'Article précédent, ayant été établi d'après celui auquel la navigation de la mer à Gorcum et vice versâ est assujettie, il est convenu que, si ce dernier droit venait à être augmenté, d'après le résultat du mesurage dont il est fait mention à l'Article IV de la Convention de Mayence, le droit fixe pour la navigation de la Belgique à Gorcum et vice versâ subirait la même augmentation.

VII. Si, par la suite, le droit fixe, établi sur la navigation de la mer à Gorcum et vice versâ, venait à être diminué, remboursé en tout ou en partie, ou entièrement aboli, celui sur la navigation de l'Escaut au Rhin et vice versâ, serait également diminué de plein droit dans la même proportion, ou entièrement aboli, de telle sorte que les conditions de navigation et de transit restent constamment, et sous tous les rapports, les mêmes pour le commerce des 2 pays.

VIII. Il sera néanmoins facultatif aux intéressés d'opter en faveur du droit transit ordinaire pour les marchandises destinées en transit de la Belgique vers le Rhin et vice versâ, par les eaux intermédiaires, lorsque ce droit serait moins élevé que le droit fixe, sous condition d'en faire la déclaration au premier bureau à l'entrée du territoire des Pays-Bas, et de remplir les formalités de douane, conformément à la législation générale sur la matière.

IX. Les navires, exerçant la navigation sur les eaux intermédiaires entre l'Escaut et le Rhin, y seront assujettis au paiement des droits de pilotage, de balisage et fanaux, ainsi qu'aux droits spéciaux établis sur les canaux et jonctions artificielles, dont ils feraient usage, sans que toutefois les bâtiments des Pays-Bas puissent être Traités plus favorablement que ceux de la Belgique, et sans que les tarifs en vigueur au 19 Avril, 1839, sur ces eaux puissent être augmentés.

Si, par suite de l'ouverture de voies nouvelles, soit artificielles, soit naturelles, il était nécessaire d'établir sur ces voies des droits de pilotage, balisage ou fanaux, ces nouveaux droits ne pourront être autres ni plus élevés que ceux compris aux tarifs précités.

X. Les marchandises venant de la Belgique ou du Rhin, par les eaux intermédiaires, seront admises dans les entrepôts de Dordrecht, Rotterdam, et Amsterdam.

Celles de ces marchandises qui seraient ultérieurement déclarées à destination soit du Rhin, soit de la Belgique, par les eaux intermédiaires, seront affranchies des droits ordinaires de transit, qui seront, dans ce cas, remplacés par le droit fixe déterminé, à l'Article IV et par ceux portés aux tarifs qui y sont mentionnés, quel que soit le lieu de l'entrepôt que l'on aurait choisi parmi ceux dénommés ci-dessus, sauf les formalités de douanes prescrites par la législation générale des Pays-Bas, comme garantie contre la fraude, et les dispositions des règlements locaux de la police des ports.

Les marchandises entreposées, ainsi qu'il vient d'être dit, comme appartenant au commerce entre la Belgique et le Rhin, ne payeront pour tout droit de magasin, de quai, de grue et de balance, et pour autant qu'il aura été fait usage de ces établissements, que les quotités indiquées comme maximum dans l'Article LXIX de la Convention de Mayence.

Il ne pourra y avoir, quant à la hauteur des dits droits de quai, de grue, de balance et de magasin, aucune distinction entre les navires Belges et leurs cargaisons, se rendant de la Belgique au Rhin vice versâ, et les navires des Pays-Bas et leurs cargaisons, qui se rendent de ce Royaume au Rhin et vice versâ.

XI. Pour profiter de l'affranchissement des droits ordinaires de transit aux entrepôts susmentionnés, les marchandises dont il s'agit doivent y être apportées par des navires dont les patrons sont munis de la patente prescrite par l'Article XX ci-après.

XII. Les navires employés à la navigation de la Belgique au Rhin, ou vice versâ, pourront rompre charge dans les ports de Dordrecht, Rotterdam ou Amsterdam, y décharger les marchandises qui seront destinées, soit pour les entrepôts, soit pour la consommation des Pays-Bas, ou bien y compléter leur cargaison, après avoir acquitté, soit le droit ordinaire de transit, soit le droit fixe mentionné à l'Article IV, conformément aux manifestes vérifiés dont les patrons ou conducteurs doivent être porteurs, et en se conformant, pour les marchandises destinées à être déchargées ou chargées dans les ports de mer susdits, aux dispositions de la loi générale des Pays-Bas, concernant les droits d'entrée, de sortie et de transit.

XIII. Dans le cas où les patrons ou conducteurs de navires feraient usage de la faculté qui leur est laissée par l'Article précédent, de rompre charge, soit partiellement, soit en totalité, les marchandises jouiront, tant pour la mise à quai que pour le transbordement ou la mise en entrepôt, s'il y a lieu, de tous les avantages accordés ou qui pourraient être accordés à la navigation des Pays-Bas vers le Rhin et vice versâ.

XIV. La perception des péages stipulés à l'Article IV se fera :

A. Pour le transit direct d'Anvers au Rhin, en amont à Bath, en aval à Gorcum ;

B. Idem de Gand au Rhin, en amont au Sas de Gand, en aval à Gorcum ;

C. En cas de transit par les entrepôts des Pays-Bas, au bureau de paiement dans les places entrepositaires, au moment de la sortie de ces entrepôts.

XV. Les patrons ou conducteurs exerçant le transit par les eaux intermédiaires, sans chargement ou déchargement, qui seront munis de manifestes en bonne et due forme, et qui auront rempli les autres conditions prescrites par le présent règlement, ne pourront être arrêtés en route, sous prétexte d'impôts de l'Etat à percevoir, ou de recherches à faire à cette fin sur les chargements, si ce n'est à un des bureaux de perception établis par les règlements, ou dans les cas prévus par l'Article XXVI ci-après.

Les dits patrons ou conducteurs ne seront tenus à d'autres formalités, par rapport aux douanes, qu'à faire apposer des plombs ou cachets aux écoutilles ou aux endroits servant de dépôts de marchandises, ou à recevoir à bord des gardiens, toutes les fois que l'autorité locale de la douane jugera convenable d'en mettre, afin d'empêcher la fraude, ou enfin à se soumettre à ces 2 formalités réunies.

XVI. Le service des gardiens se bornera à la surveillance des bâtiments et des cargaisons ou des plombs et cachets dans le but indiqué.

Les patrons ou conducteurs des bâtiments sont tenus de faire participer ces gardiens à la nourriture de l'équipage, et de leur fournir le feu et la lumière nécessaires, mais il est défendu aux gardiens d'exiger, dans le cas prévu à l'Article précédent, à ce titre et sous aucun prétexte, une rétribution quelconque du patron ou conducteur, et même d'en accepter l'offre.

XVII. Il n'y aura lieu à l'application des formalités des douanes, suivant les lois générales des Pays-Bas, que par rapport aux navires qui chargeront ou déchargeront, soit entièrement, soit partiellement, dans les ports de Dordrecht, Rotterdam, ou Amsterdam, conformément aux Articles V et VI de la Convention de Mayence.

Ainsi, les patrons ou conducteurs munis de manifestes au vœu de l'Article XVIII et ayant rempli, quant au navire, les formalités des douanes suivant la législation des Pays-Bas, seront, en ce qui concerne les marchandises déclarées au droit fixe, exempts de ces formalités et jouiront des avantages des tarifs et du régime relatifs au transit direct.

XVIII. Le patron ou conducteur ne pourra, en cas de transit par les eaux intermédiaires entre l'Escaut et le Rhin, opérer aucun chargement ou déchargement de marchandises, ailleurs que dans un des ports désignés à l'Article X du présent règlement.

Il lui sera néanmoins permis de relâcher dans tout autre lieu et d'y opérer le déchargement entier ou partiel de son navire, si, par suite d'avarie ou autre circonstance extraordinaire, il était empêché de continuer sa route ; pourvu qu'il se soit adressé préalablement aux employés des douanes les plus voisins ou, à leur défaut, à l'autorité locale la plus voisine, et qu'il se soumette aux mesures que ces employés ou autorités jugeront nécessaires pour prévenir toute importation clandestine.

Aussitôt son arrivée, le patron ou conducteur fera ses diligences afin de constater d'une manière légale la force majeure qui l'a obligé à relâcher.

Les mesures qu'il aurait prises de son chef, sans en avoir préalablement averti les employés, ou, en leur absence ou à leur défaut, l'autorité locale, et sans attendre leur intervention, ne seront excusables qu'autant qu'il prouvera d'une manière incontestable que le salut du bâtiment ou de la cargaison en a dépendu.

Le patron ou conducteur, en reprenant les marchandises pour continuer sa route, ne sera sujet à aucun droit d'entrée, ni de sortie ou de transit.

XIX. Les allègements ordinaires, pour cause d'avarie ou de gros temps, ou qui pourraient être temporairement nécessaires par manque d'eau, ne seront pas réputés chargements ou déchargements dans le sens de l'Article précédent, lorsque ces allègements se feront sans toucher aux rivages et sous la surveillance des employés des douanes, et, en leur absence, sous celle de l'autorité locale la plus voisine.

Si des plombs ou cachets avaient été apposés aux écoutilles ou emplacements servant au dépôt de marchandises, le patron ou conducteur devra, dans les cas précités, s'adresser préalablement aux employés des douanes les plus voisins, pour faire lever les plombs, ou scellés, en se soumettant aux mesures que ceux-ci jugeront nécessaires pour prévenir l'importation clandestine d'une partie de la cargaison.

Les marchandises allégées devront être rechargées dans les mêmes bâtiments qui les auront apportés avant d'avoir atteint le bureau du droit fixe à la sortie.

XX. Chacun des 2 Gouvernements prendra les mesures nécessaires pour s'assurer de la capacité des personnes auxquelles il confie l'exercice de la navigation des eaux intermédiaires entre l'Escaut et le Rhin.

Au patron ou conducteur qui sera reconnu apte par les autorités de son pays, il sera délivré une patente (permis) qui lui donnera le droit d'exercer la navigation des eaux précitées, dans toute leur étendue, conformément aux dispositions du présent règlement. Cette patente ne sera délivrée qu'à des sujets reconnus des 2 Etats et ne pourra être retirée que par le Gouvernement qui l'aura délivrée.

Les bâtiments seront signalés dans ces patentes.

XXI. Le patron ou conducteur devra soumettre son bateau au jaugeage, opéré d'après une échelle graduée de décimètre en décimètre, suivant la méthode actuellement en vigueur sur le Rhin; il devra être porteur du certificat de jaugeage qui lui sera délivré par l'autorité compétente des pays respectifs.

XXII. Tout patron ou conducteur sera tenu, avant de partir du lieu de son chargement, de dresser un manifeste de sa cargaison suivant les lettres de voiture ou connaissements, qui y seront joints comme pièces justificatives, et indiquant la nature et la quantité des marchandises, ainsi que leur destinataire.

Ce manifeste, qui sera en tous points conforme au modèle annexé au présent règlement, devra être signé par le patron ou conducteur, qui sera responsable de son contenu.

Les employés du lieu de chargement viseront les manifestes, après s'être assurés de leur exactitude sous le rapport de la nature et de la quantité des marchandises. Ils veilleront à ce qu'il ne présente aucune rature, surcharge, interligne ou lacune.

Un duplicata du manifeste sera laissé au premier bureau de payement du droit fixe.

XXIII. Les conducteurs de trains de bois représenteront un manifeste indiquant le nombre et le volume total des arbres, calculé en mètres cubes. Le contrôle en sera fait par les employés du droit fixe, conformément aux instructions et à la table de réduction actuellement en vigueur à cet effet sur le Rhin.

XXIV. Les employés stationnés sur les lieux où sont situés les bureaux de perception du droit fixe, auront le droit de visiter les embarcations, pour en reconnaître le chargement, chaque fois qu'il y aura des soupçons sur l'exactitude des manifestes. Ce droit est indépendant de celui qu'auront les employés embarqués sur un bateau ou canot, d'exiger la représentation du manifeste de tout patron ou conducteur d'embarcation, en quelque endroit des eaux intermédiaires qu'il soit rencontré.

Dans l'un et l'autre cas les employés, s'ils en sont requis, devront justifier de leur qualité, par l'exhibition de leurs commissions.

XXV. Tout patron ou conducteur qui sera en défaut de produire, en étant requis, son manifeste et les pièces y jointes, en due forme, ne pourra profiter des avantages que lui assure le présent règlement.

XXVI. Lorsqu'un patron ou conducteur sera prévenu d'avoir tenté la contrebande, il ne pourra pas invoquer la liberté de la navigation des eaux intermédiaires pour mettre, soit sa personne, soit les marchandises qu'il aurait voulu importer ou exporter frauduleusement, à l'abri des poursuites dirigées contre lui de la part des employés des douanes, sans cependant qu'il puisse y avoir lieu à saisir, pour cause d'une pareille tentative, le reste du chargement, qui n'en aurait pas été l'objet, ni, en général, à sévir contre le patron d'une manière plus rigoureuse que ne l'ordonnent les lois générales des Pays-Bas.

Si, dans un des bureaux frontières du territoire des Pays-Bas, soit en entrant, soit en sortant, ou pendant la traversée de ce territoire, il est reconnu qu'un patron ou conducteur est porteur d'un manifeste tellement infidèle qu'il en résulte une fraude consommée ou tentée il aura également, pour ce fait, encouru les peines portées par la loi contre les déclarations infidèles.

XXVII. Le patron ou conducteur qui passera le bureau sans s'y présenter pour le paiement des droits avec exhibition de son manifeste, ou qui en partira avant d'avoir effectué le paiement, encourra la peine portée par l'Article XXXV ci-après, à moins qu'il n'y ait été contraint par une force majeure et apparente, afin de sauver son bateau, le chargement ou l'équipage.

En pareil cas il suffira que le patron ou conducteur se présente au bureau de perception, aussitôt que l'embarcation et les marchandises auront été mises en lieu de sûreté.

XXVIII. Le receveur du premier bureau du droit fixe, en cas de transit direct, ou celui de l'une des places entrepositaires désignées à l'Article X, en cas de transit par voie d'entrepôt, seront tenus de donner quittance, sans frais, au patron ou conducteur, de la somme perçue, et d'en faire mention au bas du manifeste.

Ces quittances énonceront distinctement le nombre des quintaux et le montant des différents droits payés.

XXIX. Le patron ou conducteur pourra être obligé de prouver par la représentation de sa quittance au bureau de sortie, qu'il a acquitté les droits au bureau où il était tenu de les payer.

Faute de produire cette quittance, s'il en est requis, il sera, jusqu'à ce qu'il se soit justifié, regardé comme fraudeur et tenu de payer provisoirement l'amende déterminée par l'Article XXXV.

XXX. Le droit fixe, perçu conformément au manifeste produit à cet effet au bureau de perception, ne sera pas restitué, lors même que les marchandises, en continuant leur voyage, auraient souffert une avarie extraordinaire, à moins toutefois que celles-ci ne soient déchargées et déclarées à la consommation des Pays-Bas.

XXXI. Tout batelier, dont l'embarcation présentera plus d'enfoncement que le maximum de la charge indiqué par la ligne fixée par l'autorité compétente, sera puni d'après les lois du pays dans lequel la contravention aura été découverte.

En outre le contrevenant sera astreint, au port le plus voisin, de rompre charge jusqu'au degré d'enfoncement légal.

XXXII. Il est défendu au patron ou conducteur, sous peine d'une amende de 50 à 150 florins, de charger des marchandises sur le tillac.

Cette défense ne sera toutefois pas applicable aux bateaux à vapeur, pourvu que les marchandises ainsi chargées soient réunies dans un ou 2 endroits, et recouvertes par une toile attachée au tillac, de manière à permettre le plombage, sans occasionner un surcroît de frais et de retard.

Toutes les exceptions à la défense précitée, qui sont ou seront accordées par rapport à la navigation du Rhin, s'appliqueront également et de la même manière à celle des eaux intermédiaires entre l'Escaut et le Rhin.

XXXIII. Les transports de poudre à canon se feront, dans tous les cas, sur des embarcations particulières, sans aucun mélange avec d'autres objets. Les bateaux chargés de poudre resteront, autant que faire se pourra, éloignés des rives, et, en cas de relâche, soit pour le déchargement, soit pour toute autre cause qui empêcherait la continuation du voyage, la police de l'endroit le plus voisin en sera avertie, pour prendre les mesures que la sûreté publique pourrait exiger.

Les contraventions aux dispositions qui précèdent seront punies d'une amende de 50 à 150 florins.

XXXIV. A l'égard d'autres matières inflammables ou corrosives, telles que acides sulfurique, muriatique, nitrique, briquets phosphoriques, allumettes à friction, etc., la police du port d'embarquement aura à décider si le transport doit en être fait sur des embarcations particulières, ou s'il peut l'être concurremment avec d'autres objets. Dans ce dernier cas, elle prescrira les mesures auxquelles le batelier aura à se soumettre, et en fera mention sur le manifeste du chargement.

Les contraventions aux dispositions du présent Article seront punies d'après les lois respectives des Etats où elles auront été constatées.

XXXV. La fraude, en matière de droit fixe, sera punie d'une amende du quadruple des droits fraudés, indépendamment du simple droit, qui devra toujours être acquitté en sus.

XXXVI. Quant aux peines que le patron ou conducteur encourt par suite de fausses déclarations et autres contraventions relatives aux droits d'entrée et de sortie territoriaux, il est renvoyé aux dispositions des Articles VIII, X, XII, XV, XVII, XVIII, XIX, et XXVI, ci-dessus; le présent règlement ne devant porter aucune atteinte aux lois particulières des Pays-Bas, par rapport aux douanes.

XXXVII. Conformément à l'Article XLI du Traité du 5 Novembre, 1842, les navires Belges, ainsi que leurs cargaisons, jouiront sur le Rhin Néerlandais de tous les droits et avantages stipulés par la convention de Mayence du 31 Mars, 1831, en faveur des sujets des Etats riverains du Rhin général.

Aussi longtemps que les susdits navires faisant la navigation précitée, ou leurs cargaisons, ne jouiront ni sur le Rhin et ses confluentés régis par la dite convention, ni d'Anvers à Bath, ni de Gand au Sas de Gand, d'avantages autres ou plus grands que ceux accordés aux navires Néerlandais ou à leurs cargaisons, les navires Belges et leurs cargaisons ne payeront sur le Rhin Néerlandais depuis Gorcum ou Krimpen jusqu'à Lobith, tant à la remonte qu'à la descente, que les droits auxquels sont soumis les navires des Pays-Bas et leurs cargaisons qui se rendent de ce Royaume au Rhin, et vice versa.

REGLEMENT pour l'Exécution de l'Article IX du Traité du 19 Avril, 1839, et du Chapitre II, Section IV, du Traité du 5 Novembre, 1842, relativement à la Navigation de la Meuse.

TITRE I.—Des Droits de Navigation et des moyens d'en Assurer la Perception.

ART. I. En conformité des dispositions de l'acte général du Congrès de Vienne, les péages sur la Meuse, depuis la frontière de France jusqu'à Gorcum, seront réglés suivant le décret du Gouvernement Français du 10 Brumaire, an XIV, sauf que le droit établi à raison de la largeur des bateaux sera calculé suivant leur capacité, sur le pied de $\frac{1}{4}$ de centime, argent de Belgique, par distance de 5 kilomètres et par tonneau d'un mètre cube.

Les trains de bois seront assujettis au même droit de $\frac{1}{4}$ de centime par distance de 5 kilomètres par mètre cube (stère).

Sauf les dispositions que chacun des 2 Gouvernements pourra prendre par rapport à la navigation intérieure, la perception des droits de navigation se fera aux bureaux ci-après désignés :

à la descente :		à la remonte :
à Hastier-Lavaux.	à Dinant.	à Gorcum.	à Rossum.
à Namur.	à Huy.	à Katwijk.	à Venlo.
à Liège.	à Eysden.	à Maaseyk.	à Lixhe.
à Ruremonde.	à Venlo.	à Liège.	à Huy.
à Katwijk.	à Rossum.	à Namur.	à Dinant.

Les bateaux qui, soit à la descente, soit à la remonte, auront choisi la voie du Waal entre Rossum et Gorcum, au lieu de suivre celle de la basse Meuse, ne seront néanmoins assujettis qu'aux péages en raison de la dernière voie.

II. Il sera libre aux 2 Etats de supprimer des bureaux de perception intermédiaires, là où ils exercent seuls la souveraineté sur le lit de la rivière, en faisant percevoir au bureau le plus proche de la frontière la totalité des droits de navigation, qui étaient dus jusqu'alors aux bureaux supprimés, sans que toutefois les patrons ou conducteurs puissent être tenus de payer une plus forte quotité de droits, que celle qu'ils auraient dû acquitter si les bureaux supprimés existaient encore.

Les Gouvernements se communiqueront réciproquement les décisions qu'ils auront prises pour la suppression des bureaux ci-dessus mentionnés.

III. Les droits de navigation sur la partie de la Meuse, qui forme limite entre les 2 Etats, seront partagés d'après l'étendu de leurs possessions respectives sur les 2 rives.

En conséquence le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas recevra, en conformité du tarif annexé au présent règlement :

à la descente :

Cinq centimes et 33 millièmes par tonneau d'un mètre cube, pour sa quotité dans le droit de navigation de cette partie de la Meuse ; et pour la distance parcourue jusqu'à l'entrée du canal du Zuid-Willemsvaart 1 centime et 51 millièmes.

Le Gouvernement Belge recevra, pour la première distance ci-dessus, 4 centimes et 10 millièmes, et pour la seconde, 60 millièmes :

à la remonte :

Le Gouvernement Belge recevra, pour la distance entière de cette même partie de la Meuse, 4 centimes et 10 millièmes, et pour la distance jusqu'à l'entrée du canal du Zuid-Willemsvaart, 3 centimes et 50 millièmes.

Le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas recevra 5 centimes et 33 millièmes, et pour la distance jusqu'à l'entrée du canal susdit, 3 centimes et 82 millièmes.

La perception se fera, conformément à l'Article I, à la descente, par le receveur Néerlandais du bureau d'Eysden, et à la remonte, par le receveur Belge du bureau de Maaseyk.

IV. Les droits de navigation de la Meuse, établis par le présent règlement, seront payés, à chaque bureau de perception, d'après le tarif ci-annexé, pour toute embarcation ou tout train de bois qui y passera ou qui en partira, et ce d'après la contenance mentionnée dans le document indiquant la capacité du bateau, ou d'après le nombre de mètres cubes en ce qui concerne les trains de bois.

Le paiement aura lieu d'avance pour la distance à parcourir d'un bureau à l'autre, soit que l'embarcation parcoure ou non cette distance.

V. Il est néanmoins fait exception à cette règle par rapport aux bateaux qui, après avoir passé le premier bureau à la descente sur la frontière Néerlandaise, quitteront la Meuse pour entrer dans le canal du Zuid-Willemsvaart, auquel cas le droit ne sera dû qu'en raison de la distance à parcourir depuis le bureau dont il s'agit, jusqu'à l'entrée du dit canal.

Par contre les bateaux qui à la remonte passeront devant le bureau de Maaseyk, en destination du canal précité, ne seront assujettis aux droits qu'en raison de la distance depuis l'extrême frontière Belge jusqu'au dit canal.

VI. Seront exempts de tous droits :

1°. Les bateaux chargés d'approvisionnements pour les armées et d'effets militaires appartenant à l'un ou l'autre des 2 Gouvernements respectifs ;

2°. Les bateaux-pêcheurs, ceux servant à traverser la Meuse d'une rive à l'autre, les batelets contenant les agrès des bateaux et ceux servant à transporter les chevaux de halage d'un bord à l'autre ;

3°. Les bateaux chargés d'engrais, de grains en gerbes et de fourrages pour le compte des fermiers dans l'étendue de leurs exploitations, et ces mêmes bateaux allant ou revenant à vide dans la même étendue.

VII. Les bateaux à vide ne payeront que la moitié du droit.

Les bateaux à vapeur ne payeront également que la moitié du droit, et seulement pour les parties de la cale destinées à recevoir un chargement de marchandises, ou pour les marchandises qui seraient chargées sur le tillac.

VIII. Il n'y aura pas lieu d'exiger de nouveaux droits de navigation sur les embarcations qui, après avoir acquitté les dits droits lors de leur passage à un bureau, seraient obligés, par force majeure constatée, d'y retourner ou même de rebrousser chemin plus loin.

IX. Les paiements se feront sur quittance, en monnaie ayant cours légal dans le pays où ils devront avoir lieu, le franc calculé à 47½ cents des Pays-Bas. Les monnaies inférieures à 50 centimes de Belgique ou 25 cents des Pays-Bas, ne seront toutefois admises que pour solde de fractions au-dessous de cette somme.

X. Les 2 Gouvernements ne pourront augmenter le tarif en aucune manière, pas même indirectement, en prescrivant l'usage du papier timbré ou en établissant d'autres droits de ce genre.

XI. Les droits de navigation de la Meuse ne pourront être affermés, soit en masse, soit partiellement; la perception en sera faite dans chaque Etat pour son compte et par ses employés.

Les 2 Gouvernements s'obligent réciproquement à placer dans leurs bureaux de perception un nombre d'employés suffisant, pour que le service ne soit jamais en souffrance, que les patrons ou conducteurs n'éprouvent point de retard dans leur navigation, et sans que les dispositions de l'Article CCCXVI de la Loi Générale du 26 Août, 1822 ("Journal Officiel," No. 38), puissent être applicables à la perception du droit de navigation.

XII. Les distances prises pour base du droit de navigation, n'ayant été déterminées que d'après des renseignements plus ou moins exacts, il pourra être procédé contradictoirement à un mesurage de la rivière dans toute sa longueur, sur le territoire des 2 Etats, aux frais de celui qui en fera la demande.

Le droit sera rectifié, s'il y a lieu, d'après les distances reconnues par ce mesurage.

XIII. Tout propriétaire ou conducteur de bateau sera tenu, avant de l'employer à la navigation de la Meuse, conformément au présent règlement, de le soumettre au jaugeage des employés désignés à cet effet par les Gouvernements respectifs.

Le mesurage, par tonneau d'un mètre cube, sera fait d'après le règlement sur cette matière du 20 Octobre, 1819, No. 1, actuellement en vigueur dans les 2 pays.

Indépendamment de la marque imprimée au moyen d'un fer rouge sur le bateau, indiquant son numéro et sa capacité, le propriétaire devra faire répéter cette indication, aux endroits les plus apparents des 2 côtés des bateaux, en chiffres blancs sur un fond noir, peints à l'huile de la grandeur d'un décimètre ou palme.

XIV. Tout conducteur de bateau sera tenu de représenter, sur la réquisition qui lui en sera faite par les employés chargés de la perception ou de la surveillance du droit de navigation, le document authentique indiquant la capacité du bateau.

Tout conducteur de trains de bois sera tenu de déclarer aux mêmes employés le nombre de mètres cubes dont le train est composé.

XV. Les tarifs seront affichés dans les bureaux de perception.

4 O

TITRE II.—De l'Application à la Navigation, des Lois sur les Douanes des Etats respectifs.

XVI. Les bateaux appartenant à la navigation de la Meuse, ainsi que leurs cargaisons, venant du Rhin ou des Pays-Bas, passeront librement en transit direct et sans être obligés de rompre charge par toute l'étendue de la Meuse jusqu'en France, et ne payeront en remplacement de tous droits de transit, péages et autres de cette nature, que ceux établis par l'Article Ier du présent règlement ; et réciproquement les bateaux et leurs cargaisons, venant de la France ou de la Belgique, pourront, aux mêmes conditions, faire usage de la Meuse pour se rendre au Rhin ou dans les Pays-Bas.

XVII. Les cargaisons entières ou partielles des bateaux mentionnés à l'Article précédent, seront reçues et pourront rester déposées pendant un temps indéterminé, tant pour la consommation que pour le transit, dans les entrepôts Néerlandais admis pour les marchandises appartenant à la navigation Rhénane, avec faculté d'option, en cas de transit, suivant les dispositions établies pour ces entrepôts, entre le paiement des droits ordinaires d'après les tarifs des Pays-Bas, et celui du droit fixe mentionné à l'Article IV de la Convention de Mayence du 31 Mars, 1831.

En retour, l'entrepôt public de Liège sera ouvert aux cargaisons mentionnées ci-dessus. Elles pourront y être déposées pendant un temps indéterminé et être déclarées en consommation ou en transit par la Meuse, soit qu'elles viennent de la France, des Pays-Bas ou du Rhin, avec faculté d'option, en cas de transit, entre les droits ordinaires d'après le tarif Belge, et le paiement du droit mentionné à l'Article Ier du présent règlement.

Les marchandises sortant des entrepôts indiqués ci-dessus, et destinées à la consommation, seront assujetties aux droits d'après les lois et tarifs des pays respectifs.

XVIII. Les marchandises entreposées ainsi qu'il vient d'être dit, comme appartenant au commerce de la Meuse, ne payeront pour tous droits de magasin, de quai, de grue et de balance, et pour autant qu'il aurait été fait usage de ces établissements, que la quotité indiquée comme maximum pour les entrepôts du Rhin.

Il ne pourra y avoir lieu, quant à la hauteur des droits ci-dessus mentionnés, à aucune distinction entre les cargaisons des différents bateaux exerçant la navigation de la Meuse.

XIX. Le patron ou conducteur d'un bateau destiné à parcourir la Meuse en transit direct sans rompre charge, sera tenu, avant de partir du lieu du chargement, de dresser un manifeste de sa cargaison, suivant les lettres de voiture ou connaissements, qu'il devra se faire délivrer, indiquant la nature et la quantité de marchandises, avec désignation de la personne à qui l'expédition en est faite.

Ce manifeste, qui sera en tout point conforme au modèle joint au présent règlement, devra être signé par le patron ou conducteur, qui sera responsable de son contenu.

XX. Le manifeste ainsi que les lettres de voiture ou connaissements, qui devront accompagner le chargement, seront représentés par le patron ou conducteur aux employés des douanes au premier bureau à l'entrée, et au dernier bureau à la sortie du territoire qu'il traversera en transit direct.

Ces employés s'assureront, par une visite sommaire, de la conformité du chargement avec le manifeste et les pièces y jointes, et ce indépendamment des mesures de précaution mentionnées à l'Article XXIV.

XXI. Indépendamment des obligations prescrites par les Articles XIX et XX, le patron ou conducteur sera obligé de représenter son manifeste aux employés des douanes qui lui en feront la demande, en quelque endroit de la Meuse qu'il puisse se trouver. A défaut de le représenter, il ne pourra pas profiter des avantages que lui assure le présent règlement.

XXII. Le patron ou conducteur de bateau muni du manifeste en bonne et due forme, dont il est parlé à l'Article XIX, ne pourra être arrêté en route sous prétexte de perception d'impôts de l'Etat ou de recherches à faire à cette fin sur le chargement, si ce n'est aux bureaux de douanes à l'entrée ou à la sortie du territoire des 2 Gouvernements, ou dans les cas prévus par l'Article XXXI.

XXIII. Chacun des 2 Etats aura le droit de déterminer, à son gré, les ports et les différents lieu d'atterrage où il sera exclusivement permis de prendre charge ou de décharger.

Néanmoins, lorsqu'un patron ou conducteur sera empêché pour cause de gros temps, de voie d'eau ou d'autres accidents, de continuer sa route, il lui sera permis de mettre son bateau en tout autre lieu de sûreté; il pourra même, au besoin, le faire décharger en tout ou en partie, pourvu que, dans l'un et l'autre cas, cela ait lieu sous la surveillance des employés des douanes et, en leur absence ou à leur défaut, sous celle de l'autorité locale.

Toutefois le patron ou conducteur, en reprenant les marchandises pour continuer sa route, ne sera pas, par ce fait, soumis aux droits suivant le tarif du pays.

Lorsqu'en pareille circonstance, le patron ou conducteur arrivera dans un endroit où il n'y a point d'employés de douanes, il devra de suite donner connaissance de son arrivée à l'autorité locale, et faire ses diligences afin de constater d'une manière légale la force majeure qui l'a obligé à relâcher.

Les employés des douanes du poste le plus voisin du même territoire en seront immédiatement avertis, pour qu'ils puissent prendre des mesures ultérieures de surveillance.

Tout ce que le patron ou conducteur aurait fait de son chef sans en avoir préalablement averti les employés ou, en leur absence et à leur défaut, l'autorité locale, et sans attendre leur intervention, ne sera excusable qu'autant qu'il prouvera, d'une manière incontestable, que le salut du bateau ou de son chargement en dépendait.

XXIV. Indépendamment du manifeste, le patron de bateaux destinés à parcourir, sans rompre charge, des distances où la souveraineté sur la Meuse appartient avec ses 2 rives à un seul et même Gouvernement, ne sera tenu, à l'entrée de ce territoire, à remplir d'autres formalités de douane, que de faire apposer des plombs ou cachets aux écoutilles et aux emplacements servant de dépôt de marchandises, ou de recevoir à bord des gardiens, toutes les fois que les employés des douanes le jugeront convenable, ou enfin de se soumettre à ces 2 formalités réunies.

XXV. Il sera toutefois loisible au patron ou conducteur de bateaux mentionnés à l'Article précédent, d'invoquer, en remplacement des dispositions concernant les manifestes, l'application des formalités des douanes suivant la législation du pays dont il voudra traverser le territoire en transit direct, pourvu qu'il en fasse la demande par écrit au premier bureau à l'entrée de ce territoire.

Il pourra même être obligé de se soumettre aux formalités de douane selon la même législation, lorsque le transit s'opérera par bateaux ouverts ou par bateau dont la fermeture des écoutilles ou autres issues des emplacements servant de dépôts de marchandises, ne pourrait pas être suffisamment assurée au moyen de plombs ou cachets.

Dans l'un et l'autre cas, il n'y aura pas lieu au paiement du droit de transit, mais seulement à celui des droits dus d'après l'Article I du présent règlement.

XXVI. Il y aura lieu à l'application des formalités des douanes suivant la législation des Etats respectifs, par rapport aux bateaux qui chargeront ou déchargeront, soit entièrement, soit partiellement, dans les entrepôts ouverts au commerce de la Meuse, ou lorsqu'il s'agira de marchandises dont la destination, en arrivant dans l'un ou l'autre pays, serait d'y être livrées à la consommation, ou qui y seraient embarquées pour l'exportation.

XXVII. Les allègements ordinaires pour cause d'avarie ou de gros temps, ou qui pourront être temporairement nécessaires en quelques endroits de la rivière, eu égard à l'état moins favorable de son lit pour la navigation, ne seront pas réputés chargements ou déchargements dans le sens de l'Article précédent, lorsque ces allègements se feront sur la rivière sans toucher aux rivages, et sous la surveillance des employés des douanes et, en leur absence ou à leur défaut, sous celle de l'autorité locale la plus voisine.

XXVIII. Le service des gardiens se bornera à la surveillance des bateaux et des chargements ou des plombs et cachets.

Le patron ou conducteur du bateau est tenu de les faire participer à la nourriture de l'équipage, et de leur fournir le feu et la lumière nécessaires ; mais il est défendu à ces gardiens d'exiger ou d'accepter en outre à ce titre et sous aucun prétexte, une rétribution quelconque du patron ou conducteur.

XXIX. Lorsque, en cas de plombage ou d'apposition de cachets aux écoutilles ou emplacements servant de dépôt de marchandises, le patron ou conducteur du bateau sera obligé, par manque d'eau ou par suite d'autres circonstances extraordinaires, d'en alléger le chargement, il devra s'adresser aux employés des douanes du poste le plus voisin, pour faire lever les plombs ou cachets, en se soumettant aux mesures ultérieures que ceux-ci jugeront nécessaires pour prévenir l'importation clandestine d'une partie du chargement.

XXX. Si, dans un des bureaux frontières d'un territoire, soit en entrant, soit en sortant, ou pendant sa traversée, il est reconnu qu'un patron ou conducteur est porteur d'un manifeste infidèle, et qu'il en résulte une fraude consommée ou tentée, il aura, pour ce fait, encouru les peines portées par la loi du pays contre les fausses déclarations.

XXXI. Lorsqu'un patron ou conducteur sera prévenu d'avoir tenté la contrebande, il ne pourra pas invoquer la liberté de la navigation, pour mettre, soit sa personne, soit les marchandises qu'il aurait voulu importer ou exporter frauduleusement, à l'abri des poursuites dirigées contre lui de la part des employés des douanes, sans cependant qu'il puisse y avoir lieu à saisir, pour cause de cette tentative, le reste du chargement qui n'en aurait pas été l'objet, ni, en général, à sévir contre le patron ou conducteur d'une manière plus rigoureuse que ne l'ordonnent les lois générales en vigueur dans l'Etat où la contravention a été constatée.

TITRE III.—Du Droit d'Exercer la Navigation.

XXXII. Chacun des 2 Gouvernements prendra les mesures nécessaires pour s'assurer de la capacité des personnes auxquelles il confiera l'exercice de la navigation de la Meuse.

Il sera délivré une patente ou permis au patron ou conducteur reconnu apte par l'autorité de son pays, et cette pièce lui donnera le droit d'exercer la navigation conformément au présent règlement, dans toute l'étendue de la Meuse.

Les patentes de navigation ne seront délivrées qu'à des sujets des Etats riverains de la Meuse ; les bâtiments seront signalés dans ces patentes.

XXXIII. Le patron ou conducteur, admis à la navigation de la Meuse, ne pourra nulle part être contraint à décharger malgré lui ou à transférer son chargement sur d'autres embarcations.

Tous les droits, privilèges et usages, qui pourraient exister en opposition directe ou indirecte avec la présente disposition, sont et demeurent supprimés, sans qu'ils puissent être rétablis sous quelque dénomination que ce soit.

XXXIV. Le nombre de patrons ou conducteurs sur la Meuse est indéterminé.

Les patrons ou conducteurs exploitant la navigation sur les rivières confluentes de la Meuse, de même que les patrons ou conducteurs du Rhin et de l'Escaut, seront admis par réciprocité à la navigation de la Meuse.

Il suffira dans ce cas, que les patrons ou conducteurs constatent leurs droits à la navigation de l'un des dits fleuves ou rivières.

XXXV. Le transport des personnes, chevaux, voitures, effets et autres objets, d'une rive à l'autre, et tout ce qui tient au commerce ordinaire des 2 rives, n'a rien de commun avec le présent règlement, pas plus que la navigation d'un patron ou conducteur restreint à l'exercer dans le parcours du territoire de son pays sans en dépasser les limites; un tel patron ou conducteur n'étant assujetti qu'aux autorités du pays où il exerce son métier.

XXXVI. Le Gouvernement du pays où le patron ou conducteur est domicilié, a seul le droit, pour des motifs graves, de lui retirer la patente (permis), qui lui aura été délivrée.

Cependant cette disposition n'exclut pas le droit qu'auront les Etats respectifs, de faire poursuivre et juger le patron ou conducteur prévenu d'un délit ou crime, commis sur leur territoire, et de demander même, selon les circonstances, aux autorités de son domicile, que sa patente lui soit retirée.

XXXVII. Lorsqu'il s'agira d'établir un service de navigation à jours et heures fixes, pour le transport des voyageurs et de leurs effets, ou de marchandises d'un pays vers l'autre, la demande d'autorisation devra être faite simultanément aux 2 Gouvernements, qui, s'il y a lieu, en feront l'objet d'une négociation.

TITRE IV.—De la Police pour la Sécurité de la Navigation et du Commerce.

XXXVIII. Les 2 Gouvernements s'engagent à donner leur attention particulière à ce que les chemins de halage, existant sur les bords de la Meuse, soient mis et entretenus en bon état, et que toutes les réparations nécessaires aient lieu chaque fois, sans aucun retard, aux frais de qui il appartiendra, et de manière à ne faire éprouver aucun obstacle à la navigation.

Ils s'engagent, de plus, à prendre, dans l'étendue de leurs territoires respectifs, les mesures nécessaires pour que les moulins et autres usines à établir sur la Meuse, ainsi que les batardaux et ouvrages d'art quelconques, ne puissent entraver la navigation, et, en outre, à faire cesser à leurs frais tous les obstacles qui pourraient se rencontrer dans le lit de la Meuse, lorsque ces obstacles résulteront du défaut de surveillance ou d'entretien convenable.

Les travaux qui devront s'exécuter sur le territoire mixte, pour l'entretien en bon état du lit de la Meuse, devront être exécutés aux frais des 2 Gouvernements, après qu'ils se seront entendus sur l'utilité des travaux.

XXXIX. Afin de conserver les chemins de halage, les berges, travaux d'art et garde-corps, il ne pourra être attaché plusieurs chevaux de front à chacune des cordes de halage.

Il est défendu de déposer sur ces chemins du gravier, des pierres, bois, immondices, de la paille ou du fumier, ainsi que tout autre objet qui pourrait empêcher la circulation et embarrasser les berges.

XL. Les patrons ou conducteurs, dont les bateaux couleraient bas, sont tenus, aussitôt après l'accident, de faire placer une balise au dessus de ces bateaux.

Ils seront tenus de faire relever sans délai les bateaux, et de faire repêcher les marchandises, les agrès et tous autres objets qui seraient restés au fond de l'eau.

XLI. Partout où la localité de la Meuse rend nécessaire le balisage pour la sûreté de la navigation, les droits ou salaires existants seront maintenus et devront être les mêmes pour tous ceux qui exercent la navigation sur la Meuse.

XLII. Conformément à l'usage adopté pour la navigation de la Meuse, lorsque les eaux sont au-dessous d'un mètre à l'échelle de l'étiage, il sera facultatif aux patrons ou conducteurs de coupler à la descente 2 bateaux et une nacelle, dont la contenance réunie ne dépassera pas 110 tonneaux; la faculté de coupler 3 embarcations cessera lorsque les eaux auront atteint une hauteur au-delà de un mètre.

Les bateaux de toute espèce devront toujours avoir 25 centimètres de franc bord au-dessus de l'eau, tout compris, jambresse et bortingle, que le bortingle soit un waterbord faisant corps avec le jambresse (gangboord), ou qu'il soit composé de simples flaches (hausses mobiles) bien ajustées et étoupées de manière à ce que l'eau ne pénètre pas dans le bateau.

XLIII. Les transports de poudre à canon se feront dans les embarcations particulières, sans aucun mélange d'autres objets. Ces bateaux resteront, autant que possible, éloignés des habitations, et se conformeront au surplus exactement aux précautions prescrites par chaque Etat dans l'intérêt de la sûreté publique.

XLIV. Il sera défendu aux fermiers des bacs et nacelles servant au passage d'une rive à l'autre, d'entraver la circulation des bateaux; les patrons ou conducteurs de ceux-ci ne pourront également stationner de manière à empêcher le service des fermiers ou les abords aux abreuvoirs publics.

TITRE V.—Des Fraudes, Contraventions, Poursuites et Pénalités.

XLV. La fraude des droits de navigation sera punie d'une amende du sextuple des droits fraudés, non compris le montant du droit, qui devra toujours être acquitté en sus.

Les autres contraventions au présent règlement seront punies d'une amende de 25 à 100 francs. Quant aux peines que le patron ou conducteur encourra par suite de manifestes infidèles, fausses déclarations ou autres infractions aux lois des douanes, elles seront appliquées suivant la législation sur cette matière dans les Etats respectifs.

XLVI. Le patron ou conducteur qui ne représentera pas, lorsqu'il en sera requis, la quittance des droits de navigation qu'il aura dû payer au bureau précédent, sera passible de l'amende établie contre la fraude des dits droits.

Il sera soumis à la même amende, lorsqu'il passera devant un bureau sans s'y présenter pour le payement du droit, ou qu'il en partira avant d'avoir effectué ce payement, à moins qu'il n'y ait été contraint par une force majeure, dans quel cas, il devra se présenter au bureau de perception aussitôt après que la cause de l'empêchement aura cessé.

XLVII. En cas de contravention au présent règlement, les embarcations, ainsi que leurs chargements, pourront être retenus jusqu'à ce qu'il ait été fourni bonne et valable caution pour la partie contrevenante, tant pour les peines et amendes encourues, que pour les droits dus, et qu'en outre il ait été fait élection de domicile dans le pays où la contravention aura été commise.

XLVIII. Le patron ou conducteur sera, dans tous les cas, responsable des amendes encourues pour contraventions au présent règlement par les gens de son équipage, ou ceux employés à son service, sauf son recours contre ceux qui par leurs faits ou omissions y auraient donné lieu.

XLIX. Les contraventions au présent règlement seront constatées suivant les lois du pays où elles auront été commises.

Toutes les actions, résultant des dispositions du même règlement, seront portées devant le juge du pays où le fait aura eu lieu.

Les causes y seront poursuivies, instruites et jugées comme matières sommaires, et les jugements et arrêts mis à exécution, le tout conformément aux lois en vigueur.

TITRE VI.—Des Inspecteurs de la Navigation et de leurs Attributions.

L. Chacun des 2 Gouvernements nommera un inspecteur pour la navigation de la Meuse. Ces inspecteurs exerceront leurs fonctions exclusivement dans les limites du pays auquel ils appartiennent, sauf toutefois qu'ils pourront visiter les bureaux établis pour la perception commune du droit de navigation; les employés de ces bureaux seront tenus de leur exhiber les registres et documents servant à la perception, au contrôle et à la comptabilité du même droit, et de leur donner à cet égard tous les renseignements nécessaires.

LI. Aussi souvent que le besoin du service l'exigera, et au moins une fois par an, ils seront tenus de faire une tournée de leur inspection, afin de reconnaître l'état du lit de la rivière et les obstacles que la navigation pourrait rencontrer; ils visiteront les chemins de halage, et adresseront à leurs Gouvernements des rapports détaillés sur ces objets, de même que sur les contraventions au présent règlement qu'ils auraient pu remarquer ou dont ils auraient eu connaissance par d'autres voies.

LII. Dans le mois de Mai de chaque année, les 2 inspecteurs se réuniront alternativement une année à Maastricht et l'autre à Liège, pour s'entendre sur les propositions à faire à leurs Gouvernements dans l'intérêt du commerce et de la navigation de la Meuse.

Ils se communiqueront réciproquement les observations et les plaintes qui pourraient avoir été faites par rapport à l'exécution du présent règlement; ils recueilleront à cet égard tous les renseignements nécessaires, et pourront, au besoin, se rendre simultanément sur les lieux pour vérifier les faits contestés.

LIII. Lors de leur réunion annuelle, les 2 inspecteurs arrêteront les recettes de l'année écoulée, qui auront été faites aux bureaux du chef de la perception commune; ils en feront le partage suivant les dispositions de l'Article III du présent règlement, et feront effectuer le versement du solde de compte au bureau le plus voisin du pays auquel ce solde sera reconnu appartenir.

ARTICLE ADDITIONNEL, ajouté au Règlement pour l'Exécution de l'Article IX du Traité du 19 Avril, 1839, et du Chapitre II, Section IV, du Traité du 5 Novembre, 1842, relativement à la Navigation de la Meuse, arrêté et signé à Anvers, le 20 Mai, 1843.

LES fontes de fer seront, au transit par la Meuse à travers le territoire Belge, assujetties au droit spécial 5 francs par 100 kilogrammes, aussi longtemps que le système des zones sera maintenu en France, pour l'importation de ce produit.

De plus, le transit, par la même voie, des fils et tissus de lin et de chanvre reste prohibé.

Toutefois, la disposition qui précède, relative aux fils et tissus de lin et de chanvre, cessera d'être en vigueur en même temps que la Convention de Commerce conclue entre la Belgique et la France, le 16 Juillet, 1842.*

Le présent Article Additionnel aura la même force et valeur que s'il était ou avait été inséré mot à mot dans le susdit règlement.

Arrêté et signé à la Haye, le 7 Août, 1843, entre le Baron Huyssen de Kattendijke, Ministre des Affaires Etrangères de Sa Majesté le Roi des Pays-Bas, et le Général Prisse, Envoyé Extraordinaire et Ministre Plénipotentiaire de Sa Majesté le Roi des Belges.

(L.S.) HUYSSSEN VAN KATTENDIJKE.

REGLEMENT pour l'Exécution de l'Article X du Traité du 19 Avril, 1839, et du Chapitre II, Section II, du Traité du 5 Novembre, 1842, relativement à la Navigation du Canal de Terneuzen.

LES Commissaires Néerlandais et Belges, réunis à Anvers, en vertu du § 6 de l'Article IX du Traité de Londres du 19 Avril, 1839, autorisés par leurs Gouvernements à s'occuper de la révision du règlement général sur le canal de Terneuzen, du 9 Avril, 1830 ;

Vu l'Article X du même Traité ;

Vu les Articles XXVI à XXXVII du Traité signé à la Haye le 5 Novembre, 1842, ainsi conçus :

“ ART. XXVI. Les navires venant de la mer pour se rendre en Belgique par le canal de Terneuzen, ou vice versa ne seront assujettis, pour le parcours de ce canal et la manoeuvre des ponts et des écluses, au paiement d'aucun droit, péage ou rétribution, quelles qu'en puissent être la dénomination et l'espèce, soit au profit des Pays-Bas, soit au profit de la Belgique.

“ Jusqu'à ce que cette révision ait eu lieu, la perception se fera d'après le mode en vigueur.

“ Dès à présent les droits de navigation sont réduits aux deux tiers du tarif actuel, et à moitié pour les barques et bateaux à vapeur faisant un service public périodique pour transport de voyageurs ou de marchandises. Les bâtiments et embarcations exclusivement chargés de poisson frais, engrais, pierres, chaux, charbon de terre et tourbes, ne payeront également que la moitié des droits fixés par le tarif précité.

“ XXIX. Le tonnage des bâtiments et embarcations sera calculé à raison de un mètre cube, conformément aux règles tracées par la décision du 20 Octobre, 1819, encore en vigueur dans les 2 pays.

“ Le même mode sera suivi pour les bateaux à vapeur ; mais leur tonnage imposable ne sera calculé que sur les parties de la cale destinées à recevoir un chargement de marchandises.

“ XXX. Le pilotage, s'il y a lieu, soit pour l'entrée ou pour la sortie de Terneuzen, soit pour le parcours du canal, ne pourra être rendu obligatoire, et aucun droit de pilotage ne pourra être exigé, des capitaines de navires qui ne feraient pas usage de pilotes.

“ XXXI. Lorsque le tirant d'eau d'un navire ne lui permettra pas de naviguer sur le canal, ou qu'il y aura, pour toute autre cause, nécessité d'alléger, tout ou partie de son chargement pourra être transbordé sur des allées, après en avoir préalablement averti les employés des douanes au poste le plus voisin de l'endroit où l'allègement devra avoir lieu. Le transbordement s'effectuera sous la surveillance des douanes du pays où il aura lieu, conformément aux lois en vigueur.

"XXXII. Les allées dont il est parlé à l'Article ci-dessus n'auront à supporter le paiement d'aucun droit de navigation, sous quelque dénomination que ce puisse être.

"Il en sera de même pour les bois amenés par les navires allégés, que ces navires traîneront en radeau à la remorque, le tout pour autant que les allées et les bois en radeau passeront simultanément avec le navire dont le chargement a été allégé.

"XXXIII. Les navires allant de la Belgique à la mer par le canal de Terneuzen et l'Escaut occidental, et vice versa, seront exempts de toute visite et formalités de la douane Néerlandaise, à leur entrée, à leur sortie et pendant le parcours du canal de Terneuzen, sauf l'apposition des plombs ou scellés aux écoutilles et aux autres issues, ou la mise à bord de gardiens, dont le nombre ne dépassera pas celui de deux.

"Les gardiens participeront au feu, à la lumière et à la nourriture de l'équipage, mais il leur est défendu de recevoir aucune rétribution, indemnité ou salaire des capitaines.

"XXXIV. Les formalités de douane sur le territoire Néerlandais, en ce qui concerne les navires se rendant de Gand à un autre port de la Belgique, et vice versa, seront déterminées par la Commission Mixte d'Anvers.

"Ces formalités ne pourront être plus rigoureuses que celles admises pour la navigation des eaux intermédiaires entre l'Escaut et le Rhin.

"XXXV. Les navires chargés de marchandises destinées en transit de Gand pour le Rhin, et vice versa, par le canal de Terneuzen, ne seront assujettis, quant aux douanes, sur le territoire Néerlandais ou le territoire Belge, qu'aux formalités stipulées pour la navigation des eaux intermédiaires entre l'Escaut et le Rhin.

"XXXVI. Les marchandises destinées soit au transit ordinaire, soit à la consommation ou à destination des entrepôts, seront régies respectivement par les lois en vigueur dans les 2 pays.

"XXXVII. Tout fait ou toute tentative de fraude sera constaté et puni suivant les dispositions des lois en vigueur dans le pays où le délit aura eu lieu."

Sont convenus des dispositions suivantes :

TITRE I.—Perception des Droits de Navigation.

ART. I. Les 2 Gouvernements, désirant attendre que l'expérience ait démontré s'il y a des motifs d'apporter des changements au taux des droits de navigation sur le canal de Terneuzen, il est entendu que les droits établis par le règlement du 9 Avril, 1830, et modifiés par le Traité du 5 Novembre, 1842, resteront en vigueur jusqu'à ce que cette révision ait eu lieu de commun accord.

II. Les droits seront respectivement perçus par les préposés du canal nommés à cet effet, aux bureaux de Gand, Sas de Gand, et Terneuzen, ainsi qu'à chaque pont.

Ces bureaux de perception seront indiqués par des écriteaux ; le tarif y sera affiché.

III. Il est défendu aux capitaines ou patrons de navires ou autres embarcations, de dépasser les bureaux mentionnés ci-dessus ou les ponts, avant d'avoir acquitté les droits dus.

Les employés chargés de la perception délivreront, contre le paiement des droits, des quittances extraites d'un registre à souches.

Il ne sera pas donné de quittance de paiement des droits au passage des ponts (bruggelden).

IV. Les droits, payables par tonneau, seront perçus conformément aux règles tracées par la décision du 20 Octobre, 1819, sans qu'il y ait lieu à distinguer si les navires ou bateaux sont à vide ou chargés, en tout ou en partie.

La perception se fera d'après le certificat de jaugeage dont le capitaine ou batelier devra être porteur.

V. A la demande des préposés du canal, les capitaines ou bateliers pourront être tenus de se rendre à terre aux bureaux de perception, pour justifier du paiement des droits, de la capacité de leurs bateaux et de la nature de leur chargement.

Quant aux navires qui jouissent de l'exemption des droits de navigation, ils en justifieront au premier bureau d'entrée sur chaque territoire, par l'exhibition des connaissements et autres papiers de bord.

VI. A défaut de produire le certificat de jaugeage, ou si l'employé chargé de la perception des droits a des soupçons graves sur l'exactitude de ce certificat, d'après les dimensions extérieures du bateau, le patron sera obligé de payer d'après une évaluation approximative du tonnage à faire par le dit employé, à moins qu'il ne préfère se soumettre à une vérification au même bureau de perception. Dans ce cas, les frais seront supportés par la partie succombante.

Si le patron a payé d'après l'évaluation et que, dans le terme de 6 mois à dater du paiement, il produise un certificat de jaugeage délivré par l'autorité du pays qui a perçu les droits, et constatant que cette évaluation lui a été préjudiciable, il y aura lieu à restitution pour l'excédant.

VII. Les trains de bois, à l'exception de ceux, amenés par les navires allégés, que ces navires traîneront en radeau à la remorque, seront assujettis aux droits du tarif, en calculant chaque mètre cube de bois pour un tonneau.

VIII. Les navires et bateaux qui chargeront ou déchargeront à une distance de 1,000 mètres en deçà du point de Meuestede jusqu'à l'écluse à sas ou l'écluse de décharge à Gand, devront payer le même droit qu'au passage de cette écluse.

Il est défendu de commencer le chargement ou le déchargement avant que le paiement de ce droit ne soit effectué.

Pareillement, les navires ou bateaux qui chargeront ou déchargeront à 1,000 mètres en aval ou en amont des écluses au Sas de Gand et à Terneuzen, payeront le même droit qu'au passage de ces écluses.

Ces distances seront indiquées par des poteaux.

En ce qui concerne les bâtiments qui chargeront ou déchargeront dans le port extérieur ou dans l'ancien port de Terneuzen, il sera dû le même droit que celui à payer au passage des écluses.

IX. Si les navires ou bateaux, qui sortent du canal après avoir acquitté les droits de navigation, sont retenus par un vent contraire dans le port extérieur de Terneuzen, il n'y aura plus lieu à leur faire payer aucun droit de port; mais si leur départ n'est point retardé par le temps ou le vent, le droit sera perçu comme sur tous les autres navires qui ne font qu'y entrer.

X. Sont exempts de droits dans le port de Terneuzen, les bateaux faisant un service régulier (beurtlieden), qui d'ancienne date y chargent ou déchargent, de même que les bateaux à vapeur et les barques servant exclusivement au transport des passagers avec leurs effets de voyage, à l'exclusion de toutes marchandises.

XI. A. Tous capitaines ou patrons qui dépasseraient les bureaux de perception mentionnés à l'Article II du présent règlement, sans y avoir acquitté les droits et pris la quittance à bord, de même que ceux qui auraient négligé de payer le droit de port à Terneuzen, seront passibles d'une amende égale au décuple du droit fraudé, non compris le montant du dit droit, qui devra toujours être acquitté en sus.

B. La même disposition, sauf en ce qui concerne la quittance, est applicable à la fraude du droit de pont.

C. Le refus de se rendre aux bureaux de perception, à la demande des employés, ou d'exhiber à ces bureaux le certificat de jaugeage, la quittance des droits de navigation ou les connaissements et autres papiers de bord, sera puni d'une amende de 25 florins (50 francs).

D. Si, faute d'acquitter les droits établis, ou de se conformer à l'une des dispositions du règlement, les navires ou bateaux sont dans le cas d'être retenus au passage, les capitaines ou bateliers deviendront passibles d'un droit de 10 florins (20 francs) pour chaque jour de station dans le canal.

E. Les contraventions aux §§ 1 et 3 de l'Article VIII donneront lieu à une amende du décuple du droit exigible, non compris le montant du dit droit, qui devra toujours être payé en sus.

XII. Toutes les amendes devront être immédiatement payées contre quittance, au bureau le plus voisin appartenant au pays où la contravention aura été commise, ou garanties par une bonne et solvable caution à la satisfaction des préposés du canal.

Si les capitaines ou bateliers refusent de se conformer à cette disposition ou de payer les droits dus, leurs navires ou bateaux seront retenus à leurs frais jusqu'à parfait payement, lequel sera recouvré suivant les dispositions respectivement en vigueur dans les 2 pays.

TITRE II.—Police de la Navigation.

XIII. La manoeuvre des écluses, vannes, poutrelles, ponts, &c., appartient exclusivement aux préposés du canal ou aux agents nommés à cet effet; il est défendu à toute autre personne de s'y livrer sans autorisation préalable.

XIV. Il est défendu de jeter dans les écluses et sur les ponts, des cendres, immondices, pierres, décombres ou autres objets qui pourraient y occasionner quelques entraves ou dommages.

XV. Il est défendu de toucher avec des perches, crocs ou gaffes ferrées à la charpente, aux portes ou à la maçonnerie des écluses et des ponts, ou de faciliter l'entrée ou la sortie des écluses, autrement qu'au moyen des pieux d'amarrage (duc-d'alven).

XVI. Nul ne pourra stationner avec un navire ou bateau, en aval ou en amont, près des écluses ou des ponts, ni y attacher des chaînes ou cordes; le passage du canal devant toujours rester libre, ce dont le maître du port ou, à son défaut, le maître-éclusier décidera.

XVII. Nul ne pourra entrer avec son navire ou bateau dans une écluse qu'après avoir rentré les ancres à bord, à moins qu'on ne les ait à l'avant, le jas en-dessous.

XVIII. Les navires et bateaux ne pourront entrer en pleine marche dans les écluses; ils devront être amarrés aux abords des ouvrages et être tirés afin d'éviter tout dégât.

XIX. Il est défendu de faire entrer un navire ou bateau dans les bassins des écluses, avant que l'opération d'un passage précédant ne soit entièrement terminée.

Les navires ou bateaux y entreranno chacun à son tour, en suivant l'ordre de leur arrivée, à l'exception des trains de bois, qui passeront toujours les derniers.

Pour maintenir cet ordre, le maître-éclusier pourra distribuer des plombs dont les numéros déterminent le rang d'admission.

La priorité pour le passage est accordée aux yachts royaux, aux embarcations appartenant à l'administration du canal, aux barques et bateaux faisant un service régulier et reconnu, ainsi qu'aux bateaux chargés de poisson frais.

XX. Les navires et bateaux ne pourront s'arrêter dans les bassins des écluses ; les préposés auront le droit de les en faire sortir aussitôt après l'éclusee, afin que les portes des écluses ne restent pas plus longtemps ouvertes qu'il n'est strictement nécessaire.

XXI. Il sera pris par les capitaines ou bateliers, au passage des écluses et des ponts, toutes les précautions possibles pour que les ouvrages d'art ne soient pas endommagés ; ils seront responsables de tous dégâts causés par leur faute, et tenus d'en consigner immédiatement la valeur à fixer approximativement par le maître-éclusier ou le garde-pont.

Les capitaines ou bateliers auront soin, au passage devant les signaux placés à cet effet, de larguer les lignes de halage ou les amarres, et de passer avec prudence aux ponts et écluses.

XXII. Il est défendu de naviguer à voile ou à la vapeur sur le canal ; tous les navires doivent être halés ou tirés, à moins que le courant ne suffise pour les faire avancer.

XXIII. Les navires ou bateaux à mâts fixes étant halés ou tirés, céderont toujours le côté du chemin de halage aux barges employées au transport des voyageurs et autres embarcations de ce genre qu'ils rencontreront.

XXIV. Lorsque des navires ou bateaux à mâts fixes viennent à se rencontrer sur le canal, ceux qui remontent gardent le côté du chemin de halage, et ceux qui descendent prennent le côté opposé.

XXV. Les yachts royaux et les embarcations qui appartiennent aux autorités de l'un ou de l'autre pays pourront garder le côté du chemin de halage, soit à la remonte, soit à la descente du canal.

XXVI. Aucun navire ou bateau ne pourra stationner de Gand à Langerbrugge du côté est, et de Langerbrugge à Terneuzen du côté ouest du canal, soit pour passer la nuit ou hiverner, soit dans tout autre but, et, en cas de chargement ou de déchargement (ce qui ne pourra avoir lieu, sans autorisation préalable, à d'autres endroits qu'à ceux désignés à cet effet), l'on aura soin de baisser le mât et de prendre telles précautions qui seront nécessaires pour éviter tout embarras au passage d'autres bateaux, indépendamment de l'obligation où l'on sera toujours de quitter la place au premier avertissement.

Il y aura, tant de jour que de nuit, au moins une personne à board.

En ce qui concerne l'endroit où devront se placer les navires ou bateaux admis à stationner entre le pont sur la vieille écluse ou Tolhuis, le pont à Muide et la nouvelle écluse à Gand, les capitaines ou bateliers se conformeront aux ordres qui leur seront donnés par le maître-éclusier.

XXVII. Pour le halage, les navires et bateaux ne pourront être attachés latéralement; ils devront toujours être à la suite les uns des autres.

XXVIII. Les trains de bois, à moins qu'ils ne soient amenés à la remorque par des navires allégés, ne pourront naviguer sur le canal ni avant le lever, ni après le coucher du soleil; pendant la nuit, leurs conducteurs seront obligés de les attacher avec soin au côté opposé à celui du halage et d'y placer, sur l'avant et sur l'arrière, une lanterne à vive lumière.

XXIX. Les bâtiments mâtés à trait carré devront apiquer les verges et les brasser en long, de manière à prévenir toute avarie lors du passage d'autres navires ou bateaux.

XXX. Les capitaines ou bateliers de navires ou embarcations qui viennent à se rencontrer aux abords des écluses ou des ponts, sont obligés d'arrêter ou de continuer leur marche, suivant l'ordre qui leur en sera donné par le maître-éclusier ou le garde-pont; faute par eux de se conformer à cet ordre, ils seront passibles de tous dommages et frais que leur refus pourrait occasionner.

XXXI. Lorsque, à raison du temps ou du vent, la navigation du canal ou le passage aux ponts et écluses présentera des difficultés, on sera tenu de détacher plus promptement les cordes de halage, de faire emploi au besoin d'autres cordages, et de prendre toutes les précautions qu'exigeront les circonstances.

En ce qui concerne les écluses établies sur le canal, il est entendu que, lorsqu'il n'y aura pas au moins 20 centimètres d'eau entre la quille du navire et le busc de l'écluse, le maître-éclusier pourra empêcher le passage. En cas de contestation, le tirant d'eau sera constaté contradictoirement.

XXXII. Il est défendu de faire des travaux ou constructions quelconques le long des bords et chemins de halage du canal, sans en avoir, au préalable, obtenu l'autorisation de l'autorité compétente, qui indiquera l'alignement à suivre.

XXXIII. Nul ne pourra planter des arbres, haies ou taillis à une distance moindre de 3m. 854 des contrefossés ou d'autres lignes séparatives du terrain du canal.

XXXIV. Il est défendu de faire des coupures dans les digues et chemins de halage, d'y placer des aqueducs ou conduits, d'y ouvrir d'anciennes rigoles d'écoulement, de pratiquer des sentiers, montées pour voitures, escaliers, quais de déchargement, ou d'exécuter des travaux de quelque nature que ce soit sur le terrain du canal, sans en avoir obtenu l'autorisation expresse de l'autorité compétente.

XXXV. Il est défendu de passer avec des voitures sur les digues et chemins de halage, à une distance moindre d'un mètre, mesuré de la crête des talus.

XXXVI. Le passage sur les ponts est interdit à des voitures attelées de plus de 2 chevaux, ou chargées de plus de 3,000 kilogrammes. Dans tous les cas, il est défendu de trotter sur les ponts.

Tout passage sur les écluses à Terneuzen est interdit.

XXXVII. Les conducteurs de bestiaux les empêcheront de s'abreuver dans le canal et de marcher sur les talus ou berges ; ils feront, au besoin, usage de cordes, afin que les bestiaux ne puissent s'écarter de la voie publique.

XXXVIII. Il est défendu de gêner le passage sur les talus, chemins de halage, etc., en y déposant des briques, terres, fumiers ou autres objets.

Les dépôts de bois, matériaux et marchandises ne pourront se faire qu'à une distance de 3m. 854 du terrain du canal.

XXXIX. Il est défendu de jeter dans le canal des terres, pierres, décombres, immondices ou autres objets, qui pourraient en encombrer le lit.

XL. Il est également défendu d'apporter le moindre dommage aux digues, écluses, ponts, aqueducs et autres ouvrages appartenant au canal.

Dispositions Communes aux Titres II et III.

XLI. Ceux qui contreviendront aux dispositions des titres II et III encourront une amende de 25 florins (50 francs) ; ils seront en outre tenus de réparer le dommage ou de rembourser les frais qu'ils auront occasionnés et de rétablir les choses dans leur premier état, en démolissant les constructions, plantations ou ouvrages non autorisés, le tout sans préjudice de l'application des lois dans les cas non prévus par le présent règlement.

XLII. Lorsqu'un navire ou bateau aura endommagé les écluses, les berges, ponts ou autres ouvrages du canal, les préposés à la manœuvre des écluses et des ponts devront en instruire leur chef, afin qu'il constate sur-le-champ, par procès-verbal, la nature du dommage, les moyens de réparation et la dépense qui en résultera.

Ces préposés auront en outre soin que les dégâts reconnus soient signalés à temps aux employés à la première écluse ou au premier pont que le navire devra passer.

Lorsqu'une pareille information aura été donnée, ces agents veilleront, sous leur responsabilité, à ce que le navire ou bateau qui a causé le dommage ne quitte en aucun cas le canal, ni ne franchisse l'écluse ou le pont, avant que la réparation de ce dommage n'ait eu lieu, conformément au procès-verbal, ou qu'il n'ait été fourni caution suffisante, au gré des employés entre les mains desquels le paiement doit s'effectuer.

Il sera toujours loisible à l'auteur du dommage de le faire réparer lui-même, s'il le préfère, pourvu qu'il mette immédiatement la main à l'œuvre, et l'achève d'après les ordres des employés du canal et dans le temps prescrit par eux. Dans ce cas, si les ouvrages ne sont point exécutés comme il convient ou terminés dans le délai fixé, le double du montant de l'évaluation qui en aura été faite deviendra exigible, et si le paiement n'en est effectué de suite, il sera garanti par une consignation en numéraire ou par une bonne et valable caution, avant que le navire ou bateau puisse sortir du canal.

TITRE IV.—Halage des Navires et Bateaux.

XLIII. Le halage des navires, bateaux, ou trains de bois passant par le canal de Terneuzen, ne pourra être effectué, que par les soins et l'intermédiaire des chefs-haleurs, agréés de commun accord par l'autorité compétente de chaque pays.

Le passage des écluses et ponts sera interdit à tous navires, bateaux ou trains de bois qui seraient tirés par d'autres chevaux que ceux appartenant aux associations de haleurs légalement reconnues.

Sont néanmoins exceptés de cette interdiction :

- 1°. Les bateaux, jugeant moins de 30 tonneaux ;
- 2°. Les bateaux, halés par des chevaux appartenant aux patrons ;
- 3°. Ceux qui le sont habituellement par les mêmes chevaux, pourvu que, dans ces 2 derniers cas, l'on ait demandé et obtenu l'autorisation préalable.

Il sera facultatif de faire haler par des hommes.

XLIV. Il y aura sur le canal de Terneuzen 4 stations de haleurs, savoir :

- La première à Gand ;
- La seconde à Zelzaete ;
- La troisième à Sas de Gand ; et
- La quatrième à Terneuzen.

XLV. Les maîtres-éclusiers à Gand, au Sas de Gand et à Terneuzen, et le garde-pont à Zelzaete, rempliront respectivement les fonctions de commissaires du halage pour leur station.

XLVI. Les prix du halage seront réglés par cheval, ainsi qu'il suit :

De Gand à Zelzaete	florins 3.25	francs 6.88
De Zelzaete à Gand	„ 3.50	„ 7.41
De Zelzaete au Sas de Gand, et vice
versâ	„ 1.00	„ 2.12
Du Sas de Gand à Terneuzen, et vice
versâ	„ 3.25	„ 6.88

Sous aucun prétexte, il ne pourra être exigé des capitaines ou bateliers d'autres prix que ceux portés au tarif ci-dessus.

XLVII. Les demandes des capitaines ou bateliers pour la halage de leurs navires ou bateaux seront faites aux commissaires des stations, qui détermineront le nombre de chavaux à atteler à chaque bâtiment, eu égard à la saison ainsi qu'à l'état des eaux et du vent.

Les mêmes commissaires calculeront le prix du halage d'après le tarif ci-dessus, et en donneront la note aux parties intéressées.

XLVIII. Les chefs-haleurs à nommer d'après l'Article XLIII verseront entre les mains des commissaires mentionnés ci-dessus un cautionnement de 50 florins ou 100 francs.

XLIX. Les chefs-haleurs seront obligés d'avoir constamment à leur disposition le nombre de conducteurs, de chevaux et de cordes nécessaires, afin de pouvoir, dans les 15 minutes après l'avertissement qui leur sera donné par le commissaire, faire partir les bateaux qui se seraient présentés.

En cas de négligence, les commissaires pourvoiront aux besoins du service aux frais des chefs-haleurs.

L. Sauf les cas de force majeure ou de circonstances extraordinaires, les chevaux attelés aux batiments à Gand devrout les conduire jusqu'au Sas de Gand, et ceux attelés aux bâtiments à Terneuzen devront les conduire jusqu'à Zelzaete.

LI. Les haleurs ne pourront se servir que de chevaux examinés et admis par les commissaires. Les conducteurs ne pourront être âgés de moins de 17 ans et devront être également agréés par les commissaires.

En cas de négligence ou de contravention à ces dispositions, les commissaires prendront, d'office et aux frais des chefs-haleurs, les mesures nécessaires pour assurer la régularité du service.

LII. Les haleurs seront tenus de conduire les navires, bateaux ou trains de bois le plus promptement possible à leur destination, eu égard à l'état des eaux et du vent.

Les capitaines, de leur côté, seront obligés de partir sans retard ; et dans le cas où des causes imprévues retarderaient ou empêcheraient ce départ, les capitaines devront de suite en donner avis aux commissaires ou aux haleurs.

Il sera dû, à titre de dommage, pour un retard qui ne dépassera pas la première heure, le quart, et pour celui qui dépassera la seconde heure, la moitié du prix de halage qui serait dû pour le trajet à parcourir jusqu'à la station voisine.

Lorsque le retard durera plus de 3 heures, le prix de halage sera acquis en entier aux haleurs, et les chevaux pourront être dételés.

LIII. Les haleurs auront soin que les cordes soient bien tendues lorsqu'elles devront passer au-dessus, et qu'elles tombent à temps lorsqu'elles devront passer au-dessous des bâtiments rencontrés.

Ils détacheront les cordes au passage des signaux placés à cet effet près des ponts et écluses, et avertiront le capitaine aussitôt qu'ils apercevront un bâtiment venant à la rencontre de celui qu'ils conduisent. Ils en agiront de même aux approches des ponts, des grandes courbes, et partout ailleurs où quelque obstacle ou quelque circonstance gênerait la marche du bâtiment ou l'exposerait à des dangers.

TITRE V.—Dispositions Générales.

LIV. Les autorités locales des communes riveraines du canal, la maréchaussée (gendamerie) et tous autres officiers et agents de la force publique seront tenus, lorsqu'ils en seront requis, de prêter ou de faire prêter main-forte pour l'exécution des dispositions contenues dans le présent règlement.

LV. Tous capitaines, patrons, bateliers et hommes d'équipage devront traiter avec égard les préposés du canal dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions; ceux qui, à l'occasion de cet exercice, leur susciteraient des entraves ou les maltraiteraient par paroles ou voies de fait, seront poursuivis et punis conformément aux lois pénales des pays respectifs.

LVI. De leur côté, les préposés du canal, ainsi que les haleurs et leurs chefs, se conduiront avec déférence envers tous ceux avec lesquels ils ont des relations dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions.

Toute plainte à laquelle leur conduite pourrait donner lieu sera adressée aux fonctionnaires chargés de la direction du canal, dans l'un et l'autre pays, afin d'y donner la suite nécessaire.

LVII. Dans l'application des dispositions du présent règlement, les capitaines et bateliers seront responsables pour leurs subordonnés, les parents pour leurs enfants, et les maîtres pour leurs domestiques.

LVIII. Les contraventions seront constatées par procès-verbaux, à la diligence des employés des ponts et chaussées, des préposés du canal ou des agents de la police locale.

LIX. Lors même qu'un capitaine ou batelier se croira lésé, soit par la manière d'agir des préposés du canal, soit par les droits ou les dommages-intérêts qu'ils auraient réclamés, il ne devra pas moins se soumettre à ce qui aura été exigé de lui, sauf à exercer ensuite son recours près de l'autorité compétente, a fin de redressement et de restitution, s'il y a lieu.

LX. Les préposés chargés de la perception des droits de navigation du canal, et de la manoeuvre des ponts et écluses, n'apporteront aucun retard à l'expédition et au passage des navires et bateaux.

LXI. Le paiement des droits se fera en monnaie ayant cours légal dans le pays où le bureau de perception est établi.

LXII. Un exemplaire du présent règlement sera déposé dans chaque bureau de perception, où les capitaines et bateliers pourront en prendre connaissance.

LXIII. Les dispositions du règlement du 9 Avril, 1830, continueront d'être en vigueur, en ce qui concerne la navigation du canal latéral de Roodenhuizen à Hulst et Axel.

Formalités de Douanes à observer par les Navires se rendant de Gand à un autre Port de la Belgique et vice versâ.

LXIV. Les formalités de douanes sur le territoire Néerlandais, en ce qui concerne les navires se rendant de Gand à un autre port de la Belgique et vice versâ, seront les mêmes que celles admises pour la navigation des eaux intermédiaires entre l'Escaut et le Rhin.

Anvers, le 20 Mai, 1843,

(Suivent les signatures.)

La présente Convention sera ratifiée et les ratifications en seront échangées à Anvers, dans le délai de 2 mois, ou plus tôt, si faire se peut.

Les règlements seront exécutoires le 31^e jour après l'échange des ratifications.

A dater du même jour, les règlements provisoires concernant le pilotage, la surveillance commune et le droit de navigation de l'Escaut et de ses embouchures, arrêtés à Anvers par la Commission Mixte les 24 et 25 Octobre, 1839, cesseront de sortir leur effet.

En foi de quoi, les Plénipotentiaires respectifs ont signé la présente Convention en double, conjointement avec les Secrétaires.

Fait à Anvers, le 20 Mai, de l'an de grace 1843.

TRAITE de Séparation entre la Belgique et la Hollande.—Signé à Londres, le 19 Avril, 1839.

[Ratifications échangées à Londres, le 8 Juin, 1839.]

Au nom de la Très-Sainte et Indivisible Trinité.

SA Majesté le Roi des Belges, at Sa Majesté le Roi des Pays-Bas, Grand-Duc de Luxembourg, prenant en considération leurs Traités conclus avec les Cours d'Autriche, de France, de la Grande Bretagne, de Prusse, et de Russie, savoir : par Sa Majesté le Roi des Belges, le 15 Novembre, 1831,* et par Sa Majesté le Roi des Pays-Bas, Grand-Duc de Luxembourg, en ce jour, leurs dites Majestés ont nommé pour leurs Plénipotentiaires, savoir :

Sa Majesté le Roi des Belges, le Sieur Sylvain Van De Weyer, son Envoyé Extraordinaire et Ministre Plénipotentiaire près Sa Majesté Britannique, officier de l'Ordre de Léopold, Grand Croix de l'Ordre d'Ernest de Saxe, de l'Ordre de la Tour et de l'Épée, de l'Ordre Militaire et Religieux des Saints-Maurice et Lazare, Commandeur de l'Ordre Royal de la Légion d'Honneur, etc., etc. ;

Et Sa Majesté le Roi des Pays-Bas, Grand-Duc de Luxembourg, le Sieur Salomon Dedel, Commandeur de l'Ordre de l'Etoile Polaire de Suède, son Envoyé Extraordinaire et Ministre Plénipotentiaire près Sa Majesté Britannique ;

Lesquels, après s'être communiqué leurs pleins pouvoirs, trouvés en bonne et due forme, son convenus des Articles suivants :

ART. I. Le territoire Belge se composera des Provinces de Brabant Méridional, Liège, Namur, Hainaut, Flandre Occidentale, Flandre Orientale, Anvers, et Limbourg, telles qu'elles ont fait partie de Royaume des Pays-Bas constitué en 1815, à l'exception des districts de la Province de Limbourg, désignés à l'Art. IV.

Le territoire Belge comprendra en outre la partie du Grand-Duché de Luxembourg indiquée dans l'Art. II.

II. Sa Majesté le Roi des Pays-Bas, Grand-Duc de Luxembourg, consent à ce que, dans le Grand-Duché de Luxembourg, les limites du territoire Belge soient telles qu'elles vont être décrites cidessous :

A partir de la frontière de France entre Rodange, qui restera au Grand-Duché de Luxembourg, et Athus, qui appartiendra à la Belgique, il sera tiré, d'après la carte ci-jointe, une ligne qui, laissant à la Belgique la route d'Arlon à Longwy, la ville d'Arlon avec sa banlieue, et la route d'Arlon à Bastogne, passera entre Messancy, qui sera sur le territoire Belge, et Cléménéy, qui restera au Grand-Duché de Luxembourg, pour aboutir à Steinfort, lequel endroit restera également au Grand-Duché. De Steinfort, cette ligne sera prolongée dans la direction d'Eischen, de Heebus, Guirsch, Ober-Pallen, Grende, Nothomb, Parette et Perlé, jusqu'à Martelange; Hechbus, Guirsch, Grende, Nothomb, et Parette, devant appartenir à la Belgique, et Eischen, Ober-Pallen, Perlé, et Martelange au Grand-Duché. De Martelange, ladite ligne descendra le Cours de la Sure, dont le Thalweg servira de limite entre les 2 Etats, jusque vis-à-vis Tintage, d'où elle sera prolongée aussi directement que possible vers la frontière actuelle de l'arrondissement de Diekirch, et passera entre Surret, Harlange, Tarchamps, qu'elle laissera au Grand-Duché de Luxembourg, et Honville, Livarchamps et Loutremange, qui feront partie du territoire Belge; atteignant ensuite, aux environs de Doneols et de Soulez, qui resteront au Grand-Duché, la frontière actuelle de l'arrondissement de Diekirch, la ligne en question suivra la dite frontière jusqu'à celle du territoire Prussien. Tous les territoires, villes, places et lieux situés à l'ouest de cette ligne, appartiendront à la Belgique, et tous les territoires, villes, places et lieux situés à l'est de cette même ligne, continueront d'appartenir au Grand-Duché de Luxembourg.

Il est entendu qu'en traçant cette ligne, et en se conformant autant que possible à la description qui en a été faite ci-dessus, ainsi qu'aux indications de la carte jointe, pour plus de clarté, au présent Article, les Commissaires-démarcateurs dont il est fait mention dans l'Art. VI, auront égard aux localités, ainsi qu'aux convenances qui pourront en résulter mutuellement.

III. Pour les cessions faites dans l'Article précédent, il sera assigné à Sa Majesté le Roi des Pays-Bas, Grand-Duc de Luxembourg, une indemnité territoriale dans la province de Limbourg.

IV. En exécution de la partie de l'Art. Ier relative à la province de Limbourg, et par suite des cessions que Sa Majesté le Roi des Pays-Bas, Grand-Duc de Luxembourg, fait dans l'Art. II, sa dite Majesté possédera, soit en sa qualité de Grand-Duc de Luxembourg, soit pour être réunis à la Hollande, les territoires dont les limites sont indiquées ci-dessous :

1°. Sur la rive droite de la Meuse : aux anciennes enclaves Hollandaises sur la dite rive, dans la province de Limbourg, seront joints les districts de cette même province, sur cette même rive, qui n'appartenaient pas aux Etats Généraux en 1790, de façon que la partie de la province actuelle de Limbourg, située sur la rive droite de la Meuse, et comprise entre ce fleuve à l'ouest, la frontière du territoire Prussien à l'est, la frontière actuelle de la province de Liège au midi, et la Gueldre Hollandaise au nord, appartiendra désormais tout entière à Sa Majesté le Roi des Pays-Bas, soit en sa qualité de Grand-Duc de Luxembourg, soit pour être réunie à la Hollande ;

2°. Sur la rive gauche de la Meuse : à partir du point le plus méridional de la province Hollandaise du Brabant septentrional, il sera tiré, d'après la carte ci-jointe, une ligne qui aboutira à la Meuse

au-dessus de Wessem, entre cet endroit et Stevenswaardt, au point où se touchent, sur la rive gauche de la Meuse, les frontières des arrondissements actuels de Ruremonde et de Maestricht de manière que Bergerot, Stamproy, Neer-Itteren, Ittervoordt et Thorn, avec leurs banlieues, ainsi que tous les autres endroits situés au nord de cette ligne, feront partie du territoire Hollandais.

Les anciennes enclaves Hollandaises dans la province de Limbourg, sur la rive gauche de la Meuse, appartiendront à la Belgique, à l'exception de la ville de Maestricht, laquelle, avec un rayon de territoire de 1,200 toises, à partir du glacis extérieur de la place sur ladite rive de ce fleuve, continuera d'être possédée en toute souveraineté et propriété par Sa Majesté le Roi des Pays-Bas.

V. Sa Majesté le Roi des Pays-Bas, Grand-Duc de Luxembourg, s'entendra avec la Confédération Germanique et les agnats de la Maison de Nassau, sur l'application des stipulations renfermées dans les Art. III et IV, ainsi que sur tous les arrangements que les dits Articles pourraient rendre nécessaires, soit avec les agnats ci-dessus nommés de la Maison de Nassau, soit avec la Confédération Germanique.

VI. Moyennant les arrangements territoriaux arrêtés ci-dessus, chacune des 2 parties renonce réciproquement pour jamais à toute prétention sur les territoires, villes, places et lieux situés dans les limites des possessions de l'autre partie, telles qu'elles se trouvent décrites dans les Articles I, II, et IV.

Les dites limites seront tracées, conformément à ces mêmes articles, par des commissaires-démarcateurs Belges et Hollandais, qui se réuniront le plus tôt possible en la ville de Maestricht.

VII. La Belgique, dans les limites indiquées aux Articles I, II, et IV, formera un Etat indépendant et perpétuellement neutre. Elle sera tenue d'observer cette même neutralité envers tous les autres Etats.

VIII. L'écoulement des eaux des Flandres sera réglé entre la Belgique et la Hollande d'après les stipulations arrêtées à cet égard dans l'Article VI du Traité définitif, conclu entre Sa Majesté l'Empereur d'Allemagne et les Etats Généraux, le 8 Novembre, 1785 ; et, conformément audit article, des commissaires nommés de part et d'autre, s'entendront sur l'application des dispositions qu'il consacre.*

* ART. VI du Traité de Fontainebleau, du 8 Novembre, 1785.—Les Hauts Puissances feront régler de la manière la plus convenable, à la satisfaction de l'Empereur, l'écoulement des eaux des pays de Sa Majesté, en Flandre et du côté de la Meuse, afin de prévenir, autant que possible, les inondations. Les Hauts Puissances consentent même, qu'à cette fin, il soit fait usage, sur un pied raisonnable, du terrain nécessaire sous leur domination. Les écluses qui seront construites à cet effet sur les territoires des Etats Généraux, resteront sous leur souveraineté, et il n'en sera construit dans aucun endroit de leur territoire, qui

IX. § 1er. Les dispositions des Article CVIII jusqu'au 117 inclusivement de l'acte général du Congrès de Vienne, relatives à la libre navigation des fleuves et rivières navigables, seront appliquées aux fleuves et rivières navigables qui séparent ou traversent à la fois le territoire Belge et le territoire Hollandais.

§ 2. En ce qui concerne spécialement la navigation de l'Escaut et de ses embouchures, il est convenu que le pilotage et le balisage, ainsi que la conservation des passes de l'Escaut en aval d'Anvers, seront soumis à une surveillance commune, et que cette surveillance commune sera exercée par des commissaires nommés à cet effet de part et d'autre. Des droits de pilotage modérés seront fixés d'un commun accord, et ces droits seront les mêmes pour les navires de toutes les nations.

En attendant, et jusqu'à ce que ces droits soient arrêtés, il ne pourra être perçu des droits de pilotage plus élevés que ceux qui ont été établis par le tarif de 1829, pour les bouches de la Meuse, depuis la pleine mer jusqu'à Helvoet, et de Helvoet jusqu'à Rotterdam, en proportion des distances. Il sera au choix de tout navire se rendant de la pleine mer en Belgique, ou de la Belgique en pleine mer par l'Escaut, de prendre tel pilote qu'il voudra : et il sera loisible d'après cela aux 2 pays d'établir dans tout le cours de l'Escaut et à son embouchure, les services de pilotage qui seront jugés nécessaires pour fournir les pilotes. Tout ce qui est relatif à ces établissements sera déterminé par le règlement à intervenir, conformément au § 6 ci-après. Le service de ces établissements sera sous la surveillance commune mentionnée au commencement du présent paragraphe. Les 2 Gouvernements s'engagent à conserver les passes navigables de l'Escaut et de ses embouchures, et à y placer et y entretenir les balises et bouées nécessaires, chacun pour sa partie du fleuve.

§ 3. Il sera perçu par le Gouvernement des Pays-bas, sur la navigation de l'Escaut et de ses embouchures, un droit unique de florins 1.50 par tonneau, savoir florins 1.12 pour les navires qui, arrivant de la pleine mer, remonteront l'Escaut occidental pour se rendre en Belgique par l'Escaut ou par le canal de Terneuse, et de florins 0.38 par tonneau des navires qui, arrivant de la Belgique par l'Escaut ou par le canal de Terneuse, descendront l'Escaut occidental pour se rendre dans la pleine mer. Et afin que les dits navires ne puissent être assujettis à aucune visite ni à aucun retard ou entrave quelconque dans les rades Hollandaises, soit en remontant l'Escaut de la pleine mer, soit en descendant l'Escaut pour se rendre en pleine pourraient nuire à la défense de leurs frontières. Il sera nommé respectivement dans le terme d'un mois, après l'échange des ratifications, des commissaires qui seront chargés de déterminer les emplacements les plus convenables pour lesdites écluses, ils conviendront ensemble de celles qui devront être soumises à une régle commune.

mer, il est convenu que la perception du droit sus-mentionné aura lieu par les agents Néerlandais à Anvers et à Terneuse. De même, les navires arrivant de la pleine mer pour se rendre à Anvers par l'Escaut occidental, et venant d'endroits suspects sous le rapport sanitaire, auront la faculté de continuer leur route sans entrave ni retard, accompagnés d'un garde de santé, et de se rendre ainsi au lieu de leur destination. Les navires se rendant d'Anvers à Terneuse, et vice versa, ou faisant dans le fleuve même le cabotage ou la pêche (ainsi que l'exercice de celle-ci sera réglé en conséquence du § 6 ci-après) ne seront assujettis à aucun droit.

§ 4. La branche de l'Escaut dite l'Escaut oriental, ne servant point, dans l'état actuel des localités, à la navigation de la pleine mer à Anvers et à Terneuse, et vice versa, mais étant employée à la navigation entre Anvers et le Rhin, celle-ci ne pourra être grevée, dans tout son cours, de droits ou péages plus élevés que ceux qui sont perçus, d'après les tarifs de Mayence, du 31 Mars, 1831, sur la navigation de Gorcum jusqu'à la pleine mer, en proportion des distances.

§ 5. Il est également convenu que la navigation des eaux intermédiaires entre l'Escaut et le Rhin, pour arriver d'Anvers au Rhin, et vice versa, restera réciproquement libre, et qu'elle ne sera assujettie qu'à des péages modérés, qui seront les mêmes pour le commerce des 2 pays.

§ 6. Des commissaires se réuniront de part et d'autre à Anvers, dans le délai d'un mois, tant pour arrêter le montant définitif et permanent de ces péages, qu'afin de convenir d'un règlement général pour l'exécution des dispositions du présent Article, et d'y comprendre l'exercice du droit de pêche et du commerce de pêcherie dans toute l'étendue de l'Escaut, sur le pied d'une parfaite réciprocité et égalité en faveur des sujets des 2 pays.

§ 8. Si des événements naturels, ou des travaux d'art venaient par la suite à rendre impraticables les voies de navigation indiquées au présent Article, le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas assignera à la navigation Belge d'autres voies aussi sûres et aussi bonnes et commodés, en remplacement des dites voies de navigation devenues impraticables.

X. L'usage des canaux qui traversent à la fois les 2 pays, continuera d'être libre et commun à leurs habitants. Il est entendu qu'ils en jouiront réciproquement et aux mêmes conditions, et que, de part et d'autre, il ne sera perçu sur la navigation des dits canaux que des droits modérés.

XI. Les communications commerciales par la ville de Maestricht, et par celle de Sittard, resteront entièrement libres, et ne pourront être entravées sous aucun prétexte.

L'usage des routes qui, en traversant ces 2 villes, conduisent aux frontières de l'Allemagne, ne sera assujetti qu'au paiement de droits de barrière modérés pour l'entretien de ces routes, de telle sorte que le commerce de transit n'y puisse éprouver aucun obstacle, et que, moyennant les droits ci-dessus mentionnés, ces routes soient entretenues en bon état et propres à faciliter ce commerce.

XII. Dans le cas où il aurait été construit en Belgique une nouvelle route, ou creusé un nouveau canal, qui aboutirait à la Meuse vis-à-vis le canton Hollandais de Sittard, alors il serait loisible à la Belgique de demander à la Hollande, qui ne s'y refuserait pas dans cette supposition, que la dite route ou le dit canal fussent prolongés d'après le même plan, entièrement aux frais et dépens de la Belgique, par le canton de Sittard jusqu'aux frontières de l'Allemagne. Cette route ou ce canal, qui ne pourraient servir que de communication commerciale, seraient construits, au choix de la Hollande, soit par des ingénieurs et ouvriers que la Belgique obtiendrait l'autorisation d'employer à cet effet dans le canton de Sittard, soit par des ingénieurs et ouvriers que la Hollande fournirait, et qui exécuteraient, aux frais de la Belgique, les travaux convenus le tout sans charge aucune pour la Hollande, et sans préjudice de ses droits de souveraineté exclusifs sur le territoire que traverserait la route ou le canal en question.

Les 2 parties fixeraient d'un commun accord le montant et le mode de perception des droits et péages qui seraient prélevés sur cette même route ou canal.

XIII. § 1er. A partir du 1er Janvier, 1839, la Belgique, du chef, du partage des dettes publiques du royaume des Pays-Bas, restera chargée d'une somme de 5,000,000 de florins des Pays-Bas de rente annuelle, dont les capitaux seront transférés du débet du grand-livre d'Amsterdam ou du débet du trésor général du royaume des Pays-Bas, sur le débet du grand-livre de la Belgique.

§ 2. Les capitaux transférés et les rentes inscrites sur le débet du grand-livre de la Belgique par suite du paragraphe précédent jusqu'à la concurrence de la somme totale de 5,000,000 florins des Pays-Bas de rente annuelle, seront considérés comme faisant partie de la dette nationale Belge, et la Belgique s'engage à n'admettre, ni pour le présent ni pour l'avenir, aucune distinction entre cette portion de sa dette publique, provenant de sa réunion avec la Hollande, et toute autre dette nationale Belge déjà créée ou à créer.

§ 3. L'acquittement de la somme de rentes annuelles ci-dessus mentionnées de 5,000,000 florins des Pays-Bas, aura lieu régulièrement de semestre en semestre, soit à Bruxelles, soit à Anvers, en argent comptant, sans déduction aucune de quelque nature que ce puisse être, ni pour le présent ni pour l'avenir.

§ 4. Moyennant la création de ladite somme de rentes annuelles de 5,000,000 florins, la Belgique se trouvera déchargée envers la Hollande de toute obligation du chef du partage des dettes publiques du royaume des Pays-Bas.

§ 5. Des commissaires nommés de part et d'autre se réuniront dans le délai de 15 jours, après l'échange des ratifications du présent Traité, ou la ville d'Utrecht, afin de procéder au transfert des capitaux et rentes qui, du chef du partage des dettes publiques du royaume des Pays-Bas, doivent passer à la charge de la Belgique, jusqu'à la concurrence de 5,000,000 florins de rente annuelle. Ils procéderont aussi à l'extradition des archives, cartes, plans et documents quelconques appartenant à la Belgique ou concernant son administration.

XIV. Le port d'Anvers, conformément aux stipulations de l'Article XV du Traité de Paris, du 30 Mai, 1814, continuera d'être uniquement un port de commerce.*

XV. Les ouvrages d'utilité publique ou particulière, tels que canaux, routes, ou autres de semblable nature, construits en tout ou en partie aux frais du royaume des Pays-Bas, appartiendront, avec les avantages et les charges qui y sont attachés au pays où ils sont situés.

Il reste entendu que les capitaux empruntés pour la construction de ces ouvrages, et qui y sont spécialement affectés, seront compris dans les dites charges, pour autant qu'ils ne sont pas encore remboursés, et sans que les remboursements déjà effectués puissent donner lieu à liquidation.

XVI. Les séquestres qui avaient été mis en Belgique, pendant les troubles, pour cause politique, sur des biens et domaines patrimoniaux quelconques, seront levés sans nul retard, et la jouissance des biens et domaines susdit sera immédiatement rendue aux légitimes propriétaires.

XVII. Dans les 2 pays dont la séparation a lieu en conséquence du présent Traité, les habitants et propriétaires, s'ils veulent transférer leur domicile d'un pays à l'autre, auront la liberté de disposer, pendant 2 ans, de leurs propriétés, meubles ou immeubles, de quelque nature qu'elles soient, de les vendre, et d'emporter le produit de ces ventes, soit en numéraire, soit en autres valeurs, sans empêchement ou acquittement de droits autres que ceux qui sont aujourd'hui en vigueur dans les 2 pays pour les mutations et transferts.

Il est entendu que renonciation est faite, pour le présent et pour l'avenir, à la perception de tout droit d'aubaine et de détraction sur les personnes et sur les biens des Belges en Hollande, et des Hollandais en Belgique.

XVIII. La qualité de sujet mixte, quant à la propriété, sera reconnue et maintenue.

XIX. Les dispositions des Articles XI jusqu'à XXI inclusivement, du Traité conclu entre l'Autriche et la Russie, le 3 Mai, 1815,* qui fait partie intégrante de l'Acte Général du Congrès de Vienne, dispositions relatives aux propriétaires mixtes, à l'élection de domicile qu'ils sont tenus de faire, aux droits qu'ils exerceront comme sujets de l'un ou de l'autre Etat, et aux rapports de voisinage dans les propriétés coupées par les frontières, seront appliquées aux propriétaires, ainsi qu'aux propriétés qui, en Belgique, en Hollande ou dans le Grand Duché de Luxembourg, se trouveront dans les cas prévus par les susdites dispositions des actes du Congrès de Vienne.

* Art. XI jusques XXI du Traité conclu entre la Russie et l'Autriche, le 3 Mai, 1815.—ART. XI. Tout individu qui possède des propriétés sous plus d'une domination est tenu, dans le courant d'une année, à dater du jour où le présent traité sera ratifié, de déclarer par écrit, par-devant le magistrat de la ville la plus prochaine, ou bien le capitaine du cercle le plus voisin, ou bien l'autorité civile la plus rapprochée, dans le pays qu'il a choisi, l'élection qu'il aura faite de son domicile fixe.

Cette déclaration, que le susdit magistrat ou autre autorité devra transmettre à l'autorité supérieure de la province, le rend pour sa personne et sa famille exclusivement sujet du souverain dans les états duquel il a fixé son domicile.

XII. Quant aux mineurs et autres personnes, qui se trouvent sous tutelle ou curatelle, les tuteurs et curateurs seront tenus de faire, au terme prescrit, la déclaration nécessaire.

XIII. Si un individu quelconque, propriétaire mixte, avait négligé au bout du terme prescrit d'une année, de faire la déclaration de son domicile fixe, il sera considéré comme étant sujet de la puissance dans les états de laquelle il avait son dernier domicile; son silence dans ce cas devant être envisagé comme une déclaration tacite.

XIV. Tout propriétaire mixte, qui aura une fois déclaré son domicile, n'en conservera pas moins pendant l'espace de 8 ans, à dater du jour des ratifications du présent Traité, la faculté de passer sous une autre domination, en faisant une nouvelle déclaration de domicile, et en produisant la concession de la puissance sous le Gouvernement de laquelle il veut se fixer.

XV. Le propriétaire mixte qui a fait sa déclaration de domicile, ou qui est censé l'avoir faite, conformément aux stipulations de l'Art XIII, n'est pas tenu à se défaire, à quelque époque que ce soit, des possessions qu'il pourrait avoir dans les états d'un souverain dont il n'est pas sujet. Il jouira, à l'égard de ces propriétés, de tous les droits qui sont attachés à la possession. Il pourra en dépenser les revenus dans le pays où il aura élu son domicile, sans subir aucune détraction au moment de l'exportation. Il pourra vendre ces mêmes possessions et en transporter le montant, sans être soumis à aucune retenue quelconque.

Il est entendu que les productions minérales sont comprises dans les productions du sol mentionnées dans l'Article XX du Traité du 3 Mai, 1815, sus-allégué. Les droits d'aubaine et de détraction étant abolis dès-à-présent entre la Belgique, la Hollande et le Grand-Duché de Luxembourg, il est entendu que, parmi les dispositions ci-dessus mentionnées, celles qui se rapporteraient au droit d'aubaine et de détraction seront censées nulles et sans effet dans les 3 pays.

XX. Personne, dans les pays qui changent de dénomination, ne pourra être recherché ni inquiété en aucune manière, pour cause quelconque de participation directe ou indirecte aux événements politiques.

XXI. Les pensions et traitements d'attente, de non-activité et

XVI. Les prérogatives énoncées dans l'Article précédent de non détraction, ne s'étendent toutefois qu'aux biens qu'un tel propriétaire possédait à l'époque de la ratification du présent Traité.

XVII. Ces mêmes prérogatives s'appliquent cependant à toute acquisition faite dans l'une des 2 dominations à titre d'hérédité, de mariage ou de donation d'un bien, qui, à l'époque de la ratification du présent Traité, appartenait en dernier lieu à un propriétaire mixte.

XVIII. Dans le cas qu'il fût dévolu à un individu, qui ne possède aujourd'hui que sous l'un des 2 Gouvernements, une fortune quelconque à titre d'héritage, de legs, de donation, de mariage, dans l'autre Gouvernement, il sera assimilé au propriétaire mixte, et sera tenu de faire, dans le terme prescrit, la déclaration de son domicile fixe.

Ce terme d'un an datera du jour où il aura apporté la preuve légale de son acquisition.

XIX. Il sera libre au propriétaire mixte, ou à son fondé de pouvoirs, de se rendre en tout temps de l'une de ses possessions dans l'autre, et pour cet effet il est de la volonté des 2 Cours, que le gouverneur de la province la plus voisine délivre les passeports nécessaires à la réquisition des parties. Ces passeports seront suffisants pour passer d'un Gouvernement dans l'autre, et seront réciproquement reconnus.

XX. Les propriétaires, dont les possessions sont coupées par la frontière, seront Traités, relativement à ces possessions, d'après les principes les plus libéraux.

Ces propriétaires mixtes, leurs domestiques et les habitants auront le droit de passer et repasser avec leurs instrumens aratoires, leurs bestiaux, leurs outils, etc., etc., d'une partie de la possession, ainsi coupée par la frontière, dans l'autre sans égard à la différence de souveraineté; de transporter de même, d'un endroit dans l'autre, leurs maisons, toutes les productions du sol, leurs bestiaux et tous les produits de leur fabrication, sans avoir besoin de passeports, sans empêchement, sans redevance et sans payer de droit quelconque.

Cette faveur est restreinte toutefois aux productions naturelles ou industrielles dans le territoire ainsi coupé par la ligne de démarcation. De même, elle ne s'étend qu'aux terres appartenantes au même propriétaire dans l'espace déterminé d'un mille de 15 au degré de part et d'autre, et qui auraient été coupées par la ligne de frontière.

XXI. Les sujets de l'une et de l'autre des 2 Puissances, nommément les conducteurs de troupeaux et pâtres, continueront à jouir des droits, immunités et privilèges dont ils jouissaient par le passé.

Il ne sera également mis aucun obstacle à la pratique journalière de la frontière entre les limitrophes, en allemand Gränzverkehr, de réforme, seront acquittés à l'avenir de part et d'autre, à tous les titulaires, tant civils que militaires, qui y ont droit, conformément aux lois en vigueur avant le 1^{er} Novembre, 1830.

Il est convenu que les pensions et traitements susdits des titulaires nés sur les territoires qui constituent aujourd'hui la Belgique, resteront à la charge du trésor Belge, et les pensions et traitements des titulaires nés sur les territoires qui constituent aujourd'hui le royaume des Pays-Bas, à celle du trésor Néerlandais.

XXII. Toutes les réclamations des sujets Belges sur des établissements particuliers, tels que fonds de veuves, et fonds connus sous la dénomination de fonds des leges, et de la caisse des retraites civiles et militaires, seront examinées par la Commission Mixte dont il est question dans l'Article XIII, et résolues d'après la teneur des règlements qui régissent ces fonds ou caisses.

Les cautionnements fournis, ainsi que les versements faits par les comptables Belges, les dépôts judiciaires, et les consignations, seront également restitués aux titulaires sur la présentation de leurs titres.

Si, du chef des liquidations dites Françaises, des sujets Belges avaient encore à faire valoir des droits d'inscription, ces réclamations seront également examinées et liquidées par la dite commission.

XXIII. Seront maintenus dans leur force et vigueur les jugements rendus en matière civile et commerciale, les actes de l'état-civil, et les Actes passés devant notaire ou autre officier public sous l'Administration Belge, dans les parties du Limbourg et du Grand Duché de Luxembourg, dont Sa Majesté le Roi des Pays-Bas, Grand Duc de Luxembourg, va être remis en possession.

XXIV. Aussitôt après l'échange des ratifications du présent Traité, les ordres nécessaires seront envoyés aux commandants des troupes respectives, pour l'évacuation des territoires, villes, places et lieux qui changent de domination. Les autorités civiles y recevront aussi, en même temps, les ordres nécessaires pour la remise de ces territoires, villes, places et lieux, aux commissaires qui seront désignés à cet effet de part et d'autre.

Cette évacuation et cette remise s'effectueront de manière à pouvoir être terminées dans l'espace de 15 jours, ou plus tôt, si faire se peut.

XXV. A la suite des stipulations du présent Traité, il y aura paix et amitié entre Sa Majesté le Roi des Belges, d'une part, et Sa Majesté le Roi des Pays-Bas, Grand Duc de Luxembourg, de l'autre part, leurs héritiers et successeurs, leurs États et sujets respectifs.

XXVI. Le présent Traité sera ratifié et les ratifications seront échangées à Londres dans le délai de 6 semaines, ou plus tôt, si faire se peut. Cet échange aura lieu en même temps que celui des ratifications du Traité conclu en ce jour entre Sa Majesté le Roi des Pays-Bas, Grand Duc de Luxembourg, et leurs Majestés l'Empereur d'Autriche, Roi de Hongrie et de Bohême, le Roi des Français, la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande, le Roi de Prusse, et l'Empereur de Toutes les Russies.

En foi, de quoi les Plénipotentiaires respectifs ont signé le présent Traité, et y ont apposé le cachet de leurs armes.

Fait à Londres le 19 Avril de l'an de grâce, 1839.

CORRESPONDENCE between Austria, France, Great Britain, Prussia, Russia, and Belgium, relative to the Treaties of April, 1839, for the Separation of Belgium from Holland.—April—June, 1839.

(1.)—Le Plénipotentiaire Belge aux Plénipotentiaires des 5 Cours.
Londres, le 14 Avril, 1839.

LE Soussigné, Envoyé Extraordinaire et Ministre Plénipotentiaire de Sa Majesté le Roi des Belges près Sa Majesté Britannique, à l'honneur de soumettre à leurs Excellences les Plénipotentiaires d'Autriche, de France, de la Grande Bretagne, de Prusse et de Russie, des propositions (Annexes A, B, C), concernant les garanties dues aux populations du Limbourg et du Luxembourg, le mode spécial d'acquittement du péage de l'Escaut au moyen d'une rente, et la réduction de la quote-part de la dette. Indépendamment de ces propositions, il a reçu l'ordre d'appeler l'attention de leurs Excellences sur certains points de l'Acte du 23 Janvier, points sur le sens desquels le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté le Roi des Belges a besoin d'être complètement rassuré, afin que l'exécution du Traité à intervenir soit à la fois certaine et facile.

1. L'Article II porte que la route d'Arlon à Bastogne appartiendra à la Belgique, et le village de Martelange au Grand Duché de Luxembourg: dispositions contradictoires, car le village de Martelange est à cheval sur la route, et en majeure partie à sa gauche en partant d'Arlon. Le Soussigné renvoie à la note ci-jointe (Annexe D), qui renferme des détails précis sur l'Etat des lieux. Il est d'ailleurs physiquement impossible de détourner la route, qui, en ce point, présente un caractère tout particulier. La stipulation qui attribue à la Belgique la route d'Arlon à Bastogne est le principe; la disposition qui conserve Martelange au Grand Duché n'est qu'une conséquence: conséquence opposée au principe qui sert de point de départ. Il est évident que, dans l'exécution, c'est le principe qui devra prévaloir et l'emporter dans l'esprit des commissaires-démarcateurs. Toutefois, une déclaration à cet égard prévientrait des difficultés, en même temps qu'elle rassurerait les commissaires-démarcateurs sur le sens du dernier paragraphe de l'Article II qui les concerne.

2. D'après le statu quo existant pour l'Escaut, la navigation de ce fleuve est exempte de tout droit; mais considérée comme de tolérance par le Gouvernement Néerlandais, de fait presque exclusivement en possession du régime fluvial, elle semble dépourvue de garanties. L'Article IX, destiné à faire cesser ce statu quo, contient 2 genres de stipulations; il établit un péage au profit de la Hollande, et des garanties en faveur de la Belgique et de la navigation en général. Les garanties sont inséparablement liées à la perception du péage; il est impossible que le statu quo cesse quant à l'absence du péage, et subsiste quant au défaut de garanties, les obligations étant dépendantes du droit. La perception de ce droit commencera immédiatement; il faut aussi que les dispositions garantissantes aient immédiatement leur effet, en attendant que le règlement général en ait déterminé l'exécution définitive. Il est donc entendu, par exemple, que, du jour où le droit sera payé, la surveillance commune stipulée par le § 2 sera introduite, que les commissaires nécessaires à cet effet seront nommés de part et d'autre, que le pilotage sera facultatif à l'instant même, sauf régularisation pour le service définitif.

3. Le § 3 de l'Article IX stipule un droit unique pour le trajet, par l'Escaut ou le canal de Terneuse, de la pleine mer en Belgique, ou de la Belgique à la pleine mer; ainsi, en considération du trajet par le canal de Terneuse, les navires devront le droit en entier, bien qu'ils ne se soient servis de l'Escaut que sur une étendue de 4 lieues environ. La Hollande, percevant ainsi le droit dans son intégralité, y trouve le dédommagement de l'entretien du canal que la Belgique, de son côté, entretient de la frontière Hollandaise à Gand, sans percevoir de droit, le péage étant unique. La Belgique se plaint à déclarer que c'est dans ce sens qu'elle entend, de sa part et de la part du Gouvernement Néerlandais, l'exécution de cette disposition. Entendre autrement l'Article IX serait exiger, pour un trajet de 4 lieues, une somme aussi forte que pour un trajet de 18, et placer Gand dans une position très-désavantageuse par rapport à Anvers, en négligeant même les intérêts de Terneuse, point de la Flandre Zélandaise pour lequel le transit vers Gand doit être d'une si grande importance. En mettant Gand et Anvers, relativement au péage, sur la même ligne dans le système de navigation qui rattache ces 2 villes à la mer, la Conférence n'a fait qu'appliquer la pensée à laquelle est due la voie directe de Gand à la mer.

4. La Conférence, en stipulant un droit unique sur la navigation de l'Escaut, a sans doute voulu que, pour calculer ce droit, les conditions de navigation fussent les mêmes pour toutes les nations. Le principe de l'uniformité est donc évident; ce qui peut le paraître moins, c'est la règle d'après laquelle ce droit uniforme sera évalué : c'est sur le deuxième point que les opinions ont besoin d'être fixées. Il doit en outre être entendu que l'application du droit est subordonnée aux distinctions admises dans la pratique générale, que notamment les bateaux à vapeur ne sont imposés qu'à raison de la marchandise et non de la capacité totale, et que les bateaux remorqueurs sont exempts de tout droit.

5. La quote-part de la dette assignée à la Belgique comprend une rente de 600,000 florins pour avantages commerciaux, au nombre desquels il faut ranger son admission à la navigation des eaux intermédiaires entre l'Escaut et le Rhin. Néanmoins, elle subit en outre des péages qui, selon le § 5 de l'Article IX, doivent être modérés et les mêmes pour le commerce des 2 pays : ce qui assure, dans tous les cas, au commerce Belge la condition de la nation la plus favorisée. Par le § 6, il est réservé au règlement général de fixer le montant permanent et définitif de ces péages. L'admission de la Belgique à la navigation des eaux intérieures ne pouvant être ajournée qu'après la rédaction de ce règlement, et le principe de péages communs étant posé, il en résulte que la Belgique, mise immédiatement en jouissance, participe à la navigation des eaux intérieures, aux mêmes conditions que les navires Néerlandais, en supportant provisoirement les droits que paient ou que paieraient, d'après les tarifs existants, ces derniers, naviguant par ces eaux entre Anvers et le Rhin.

6. La Conférence, en prescrivant, dans certains cas exceptionnels, aux navires de se faire accompagner par des gardes de santé, a subordonné l'accomplissement de cette formalité à la condition qu'il n'y aurait ni entrave ni retard. Il faut donc que le service sanitaire soit organisé de manière que cette condition subsiste ; il faudra notamment que, dans ces circonstances d'exception, les gardes de santé passent sur le navire qui se signale comme suspect, avec assez de promptitude pour qu'il ne soit pas nécessaire de jeter l'ancre, ni d'exposer le navire à un danger quelconque.

7. Il eût été à désirer que la Conférence eût fixé un délai endéans lequel des 2 parties eussent eu à convenir du règlement général sur l'Escaut, et qu'elle eût déterminé le recours à prendre en cas de dissentiment. Cette omission toutefois est moins importante, la mise en possession de la Belgique des avantages assurés en sa faveur étant immédiate, et le gouvernement du Roi des Belges pouvant compter au besoin sur la garantie générale d'exécution stipulée par les 5 grandes Puissances.

8. La Conférence ayant eu pour but d'assurer le droit de navigation sur l'Escaut, il est évident que ce droit emporte celui de stationner librement, si les vents, les glaces ou d'autres circonstances l'exigent, dans toutes les eaux du fleuve et de ses embou-chures. Si la Conférence n'a pas exprimé ces conséquences du droit, c'est qu'elles ressortaient et du principe et des règles générales du droit des gens : les nier serait nier le principe même. C'est donc dans cet esprit que devra être rédigé le règlement général, acte important qui doit servir de complément à l'Article IX ; c'est aussi dans cet esprit que l'article devra recevoir son application avant la rédaction du règlement.

9. L'Article XII, dans le cas où il serait construit en Belgique une nouvelle route ou creusé un canal qui aboutirait à la Meuse vis-à-vis du canton Hollandais de Sittard, stipule en faveur de la Belgique le droit, en se conformant à certaines formalités, de faire prolonger cette route ou ce canal jusqu'aux frontières d'Allemagne. Il est incontestable que le mot route, surtout opposé au mot canal s'entend de toute communication autre que celle d'un canal et notamment d'un chemin de fer. Si le Gouvernement Belge regarde une explication sur ce point comme n'étant pas sans utilité, c'est qu'il n'est pas parvenu à rassurer des intérêts privés qui se sont adressés à lui.

10. L'Article XXV du Traité destiné à être conclu entre Leurs Majestés le Roi des Belges et le Roi des Pays-Bas, en stipulant paix et amitié entre Leurs Majestés, leurs héritiers et successeurs, a fait naître une observation par le rapprochement de cet article avec l'Article XXVI des Traités conclus le 15 Novembre, 1831,* par Sa Majesté le Roi des Belges avec Leurs Majestés l'Empereur d'Autriche, le Roi des Français, le Roi du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande, le Roi de Prusse et l'Empereur de toutes les Russies ; observation sur laquelle le soussigné croit ne pas devoir insister, le mot à perpétuité constituant une véritable réduplication dans le texte même, et la disposition se trouvant d'ailleurs renforcée par l'Article VI, portant que chaque partie renonce à jamais à toute prétention sur les territoires assignés à l'autre, et par l'Article VII, qui déclare la Belgique perpétuellement neutre.

Le Soussigné, en plaçant sous les yeux de leurs Excellences cette note et les 3 propositions qui la complètent, croit avoir mis la Conférence à même d'amener immédiatement la solution définitive de la question Hollando-Belge. Il prie leurs Excellences d'agréer les assurances de sa plus haute considération.

Sa Majesté Britannique, de son côté, convient d'accorder le libre exercice de la religion Catholique aux habitants du Canada; elle donnera, en conséquence, les ordres les plus précis et les plus efficaces pour que ses nouveaux sujets Catholiques Romains puissent professer le culte de leur religion, suivant les rites de l'Eglise Romaine, autant que les lois de la Grande-Bretagne le permettent.

Sa Majesté souhaite de plus qu'il plaise à Sa Majesté Très-Chrétienne d'accorder, en considération de l'amitié qui doit être rétablie par la paix, la liberté de la conscience à ceux de la religion réformée qui resteront en France, comme aussi de faire élargir et remettre en liberté tous ceux qui, à cause de la religion réformée, sont détenus dans les prisons, couvens, galères ou autres lieux.

ART. V. Sa Majesté le Roi de Suède s'engage, par conséquent, de la manière la plus formelle, de laisser jouir, pour le futur, les habitants du royaume de Norwège et de ses dépendances, de toutes les lois, libertés de tous les droits et privilèges maintenant existants.

VIII Articles de Londres, 1814.

ART. I. Cette réunion devra être intime et complète, de façon que les deux pays ne forment qu'un seul et même état, régi par la constitution déjà établie en Hollande, et qui sera modifiée, d'un commun accord, d'après les nouvelles circonstances.

II. Il ne sera rien innové aux articles de cette constitution qui assurent à tous les cultes une protection et une faveur égales, et garantissent l'admission de tous les citoyens, quelle que soit leur croyance religieuse, aux emplois et offices publics.

III. Les provinces Beligiques seront convenablement représentées à l'assemblée des états-généraux, dont les sessions ordinaires se tiendront, en temps de paix, alternativement dans une ville Hollandaise et dans une ville de la Belgique.

IV. Tous les habitants des Pays-Bas se trouvant ainsi constitutionnellement assimilés entre eux, les différentes provinces jouiront également de tous les avantages commerciaux et autres que comporte leur situation respective, sans qu'aucune entrave ou restriction puisse être imposée à l'une au profit de l'autre.

V. Immédiatement après la réunion, les provinces et les villes de la Belgique seront admises au commerce et à la navigation des colonies sur le même pied que les provinces et les villes Hollandaises.

VI. Les charges devant être communes, ainsi que les bénéfices des dettes contractées jusqu'à l'époque de la réunion, par les provinces Hollandaises d'un côté, et de l'autre, par les provinces Beligiques, seront à charge du trésor général des Pays-Bas.

VII. Conformément aux mêmes principes, les dépenses requises pour l'établissement et la conservation des fortifications sur la frontière du nouvel état, seront supportées par le trésor général, comme résultant d'un objet qui intéresse la sûreté et l'indépendance de toutes les provinces et de la nation entière.

VIII. Les frais d'établissement et d'entretien des digues resteront pour le compte des districts qui sont plus directement intéressés à cette partie du service public, sauf l'obligation de l'état général à fournir des secours en cas de désastre extraordinaire, le tout ainsi que cela s'est pratiqué jusqu'à présent en Hollande.

Cette somme sera payée par douzièmes, le premier de chaque mois, par anticipation, au Consul Néerlandais à Anvers, par un agent du Gouvernement Belge.

Le Ministre de Nagell, Secrétaire d'Etat pour les Affaires Etrangères, déclara, sous la date du 21 Juillet, 1814, qu'il était autorisé par le Prince Souverain des Pays-Bas-Unis à accepter la souveraineté des provinces Belgiques sous les conditions contenues dans les 8 Articles.

Déclaration des Puissances sur les Affaires de la Confédération Helvétique, du 20 Mars, 1815.

ART. IV. Les habitants de l'évêché de Bâle, et ceux de Bienne, réunis aux cantons de Berne et de Bâle, jouiront à tous égards, sans différence de religion (qui sera conservée dans l'état présent), des mêmes droits politiques et civils, dont jouissent et pourront jouir les habitants des anciennes parties desdits cantons. En conséquence, ils concourront avec eux aux places de représentants et aux fonctions, suivant les constitutions cantonales. Il sera conservé à la ville de Bienne, et aux villages ayant formé sa juridiction, les privilèges municipaux compatibles avec la constitution et les réglemens généraux du canton de Berne.

ART. XVI. Les communautés, corporations et établissemens religieux et d'instruction publique qui existent dans les provinces et districts cédés par Sa Majesté le Roi de Saxe à la Prusse, ou dans les provinces et districts qui restent à Sa Majesté Saxonne, conserveront, quel que soit le changement que leur destination puisse subir, leurs propriétés, ainsi que les redevances qui leur appartiennent d'après l'acte de leur fondation, ou qui ont été acquises depuis par eux, par un titre valable devant les lois, sous les 2 dominations Prussienne et Saxonne, sans que l'administration et les revenus à percevoir puissent être molestés ni d'une part, ni de l'autre, en se conformant toutefois aux lois et en supportant les charges auxquelles toutes les propriétés ou redevances de la même nature sont sujettes dans le territoire dans lequel elles se trouvent.

Acte pour la Constitution Fédérative de l'Allemagne, du 8 Juin, 1815.

ART. XVI. La différence des confessions chrétiennes dans les pays et territoires de la Confédération Allemande, n'en entraînera aucune dans la jouissance des droits civils et politiques. La diète prendra en considération les moyens d'opérer, de la manière la plus uniforme, l'amélioration de l'état civil de ceux qui professent la religion Juive en Allemagne, et s'occupera particulièrement des mesures par lesquelles on pourra leur assurer et leur garantir dans les Etats de la Confédération, la permanence des droits civils, à condition qu'ils se soumettent à toutes les obligations des autres citoyens. En attendant les droits accordés déjà aux membres de cette religion par tel ou tel état en particulier, leur seront conservés.

Acte du Congrès de Vienne, du 9 Juin, 1815.

ART. I. Les Polonais, sujets respectifs de la Russie, de l'Autriche et de Prusse, obtiendront une représentation et des institutions nationales, réglées d'après le mode d'existence politique, que chacun des gouvernemens auxquels ils appartiennent jugera utile et convenable de leur accorder.

ART. LXXXVIII. Les Gènois jouiront de tous les droits et privilèges spécifiés dans l'acte intitulé : Conditions qui doivent servir de bases à la réunion des Etats La rente fixe est de 240,000 florins ; elle ne pourra être inférieure à cette somme, et sera due quand même le tonnage annuel n'aurait point atteint ce chiffre.

Si, à l'expiration d'une première période de 3 ans, commençant au 1er Juillet, 1839, le tonnage moyen de ces 3 années offrait un chiffre supérieur à la rente fixe sus-indiquée, le Gouvernement Belge paierait, pendant la deuxième période de 3 ans, c'est-à-dire, à partir du 1er Juillet, 1842, outre la rente fixe, et toujours par douzièmes, un supplément égal à l'excédant de la première période.

Si, à l'expiration de la deuxième période, on constatait de nouveau un excédant du chiffre moyen du tonnage sur la rente fixe, le Gouvernement Belge paierait également, pendant la nouvelle période de 3 ans, c'est-à-dire à partir du 1er Juillet, 1845, la rente fixe et un supplément ; et ainsi de suite, toujours en ayant égard, pour fixer le supplément, au chiffre moyen de la dernière période de 3 ans.

Pour évaluer le tonnage annuel, on supposera les bateaux à vapeur imposés seulement à raison de la marchandise et non de leur capacité totale, et les bateaux remorqueurs totalement exempts : on déduira du nombre total les navires Néerlandais.

Si le Gouvernement Belge négligeait ou refusait d'acquitter directement la rente et éventuellement le supplément, le Gouvernement Néerlandais aurait le droit de percevoir les péages de chaque navire, conformément au § 3 de l'Article IX.

ANNEXE C.—Proposition pour une Réduction de Dette.

Parmi les éléments des calculs auxquels la Conférence s'est livrée pour arriver à la fixation, à 5 millions de florins, du chiffre de la dette de la Belgique envers la Hollande, figure encore, ainsi que cela se trouve exposé dans la note du plénipotentiaire Belge, du 4 Janvier dernier, une annuité d'un million de florins pour la dette dite Française.

Il a cependant été établi, de la manière la plus patente et la plus authentique, tant dans la correspondance diplomatique que par le mémoire de la commission des finances, et les notes et discussions verbales des Commissaires du Gouvernement à Londres, que cette dette avait été remboursée par la Convention du 25 Avril, 1818,* en majeure partie au moyen de créances Belges.

En persistant à grever encore la Belgique de ce chef, les Plénipotentiaires des 5 Cours lui refuseraient la seule application qui puisse lui être faite du principe de confusion de bénéfices, invoqué par la Conférence elle-même, et posé dans l'Article VI du Protocole de Gènes à ceux de Sa Majesté Sarde : et ledit acte tel qu'il se trouve annexé à ce traité général, sera considéré comme partie intégrante de celui-ci, et aura la même force et valeur que s'il était textuellement inséré dans l'article présent.

annexé à l'Acte de Vienne, tandis que, dans toutes les circonstances favorables à la Hollande, cette puissance a profité, de la manière la plus large, des avantages de ce même principe.

A l'appui de cette dernière observation, on peut faire remarquer qu'on a refusé à la Belgique tout concours au partage de la marine de guerre et du matériel des arsenaux, et qu'on ne lui a tenu aucun compte de ce qu'elle a payé chaque année, pendant l'existence de la communauté, à la décharge de la Hollande, pour les intérêts de l'énorme dette que celle-ci avait apportée dans cette communauté, et dont il a été amorti une bonne partie aux dépens de la Belgique.

Toutefois, entrant dans les considérations qui ont porté la Conférence à terminer le différend Hollando-Belge par un chiffre transactionnel sur l'ensemble du partage des dettes, et voulant donner aux 5 Cours un nouveau témoignage de son désir de paix et de conciliation, le Gouvernement Belge se borne à demander une nouvelle réduction de 400,000 fl., qui ne porterait plus le chiffre de la dette proprement dite (c'est-à-dire, abstraction faite des 600,000 florins pour prix d'avantages de commerce et de navigation, dont il va être question ci-après) qu'à 4 millions de florins.

Il est un autre fait sur lequel le Gouvernement Belge attire l'attention spéciale, et invoque l'équité de la Conférence; c'est sur la confusion dans le chiffre de la dette, et dans le transfert des rentes et capitaux des 600,000 florins dont il vient d'être fait mention pour prix d'avantages commerciaux.

L'étendue de ces avantages n'est point explicitement stipulée dans le Traité; mais en tout cas, rien n'y indique qu'une portion quelconque de la dette ait pour cause ou destination le paiement de ce prix.

Il serait donc logique et juste que cette somme fit l'objet d'un Article spécial du Traité, et le Gouvernement Belge insiste avec d'autant plus de force sur cette demande, que déjà les Plénipotentiaires d'Angleterre et de France, qui en comprenaient la valeur et la justesse, avaient promis aux Commissaires Belges leurs bons offices à cet égard. Il est entendu, en outre, que le paiement de la rente n'aura lieu qu'à partir de l'époque où s'opérera l'échange des Ratifications.

ANNEXE D.—Note relative à Martelange.

L'Article II du Traité du 15 Novembre est ainsi conçu :

“ Dans le Grand-Duché de Luxembourg, les limites du territoire Belge seront telles qu'elles sont décrites ci-dessous :

banlieue, et la route d'Arlon à Bastogne, passera entre Messancy, qui sera sur le territoire Belge, et Clémency, qui restera au Grand-Duché de Luxembourg, pour aboutir à Steinfort, lequel endroit restera également au Grand-Duché. De Steinfort, cette ligne sera prolongée dans la direction d'Eischen, Hecbus, Guirsch, Ober-Pallen, Grende, Northomb, Parette, et Perlé, jusqu'à Martelange; Hecbus, Guirsch, Grende, Northomb, et Parette devant appartenir à la Belgique, et Eischen, Ober-Pallen, Perlé, et Martelange, au Grand-Duché. De Martelange, la dite ligne descendra le cours de la Sure dont le Thalweg servira de limite entre les 2 Etats jusque vis-à-vis Tintange."

Les stipulations qui précèdent avaient évidemment pour but de laisser à la Belgique la communication entière et continue de Bruxelles vers la France, que l'on suit aujourd'hui pour se rendre à Metz, en passant par Namur, Marche, Bastogne, Martelange, Arlon, Messancy, Aubange, Longwy, &c.

Le texte même de l'Article le prouve suffisamment. En effet, il est dit qu'il sera tiré une ligne laissant à la Belgique la route d'Arlon à Longwy, la ville d'Arlon et sa banlieue et la route d'Arlon à Bastogne.

En partant de cette disposition qui constitue le principe, le village de Martelange ne saurait faire partie du Grand-Duché de Luxembourg. Il doit nécessairement rester à la Belgique, parce que la grande route passe à travers ce village, et laisse même la plus grande agglomération de maisons à sa gauche avec l'église. Ce qui a pu donner lieu à la contradiction que présente le texte, c'est la position assignée au village de Martelange, sur la plupart des cartes, par rapport à la grande route de Namur à Arlon: suivant ces cartes, ce village se trouve placé entièrement sur la droite et en dehors de la route, ce qui est une erreur de fait, due sans doute à la récente construction de cette route, construction postérieure à la publication de la grande carte de Ferraris, que l'on s'est borné à copier servilement, sans jamais s'enquérir des changements survenus depuis et continuant l'état définitif des lieux.

La communication indiquée sur la carte de Ferraris n'était pas une véritable route, en partant de Luxembourg, la route s'arrêtait un peu au-delà d'Arlon: de ce point jusqu'à Bastogne et Marche, il n'existait plus de communication régulièrement ouverte et assurée; les voitures de roulage et les messageries suivaient le terrain naturel jusque près de Marche; mais elles rencontraient dans le trajet des obstacles presque insurmontables, notamment pour descendre dans le vallon de la Sure à Martelange, et atteindre ensuite le point culminant du versant de gauche de ce vallon. Là, il fallait gravir 2 coteaux présentant des inclinaisons de 20 à 25 pour cent, ce qui exigeait parfois l'emploi de 30 à 40 chevaux.

L'administration Française, reconnaissant l'impérieuse nécessité de faire disparaître cet obstacle, entreprit l'abaissement des côtés de Martelange. Cet ouvrage, véritable chef-d'œuvre de l'art, ne fut complètement terminé que de 1808 à 1809. Il exigea une dépense considérable, car la route, taillée presque entièrement dans le roc, a dû être établie à mi-côte, afin de pouvoir lui donner une pente de 5 centimètres par mètre.

L'intervention du Gouvernement Français dans l'établissement de la route d'Arlon à Namur par Bastogne, se borna à l'abaissement des côtes de Martelange; le surplus de cette communication de Martelange à Arlon, et de Martelange à Marche, fut exécuté sous le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas.

Par suite des travaux faits à Martelange, le village de ce nom se trouve placé à cheval sur la grande route, et, si, aux termes de l'Article II, ce village devait appartenir au grand-duché de Luxembourg, il y aurait solution de continuité pour la route, ce qui serait contraire à la pensée de la Conférence et au principe qui lui sert de point de départ; l'on sait d'ailleurs que la Belgique n'a que cette seule communication pour atteindre la frontière de France du côté de Longwy.

Il serait matériellement impossible de détourner la route, qui, en ce point, offre un caractère tout particulier: ce n'est pas dans l'intérêt de Martelange que l'on a fait passer à grands frais la route par ce village; c'est que l'on ne pouvait passer ailleurs.

Les explications qui précèdent sont rendues plus sensibles encore par l'inspection du croquis ci-joint.

Foreign Office, 18 Avril, 1839.

Les soussignés, plénipotentiaires des Cours d'Autriche, de France, de la Grande Bretagne, de Prusse et de Russie, ont reçu la note, accompagnée de plusieurs annexes, que M. le Plénipotentiaire de Sa Majesté le Roi des Belges leur a fait l'honneur de leur adresser le 14 du courant, et ils se félicitent de reconnaître, par le contenu de cette pièce, que les dispositions qui animent le Gouvernement Belge sont de nature à promettre la solution immédiate et définitive de la question Hollando-Belge.

Les soussignés sont dans le cas de répéter, relativement aux objets touchés dans les 3 premières annexes de la note de M. le Plénipotentiaire de Sa Majesté le Roi des Belges, ce qu'ils ont eu l'honneur de lui déclarer dans leur note du 4 Février, savoir: qu'au point où en est aujourd'hui la négociation, et depuis l'adhésion pure et simple donnée par Sa Majesté le Roi des Pays-Bas aux actes du 23 Janvier, ils ne sauraient entrer en discussion sur aucune nouvelle proposition, et que les dispositions des dits actes, ainsi que leur texte, ne sont plus susceptibles d'aucun changement ni ne peuvent recevoir aucune addition.

Les soussignés ne sauraient, en conséquence, admettre la stipulation proposée dans l'annexe A, au sujet des libertés religieuses et politiques réclamées en faveur des habitants des parties du Limbourg et du Luxembourg qui retournent sous la domination du Roi Grand-Duc. Ils observent que les dites libertés qui, par leur nature, sont exclusivement du ressort du régime intérieur des Etats auxquels, sous un point de vue légal, les territoires en question n'ont point cessé d'appartenir, trouvent leur garantie, soit dans la loi fondamentale du Royaume des Pays-Bas, auquel une partie des dits territoires est destinée à être réunie, soit dans les dispositions des actes formant la constitution fédérative de l'Allemagne, qui sont applicables au Grand-Duché de Luxembourg, en sorte que la réclamation de M. le Plénipotentiaire Belge se trouve effectivement sans objet.

Quant à la proposition développée dans l'annexe B, d'un mode de paiement à effectuer de Gouvernement à Gouvernement, pour remplacer la perception directe du droit de tonnage sur l'Escaut, les soussignés, sans méconnaître ce que ce mode semblerait présenter d'avantages et de facilités pour les 2 parties intéressées, ne sauraient, par les raisons ci-dessus mentionnées, considérer cette question comme susceptible d'être traitée par eux, tandis qu'il dépendra des Gouvernements Belge et Néerlandais de s'entendre de gré à gré à ce sujet, lorsqu'ils le jugeront conforme à leurs intérêts. L'impossibilité où les soussignés se trouvent placés d'admettre un changement dans les dispositions des actes du 23 Janvier, s'applique également à la quotité de la rente imposée à la Belgique du chef de la dette commune, aux éléments qui ont servi de base à l'établissement de cette rente, et au terme où elle doit commencer; objets dont traite l'Annexe C de la note de M. le Plénipotentiaire Belge.

Obligés d'écarter tout ce qui renfermerait une stipulation nouvelle, ou une modification des actes du 23 Janvier, les soussignés se sont appliqués à l'examen des points du Traité sur lesquels M. le Plénipotentiaire de Sa Majesté le Roi des Belges a désiré obtenir des éclaircissements; ils se trouvent à même de lui donner sur ces objets les explications suivantes:

Ad 1. Il semble qu'il y a eu erreur dans la détermination de la frontière sur le point de Martelange; les commissaires-démarcateurs tenus, aux termes du Traité, à avoir égard aux localités et aux convenances qui pourront en résulter mutuellement, auront à régler cet objet à la satisfaction des 2 parties.

Ad 2. Les droits relatifs à la navigation de l'Escaut, accordés aux 2 parties, et clairement définis par le Traité, tels que la perception du droit unique de tonnage d'une part, et le concours à la surveillance commune, ainsi que le pilotage facultatif de l'autre, doivent trouver leur application aussitôt après l'échange des Ratifications du Traité, et il n'est réservé au règlement à intervenir, que de déterminer en détail le mode d'exercer ces mêmes droits de la manière la plus convenable dans l'intérêt réciproque.

Ad 3. Le droit de tonnage à percevoir par le Gouvernement Néerlandais sur la navigation de l'Escaut et de ses embouchures, étant un droit de reconnaissance et de transit, le calcul des distances n'a pas dû être pris en considération pour le déterminer. Mais il a été entendu que les bâtiments venant de la Belgique pour se rendre à la haute mer, ou venant de la haute mer pour se rendre en Belgique, et ce dans l'une et l'autre direction, soit par l'Escaut, soit par le canal de Terneuse, ne fussent assujettis qu'à un droit unique. En conséquence, il ne saurait être perçu d'autre droit ni sur la partie Hollandaise, ni sur la partie Belge, du canal qui communique entre Terneuse et Gand.

Ad 4. Suivant l'usage généralement établi parmi les nations, les droits proportionnés à une mesure de capacité se perçoivent d'après la mesure du pays où ils sont levés. Or, le droit unique de tonnage quoique perçu à Anvers, est censé être levé dans les parages Néerlandais, et il doit par conséquent être réglé pour les bâtiments de toutes les nations, d'après le tonneau Néerlandais ou le "cubick elle," égal au mètre de cube de France et au tonneau actuel Belge, et contenant 35,3170 pieds cubes Anglais. Quant aux bateaux à vapeur qui sont généralement soumis à un traitement exceptionnel, les Soussignés sont d'avis que le droit à percevoir doit être réglé d'après le principe que le tonnage de ces bâtiments ne sera calculé que relativement à la partie de leur capacité destinée à recevoir un chargement de marchandises; principe qui renferme de plus l'exception des bateaux remorqueurs servant uniquement à la remorque: lesquels semblent d'ailleurs rentrer dans la catégorie des bâtiments qui font le cabotage dans le cours du fleuve.

Ad 5. Il ressort du sens du paragraphe 5 de l'Article IX, que la Belgique jouira, aussitôt après l'échange des Ratifications, de la navigation sur les canaux et eaux intermédiaires, aux mêmes conditions que les navires Hollandais, et en supportant les mêmes droits suivant les tarifs en vigueur.

Ad 6. Les termes exprès du paragraphe 3, d'après lesquels les navires suspects auront la faculté de continuer la route sans entrave ni retard, renferment, l'obligation de faire passer les gardes de santé, sans que les bâtiments soient aucunement arrêtés dans leurs cours. Au reste, les instructions à donner aux pilotes, tant Néerlandais que Belges, pour signaler les vaisseaux suspects, rentrent dans les attributions des commissaires à nommer de part et d'autre pour exercer la surveillance commune d'après le § 2 de l'Article IX.

Ad 8. La libre navigation de l'Escaut renferme, sans aucun doute, la faculté, pour tout navire, de stationner librement dans toutes les eaux de ce fleuve et de ses embouchures, si les vents, les glaces ou d'autres circonstances l'exigent, et il n'est pas à prévoir qu'aucune contestation puisse s'élever sur cet objet, qui pourra, au reste, être plus positivement déterminé par le règlement.

Ad 9. Le terme générique d'une route à construire éventuellement par le canton de Sittard s'applique naturellement à la construction d'un chemin de fer comme à toute autre espèce de route.

Ad 10. Les Soussignés ne peuvent qu'applaudir à la sage réserve de M. le Plénipotentiaire de Sa Majesté le Roi des Belges, qui s'abstient d'insister sur les mots à perpétuité, omis sans aucune intention dans la rédaction de l'Article XXV du Traité entre la Belgique et la Hollande. Cette omission qui n'infirme aucunement la solidité et la durée de l'engagement, et à laquelle suppléeraient, au besoin, les expressions des Articles VI et VII, cités dans la note du 14 Avril, est, au reste, d'autant moins de conséquence qu'elle est conforme à divers précédents.

Après avoir satisfaits, par les explications qui précèdent, au désir de Sa Majesté le Roi des Belges d'être rassuré sur le sens des divers points qu'elles concernent, il ne reste aux Soussignés qu'à exprimer la confiance que M. le Plénipotentiaire Belge va leur déclarer immédiatement qu'il est prêt à procéder à la signature du Traité entre les 5 Puissances et Sa Majesté le Roi des Belges, et du Traité entre Sa dite Majesté le Roi des Pays-Bas, annexés à la note des Soussignés du 23 Janvier.

(3.)—Le Plénipotentiaire Belge aux Plénipotentiaires des 5 Cours.

Londres, 19 Avril, 1839.

LE soussigné, Envoyé Extraordinaire et Ministre Plénipotentiaire de Sa Majesté le Roi des Belges près Sa Majesté Britannique, a reçu la réponse que leurs Excellences les Plénipotentiaires des 5 cours ont bien voulu lui faire à la communication qu'il avait eu l'honneur de leur adresser sous la date du 14.

Le soussigné regrette que la Conférence n'ait pas pu se saisir de la proposition relative à l'acquittement du péage sur l'Escaut au moyen d'une rente annuelle; mode de paiement dont leurs Excellences ont néanmoins apprécié les avantages, circonstance qui ne peut manquer d'exercer une favorable influence sur la négociation spéciale et directe à ouvrir à ce sujet entre les 2 parties.

Le Gouvernement du Roi apprendra sans doute avec peine que la Conférence se soit crue dans l'impossibilité d'améliorer la position de la Belgique par une réduction plus forte de la dette.

Il verra avec satisfaction que, si la Conférence n'a pas admis un Article Additionnel, relatif aux garanties civiles et religieuses dues aux populations du Limbourg et du Luxembourg, c'est qu'elle regardait comme sans objet une semblable stipulation, les garanties en question résultant d'actes déjà existants.

En ce qui concerne les 10 points qui, indépendamment des 8 dispositions ci-dessus rappelées, ont été soumis à leurs Excellences, le Gouvernement du Roi, s'étant rencontré avec la Conférence, se trouve, par les explications qu'il a reçues, pleinement satisfait et rassuré. La Conférence, qui avait apporté tant de soin à la rédaction de l'Art. IX, relatif à une question qui intéresse le monde commercial, a mis la réalisation de son œuvre à l'abri de toute contestation et de tout retard.

Il reste un dernier devoir à remplir au soussigné, pour compléter cette communication. Sa Majesté le Roi des Belges a retrouvé avec douleur, dans les projets qui lui ont été soumis, les stipulations territoriales imposées dans des jours de malheur, et demeurées 7 années sans exécution; le temps a exercé une bienfaisante influence sur d'autres questions, et celle-ci, digne d'une généreuse sollicitude, est restée irrévocablement résolue. Il a fallu que ce résultat se reproduisît avec son caractère primitif de nécessité, pour que le pays pût se résoudre à un si grand sacrifice; il a fallu que l'Empire des circonstances fût de nouveau constaté de la manière la plus évidente.

Sa Majesté devait un dernier effort à des populations qui lui ont montré tant d'affection et de dévouement; et, si elle renonce à les conserver, c'est moins à cause des dangers qui menaçaient la Belgique entière, qu'en considération des maux qui devaient fondre sur les provinces du Limbourg et du Luxembourg. Jamais Sa Majesté n'a senti plus péniblement toute l'entendue de la tâche qu'elle a acceptée dans l'intérêt de la paix générale, et pour constituer une nationalité devenue une condition nécessaire de la politique Européenne; elle trouvera une consolation dans l'idée que cette nationalité et cette paix sont désormais à l'abri de toute atteinte.

Le Soussigné a été chargé de donner ces explications, afin que la marche et le caractère de la résolution de son Gouvernement ne pussent être méconnus; il déclare, en conséquence, que, vu les éclaircissements renfermés dans la note de la Conférence en date du 18, il est autorisé à signer, aux termes de l'Acte du 23 Janvier, les Traités entre Sa Majesté et les 5 Cours et Sa Majesté le Roi des Pays-Bas.

Foreign Office, 7 Mai, 1839.

LE Soussigné, Plénipotentiaire de Sa Majesté le Roi des Belges, s'empresse de transmettre à son Excellence le Vicomte Palmerston copie d'une dépêche que le Gouvernement du Roi vient d'adresser à Londres, sous la date du 23, au sujet de la réponse de la Conférence aux questions relatives à l'Escaut. Sa Seigneurie verra qu'une erreur de fait a été commise par la Conférence en ce qui concerne le tonnage des Pays-Bas et la réduction en pieds Anglais. Il importe que cette erreur, qui trouve son correctif dans le principe général posé par la Conférence, soit cependant rectifiée avant l'échange des ratifications, afin d'éviter toute confusion d'idées que pourraient faire naître les chiffres erronés. Le soussigné prie son Excellence le Vicomte Palmerston de vouloir bien arrêter, de commun accord avec leurs Excellences les Plénipotentiaires d'Autriche, de France, de Prusse et de Russie, le mode de rectification à suivre en cette occurrence.

SYLVAIN VAN DE WEYER.

(Annexe.)—M. de Theux à M. Sylvain Van. de Weyer.

M. LE MINISTRE,

Bruxelles, le 23 Avril, 1839.

La réponse de la Conférence au n° 4, des questions sur l'Escaut, renferme une grave erreur de fait qu'elle doit absolument rectifier avant l'échange des ratifications. Dans ma dépêche du 27 Février dernier, je m'en étais référé à l'Article CCXCII de la loi générale du 26 Août 1822,* en vigueur tant en Hollande qu'en Belgique. Or, le texte de cette loi porte: que le tonneau sera estimé équivaloir à 1,000 livres des Pays-Bas, représentés par une aune et demie cube, mesure des Pays-Bas, c'est-à-dire, une aune cube plus la moitié du volume d'une aune cube; ce qui fait 52,9755 $\left(\frac{35,3170}{17,6855}\right)$ au lieu de 35,3170 comme le porte la note de la Conférence, laquelle suppose seulement un mètre et a oublié la moitié de ce mètre.

* ART. CCXCII du Loi du 26 Août, 1822. Tous bâtiments ou navires de mer qui, après l'époque mentionnée en l'Article I, entreront dans les ports de ce Royaume ou en sortiront par mer ou par les eaux dites Wadden, situées entre les îles et la côte de la Frise et de la province de Groningue, seront assujettis à un droit de tonnage, qui sera calculé selon leur port ou capacité en tonneaux, c'est-à-dire suivant le nombre de tonneaux qu'ils jaugent ou peuvent contenir.

Le tonneau sera estimé équivaloir à 1,000 livres des Pays-Bas, représentées par une aune et demie cube, mesure des Pays Bas.

Les bâtiments soumis à ce droit, seront divisés en 3 classes, et la perception en sera effectuée au taux ci-après fixé, pour chacune d'elles.

Il semblerait d'abord étrange que l'on ait adopté la mesure d'un mètre et demi pour un tonneau Néerlandais, tandis qu'en France on a adopté un mètre, mais il est à remarquer qu'en France l'ordonnance du 18 Novembre 1837,* motivée sur ce que la mesure d'un mètre est trop défavorable au commerce, a déterminé un nouveau mode de jaugeage qui, par son application, amène un résultat semblable à celui obtenu en Hollande et en Belgique, ainsi que je vous l'avais fait remarquer par ma dépêche susdite du 27 Février dernier et ainsi que le démontre une autre lettre le M. le Ministre des Finances en date de ce jour.

J'ai dit que la déclaration de la Conférence du 18 Avril dernier renferme une erreur de fait dans l'énoncé d'un mètre au lieu d'un mètre et demi et ensuite dans la réduction en pieds Anglais; mais la Conférence avait, dans la même déclaration, posé en principe que c'était la loi du lieu de débit du droit, et conséquemment le tonneau Néerlandais, qui devait servir de base d'application pour toutes les nations. Or, ce tonneau doit être celui déterminé par la loi actuellement en vigueur en Hollande; il est donc impossible qu'il soit entré dans les intentions de la Conférence de diminuer la valeur de ce tonneau et d'augmenter par là de moitié le péage déjà beaucoup trop onéreux de l'Escaut. Ce qui le prouve plus clairement encore, c'est que la Conférence a eu uniquement en vue de résoudre la question de savoir si le péage serait uniforme pour toutes les nations et si ce serait d'après la loi Hollandaise.

Comme je vous l'ai dit, M. le Ministre, les ratifications ne peuvent être échangées avant que cette erreur ne soit rectifiée. Veuillez, en conséquence, vous concerter avec les Plénipotentiaires de la Conférence et plus particulièrement avec Lord Palmerston sur le mode à suivre pour la rectification.

Comme je dois faire un rapport à la Chambre des Représentans

* ART. I. A partir du 1 Mars, 1838, le jaugeage des bâtimens à voiles de commerce, dans les ports Français, aura lieu ainsi qu'il suit :

Les 3 dimensions principales servant à l'évaluation du tonnage continueront à être prises conformément à la loi du 12 Nivôse an 2.

Ces 3 dimensions seront exprimées en mètres et fractions décimales du mètre.

Leur produit, divisé par le nombre 3 80, exprimera le tonnage légal du bâtiment.

II. Le nombre de tonneaux ainsi obtenu sera gravé au ciseau sur les faces, avant et arrière du maître-bau : cette opération sera faite, soit lors de la mise à l'eau du bâtiment, soit lorsqu'après avoir subi des réparations importantes, ou pour toute autre cause, le jaugeage devra être effectué de nouveau.

Afin de faciliter les vérifications de la douane, des marques fixes seront appliquées ou gravées, par les soins de l'administration, sur les points du bâtiment où auront été prises les dimensions principales sur lesquelles le tonnage aura été calculé.

le 2 Mai, et que des interpellations me seront sans doute adressées à ce sujet, je dois être à même d'y répondre.

M. Sylvain Van de Weyer.

Londres, le 31 Mai, 1839.

Les soussignés, Plénipotentiaires des Cours d'Autriche, de France de la Grande-Bretagne, de Prusse et de Russie ont pris connaissance d'une note adressée, le 7 du courant, par M. le Plénipotentiaire Belge à M. le Plénipotentiaire de la Grande Bretagne, communiquant une dépêche de son Gouvernement relative à une erreur que les plénipotentiaires des 5 Cours auraient commise dans leur note du 18 Avril, en ce qui concerne le tonnage Néerlandais et la réduction en pieds Anglais du tonneau des Pays-Bas.

Les soussignés, ayant constaté l'exactitude des observations faites par le Gouvernement Belge, et de la disposition de la loi Néerlandaise du 26 Août 1822 rapportée dans la dépêche du Ministère Belge, ont l'honneur de déclarer que la réponse qu'ils ont donnée dans leur note du 18 Avril, au quatrième objet sur lequel M. le Plénipotentiaire de Sa Majesté le Roi des Belges a désiré, dans sa note du 14 du même mois obtenir des éclaircissements, doit être interprétée d'après le principe qui s'y trouve clairement établi, savoir: que le droit de tonnage sur l'Escaut doit être perçu conformément à la mesure qui est actuellement en usage dans les ports Néerlandais, d'après les dispositions de la loi précitée, qui fixe le contenu d'un tonneau Néerlandais à une aune et demie cube, et que l'erreur de fait dans laquelle la Conférence est tombée en évaluant cette mesure à 35,3170 pieds Anglais ne saurait aucunement altérer l'application dudit principe.

LE Plénipotentiaire de Sa Majesté Britannique a proposé à la Conférence de proroger le terme fixé pour l'échange des ratifications des Traités du 19 Avril jusqu'au 8 Juin, par le motif que le Plénipotentiaire Belge, en conséquence d'un accident tout à fait indépendant de la volonté de son Gouvernement, n'avait point encore reçu ses ratifications, et que le temps matériel avait manqué au collationnement de celles de presque toutes les autres Cours.

Les Plénipotentiaires d'Autriche, de France, de Prusse et de Russie, ainsi que ceux de Belgique et des Pays-Bas ayant adhéré à la proposition du Plénipotentiaire de la Grande-Bretagne, la Conférence a été convoquée pour le 8 Juin, ou plus tôt si faire se pouvait, afin de procéder à l'échange des ratifications des Traités du 19 Avril.

Les Plénipotentiaires Néerlandais et Belge ayant été introduits, le Plénipotentiaire de Sa Majesté la Reine de la Grande Bretagne leur a remis la déclaration ci-jointe, sub littera A.

IN proceeding to the exchange of the ratifications of the Treaties relative to the Netherlands and Belgium, signed at London on the 19th of April, 1839, between their Majesties the Queen of the EN procédant à l'échange des ratifications des Traités relatifs aux Pays-Bas et à la Belgique, signés à Londres le 19 Avril, 1839, entre leurs Majestés la Reine du Royaume Uni de la

United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Emperor of Austria, King of Hungary and Bohemia, the King of the French, the King of Prussia, and the Emperor of All the Russias, on the one part, and their Majesties the King of the Belgians and the King of the Netherlands, Grand Duke of Luxemburg, respectively, on the other part, the Undersigned Plénipotentary of Her Britannic Majesty is commanded by Her Majesty to explain and declare :

That the Government of Her Britannic Majesty does not consider the XVth Article of the Annex to the Treaties above mentioned, or the corresponding Article of the Treaty concluded on the same day between Belgium and the Netherlands, to be applicable to certain tenements and parcels of land belonging to the House of Orange-Nassau, and situated at Laeken, and intermixed with the Crown property at that royal residence ; because it has been understood between the Governments of their Britannic and Netherland Majesties, in consequence of communications which took place between them before the signature of the Treaties of the 19th of April, that the before-mentioned tenements and parcels of land are to be sold by the House of Orange-Nassau to the Crown of Belgium at their fair value ; such tenements and parcels of land being necessary for the convenient occupation of the royal residence at Laeken.

Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande, l'Empereur d'Autriche, Roi de Hongrie et de Bohême, le Roi des Français, le Roi de Prusse, et l'Empereur de Toutes les Russies, d'une part, et leurs Majestés, le Roi des Belges et le Roi des Pays-Bas, Grand-Duc de Luxembourg, respectivement, de l'autre part, le soussigné Plénipotentiaire de Sa Majesté Britannique a reçu de Sa Majesté l'ordre de déclarer explicitement :

Que le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique ne considère pas le XV^e Article de l'Annexe aux Traités ci-dessus mentionnés ou l'Article correspondant du Traité conclu le même jour, entre la Belgique et les Pays-Bas, comme applicable aux propriétés et portions de terrains appartenant à la maison d'Orange-Nassau, et situés à Laeken, et enclavés dans le domaine de la Couronne à cette résidence royale ; parce qu'il a été entendu, entre les Gouvernements de leurs Majestés Britannique et des Pays-Bas, par suite des communications qui ont eu lieu entre eux, avant la signature des Traités du 19 Avril, que les propriétés et parties de terrain ci-dessus mentionnées seront vendues par la Maison d'Orange-Nassau à la Couronne de Belgique à un prix équitable (fair value) ; attendu que ces propriétés et portions de terrain sont nécessaires aux convénances de la résidence royale de Laeken.

Her Britannic Majesty's Ratifications of the aforesaid Treaties are exchanged under the explicit declaration and understanding above-mentioned.

Done at London, the 8th day of June, 1839.

L'échange des Ratifications de Sa Majesté Britannique, en ce qui concerne les Traités précités, a lieu sous la réserve de la déclaration explicite et de l'arrangement qui précèdent.

ANNEXE B.—Déclaration du Plénipotentiaire de Sa Majesté le Roi des Belges.

Foreign Office, le 8 Juin, 1839.

Le Plénipotentiaire Belge, en procédant à l'échange des Ratifications des Traités du 16 Avril, fait observer que, pour éviter toute difficulté dans l'exécution de l'Article XVI du Traité, il doit être entendu que, vu l'intente directe qui a eu lieu au sujet des domaines de Laeken entre les Cabinets de St. James et de La Haye et de l'expertise contradictoire à intervenir, l'exécution des dispositions de l'Article XVI est suspendue en ce qui concerne spécialement et exclusivement les biens acquis et payés par la Maison de Nassau dans la vue d'embellir et d'agrandir le domaine de Laeken et ses dépendances jusqu'à l'arrangement entre les parties.

ANNEXE C.—Déclaration du Plénipotentiaire de Sa Majesté le Roi des Pays-Bas.

Londres, le 8 Juin, 1839.

Le Plénipotentiaire des Pays-Bas ayant pris connaissance des déclarations qui ont été faites par le Plénipotentiaire de Sa Majesté le Roi des Belges, et par le Plénipotentiaire de Sa Majesté Britannique, a déclaré que, comme il n'est pas muni d'instructions pour le cas exceptionnel auquel il a été fait allusion relativement aux domaines patrimoniaux qui sont places aux environs du château de Laeken, il croit de son devoir de réclamer qu'il soit entendu que les déclarations de MM. les Plénipotentiaires Belge et Britannique n'invalident pas les droits de propriété de Sa Majesté le Roi des Pays-Bas sur les susdits domaines.

*LOI de la Belgique, relative au Remboursement du Péage sur l'Escaut.—Bruxelles, le 5 Juin, 1839.

LEOPOLD, Roi des Belges, a tous présents et à venir, Salut.

Nous avons, de commun accord avec les chambres, décrété, et nous ordonnons ce qui suit :

ART. I. Le péage à percevoir par le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas sur la navigation de l'Escaut, pour se rendre de la mer en Belgique

* Exposé des Motifs, accompagnant le Projet de Loi relatif à la perception du droit de tonnage sur l'Escaut.†

MESSIEURS,

L'ART. IX du Traité de Paix signé à Londres, le 19 du mois dernier, détermine qu'un péage sur la navigation de l'Escaut sera prélevé au profit de la Hollande.

Sans porter précisément atteinte au principe de la liberté des fleuves proclamé par l'Acte du Congrès de Vienne, cette sujétion onéreuse est cependant de nature à causer préjudice aux destinées commerciales des ports d'Anvers et de Gand, et par là aux intérêts du pays en général.

L'établissement d'un droit sur l'Escaut est une des conséquences de la séparation de la Belgique d'avec la Hollande ; il est une des conditions de la paix qui a été acceptée dans l'intérêt du pays entier ; il a donc paru juste que cette charge ne fût point en quelque sorte locale.

Ce principe admis, Messieurs, nous avons cru que le meilleur moyen d'en opérer l'application, était d'en faire peser, du moins en majeure partie, le poids sur le commerce général du pays avec l'étranger, et pour y parvenir nous avons pensé qu'une légère majoration aux droits de douanes, de transit et de tonnage, réglée dans les mêmes proportions que le tarif des douanes, afin de ne pas rompre l'équilibre protecteur qu'il établit, repartirait d'une manière équitable la dépense qu'occasionnera le remboursement du péage aux navires qui fréquenteront les ports d'Anvers et de Gand.

Le projet de loi que M. le Ministre de l'Intérieur et des Affaires Etrangères et moi avons l'honneur de vous présenter a ce double but.

L'Art. 1er consacre le principe du remboursement du péage aux navires de toutes les nations ; les navires Néerlandais exceptés. Cette exception n'a rien de blessant, ni d'hostile pour cette nation ; mais le droit se prélevant au profit de la Hollande, c'eût été faire double emploi en sa faveur, que de rembourser à ses navires ce qu'elle même leur eût fait payer. Si cette puissance veut faire jouir sa navigation des mêmes avantages que celles des autres nations, c'est à elle à l'affranchir du tribut qu'elle percevra. La Belgique agit avec assez de grandeur en réparant envers le monde entier, le grave inconvénient auquel l'astreint la conférence, pour qu'elle ne puisse être tenue d'en agir de même envers la Hollande au profit de qui cet inconvénient est créé.

Néanmoins, la disposition qui vous est soumise n'est que temporaire. Le sacrifice que fait la Belgique doit avoir plus tard sa compensation ; aussi le projet de loi vous réserve-t-il, Messieurs, d'examiner avant le 1er Janvier, 1843, s'il y aura lieu d'en continuer les effets envers les puissances avec lesquelles on ne serait pas parvenu à faire des arrangements de commerce ou de navigation.

† Chambre des Représentants, Séance du 2 Mai, 1839.

ou de la Belgique à la mer, par l'Escaut ou le canal de Terneuse, sera remboursé par l'Etat aux navires de toutes les nations. Toutefois, s'il se présente, à l'égard de l'un des pavillons étrangers, des motifs graves et spéciaux, le Gouvernement est autorisé à suspendre provisoirement, à son égard, l'effet de la présente exécution.

Il est ouvert au Gouvernement un crédit de 300,000 francs destiné à couvrir les dépenses des derniers mois de l'exercice 1839.

II. Avant le 1er Juin 1843, il sera examiné si le bénéfice de l'Article précédent doit être maintenu en faveur des pays avec lesquels il ne sera pas intervenu d'arrangements commerciaux, de douane ou de navigation.

III. Pour faire face, en partie, au remboursement prescrit par l'Article I, il sera prélevé 3 centimes additionnels sur les droits de douane, de transit et de tonnage, à partir de la date qui sera fixée ultérieurement par le Gouvernement.

MANDONS ET ORDONNONS que les présentes, revêtues du sceau de l'Etat, insérées au Bulletin Officiel, soient adressées aux cours, tribunaux et aux autorités administratives, pour qu'ils les observent et fassent observer comme loi du royaume.

LOI de la Belgique, relative à la quote-part de la Dette à payer à la Hollande.—Bruxelles, le 5 Juin, 1839.

LEOPOLD, Roi des Belges, à tous présents et à venir, Salut.

Nous avons, de commun accord avec les chambres, décrété, et nous ordonnons ce qui suit :

Pour effectuer le remboursement il vous est demandé, pour 1839, un crédit de 300,000 francs. Ce chiffre est tout-à-fait éventuel, et ne fait que poser une limite au visa de la Cour des Comptes. Il est calculé pour un terme de 6 à 7 mois.

Par l'Art. II du Projet, Messieurs, on porte le nombre de centimes additionnels aux droits de douanes, de transit et de tonnage à 18 au lieu de 15.

Le produit de ces 3 centimes supplémentaires ne sera probablement pas suffisant pour couvrir le remboursement du péage, mais nous n'avons pas cru pouvoir aller au delà, attendu que ces droits sont déjà grevés de 2 centimes extraordinaires. Il sera pourvu à cette insuffisance, s'il y a lieu, sur les fonds généraux du budget.

Nous le répétons, le Projet de Loi renferme un grand acte de générosité et de réparation ; il sera compris par le monde civilisé, et vous tiendrez à honneur, Messieurs d'y avoir donné votre assentiment.

L. DESMAISIERES.
DE THEUX.

ARTICLE UNIQUE. Il est ouvert au Gouvernement un crédit de 4,985,058 f. 20 c., destiné à pourvoir, avec la moitié de celui alloué par la loi du 22 Décembre 1838, pour intérêts de la dette inscrite au grand-livre auxiliaire de Bruxelles, au paiement éventuel du semestre échéant en 1839, de la rente annuelle à solder par la Belgique, en exécution de l'Article XIII du Traité signé à Londres le 19 Avril, 1839.*

[Ratifications échangées, le 14 Avril, 1848.]

SA Majesté le Roi des Belges et Sa Majesté le Roi du Royaume des 2 Siciles, animés d'un égal désir d'entendre, d'accroître et de consolider les relations commerciales entre leurs Etats respectifs, et de procurer toutes les facilités et tous les encouragements possibles à ceux de leurs sujets qui ont part à ces relations, persuadés que rien ne saurait contribuer davantage à l'accomplissement mutuel de leurs souhaits à cet égard, que l'abolition réciproque de tous les droits différentiels de navigation et de douane, de toutes les prérogatives et de tous les privilèges exclusifs de commerce, dont les sujets de l'une des 2 parties ont joui jusqu'à présent de préférence aux sujets de l'autre, dans leurs Etats respectifs, ont nommé leurs Plénipotentiaires pour conclure un Traité à cet effet, savoir :

Antoine Spinelli, des Princes de Scalea, Commandeur de l'Ordre Royal de François Ier, Chevalier de 1re Classe de l'Ordre Impérial Russe de Sainte Anne,

* Signed in the French and Italian languages.

Grand Officier Royal de la Légion d'Honneur, Grand Croix de la Couronne de Fer, Gentilhomme de la Chambre de Sa Majesté, Membre de la Consulte-Générale, Surintendant-Général des Archives du Royaume, et Intendant de la Province de Naples ;

Lesquels, après avoir échangé leurs pleins pouvoirs, trouvés en bonne et due forme, sont convenus des Articles suivants :

ART. I. Les Belges auront le droit entier et incontestable de voyager et de résider dans les Etats et domaines de Sa Majesté le Roi du Royaume des 2 Siciles, sauf les précautions de police qui sont employées envers les nations les plus favorisées. Ils auront le droit d'occuper des maisons et des magasins, et de disposer de leur propriété personnelle, de quelque nature et dénomination qu'elle soit, par vente, donation, échange ou testament, et de quelque autre manière que ce soit, sans qu'il soit élevé, à cet effet, le plus léger obstacle ou empêchement. Ils ne seront tenus, sous aucun prétexte, à payer d'autres taxes ou impôts que ceux qui sont ou pourront être payés dans les Etats de Sa Majesté Sicilienne par les nations les plus favorisées.

Ils seront exempts de tout service militaire, soit de terre, soit de mer, de prêts forcés et de toute contribution extraordinaire, à moins qu'elle ne soit générale et établie par une loi. Leurs habitations, magasins et tout ce qui en fait partie et leur appartient, pour objets de commerce ou de résidence, seront respectés. Ils ne seront pas soumis à des visites ou à des perquisitions vexatoires. On ne pourra faire aucun examen, ni aucune inspection arbitraire de leurs livres, papiers et comptes de commerce, et les opérations de ce genre ne pourront être pratiquées qu'à la suite d'une sentence légale des tribunaux compétents.

Sa Majesté le Roi du Royaume des 2 Siciles s'engage à garantir, en toute occasion, aux Belges qui résideront dans ses Etats et domaines, la conservation de leurs propriétés, et leur sûreté personnelle, de la même manière qu'elles sont garanties à ses sujets et aux sujets et citoyens des nations les plus favorisées.

Sa Majesté le Roi des Belges promet, de son côté, d'assurer, dans ses Etats, aux sujets de Sa Majesté le Roi du Royaume des 2 Siciles, la jouissance des mêmes privilèges.

II. Les Belges pourront, dans les Etats et domaines de Sa Majesté le Roi du Royaume des 2 Siciles, traiter librement leurs propres affaires par eux-mêmes, ou les commettre à la gestion de toutes les personnes qu'ils voudront nommer pour leur servir d'intermédiaires, facteurs ou agents, sans être entravés, en quoi que ce soit, dans le choix de ces personnes. Ils ne seront tenus à payer aucun salaire, ni aucune rémunération à aucune personne, quelle qu'elle soit, qui n'aurait point été choisie par eux. Pleine liberté sera laissée, dans tous les cas, à l'acheteur et au vendeur, de négocier ensemble, et de fixer le prix d'un objet ou d'une marchandise quelconque importée dans les Etats de Sa Majesté le Roi du Royaume des 2 Siciles, ou qui devrait être exportée de ses Etats, sauf, en général, les affaires pour lesquelles les lois et les usages du pays réclameront l'emploi d'agents spéciaux dans les domaines de Sa Majesté.

Les sujets de Sa Majesté le Roi du Royaume des 2 Siciles jouiront en Belgique des mêmes privilèges et sous les mêmes conditions.

III. Les Belges ne seront pas soumis, dans les Etats et domaines de Sa Majesté le Roi du Royaume des 2 Siciles, à un système d'visites et de perquisitions, de la part des officiers de la douane, plus rigoureux que celui auquel sont soumis les sujets de Sa Majesté le Roi du Royaume des 2 Siciles; et, de même, les sujets de Sa Majesté le Roi du Royaume des 2 Siciles ne seront pas soumis, en Belgique, à un système de recherches et de perquisitions plus rigoureux que celui auquel sont soumis les Belges.

IV. Les capitaines et patrons des bâtiments Belges et des 2 Siciles seront réciproquement exempts de toute obligation de recourir, dans les ports respectifs des 2 Etats, aux expéditionnaires officiels, et ils pourront, en conséquence, se servir, soit de leurs consuls, soit des expéditionnaires qui seraient désignés par ceux-ci, sauf dans les cas prévus par le Code de commerce Belge, et par le Code de Commerce des 2 Siciles, aux dispositions desquelles la présente clause n'apporte aucune dérogation.

V. Il y aura liberté réciproque de commerce et de navigation entre la Belgique et le Royaume des 2 Siciles. Les produits du sol ou de l'industrie de l'un des 2 pays importés directement de l'un dans l'autre, soit par mer, soit par terre, seront taxés de la même manière que les mêmes produits, quelle qu'en soit la valeur, importés de quelque autre pays que ce soit, et ne seront soumis à aucun droit de douane, ou impôt différent ou plus élevé. Toutefois, il est entendu qu'à l'importation par mer le bénéfice de la disposition qui précède n'est applicable qu'aux arrivages directs.

Sa Majesté le Roi des Belges, et Sa Majesté le Roi du Royaume des 2 Siciles s'obligent à n'accorder à aucune autre puissance, en matière de commerce et de navigation, aucun privilège, aucune faveur ou immunité, sans les étendre en même temps au commerce et à la navigation de l'autre pays, gratuitement si la concession a été faite à titre gratuit, et moyennant une compensation équivalente, autant que possible, et qui sera stipulée de commun accord, si la concession a été faite à titre onéreux.

VI. Les navires Belges arrivant dans les ports du Royaume des 2 Siciles, et réciproquement les navires des 2 Siciles arrivant dans les ports du Royaume de Belgique, seront traités dans les 2 pays, soit à leur entrée, soit à leur sortie, sur le même pied que les bâtiments nationaux, pour tout ce qui concerne les droits de tonnage, de pilotage, d'ancrage, de port, de balisage, de fanaux, de quarantaine, d'expédition, de courtage, et toutes les autres charges qui pèsent sur la coque du navire sous quelque dénomination que ce soit, pourvu que ces bâtiments viennent directement de l'un des ports du Royaume de Belgique dans un des ports du Royaume des 2 Siciles, ou d'un des ports du Royaume des 2 Siciles dans un des ports de Belgique, s'ils sont chargés, et pour toute espèce de voyage, s'ils sont sur lest.

Ce qui précède s'entend non-seulement des droits perçus au profit de l'Etat, mais encore de tous droits perçus au profit des provinces, villes, arrondissements, juridictions, communes, &c., sous quelque terme qu'ils puissent être désignés.

VII. La nationalité des bâtiments respectifs sera reconnue et admise de part et d'autre, d'après les lois et règlements particuliers à chaque Etat, au moyen des patentes et papiers de bord délivrés par les autorités compétentes aux capitaines ou patrons.

VIII. Tous les produits du sol ou de l'industrie de Belgique qui pourront être légalement importés et qui arriveront en droiture de Belgique par navires Belges dans les ports du Royaume des 2 Siciles, ne payeront d'autres ni de plus forts droits que s'ils étaient importés en droiture sous pavillon des 2 Siciles.

Et, réciproquement, tous les produits du sol ou de l'industrie du Royaume des 2 Siciles, qui pourront être légalement importés et qui arriveront en droiture de ce Royaume par navires des 2 Siciles dans les ports de Belgique, ne payeront d'autres ni de plus forts droits que s'ils étaient importés en droiture sous pavillon Belge.

Il est bien entendu :

1°. Que les marchandises devront avoir réellement été chargées dans les ports d'où elles auront été déclarées respectivement provenir ;

2°. Que la relâche forcée dans des ports intermédiaires, pour des causes de force majeure dûment justifiée, ne fait pas perdre le bénéfice de l'importation en droiture.

IX. Les objets de toute nature quelconque, exportés ou réexportés par navires Belges ou des 2 Siciles, des ports de l'un des 2 pays vers quelque lieu que ce soit, ne seront pas assujettis à des droits ou à des formalités autres et jouiront des mêmes privilèges et avantages de toute nature, que si l'exportation ou la réexportation se faisait sous pavillon national.

X. Il est bien entendu que les stipulations du présent Traité ne seront pas applicables à la navigation et au trafic entre les différents ports situés sur les territoires ou dans les Etats de chacune des Parties Contractantes; lesdits trafic et navigation restant exclusivement réservés aux navires nationaux dans le Royaume des 2 Siciles.

Toutefois, les bâtimens de chacune des Parties Contractantes pourront prendre ou débarquer une partie de leur cargaison dans un des ports de l'autre Etat, et compléter ensuite leur chargement ou débarquer le reste dans un ou plusieurs autres ports des mêmes Etats, sans payer d'autres droits que ceux auxquels sont soumis les bâtimens nationaux ou ceux des nations les plus favorisées.

XI. Il est expressément entendu que, conformément à la stipulation de l'Article V qui précède, aucune prime, remise ou remboursement de droits ne pourra, pendant la durée du présent Traité, être accordé par l'une des 2 Hautes Parties Contractantes à un Etat tiers, sans être accordée également à l'autre partie, gratuitement, si la concession a été faite gratuitement, et moyennant la même compensation, ou un équivalent, à convenir de commun accord, si elle a été faite conditionnellement.

En conséquence et par application dudit Article V et de l'Article VIII suivant, Sa Majesté le Roi du Royaume des 2 Siciles déclare que pendant la durée du présent Traité :

1°. La réduction de 10 pour cent établie en faveur des navires des 2 Siciles sur les droits fixés par le tarif des douanes, sera également applicable aux produits du sol et de l'industrie de la Belgique, directement importées de ce pays dans les Etats de Sa Majesté le Roi du Royaume des 2 Siciles par navires de commerce Belges ;

2°. Les réductions de droits accordées à la France, notamment celles qui ont été accordées en vertu du dernier Traité conclu entre Sa Majesté et Sa Majesté le Roi des Français, le 14 Juin, 1845,* et de l'Acte signé à Naples, le 18 Octobre de la même année, sur certains produits de l'industrie Française, seront étendues aux mêmes produits de l'industrie Belge, et, de plus, le droit d'entrée dans le Royaume des 2 Siciles, tel qu'il est actuellement fixé par le tarif des douanes, sur les fusils montés et les pistolets, sera réduit sur les fusils montés et sur les pistolets de fabrication Belge, savoir : le droit sur les fusils, de 5 à 3 ducats par pièce, et le droit sur les pistolets de 1 ducat et 80 grains à 1 ducat 20 grains par pièce, sans préjudice, toutefois, des lois existantes dans le Royaume des 2 Siciles sur l'importation des armes à feu.

De plus, et par exception spéciale en faveur du Royaume de Belgique, sans que cette exception déroge toutefois aux stipulations contenues dans le dernier paragraphe de l'Article V, le droit sur les machines et mécaniques de fabrication Belge, soit appareils complets, ou pièces détachées, y compris les locomotives et accessoires, sera réduit de 20 pour cent., sans que le droit ainsi réduit puisse être augmenté pendant la durée du présent Traité.

D'autre part, Sa Majesté le Roi des Belges déclare que conformément à la stipulation des Articles V et VIII du présent Traité :

1°. Tous les droits différentiels spéciaux, établis à l'entrée en Belgique, en faveur du pavillon national, en ce qui concerne l'introduction des produits du sol ou de l'industrie du Royaume des 2 Siciles, arrivant directement de ce pays, de même que le droit différentiel de 10 pour cent., dont jouit le pavillon Belge, à l'introduction des articles à l'égard desquels il n'existe pas de droit différentiel spécial, seront également applicables aux produits du sol ou de l'industrie du Royaume des 2 Siciles, directement importés en Belgique par navires Siciliens ;

2°. Que les réductions de droits accordées à l'entrée en Belgique sur certains produits du sol ou de l'industrie du Zollverein, de la France et des Pays-Bas, en vertu des Traités du 1er. Septembre, 1844,* du 13 Décembre, 1845,† et du 29 Juillet, 1846,‡ seront étendues et rendues applicables aux mêmes produits provenant du sol ou de l'industrie du Royaume des 2 Siciles.

En conséquence des dispositions qui précèdent, et de la stipulation de l'Article V du présent Traité, le droit de douane sur les vins en cercles, de production du Royaume des 2 Siciles, sera réduit de 2 francs à 50 centimes par hectolitre, et celui sur les vins en bouteilles de 12 à 2 francs par hectolitre.

Les droits d'accises sur les mêmes vins, tant en cercles qu'en bouteilles, seront réduits de francs 23-85 à francs 17-89 par hectolitre.

Et les droits de douane sur les articles suivants, originaires du Royaume des 2 Siciles, directement importés de ce Royaume en Belgique par navires Siciliens, seront réduit ainsi qu'il suit :

Le droit sur le soufre, de 60 centimes à 0,01 centimes par 100 kilogrammes ;

Le droit sur le raisins secs, de 10 francs à 8 francs par 100 kilogrammes ;

Le droit sur les amandes, de 17 francs à 14 francs par 100 kilogrammes ;

Le droit sur les citrons, limons et oranges, de 20 francs à 14 francs par 100 francs de valeur ;

Le droit sur les noisettes, de francs 5-50 à 4 francs par 100 kilogrammes ;

Celui sur le sumac, de 75 centimes à 10 centimes par 100 kilogrammes.

De plus et par exception spéciale en faveur du Royaume des 2 Siciles, sans que cette exception déroge toutefois aux stipulations

* Vol. XXXIII. Page 742.

† Vol. XXXV. Page 1016.

contenues dans le dernier paragraphe de l'Article V, le droit sur l'huile d'olive (comestible), celui sur l'huile d'olive destinée aux fabriques, celui sur les citrons, limons et oranges, et celui sur les noisettes, sera réduit de 20 p. c., sans que les droits ainsi réduits puissent être augmentés pendant la durée du présent Traité.

Sa Majesté le Roi des Belges garantit, en outre, aux bâtiments du Royaume des 2 Siciles le remboursement du droit perçu sur la navigation de l'Escaut par le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas, en vertu du 3^e paragraphe de l'Article IX du Traité conclu le 19 Avril, 1839, entre la Belgique et les Pays-Bas.

Sa Majesté le Roi des Belges garantit aussi que les objets de toute nature, dont le transit est permis en Belgique, venant du Royaume des 2 Siciles, ou expédiés vers ce Royaume, seront exempts de tout droit de transit en Belgique, lorsque le transport sur le territoire Belge se fera par les chemins de fer de l'Etat, et qu'ils jouiront, en tout cas, lorsque le transport se fera par une autre voie, du traitement accordé au transit des objets venant de, ou en destination du pays le plus favorisé par rapport au transit.

Il est convenu que la réciprocité établie par le présent Traité ne s'étendra pas aux primes que les 2 Hautes Parties Contractantes accordent, ou pourraient accorder à l'avenir aux nationaux respectifs, afin d'encourager la construction des navires. Il en sera de même pour les faveurs que l'une ou l'autre des Hautes Parties Contractantes accorde, ou pourrait accorder par la suite aux sujets et aux navires nationaux pour le commerce du sel et la pêche nationale.

XII. Par dérogation à l'Article précédent et à l'Art. V du présent Traité, il est convenu que la réduction stipulée pour déchet ou raffinage en faveur des sels de France, par l'Art. VI de la Convention conclue par cette puissance avec la Belgique le 13 Décembre, 1845, ne sera pas accordée au sel des 2 Siciles.

XIII. Toutes les fois que, dans l'un des 2 Etats, les marchandises importées de l'autre Etat seront taxées à la valeur, le droit sera fixé et établi de la manière suivante :

Les propriétaires ou consignataires desdites marchandises, lorsqu'ils se présenteront en douane pour acquitter le droit, signeront une déclaration indiquant la valeur d'après l'estimation qu'ils croiront convenable de leur donner ; cette déclaration devra être reçue sans difficulté par les employés de la douane. Ils auront seulement la liberté, dans le cas où ils jugeraient l'évaluation trop faible, de prendre la marchandise en payant aux déclarants une somme égale à la valeur déclarée et le dixième en sus. Tous les droits que les propriétaires ou consignataires auraient payés sur les marchandises importées leur seront en même temps restitués.

XIV. Aucune préférence ou priorité ne sera accordée directement ou indirectement par l'une ou l'autre des parties contractantes, ou par aucune compagnie, corporation, ou individu, agissant en son nom ou sous son autorité pour l'achat d'aucun objet de commerce légalement importé dans le territoire de l'autre, en considération de la nationalité du bâtiment qui aurait importé lesdits objets, soit qu'il appartienne à l'une ou à l'autre des parties, l'intention et la volonté des Parties Contractantes étant qu'aucune différence ou distinction quelconque n'ait lieu à cet égard.

XV. Tout navire Belge entrant en relâche forcée dans un des ports du royaume des 2 Siciles, et tout navire des 2 Siciles entrant en relâche forcée dans un des ports du royaume de Belgique, seront exempts de tout droit de port ou de navigation, perçu ou à percevoir au profit de l'Etat, si les causes qui ont nécessité la relâche sont réelles et évidentes, pourvu qu'ils ne se livrent, dans le port de relâche, à aucune opération de commerce, en chargeant ou déchargeant des marchandises; bien entendu, toutefois, que les chargements et déchargements, relatifs à la subsistance de l'équipage ou nécessaires à la réparation du navire, ne seront point considérés comme opérations de commerce donnant ouverture au paiement des droits, et pourvu aussi que ces navires ne prolongent pas leur séjour dans le port au delà du temps nécessaire, eu égard aux causes qui auront donné lieu à la relâche.

XVI. Toutes les opérations relatives au sauvetage des navires naufragés, échoués ou délaissés, seront dirigées par les Consuls respectifs dans les 2 pays. Ces navires, ou leurs parties et débris, leurs agrès et tous les objets qui leur appartiendront, ainsi que tous les effets et marchandises qui auront été sauvés, ou leur produit, s'ils ont été vendus, ainsi que tous les papiers trouvés à bord, seront consignés au Consul ou Vice-Consul Belge, ou des 2 Siciles, dans le district duquel le naufrage aura eu lieu. Les autorités locales respectives interviendront pour maintenir l'ordre, garantir les intérêts des sauveteurs, s'ils sont étrangers aux équipages desdits navires, et assurer l'exécution des dispositions à observer pour l'entrée et la sortie des marchandises sauvées. En l'absence et jusqu'à l'arrivée des Agents Consulaires, les autorités locales devront prendre toutes les mesures nécessaires pour la protection des individus et la conservation des effets naufragés.

Il ne sera exigé, soit du Consul, soit des propriétaires ou ayants droit, que le paiement des dépenses faites pour la conservation de la propriété, les droits de sauvetage et les frais de quarantaine qui seraient également payés, en pareille circonstance, par un bâtiment national.

Les marchandises sauvées ne seront tenues à aucun droit ni frais de douane jusqu'au moment de leur admission à la consommation intérieure.

XVII. Chacune des Hautes Parties Contractantes pourra avoir, dans les ports de l'autre Etat, des Consuls, Vice-Consuls et agents commerciaux de son choix, lesquels jouiront des mêmes privilèges et pouvoirs dont jouissent ceux des nations les plus favorisées; mais dans le cas où lesdits Consuls voudraient exercer le commerce, ils seront soumis aux lois et aux coutumes auxquelles sont assujettis les individus de leur nation dans le pays dans lequel ils résident.

Lesdits Consuls, Vice-Consuls, et agents commerciaux sont autorisés à réclamer l'assistance des autorités locales pour la recherche, l'arrestation, la détention et l'incarcération des déserteurs des navires de guerre ou de commerce de leur nation. A cet effet, ils s'adresseront aux tribunaux, juges ou fonctionnaires compétents, et réclameront par écrit lesdits déserteurs, en faisant la preuve, par les registres du bâtiment, ou rôle d'équipage, ou par d'autres documents officiels, que les individus en question ont réellement fait partie de l'équipage des susdits navires, et après une telle réclamation ainsi appuyée, les déserteurs ne seront pas refusés.

Lesdits déserteurs, lorsqu'ils auront été arrêtés, resteront à la disposition des Consuls, Vice-Consuls, ou agents commerciaux et pourront être écroués dans les prisons publiques à la requête et aux frais de celui qui en fera la demande, pour y être retenus jusqu'au moment où ils seront réintégrés à bord du bâtiment auquel ils appartiennent, ou renvoyés dans leur pays à bord d'un navire de la même ou de toute autre nation.

Cependant, si, dans l'intervalle de 3 mois, à compter du jour de l'arrestation, ils n'ont pas été réclamés, ou que tous les frais de leur emprisonnement n'aient pas été acquittés par la partie à la requête de laquelle l'arrestation a été opérée, ils seront remis en liberté sans qu'ils puissent être arrêtés de nouveau pour le même motif.

Néanmoins, si le déserteur avait commis quelque délit, son extradition sera différée jusqu'à ce que le tribunal qui a droit d'en connaître ait rendu son jugement et que celui-ci ait eu son effet.

XVIII. Le présent Traité sera en vigueur pendant 8 années à compter du jour de l'échange des Ratifications, et aussi jusqu'à l'expiration de 12 mois après qu'une des Hautes Parties Contractantes aura annoncé à l'autre son intention d'en faire cesser les effets, chacune des Hautes Parties Contractantes se réservant le droit de faire cette déclaration à la fin du terme susdit de 8 ans ou à toute époque subséquente.

XIX. Le présent Traité sera ratifié et les Ratifications en seront échangées à Naples dès que la sanction du Traité par le pouvoir législatif de Belgique aura été obtenue. Toutefois, si cette sanction n'était pas obtenue et si les Ratifications royales n'étaient pas échangées dans le délai d'un an, à partir de la date du présent Traité, celui-ci sera considéré comme nul et non venu.

En foi de quoi, les Plénipotentiaires respectifs l'ont signé et y ont apposé le cachet de leurs armes.

TRAITE d'Amitié, de Commerce et de Navigation entre la France et la République de Guatemala.—Signé à Guatemala, le 8 Mars, 1848.

Au nom de la Très-Sainte Trinité.

De nombreuses relations de commerce étant établies depuis plusieurs années entre les Etats de Sa Majesté le Roi des Français et la République de Guatemala, il a été jugé utile d'en régulariser l'existence, d'en favoriser le développement et d'en perpétuer la durée par un Traité d'amitié, de commerce et de navigation, fondé sur l'intérêt commun des 2 pays, et propre à faire jouir les citoyens respectifs d'avantages égaux et réciproques.

D'après ce principe et à cet effet, ont nommé pour leurs Plénipotentiaires, à savoir :

Sa Majesté le Roi des Français, le Sieur Jean-Marie-Raymond Baradère, Chevalier de l'Ordre de la Légion d'Honneur, son Consul-Général au Centre Amérique ;

Et son Excellence le Président de la République de Guatemala, le Sieur Jose-Mariano Rodriguez, licencié, Secrétaire d'Etat et Ministre des Affaires Etrangères ;

Lesquels, après avoir échangé leurs pleins pouvoirs, trouvés en bonne et due forme, sont convenus des Articles suivants :

ART. I. Il y aura paix constante et amitié perpétuelle et sincère entre Sa Majesté le Roi des Français, ses héritiers et successeurs, d'une part, et la République de Guatemala, d'autre part, et les citoyens des 2 Etats, sans exception de personnes ni de lieux.

II. Il y aura entre tous les territoires des Etats de Sa Majesté le Roi des Français en Europe, et ceux de la République de Guatemala, une liberté réciproque de commerce. Les citoyens des 2 Etats pourront entrer en toute liberté, avec leurs navires et cargaisons, dans tous les lieux, ports et rivières des 2 Etats qui sont ou seront ouverts au commerce étranger.

Ils pourront y faire le commerce d'échelle pour y décharger, en tout ou en partie, les cargaisons par eux apportées de l'étranger, et pour former successivement leur cargaison de retour ; mais ils n'auront pas la faculté d'y décharger les marchandises qu'ils auraient reçues dans un autre port du même Etat, ou autrement de faire le cabotage, qui demeure exclusivement réservé aux nationaux.

Ils pourront, sur les territoires respectifs, voyager ou séjourner, commercer tant en gros qu'en détail, comme les nationaux ; louer et occuper les maisons, magasins et boutiques qui leur seront nécessaires ; effectuer des transports de marchandises et d'argent, et recevoir des consignations ; être admis comme caution aux douanes, quand il y aura plus d'un an qu'ils seront établis sur les lieux, et que les biens fonciers qu'ils y posséderont présenteront une garantie suffisante.

Ils seront entièrement libres de faire leurs affaires eux-mêmes ou de se faire suppléer par qui bon leur semblera, facteur, agent consignataire ou interprète, sans avoir, comme étrangers, à payer aucun surcroît de salaire ou de rétribution.

Ils seront également libres, dans tous leurs achats comme dans toutes leurs ventes, de fixer le prix des effets, marchandises et objets quelconques tant importés que destinés à l'exportation, sauf à se conformer aux lois et aux règlements du pays.

III. Sa Majesté le Roi des Français s'oblige, en outre, à ce que les citoyens de Guatemala jouissent de la même liberté de commerce et de navigation stipulée dans l'article précédent, dans les domaines de Sa Majesté situés hors d'Europe, qui sont ou seront ouverts au commerce et à la navigation de la nation la plus favorisée, et réciproquement les droits établis par le présent Traité en faveur des Français seront communs aux habitants des colonies Françaises.

IV. Les citoyens respectifs jouiront, dans les 2 Etats, d'une constante et complète protection pour leurs personnes et leurs propriétés; ils auront un libre et facile accès auprès des tribunaux de justice pour la poursuite et la défense de leurs droits, et ce, aux mêmes conditions qui seront en usage pour les citoyens du pays dans lequel ils résideront.

Ils seront maîtres à cet effet d'employer, dans toutes les circonstances, les avocats, avoués ou agents de toute classe qu'ils jugeront à propos; enfin ils auront la faculté d'être présents aux décisions et sentences des tribunaux dans les causes qui les intéressent, comme aussi à toutes les enquêtes et dépositions de témoins, qui pourront avoir lieu à l'occasion des jugements, toutes les fois que les lois des pays respectifs permettront la publicité de ces actes.

Ils seront d'ailleurs exempts de tout service personnel soit dans les armées de terre ou de mer, soit dans les gardes ou milices nationales, ainsi que de toutes contributions de guerre, emprunts forcés, réquisitions militaires, et, dans tous les autres cas, ils ne pourront être assujettis pour leurs propriétés soit mobilières, soit immobilières, ni à aucun autre titre quelconque, à d'autres charges, réquisitions ou impôts que ceux payés par les nationaux eux-mêmes.

Ils ne pourront être arrêtés, ni expulsés, ni même envoyés d'un point à un autre du pays, par mesure de police ou Gouvernementale, sans indices ou motifs graves et de nature à troubler la tranquillité publique, et avant que ces motifs et les documents qui en feront foi aient été communiqués aux agents diplomatiques ou consulaires de leur nation respective. Dans tous les cas, il sera accordé aux inculpés le temps nécessaire pour présenter ou faire présenter au Gouvernement du pays leurs moyens de justification: ce temps sera d'une durée plus ou moins grande, suivant les circonstances.

Il est bien entendu que les dispositions de cet article ne seront point applicables aux condamnations à la déportation ou au bannissement d'un point à un autre du territoire, qui pourraient être prononcées, conformément aux lois et aux formes établies par les tribunaux des pays respectifs, contre les citoyens de l'un d'eux. Ces condamnations continueront à être exécutoires dans les formes établies par les législations respectives.

V. Les Français catholiques jouiront dans la république de Guatemala, sous le rapport de la religion et du culte, de toutes les libertés, garanties et protection dont les nationaux y jouissent ; et les Guatemaliens jouiront également en France des mêmes garanties, libertés et protection que les nationaux.

Les Français professant un autre culte, qui se trouveront dans la République de Guatemala, n'y seront inquiétés ni gênés en aucune manière pour cause de religion ; bien entendu qu'ils respecteront la religion, le culte du pays et les lois qui y seront relatives.

VI. Les citoyens des 2 nations seront libres de disposer comme il leur conviendra, par vente, donation, échange, testament, ou de quelque autre manière que ce soit, de tous les biens qu'ils posséderaient sur les territoires respectifs. De même, les citoyens de l'un des 2 Etats qui seraient héritiers de biens situés dans l'autre pourront succéder sans empêchement à ceux desdits biens qui leur seraient dévolus ab intestat, et les héritiers ou légataires ne seront pas tenus à acquitter des droits de succession autres ou plus élevés que ceux qui seraient supportés dans des cas semblables par les nationaux eux-mêmes.

Et, dans le cas où lesdits héritiers seraient, comme étrangers ou pour tout autre motif, privés d'entrer en possession de l'héritage, il leur sera accordé 3 ans pour en disposer comme il leur conviendra, et pour en extraire le produit, sans payer d'autres impôts que ceux établis par les lois de chaque pays.

VII. Les citoyens de l'un et de l'autre Etat ne pourront être respectivement soumis à aucun embargo, ni être retenus avec leurs navires, équipages, cargaisons ou effets de commerce, pour une expédition militaire quelconque, ni pour quelque usage public ou particulier que ce soit, sans qu'il soit immédiatement accordé aux intéressés une indemnité suffisante pour cet usage, et pour les torts et les dommages qui, n'étant pas purement fortuits, naîtront du service auquel ils seront obligés.

VIII. Si (ce qu'à Dieu ne plaise) la paix entre les 2 Hautes Parties Contractantes venait à être rompue, il sera accordé, de part et d'autre, un terme de 6 mois aux commerçants qui se trouveront sur les côtes, et d'une année entière à ceux qui se trouveront dans l'intérieur du pays, pour régler leurs affaires et pour disposer de leurs propriétés, et, en outre, un sauf-conduit leur sera délivré pour s'embarquer dans tel port qu'ils désigneront de leur propre gré.

Tous les autres citoyens ayant un établissement fixe et permanent dans les Etats respectifs, pour l'exercice de quelque profession ou occupation particulière, pourront conserver leur établissement et continuer leur profession sans être inquiétés en aucune manière, et ceux-ci, aussi bien que les négociants, conserveront la pleine possession de leur liberté et de leurs biens, tant qu'ils ne commettront aucune offense contre les lois du pays. Enfin, leurs propriétés ou biens, de quelque nature qu'ils puissent être, comme aussi les deniers dus par des particuliers ou par l'Etat, et les actions de banques et de compagnies ne seront assujettis à d'autres embargo, séquestres, ni à aucune autre réclamation, que ceux qui pourraient avoir lieu à l'égard des mêmes effets ou propriétés appartenant à des nationaux.

IX. Le commerce Français à Guatemala, et le commerce Guatemalien en France, seront traités, sous le rapport des droits de douane, tant à l'importation qu'à l'exportation, comme celui de la nation la plus favorisée.

Dans aucun cas, les droits d'importation imposés en France sur les produits du sol ou de l'industrie de Guatemala, et à Guatemala sur les produits du sol ou de l'industrie de la France, ne pourront être autres ou plus élevés que ceux auxquels sont ou seront soumis les mêmes produits importés par la nation la plus favorisée.

Aucune prohibition d'importation ou d'exportation n'aura lieu dans le commerce réciproque des 2 pays, qu'elle ne soit également étendue à toutes les autres nations.

Les formalités qui pourraient être requises pour justifier de l'origine et de la provenance des marchandises respectivement importées dans l'un des 2 Etats seront également communes à toutes les autres nations.

X. Les produits du sol et de l'industrie de l'un des 2 pays payeront, dans les ports de l'autre, les mêmes droits d'importation, qu'ils soient chargés sur navires Français ou Guatemaliens.

De même, les produits exportés acquitteront les mêmes droits et jouiront des mêmes franchises, allocations et restitutions qui sont ou seront réservées aux exportations faites sur bâtiments nationaux.

XI. Les navires Français arrivant dans les ports de Guatemala ou en sortant, et les navires Guatemaliens à leur entrée en France ou à leur sortie, ne seront assujettis à d'autres ni de plus forts droits de tonnage, de phare, de port, de pilotage, de quarantaine ou autres affectant le corps du bâtiment, que ceux auxquels sont ou seront respectivement assujettis les navires nationaux dans les 2 pays.

Les droits de tonnage et autres qui se prélèvent en raison de la capacité des navires seront d'ailleurs perçus en France, pour les navires Guatemaliens, d'après le registre Guatemalien du navire, et pour les navires Français à Guatemala, d'après le passeport ou congé Français du navire.

XII. Les navires respectifs qui relâcheront dans les ports ou sur les côtes de l'un ou de l'autre Etat ne seront assujettis à aucun droit de navigation, sous quelque dénomination que ces droits soient respectivement établis, sauf les droits de pilotage, phare et autres de même nature, représentant le salaire de services rendus par des industries privées, pourvu que ces navires n'effectuent aucun chargement ni déchargement de marchandises.

Toutes les fois que les citoyens des 2 Hautes Parties Contractantes seront forcés de chercher un refuge ou un asile dans les rivières, baies, ports ou territoires de l'autre, avec leurs navires tant de guerre que marchands, publics ou particuliers, par l'effet du mauvais temps ou de la poursuite des pirates ou des ennemis, il leur sera donné toute protection, pour qu'ils puissent réparer leurs navires, se procurer des vivres, et se mettre en état de continuer leur voyage sans aucun empêchement, et même, dans le cas où, à raison de relâche forcée, les navires respectifs seraient obligés de déposer à terre les marchandises composant leurs chargements ou de les transborder sur d'autres navires pour éviter qu'elles ne dépérissent, il ne sera exigé d'eux d'autres droits que ceux relatifs au loyer des magasins, cours et chantiers qui seraient nécessaires pour déposer les marchandises et pour réparer les avaries des bâtiments. De plus, les citoyens des 2 Etats qui navigueront sur des bâtiments de guerre ou marchands, ou sur des paquebots, se prêteront, en haute mer et sur les côtes, toute espèce de secours, en vertu de l'amitié qui existe entre les 2 Etats.

XIII. Seront considérés comme Français les bâtiments construits en France, ou ceux qui, capturés par l'ennemi par des armements Français, auront été déclarés de bonne prise, ou enfin ceux qui auront été condamnés par les tribunaux Français pour infractions aux lois, pourvu d'ailleurs que les propriétaires, les capitaines et les trois quarts de l'équipage soient Français.

De même, devront être considérés comme guatemaliens tous les bâtiments construits dans le territoire de Guatemala, ou ceux capturés sur l'ennemi par des bâtiments de guerre de la République et déclarés de bonne prise, ou ceux enfin qui auront été condamnés par les tribunaux de Guatemala, pour infractions aux lois, pourvu toutefois que les propriétaires, les capitaines, et les 3 quarts de l'équipage soient Guatemaliens.

Il est convenu, d'ailleurs, que tout navire Français ou Guatemalien, pour jouir, aux conditions ci-dessus, du privilège de sa nationalité, devra être muni d'un passeport, congé ou registre, dont la forme sera réciproquement communiquée, et qui, certifié par l'autorité compétente pour le délivrer, constatera :

1°. D'abord, le nom, la profession et la résidence en France ou à Guatemala, du propriétaire, en exprimant qu'il est unique, ou des propriétaires, en indiquant leur nombre et dans quelle proportion chacun possède ;

2°. Le nom, la dimension, la capacité et enfin toutes les particularités du navire qui peuvent le faire reconnaître aussi bien qu'établir sa nationalité.

XIV. Les navires, marchandises et effets appartenant à des citoyens de l'une des Parties Contractantes, qui auraient été pris par des pirates, soit dans les limites de leur juridiction, soit en pleine mer, et qui auraient été conduits ou trouvés dans les rivières, rades, baies, ports, ou domaines de l'autre partie, seront remis à leurs propriétaires (en payant, s'il y a lieu, les frais de reprise qui seront déterminés par les tribunaux respectifs), lorsque le droit de propriété aura été prouvé devant les tribunaux, et sur la réclamation qui devra être faite, dans le délai d'un an, par les parties intéressées, par leurs fondés de pouvoirs ou par les agents des Gouvernements respectifs.

XV. S'il arrive que l'une des Hautes Parties Contractantes soit en guerre avec un autre Etat, aucun citoyen de l'autre Partie Contractante ne pourra accepter de commissions ou lettres de marque pour aider l'ennemi à agir hostilement contre la partie qui se trouve en guerre ou pour inquiéter le commerce ou les propriétés de ses citoyens.

XVI. Les 2 Hautes Parties Contractantes adoptent dans leurs relations mutuelles le principe que le pavillon couvre la marchandise. Si l'une des 2 parties reste neutre, dans le cas où l'autre viendrait à être en guerre avec quelque Puissance, les marchandises couvertes du pavillon neutre seront aussi réputées neutres, même quand elles appartiendraient aux ennemis de l'autre Partie Contractante. Il est également convenu que la liberté du pavillon s'étend aux individus qui seraient trouvés à bord des bâtiments neutres, et que, lors même qu'ils seraient ennemis des 2 parties, ils ne pourront être extraits des bâtiments neutres, à moins qu'ils ne soient militaires, et alors engagés au service de l'ennemi.

En conséquence du même principe, il est également convenu que la propriété neutre trouvée à bord d'un bâtiment ennemi sera considérée comme ennemie, à moins qu'elle n'ait été embarquée dans ce navire avant la déclaration de guerre, ou avant qu'on eût connaissance de cette déclaration dans le port d'où le navire sera parti.

Les 2 Hautes Parties Contractantes n'appliqueront ce principe qu'aux puissances qui le reconnaîtront également.

XVII. Dans le cas où l'une des Parties Contractantes serait en guerre et où ses bâtiments auraient à exercer en mer le droit de visite, il est convenu que, s'ils rencontrent un navire appartenant à une partie demeurée neutre, les premiers resteront hors de portée de canon, et qu'ils pourront y envoyer dans leurs canots seulement 2 ou 3 personnes chargées de procéder à l'examen des papiers relatifs à sa nationalité et à son chargement. Les commandants seront responsables de toute vexation ou acte de violence qu'ils commettraient ou toléreraient dans cette occasion.

Il est également convenu que, dans aucun cas, la partie neutre ne pourra être obligée à passer à bord du bâtiment visiteur, ni pour exhiber ses papiers, ni pour toute autre cause que ce soit.

La visite ne sera permise qu'à bord des bâtiments qui navigueraient sans convoi. Il suffira, lorsqu'ils seront convoyés, que le commandant déclare verbalement, et sur sa parole d'honneur, que les navires placés sous sa protection et sous son escorte appartiennent à l'Etat dont il arbore le pavillon, et qu'il déclare, lorsque les navires seront destinés pour un port ennemi, qu'ils n'ont pas de contrebande de guerre.

XVIII. Dans le cas où l'un des 2 pays serait en guerre avec quelque autre puissance, les citoyens de l'autre pays pourront continuer leur commerce avec les Etats belligérants, quels qu'ils soient, excepté avec les villes ou ports qui seraient réellement assiégés ou bloqués. Il est également entendu qu'on n'envisagera comme assiégées ou bloquées que les places qui se trouveraient attaquées par une force belligérante capable d'empêcher les neutres d'entrer.

Bien entendu que cette liberté de commerce et de navigation ne s'étendra pas aux articles réputés contrebande de guerre, tels que bouches et armes à feu, armes blanches, projectiles, poudre, salpêtre, objets d'équipements militaires, et généralement toute espèce d'armes et d'instruments de fer, acier, cuivre, ou de toute autre matière, expressément fabriqués pour faire la guerre par mer ou par terre.

Aucun navire de l'une ou de l'autre des 2 nations ne sera détenu pour avoir à bord des articles de contrebande de guerre toutes les fois que le patron, capitaine ou subrécargue dudit navire délivreront ces articles de contrebande de guerre au capteur, à moins que lesdits articles ne soient en quantité si considérable et n'occupent un tel espace, que l'on ne puisse, sans de grands embarras, les recevoir à bord du bâtiment capteur. Dans ce dernier cas, de même que dans tous ceux qui autorisent légitimement la détention, le bâtiment détenu sera expédié dans le port le plus convenable et sûr qui se trouvera le plus à proximité, pour y être jugé suivant les lois.

Dans aucun cas, un bâtiment de commerce, appartenant à des citoyens de l'un des 2 pays, qui se trouvera expédié pour un port bloqué par l'autre Etat, ne pourra être saisi, capturé et condamné, si, préalablement, il ne lui a été fait une notification ou signification de l'existence du blocus par quelque bâtiment faisant partie de l'escadre ou division de ce blocus; et pour qu'on ne puisse alléguer une prétendue ignorance des faits, et que le navire qui aura été dûment averti soit dans le cas d'être capturé s'il vient ensuite à se représenter devant le même port pendant le temps que durera le blocus, le commandant du bâtiment de guerre qui le rencontrera d'abord devra apposer son visa sur les papiers de ce navire, en indiquant le jour, le lieu ou la hauteur où il l'aura visité et lui aura fait la signification en question, laquelle contiendra d'ailleurs les mêmes indications que celles exigées pour le visa.

Tous navires de l'une des 2 Parties Contractantes qui seraient entrés dans un port avant qu'il fût assiégé, bloqué ou investi par l'autre puissance, pourront le quitter sans empêchement, avec leurs cargaisons; et si ces navires se trouvent dans le port après la reddition de la place, ils ne seront point sujets à la confiscation, non plus que leurs cargaisons; mais ils seront rendus à leurs propriétaires.

XIX. Chacune des 2 Hautes Parties Contractantes sera libre d'établir des Consuls à résidence dans les territoires et domaines de l'autre, pour la protection du commerce. Ces agents n'entreront en fonction qu'après avoir obtenu leur exequatur du Gouvernement du pays où ils seront envoyés.

Celui-ci conservera, d'ailleurs, le droit de déterminer les résidences où il lui conviendra d'admettre les Consuls; bien entendu que, sous ce rapport, les 2 Gouvernements ne s'opposeront respectivement aucune restriction qui ne soit commune dans les 2 pays à toutes les nations.

XX. Les Consuls respectifs et leurs chanceliers jouiront dans les 2 pays des privilèges attribués à leur charge, tels que l'exemption des logements militaires et celle de toutes les contributions directes, tant personnelles que mobilières ou somptuaires, à moins, toutefois, qu'ils ne soient citoyens du pays où ils résident, ou qu'ils ne deviennent, soit propriétaires, soit possesseurs de biens immeubles, ou enfin qu'ils ne fassent le commerce, pour lesquels cas ils seront soumis aux mêmes taxes, charges ou impositions que les autres particuliers. Ces agents jouiront, en outre, de tous les autres privilèges, exemptions et immunités qui pourront être accordés, dans leur résidence, aux agents du même rang de la nation la plus favorisée.

XXI. Les archives, et en général tous les papiers des consulats respectifs, seront inviolables, et, sous aucun prétexte ni dans aucun cas, ils ne pourront être saisis ni visités par l'autorité locale.

XXII. Les Consuls respectifs pourront, au décès de leurs nationaux morts sans avoir testé ni désigné d'exécuteurs testamentaires :

1°. Apposer les scellés, soit d'office, soit à la réquisition des parties intéressées, sur les effets mobiliers et les papiers du défunt, en prévenant d'avance de cette opération l'autorité locale compétente, qui pourra y assister, et même, si elle le juge convenable, croiser de ses scellés ceux apposés par le Consul, et dès lors ces doubles scellés ne seront levés que de concert;

2°. Dresser aussi, en présence de l'autorité compétente, si elle croit devoir s'y présenter, l'inventaire de la succession;

3°. Faire procéder, suivant l'usage du pays, à la vente des effets mobiliers dépendants de la succession, lorsque lesdits meubles pourront se détériorer par l'effet du temps, ou que le Consul croira leur vente utile aux intérêts des héritiers du défunt ;

Et 4°. Administrer ou liquider personnellement, ou nommer, sous leur responsabilité, un agent pour administrer et liquider ladite succession, sans que, d'ailleurs, l'autorité locale ait à intervenir dans ces nouvelles opérations.

Mais lesdits consuls seront tenus de faire annoncer la mort de leurs nationaux dans une des gazettes qui se publient dans l'étendue de leur arrondissement, et ne pourront faire délivrance de la succession et de son produit aux héritiers légitimes ou à leurs mandataires qu'après avoir fait acquitter toutes les dettes que le défunt pourrait avoir contractées dans le pays, ou qu'autant qu'une année sera écoulée depuis la date de la publication du décès, sans qu'aucune réclamation ait été présentée contre la succession.

XXIII. Les Consuls respectifs seront exclusivement chargés de la police interne des navires de commerce de leur nation, et les autorités locales ne pourront y intervenir qu'autant que les désordres survenus seraient de nature à troubler la tranquillité publique, soit à terre, soit à bord des bâtiments.

Mais en tout ce qui regarde la police des ports, le chargement et le déchargement des navires, la sûreté des marchandises, biens et effets, les citoyens des 2 Etats seront respectivement soumis aux lois et statuts du territoire.

XXIV. Les Consuls respectifs pourront faire arrêter et renvoyer soit à bord, soit dans leur pays, les matelots qui auraient déserté des bâtiments de leur nation. A cet effet, ils s'adresseront par écrit aux autorités locales compétentes, et justifieront par l'exhibition du registre du bâtiment ou du rôle d'équipage, ou, si ledit navire était parti, par la copie des pièces dûment certifiée par eux, que les hommes qu'ils réclament faisaient partie de cet équipage. Sur cette demande ainsi justifiée, la remise ne pourra leur être refusée ; il leur sera donné, de plus, toute aide et assistance pour la recherche, saisie et arrestation desdits déserteurs, qui seront eux-mêmes détenus et gardés dans les prisons du pays à la réquisition et aux frais des Consuls, jusqu'à ce que ces agents aient trouvé une occasion de les livrer ou de les faire partir. Si pourtant cette occasion ne se présentait pas dans un délai de 3 mois à compter du jour de l'arrestation, les déserteurs seraient mis en liberté et ne pourraient plus être arrêtés pour la même cause.

XXV. Toutes les fois qu'il n'y aura pas de stipulation contraire entre les armateurs, les chargeurs et les assureurs, les avaries que les navires des 2 pays auraient éprouvées en mer en se rendant dans les ports respectifs seront réglées par les Consuls de leur nation.

XXVI. Toutes les opérations relatives au sauvetage des navires

Français naufragés ou échoués sur les côtes de Guatemala seront dirigés par les Consuls de France, et, réciproquement, les Consuls Guatemaliens dirigeront les opérations relatives au sauvetage des navires de leur nation, naufragés ou échoués sur les côtes de France.

L'intervention des autorités locales aura seulement lieu dans les 2 pays pour maintenir l'ordre, garantir les intérêts des sauveteurs s'ils sont étrangers aux équipages naufragés, et assurer l'exécution des dispositions à observer pour l'entrée et la sortie des marchandises sauvées. En l'absence et jusqu'à l'arrivée des Consuls ou Vice-Consuls, les autorités locales devront, d'ailleurs, prendre toutes les mesures nécessaires pour la protection des individus et la conservation des effets naufragés.

Les marchandises sauvées ne seront tenues à aucun droit de douane, à moins qu'elles ne soient admises à la consommation intérieure.

XXVII. Il est formellement convenu entre les 2 Hautes Parties Contractantes que, indépendamment des stipulations qui précèdent, les agents diplomatiques et consulaires, les citoyens de toute classe, les navires et les marchandises de l'un des 2 Etats jouiront, de plein droit, dans l'autre, des franchises, privilèges, et immunités quelconques consentis ou à consentir en faveur de la nation la plus favorisée, et ce, gratuitement, si la concession est gratuite, ou avec la même compensation, si la concession est conditionnelle.

XXVIII. Sa Majesté le Roi des Français et la République de Guatemala, désirant rendre aussi durables et solides que les circonstances le permettront, les relations qui s'établiront entre les 2 puissances en vertu du présent Traité d'Amitié, de Navigation, et de Commerce, ont déclaré solennellement convenir des points suivants :

1°. Le présent Traité sera en vigueur pendant 12 années, à compter du jour de l'échange des ratifications, et si, 12 mois avant l'expiration de ce terme, ni l'une ni l'autre des 2 Hautes Parties Contractantes n'annonce, par une déclaration officielle, son intention d'en faire cesser les effets, ledit Traité restera encore obligatoire pendant 1 année, et ainsi de suite jusqu'à l'expiration des 12 mois qui suivront la déclaration officielle en question, à quelque époque qu'elle ait lieu.

Il est bien entendu que, dans le cas où cette déclaration viendrait à être fait par l'une des Parties Contractantes, les dispositions du Traité relatives au commerce et à la navigation seraient seules considérées comme abrogées et annulées; mais que, à l'égard des articles qui concernent les relations de paix et d'amitié, le Traité n'en restera pas moins perpétuellement obligatoire pour les 2 puissances.

2°. Si un ou plusieurs citoyens de l'une ou de l'autre partie venaient à enfreindre quelqu'un des articles contenus dans le présent

Traité, lesdits citoyens en seront personnellement responsables, sans que, pour cela, la bonne harmonie et la réciprocité soient interrompues entre les 2 nations, qui s'obligent mutuellement à ne protéger en aucune manière l'offenseur. Si, malheureusement, un des articles contenus dans le présent Traité venait, en quelque manière que ce soit, à être violé ou enfreint, il est expressément convenu que la partie qui y sera restée fidèle devra d'abord présenter à l'autre partie un exposé des faits ainsi qu'une demande en réparation accompagnée des documents et des preuves nécessaires pour établir la légitimité de sa plainte, et qu'elle ne pourra autoriser des représailles ni se porter elle-même à des hostilités, qu'autant que la réparation demandée par elle aura été refusée ou arbitrairement différée.

XXIX. Et dans le cas où il serait utile et convenable, pour faciliter davantage la bonne harmonie entre les 2 Hautes Parties Contractantes, et pour éviter à l'avenir toute espèce de difficultés, de proposer et d'ajouter quelques articles au présent Traité, il est convenu que les 2 puissances se prêteront, sans le moindre retard, à traiter et à stipuler les articles qui pourraient manquer audit Traité, s'ils étaient jugés mutuellement avantageux, et que lesdits articles, après avoir été convenus et dûment rectifiés, feront partie du présent Traité d'Amitié, de Commerce, et de Navigation.

XXX. Le présent Traité, composé de 30 Articles, sera ratifié par Sa Majesté le Roi des Français et par le Gouvernement de la République de Guatemala, et les ratifications en seront échangées à Guatemala ou à Paris, dans le délai de 18 mois, ou plus tôt, si faire se peut.

En foi de quoi, les Plénipotentiaires ci-dessus nommés l'ont signé, et y ont apposé leurs cachets, à Guatemala, le 8 Mars, 1848.

CONVENTION d'Accession de l'Etat de Costa-Rica au Traité d'Amitié, de Commerce et de Navigation, conclu le 8 Mars, 1848, entre la France, et la République de Guatemala.— Signé à Guatemala, le 12 Mars, 1848.

CONVENTION entre Sa Majesté le Roi des Français et l'Etat de Costa Rica, conclue par leurs Plénipotentiaires.

Son Excellence le Président de l'Etat Souverain et Indépendant de Costa-Rica, au Centre Amérique, animé du désir de conserver et d'augmenter les relations commerciales et la bonne intelligence existant depuis quelque temps entre cet Etat et les territoires de Sa

Majesté le Roi des Français, ayant donné à cet effet, pour négocier un Traité d'Amitié, de Commerce, et de Navigation avec le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté le Roi des Français, des pleins pouvoirs au Sieur Nasario Toledo, Sénateur; et, d'un autre côté, le Sieur Jean-Marie-Raymond Baradère, Chevalier de l'Ordre de la Légion d'Honneur, Consul Général de France au Centre-Amérique, et Plénipotentiaire de Sa Majesté le Roi des Français auprès de la République de Guatemala, n'étant pas revêtu des pouvoirs spéciaux pour la conclusion d'un Traité direct avec l'Etat Souverain et Indépendant de Costa-Rica; mais considérant, cependant, que ceux qui l'accréditent près de la République de Guatemala peuvent s'étendre à l'Etat de Costa-Rica, puisque les intérêts de cet Etat à l'égard de la France sont identiquement les mêmes que ceux de Guatemala, et qu'il faisait partie de la Fédération Centro-Américaine;

Et, enfin, bien convaincu que Sa Majesté le Roi des Français partage les sentiments qui animent son Excellence le Président de Costa-Rica, a jugé pouvoir accepter la proposition faite par le Sieur Nasario Toledo, Sénateur et Plénipotentiaire de l'Etat de Costa-Rica, d'accéder, au nom de son Excellence le Président de cet Etat, au Traité d'Amitié, de Commerce, et de Navigation, conclu le 8 Mars, 1848, entre Sa Majesté le Roi des Français et la République de Guatemala; en conséquence, les 2 Plénipotentiaires, voulant donner toute la solennité désirable à l'acte d'accession de son Excellence le Président de Costa-Rica au Traité du 8 Mars, 1848, avec Guatemala, et à l'acceptation de cette accession par le Plénipotentiaire de Sa Majesté le Roi des Français, sont convenus de conclure une convention spéciale dans cet objet; et, après s'être communiqué mutuellement leurs pleins pouvoirs, trouvés en bonne et due forme, ils ont arrêté les Articles suivants:

ART. I. Son Excellence le Président de l'Etat Souverain et Indépendant de Costa-Rica accède au Traité d'Amitié, de Commerce, et de Navigation, conclu et signé le 8 Mars, 1848, entre Sa Majesté le Roi des Français et la République de Guatemala. Sa Majesté le Roi des Français accepte l'accession de son Excellence le Président de Costa-Rica.

En conséquence, tous les Articles dudit Traité seront regardés comme conclus et signés de la même manière que la présente Convention, directement entre Sa Majesté le Roi des Français et son Excellence le Président de l'Etat Souverain et Indépendant de Costa-Rica.

Les Parties Contractantes conviennent et se promettent mutuellement d'exécuter fidèlement toutes les conditions et obligations de la présente Convention, et, afin d'empêcher toute équivoque, il a été décidé que ledit Traité sera transcrit ici mot à mot, comme suit:

TRAITE d'Amité, de Commerce et de Navigation entre la France et la République de Guatemala.

[See Page 1363.]

II. LA présente Convention sera ratifiée, et les ratifications ne seront échangées à Paris, ou à Guatemala, ou à San José de Costa-Rica, dans le délai de 18 mois, ou plus tôt, si faire se peut.

En foi de quoi les Plénipotentiaires ci-dessus nommés ont signé a présente Convention, et y ont apposé leurs cachets, à Guatemala, le 12 Mars, 1848.

(L.S.) R. BARADERE.

(L.S.) NASARIO TOLEDO.

ARTICLE TRANSITOIRE.

La présente Convention sera considérée comme nulle et non avenue, si son Excellence le Président de Costa-Rica refuse son approbation et sa ratification à la transaction conclue, le 10 de ce mois, entre le Sieur Don Nasario Toledo, Ministre Plénipotentiaire de Costa-Rica, et le Sieur Jacques Mercher.

SPEECH of the King of Prussia, on the Opening of the Prussian Constituent Assembly.—Berlin, May 22, 1848.

(Translation.)

GENTLEMEN DEPUTIES!

WITH joyful earnestness I greet an assembly which, having been chosen by general election of the people, is now to decide with me upon a Constitution which will mark a new epoch in the history of Prussia and of Germany. You will, I am persuaded, in beginning the task, set before yourselves the twofold aim of securing to the people an extended participation in the affairs of the State, and at the same time of drawing closer the ties which for more than 4 centuries have inseparably connected my house with the destinies of this country.

My Government will submit to you the draught of the Constitution. Simultaneously with you the representatives of the whole German people have met at Frankfort on the Main. I would willingly have awaited the result of the deliberations of that assembly before I convened the representatives of my loyal people. The urgent necessity of a prompt consolidation of public law in our more immediate fatherland has not admitted of this. The unity of Germany is my unalterable aim, for the attainment of which I feel secure of your co-operation.

The internal tranquillity of the country is beginning to be established.

Upon the result of your proceedings mainly depends the complete restoration of confidence, and with it the reanimation of commerce and industry. Numerous efforts have been made to furnish opportunities for employment during the stagnation of trade. They must be continued and extended. As yet the increased demand for money has not exhausted the savings of past times.

My endeavours to meet the wishes of the Polish population of the province of Posen by organic arrangements have not succeeded in preventing an insurrection, which, however much I deplore it, has not deterred me from following the course I have entered upon, with the necessary regard for the claims of German nationality.

Notwithstanding the great commotions of the last months the friendly relations of my Government with foreign powers have been disturbed only on one point. I may indulge a hope that a friendly mediation which has been willingly accepted will essentially contribute to accelerate the conclusion of a contest which Prussia has not provoked, but which, as a German Federal Prince, I could not hesitate to take up, when the boundaries of the common fatherland appeared to be threatened, and I was called upon by the German Confederation to maintain an acknowledged right.

My policy will likewise prove in this case to be a disinterested and pacific one: a policy to which I, in close union with Germany, am firmly resolved to remain true.

CONSTITUTION for the Prussian States.—Potsdam, December 5, 1848.

(Translation.)

WE, Frederick William, by the grace of God, King of Prussia, &c., &c.

Declare and make known: that in consequence of the extraordinary circumstances which have rendered the proposed settlements of the Constitution impossible, and in accordance with the exigencies of public welfare, with every possible regard for the important preliminary labours of the chosen representatives of the people, we have determined to issue the following deed of Constitution, with the proviso of a revision by the ordinary legislative means, as prescribed at the conclusion.

We accordingly publish the Constitution for the Prussian State as follows:

CHAPTER I.—The State Dominions.

ART. I. All the parts of the Prussian monarchy to their present extent form the Prussian State Dominions.

II. The boundaries of the State Dominions can only be changed by a law.

CHAPTER II.—The Rights of Prussians.

III. The Constitution and the laws define under what conditions the quality of a Prussian and the rights of citizens of the State are acquired, how they are to be exercised, and how forfeited.

IV. All Prussians are equal before the law. Class privileges have no existence. Public employment is equally open to all persons qualified for it.

V. Personal freedom is guaranteed. The conditions and forms under which an arrest may take place, are fixed by the law for the protection of personal freedom of the 24th September of this year.

VI. The dwelling-house is inviolable. Forcible entry and search therein are only allowed in the cases and in the forms defined by law. The seizure of letters and papers, except in the case of an arrest or search in a dwelling-house, can only take place in virtue of a judicial order.

VII. No one shall be withdrawn from his legal judge. Exceptional tribunals and extraordinary commissions in so far as they shall not be sanctioned by the present deed of Constitution, are unlawful. Punishment can only be threatened or inflicted in conformity with the law.

VIII. Property is inviolable. It can only be taken away or restricted on the ground of public benefit, and with previous compensation according to law, which in urgent cases, must at least be provisionally settled.

IX. There is no such thing as civil death, or punishment by confiscation of property.

X. The freedom of emigration is not restricted on the State account. No removal fees are to be levied.

XI. The freedom of religious creeds, of association with religious societies (§ § 27, 28), and of the common and public exercise of religion is guaranteed. The enjoyment of civil rights and of the rights of citizens of the State is independent of religious creed, or of association with any religious society. The duties appertaining to citizens or to members of the State must not suffer by the exercise of religious freedom.

XII. The Evangelical and Roman Catholic Churches, as well as every other religious society, are to regulate and administer their affairs independently, and to remain in possession and enjoyment of the establishments, foundations and funds destined for the objects of their worship, instruction, and charities.

XIII. The intercourse of religious societies with their superiors remains unimpeded. The promulgation of their ordinances is only subjected to the restrictions to which all other publications are liable.

XIV. With respect to church patronage and to the conditions under which it is to be abolished, a special law will be issued.

XV. The right belonging to the State of proposal, election, or confirmation in respect to the occupation of ecclesiastical offices is abolished.

XVI. The civil validity of a marriage is dependent upon its being contracted before the civil officer appointed for the purpose. The ecclesiastical nuptial ceremony can only take place after the performance of the civil act.

XVII. Science and the instruction connected with it are free.

XVIII. The right of general popular education will be guaranteed to the Prussian youth by adequate public establishments.

Parents and guardians are bound to cause such instruction as is necessary for general popular education to be given to their children or to those committed to their care, and must, in this respect, conform to the regulations which will be prescribed by the law on instruction.

XIX. Every one is at liberty to give instruction and to found establishments for instruction, if he can prove to the proper State authorities his moral, scientific, and technical qualifications.

XX. The public schools for the people, as well as all other establishments for education and instruction, are under the superintendence of special authorities named by the State. The public teachers have the rights of servants of the State.

XXI. The management of the external affairs of the public schools, and the choice of the teachers, who must previously have proved to the proper authorities of the State their moral and technical qualifications, belongs to the community.

The respective religious societies provide for and superintend the religious instruction in the public schools.

XXII. The funds for the establishment, maintenance, and extension of the popular schools will be provided by the communes, and in cases of proved insufficiency of means will be made up by the State. The obligations of third persons arising from special legal stipulations remain in force.

The instruction in the public schools for the people is given gratis.

XXIII. A special law regulates the whole system of education. The State guarantees to the teachers in the public schools a fixed adequate salary.

XXIV. Every Prussian has the right of freely expressing his thoughts in words, in writing, in print, and in figurative representation. The freedom of the press cannot be restricted, suspended, or abolished, under any circumstances, or in any manner; that is to say, neither by censorship nor by concession and the deposit of security, neither by State taxes, nor by restrictions of printing establishments and of the book trade, nor finally by postal prohibitions and unequal rates of postage, nor by other impediments to free circulation.

XXV. Offences which are committed in words, in writing, in print, or figurative representation, are to be punishable according to the general penal laws. Until the revision of the penal code has taken place, a special temporary law concerning them will be issued. Until that appears the present general penal laws remain in force.

XXVI. If the author of a publication be known, and within the reach of the judicial authority of the State, the publisher, printer, and distributor cannot be prosecuted, unless their complicity be shown by other facts. Every publication must bear the name of the publisher and printer.

XXVII. All Prussians have the right of assembling peaceably and without arms in enclosed spaces, without the previous permission of the authorities.

This stipulation does not apply to assemblies in the open air, which are subjected in all respects to the provisions of the law. Until the promulgation of such a law, notice of assemblies in the open air is to be given 24 hours previously to the local police authority, which is to prohibit the assembly, if it should be considered dangerous to public safety and order.

XXVIII. All Prussians have the right of associating in societies for such objects as are not in contravention of the penal laws.

XXIX. The law fixes the conditions upon which corporate rights are to be granted or refused.

XXX. The right of petition belongs to all Prussians. Petitions under a collective designation are only permitted to authorities and corporations.

XXXI. The secrecy of letters is inviolable. The necessary exceptions in cases of criminal judicial enquiries and in time of war are to be fixed by the legislature. The law designates the officers who are responsible for the violation of the secrecy of letters entrusted to the post.

XXXII. All Prussians are liable to military service; the law defines the nature and extent of this obligation. The stipulations contained in §§ 5, 6, 27, 28, are applicable to the army, in so far as the regulations of military discipline are not opposed to them.

XXXIII. The armed force consists of the standing army, of the militia (Landwehr), and of the Burgher Guard. Special laws regulate the form and method of providing substitutes, as well as the period of service.

XXXIV. The armed force can only be employed for the suppression of internal disturbances and in the execution of the laws, on the requisition of the civil authorities, and in the cases and forms prescribed by the law.

XXXV. The organisation of the Burgher Guard is regulated by a special law.

XXXVI. The army is subject, in war and on service, to the military criminal jurisdiction and the Military Penal Code; in peace and off service, the army is subject to the military criminal jurisdiction and the general penal laws. The stipulations relative to military discipline in war and peace, as well as the further provisions relative to the military judicial tribunals, remain the subject of special laws.

XXXVII. The standing army cannot deliberate, nor may the militia do so when it is called together. Even when it is not called together, meetings and associations of the militia, for the discussion of military orders and regulations, are not allowed.

XXXVIII. The establishment of fiefs (Lehen) and the foundation of family entails (fidei commissen) are prohibited. The existing fiefs and entails shall be transformed into freehold property by legal enactment.

XXXIX. The preceding stipulations (§ 38) are not for the present applicable to the Crown fiefs, to the entails of the Royal House and of the Prince, nor to the fiefs situated out of the State, and the former possessions and entails immediately under the Empire, in so far as the latter are guaranteed by the German federal law; their legal position will be regulated by special laws.

XL. The right of free disposal of real property is not subject to any other restrictions than those of the general legislation. The divisibility of real property and the commutation of burthens on it are guaranteed.

The following are abolished without compensation :

a. The special tribunals, police and magisterial authority attached to the ownership of property, as well as the rights of sovereignty and the privileges belonging to certain real estates; but then the burdens and responsibilities to which these rights were subject cease also.

Until the emanation of the new communal regulations, the present stipulations, relative to the administration of the police, remain in force.

b. The obligations arising from these privileges, from guardianship, from the former state of hereditary subjection, and from the former tax and trade arrangements.

In the case of the hereditary transmission of a real estate, only the transfer of the whole property is allowable; but here also, a fixed commutable quit-rent may be reserved.

CHAPTER III.—The King.

XXI. The person of the King is inviolable.

XLII. His Ministers are responsible. All administrative documents by the King require for their validity the countersignature of a Minister, who thereby undertakes the responsibility.

XLIII. The Executive power belongs to the King alone. He appoints and dismisses the Ministers. He orders the publication of the laws, and forthwith promulgates the necessary ordinances for their execution.

XLIV. The King has the command in chief of the army.

XLV. He appoints to all places therein as well as in the other branches of the State service, in so far as the law does not prescribe otherwise.

XLVI. The King has the right of declaring war and concluding peace, and of entering into Treaties with foreign Governments. Commercial Treaties, as well as other Treaties by which burthens are imposed upon the State, or obligations upon individual citizens of the State, require, for their validity, the consent of the Chambers.

XLVII. The King has the right of granting pardon and mitigation of punishment. In favour of a Minister who has been condemned on account of his official acts, this right can only be exercised on the motion of the Chamber from which the accusation has proceeded.

He cannot quash proceedings already instituted except by a special law.

XLVIII. To the King belongs the bestowal of Orders and other distinctions not connected with privileges. He exercises the right of coinage according to law.

XLIX. The King convokes the Chambers, and closes their sittings. He can either dissolve both at once, or only one. But the electors must be assembled within a period of 40 days after such dissolution, and the Chambers within a period of 60 days after such dissolution.

L. The King may prorogue the Chambers. But the prorogation must not, without the consent of the Chambers, exceed the term of 30 days, and must not be repeated during the same session.

LI. The Crown is, in accordance with the Royal household laws, hereditary in the male line of the Royal House according to the right of primogeniture, and of agnatic lineal succession.

LII. The King becomes of age on the completion of his 18th year.

He makes oath in the presence of the united Chambers, firmly and inviolably to maintain the Constitution of the kingdom, and to govern in conformity with it and with the laws.

LIII. The King cannot at the same time be Sovereign of foreign Empires, without the consent of both Chambers.

LIV. In the event of the minority of the King, both Chambers unite in one assembly, in order to establish the regency and guardianship, in so far as no provision shall have been made for both by a special law.

LV. If the King is unable, he who is next to the Crown, or he who, according to the household laws, takes his place, convokes both Chambers, in order to proceed according to § 54.

LVI. The regency can be conferred upon one person only. The regent, on entering upon the regency, takes an oath, firmly and inviolably to maintain the Constitution of the kingdom, and to govern in conformity with it and with the laws.

LVII. The Crown Trust Fund (Kron-Fidei-Commiss-Fonds) retains the revenue assigned to it by the law of the 17th of January, 1820, out of the proceeds of the domains and forests.

CHAPTER IV.—The Ministers.

LVIII. The Ministers, as well as the officers of the State appointed to represent them, have the right of admittance to each Chamber, and of being heard when they require it.

Each Chamber may require the presence of the Ministers.

The Ministers have a right of voting in one Chamber or the other only when they are members of them.

LIX. The Ministers may be impeached by a resolution of one of the Chambers for the crime of violating the constitution, of corruption, and of treason. The Supreme Court of Judicature of the Monarchy decides upon such an impeachment in a united meeting of the Senates. As long as there are still 2 Supreme Courts of Judicature existing, they will meet for the above purpose.

The details concerning cases of responsibility, the procedure and the amount of the punishment, are reserved for a special law.

CHAPTER V.—The Chambers.

LX. The Legislative power is exercised in common by the King and the 2 Chambers.

The consent of the King and both Chambers is necessary for every law.

LXI. The King, as well as each Chamber, has the right of proposing laws.

Proposals which have been rejected by one of the Chambers, or by the King, cannot be brought forward again during the same session.

LXII. The 1st Chamber consists of 180 members.

LXIII. The members of the 1st Chamber are elected by the representatives of the provinces, districts, and circuits. (§ 104.)

The representatives of the provinces, districts, and circuits form the electoral bodies, according to the detailed provisions of the electoral law; and they elect the number of deputies, in proportion to the population of the electoral districts.

(N.B. On the revision of the Constitution, it remains to be considered whether a part of the Members of the 1st Chamber should be named by the King, and whether a seat in the Chamber should be granted to the head burgomasters of the large towns, as well as to the representatives of the Universities and Academies of Arts and Sciences.)

LXIV. The legislative period of the 1st Chamber is fixed at 6 years.

LXV. Every Prussian who has completed his 40th year, who has not forfeited the full possession of civil rights by reason of a valid judicial sentence, and who has belonged during 5 years to the Prussian State, is eligible as a member of the 1st Chamber.

LXVI. The 2nd Chamber consists of 350 members. The electoral districts will be fixed according to the amount of the population.

LXVII. Every independent Prussian who has completed his 24th year, who has not forfeited the full possession of civil rights by reason of a valid judicial sentence, is a primary elector, having a right of voting in the commune in which he has resided or sojourned for 6 months, provided he does not receive assistance as a pauper from public funds.

(N.B. On the revision of the Constitution it remains to be considered whether a different mode of election might not be preferable, viz., that of the division according to certain classes respectively for town and country; whereby the whole of the heretofore primary electors vote concurrently.)

LXVIII. The primary electors of each commune choose 1 elector for every full number of 250 souls of its population.

LXIX. The Deputies are chosen by the electors. The electoral districts are to be so organized that at least 2 Deputies shall be chosen by 1 electoral body.

LXX. The legislative period of the 2nd Chamber is fixed at 3 years.

LXXI. Every Prussian is eligible as a Deputy of the 2nd Chamber who has completed his 30th year, provided he has not forfeited the full possession of civil rights by reason of any valid judicial sentence, and that he has belonged to the Prussian State for a whole year.

LXXII. The Chambers will be re-elected at the expiration of their legislative period; and in case of a dissolution. In both of which cases, the former members may be re-elected.

LXXIII. The Electoral Law settles the details respecting the elections for the 2 Chambers.

LXXIV. No substitutes shall be elected for the members of either Chamber.

LXXV. The Chambers shall be regularly convoked by the King, in the month of November of every year, and, whenever circumstances may require them to meet.

LXXVI. The opening and closing of the Chambers are done by the King in person, or by a Minister commissioned by him for the purpose, at a united sitting of the Chambers.

Both Chambers are convoked, opened, prorogued, and closed at the same time.

If one Chamber be dissolved, the other is prorogued at the same time.

LXXVII. Each Chamber examines and decides upon the legitimate election of its members. They regulate the course of their proceedings by an order of procedure, and choose their Presidents, Vice-Presidents, and Secretaries.

Public officials (Beamte), require no leave for entering the Chambers.

The members of either Chamber lose their seats and votes by the acceptance of a paid office of the State, or by promotion in that service; and can only regain their seat by a fresh election.

No one can be a member of both Chambers.

LXXVIII. The sittings of both Chambers are public. On the proposal of its President, or of 10 of its members, each Chamber may assemble for a secret sitting, at which the said proposal shall be the first thing decided on.

LXXIX. Neither of the 2 Chambers can pass a resolution unless a majority of its members be present.

Each Chamber passes its resolutions according to an absolute majority of votes, with a reservation of the exceptions which may be determined upon in the regulations for the proceedings upon elections.

LXXX. Each Chamber has the right of sending addresses to the King.

No one shall in person present a petition, or an address to the Chambers, or to either of them.

Each Chamber may refer the papers addressed to it to the Ministers, and may ask of them for information relative to complaints addressed to it.

LXXXI. Each Chamber has the power of appointing, for its information, commissions to inquire into facts.

LXXXII. The members of both Chambers are representatives of the whole of the people; they vote according to their free convictions; and are not bound by commissions or instructions given to them.

LXXXIII. They can neither be called to account for their votes in the Chamber, nor for their opinions expressed therein.

During the session no member can be proceeded against or arrested on account of any punishable transaction, without the previous permission of the Chamber to which he belongs, unless he be taken in the fact, or within 24 hours afterwards.

The like permission is necessary before an arrest for debt.

Every penal proceeding against a member of the Chambers, and every preliminary or civil arrest is revoked for the period of the sitting should the Chamber concerned demand it.

LXXXIV. The members of the 1st Chamber receive neither travelling expenses nor allowances.

The members of the 2nd Chamber receive from the Public Treasury travelling expenses and allowances as prescribed by Law. No renunciation of them can be allowed.

CHAPTER VI.—The Judicial Power.

LXXXV. The judicial power is exercised in the name of the King by independent tribunals, subject to no other authority than that of the law.

The sentences are pronounced and executed in the name of the King.

LXXXVI. The judges are appointed for life by the King, or in his name.

They can only be removed from office, suspended, or transferred, without their consent, to another place, by judicial decree, for reasons which the laws have provided and determined, and they can only be pensioned on the grounds and in the forms settled by law.

This stipulation is not applicable to the removals which are rendered necessary by changes in the organization of the tribunals or their jurisdictions.

LXXXVII. The judges must not be appointed to other paid offices of the State. Exceptions can only be sanctioned by a law.

LXXXVIII. The organization of the Tribunals is settled by law.

LXXXIX. No one can be called to a judicial office unless he has qualified himself for it according to the provisions of the law.

XC. Tribunals for particular classes of affairs, especially commercial and trade tribunals, shall be established by legislative enactment in the places where it may be considered necessary.

The organization and competency of the commercial, trade, and military tribunals, the procedure on the same, the nomination of their members, and the particular position of the latter as well as the duration of their office, are fixed by the law.

XCI. Both the now existing Supreme Courts of Justice shall be united into one.

XCII. The proceedings before the tribunal which has to decide in civil and criminal cases shall be public. But publicity may be prohibited by public notice should it threaten danger to order or good morals. Publicity in civil cases may likewise be restricted by law.

XCIII. In criminal proceedings involving severe punishment, in political misdemeanors and those of the press, the decision upon the guilt of the accused is by jury. The formation of the Jury Courts is settled by a law.

XCIV. The competency of the tribunals and of the administrative authorities is fixed by law. A court of justice, appointed by law, decides upon disputes concerning competency between the authorities of the administration and of the tribunals.

XCV. No previous permission of the authorities is necessary to authorize judicial proceedings against public, civil, and military officers on account of their having violated the law by exceeding their official powers.

CHAPTER VII.—The Officers of the State.

XCVI. The particular legal position of the officers of the State not belonging to the judicial class, including the Attorneys-General, shall be regulated by a law which, without inconveniently limiting the Government in the selection of its executive organs, shall afford adequate protection to the officers of the State against arbitrary removal from office and salary.

XCVII. In the law relating to the servants of the State, special regard shall be had to the claims of the officers of the State regularly appointed before the promulgation of this Constitution.

CHAPTER VIII.—The Administration of the Finances.

XCVIII. The whole revenue and expenditure of the State must be estimated beforehand for each year, and inserted in the budget, which is to be annually settled by law.

XCIX. Taxes and imposts settled for the State Treasury can be levied only when they have been included in the budget, or settled by special laws.

C. No privileges in respect to the taxes can be introduced.

The existing enactments regarding taxes shall be revised, and every privilege abolished.

CI. State and communal officers can demand only such fees as are allowed by the laws.

CII. The raising of loans for the State Treasury can only take place by virtue of a law. The same rule applies to the undertaking of guarantees to the charge of the State.

CIII. The subsequent sanction of the Chambers is necessary for any excess upon the budget. The accounts of the Administration of the Finances of the State shall be examined and settled by the Superior Court of Accounts. The general account of the Administration of the Finances for each year, including a review of the State debts, shall be submitted to the Chambers by the Superior Court of Accounts, in order that the State Government may be relieved therefrom. A special law will regulate the organization and powers of the Superior Court of Accounts.

CHAPTER IX.—Communal, Circle, District and Provincial Unions.

CIV. The dominions of the Prussian State are divided into provinces, districts, circles, and communes; the representation and administration of which are regulated by special laws on the basis of the following principles:

1. Assemblies composed of chosen representatives shall decide on the internal and special affairs of the provinces, districts, circles, and communes, and their resolutions shall be carried into execution by the chiefs of the provinces, districts, circles, or communes.

The law will determine the cases in which the resolutions of the communal, circle, district, and provincial representation require the sanction of a higher representation, or of the State Government.

2. The chiefs of the provinces, districts, and circles are named by the State Government; those of the communes are elected by the members of the communes.

The organization of the Executive Power of the State is not affected by this.

3. To the communes particularly belongs the independent administration of their communal affairs, inclusively of the local police; the law will determine the period and the conditions of the transfer of the police administration to the communes.

The functions of the police may, in towns of more than 30,000 inhabitants, be transferred to the organs of the State.

4. The deliberations of the provincial, district, circle, and communal representations are in general held in public. The law fixes the exceptions. A report must be published at least once a year respecting the revenue and expenditure.

General Stipulations.

CV. Laws and ordinances are only binding when they are previously notified in the form prescribed by the law.

When the Chambers are not assembled, ordinances can, in urgent cases, be issued with the force of law, on the responsibility of the whole Ministry of State, the same must, however, be submitted to the Chambers for their sanction immediately on their first meeting.

CVI. The Constitution may be altered by the ordinary means of legislation, for which purpose the ordinary absolute majority of votes in each Chamber is sufficient.

CVII. The members of both Chambers, and all officers of the State, have to swear loyalty and obedience to the King and the Constitution.

CVIII. The existing taxes and imposts will continue to be levied, and all the stipulations of the existing codes of laws, and of particular laws and ordinances which are not at variance with the present Constitution, remain in force until they shall be changed by a law.

CIX. All the authorities established by the existing laws remain in power until the execution of the organic laws which affect them.

CX. In case of a war or insurrection, §§ 5, 6, 7, 24, 25, 26, 27, and 28 of the Constitution, may be temporarily or locally suspended. The further stipulations thereon are reserved for a special law. Until the issue of which the existing regulations in this respect remain in operation.

Temporary Stipulations.

CXI. Should alterations of the present constitutional law be rendered necessary by the Constitution to be determined for Germany, the King will ordain them and communicate such ordinances to the Chambers on their first assembling.

The Chambers will then determine whether the alterations preliminarily enacted are in accordance with the German Constitution.

CXII. The present Constitution shall be subjected to legislative revision (§§ 60 and 66), immediately after the first assembling of the Chambers.

The oath of the King, mentioned in § 52, as well as the oath prescribed to be taken by both Chambers and all officers of the State, follow immediately upon the completion of the revision (§ 107).

In witness whereof, our royal autograph signature and seal are hereto affixed.

Given at Potsdam, the 5th December, 1848.

On the other part:

His Serene Highness the Duke of Nassau; represented by: William Magdeburg, His Director of Government.

By which Plenipotentiaries the following Treaty has been concluded, under a reservation as to ratification:

ART. I. His Serene Highness the Duke of Nassau accedes, with his dominions, to the Union established for the purpose of a common system of Customs and Commerce among the Kingdoms of Prussia, Bavaria, Saxony, and Wirtemberg, the Grand-Duchy of Baden, the Electorate and the Grand Duchy of Hesse, as well as the States confederated in the Thuringian Union for Customs and Commerce, on the basis of the Treaties concluded to this effect under date of 22nd and 30th March, and 11th May, 1833, and 12th May, 1835.

In consequence of this accession, and on submitting to equal obligations and acquiring equal rights, the Duchy of Nassau shall form, with the countries belonging to the said Union, one Collective Union for Customs and Commerce.

The stipulations of the said Treaties, together with the modifications agreed upon with regard to the present accession of the Duchy of Nassau, are contained in the following Articles :

II. It having been decided that similar laws relative to import, export, and transit-duties shall prevail within the dominions of the Contracting States, though with such modifications as may appear necessary on account of the general legislation of any one of the participating States, or on account of local interests, but without prejudice to the common objects, this rule shall consequently be applied also to the Grand Duchy of Nassau.

With reference however to import and export duties upon such articles as are less adapted for commercial traffic on a larger scale, and with reference to transit duties in cases where the course of the commercial roads renders it necessary, such deviations from the generally adopted rates, as may appear desirable to particular States, shall not be excluded from the Customs' tariff, provided those variations do not operate injuriously on the general interests of the Union.

In like manner the administration of the import, export, and transit-duties, and the organisation of the requisite authorities, shall be put, in the Duchy of Nassau, on an equal footing with the Customs' administration and organisation now existing in all the dominions of the General Union, with due regard however to the peculiar circumstances existing there.

III. Alterations in the Customs' Laws, including the Customs' Tariff, and the Customs' Regulations, as well as additions to and exceptions from them, can be effected only in the same manner as the introduction of the laws, and with the like consent of all the members of the General Union.

The same rule also applies to all regulations involving a general change in the administration of the Customs.

IV. Freedom of commerce and intercourse between the Contracting States of the Union and the Duchy of Nassau, and at the same time a common interest in the Customs' revenues, shall commence from the date of the execution of the present Treaty, as determined in the following Articles.

V. From the same period all import, export, and transit duties on the common boundaries of the States hitherto forming the Customs' Union, and of the Duchy of Nassau, shall be abolished, and all articles already free to pass to and fro in one territory shall be admitted free and without restriction into the other territory, with the following exceptions only :

a. Articles belonging to the State monopolies (playing cards and salt), according to §§ 6 and 7.

b. Articles of home production at present subject to various duties within the Contracting States, or which are exempt from duty in one State, but subject to duty in another, and which are on that account liable to a differential duty, according to § 8, and finally:

c. Such articles as cannot be imitated, or imported without infringing the privileges of invention (patents) granted by one of the Contracting States, and which therefore during the continuance of the privileges (patents), must continue to be excluded from importation into the State which has granted the same.

VI. With respect to the importation of playing cards, each of the Contracting States shall be at liberty to continue the existing laws of prohibition or restriction.

VII. With respect to salt, His Highness the Duke of Nassau accedes in the following manner to the arrangements made by the Contracting Governments of the Union:

a. The importation of salt, and of all substances from which culinary salt is usually extracted, from foreign countries not belonging to the Union, into the States of the Union, is prohibited, unless it be on the special account of one of the Confederate Governments, and for immediate sale in their salt-offices, factories, or depôts.

b. The transit of salt, and of the above-mentioned substances from countries not belonging to the Union, into other countries similarly situated, shall take place only with the consent of those States of the Union whose territory is to be passed in the transit, and under such measures of precaution as they may think necessary.

c. The exportation of salt into foreign countries, not belonging to the Union, is free.

d. With respect to the trade in salt within the States of the Union, the importation of that article from one State into another shall be allowed only in case of special Treaties to that effect existing between the Governments of those States.

e. If one Government desires to obtain a supply of salt from another Government within the Union, either from public or from private salt-works, such consignments must be accompanied by free-warrants from the public authorities.

f. If a State of the Union desires to obtain its necessary supply of salt, either from abroad or from another State of the Union, through the medium of a third Confederate State, or if the first State desires to export its salt through the same channel into foreign countries not belonging to the Union, no impediment shall be offered to such transactions; but agreements shall previously be made between the States thus concerned, so far as this may not have been determined already by former Treaties, in order to define the respective roads for the transport, and to adopt the necessary measures of precaution for the prevention of smuggling.

g. If there should be such a difference between the prices of salt in the Duchy of Nassau and in one of the adjoining States of the Union, that danger of the smuggling of salt would probably arise for one or the other of those States, the Governments thus concerned will agree upon measures to avoid this danger as much as possible, without causing impediments to the free circulation of other goods.

VIII. With reference to those productions respecting which a difference of legislation still exists among the various States of the Union, with regard to the imposts laid on them in the interior (§ 5 b), His Highness the Duke of Nassau likewise acknowledges it to be desirable that a uniformity in the legislation and in the Customs' Tariffs of such imposts should be established, and the said Government will exert itself to accomplish this object. Until this end has been attained, and in order to avoid the disadvantages which might result from an unequal scale of imposts to the manufacturers of his own State in relation to the manufacturers in other States of the Union, supplementary and differential duties may be levied upon the following articles, viz.

a. On beer, spirits, tobacco, must, and wine, in the kingdom of Prussia.

b. On beer, spirits, bruised malt, in the kingdom of Bavaria, (exclusive, for the present, of the Rhenish circle.)

c. On beer, spirits, tobacco, must, and wine, in the kingdom of Saxony.

d. On beer, spirits, bruised malt, in the kingdom of Wirtemberg.

e. On beer, in the Grand-Duchy of Baden.

f. On beer, spirits, tobacco, must, and wine, in the Electorate of Hesse.

g. On beer, in the Grand-Duchy of Hesse.

h. On beer, spirits, tobacco, must, and wine, in the States belonging to the Thuringian Union.

In the Duchy of Nassau no differential duties shall be levied, inasmuch as neither the production of wine and tobacco, nor the manufacturing of beer and brandy is subject to any special imposts there.

In case, however, the Ducal Government should think it convenient at a future time, to submit all or some of the said productions within its own territory to an impost of production, or manufacture, the right of levying differential duties shall be reserved to the said Government under the same circumstances as those under which the other States of the Union exercise it towards each other.

The said duties shall be fixed and levied according to the following principles:

(1.) The differential duties shall be estimated by the difference between the legal duties in the country of destination and those to which the same article is subject in the country of its origin; and consequently such duties will be inoperative with reference to those countries of the Union where the same production is subject to an equally high or to a higher duty.

(2.) Any alterations which are made in the duties upon home productions of the States respectively concerned, shall also be followed by alterations in the differential duties, but constantly with the application of the principle previously established in § 1.

If, in consequence of such an alteration any differential duty would have to be increased, and in case such an increase be actually demanded, a negotiation on this point must previously take place between the States concerned, and sufficient proof must be given of the admissibility of the increase, according to the stipulations of the present Treaty.

(3.) The duty Tariffs at present legally existing in Prussia on must and wine of home growth, on the cultivation of tobacco, and on spirits, as well as the duty at present existing in Bavaria on bruised home-grown malt, and on beer (malt tax), shall in every case form the highest rate of differential duties which it is permitted to raise on the importation of the above articles from a country where no duty is levied on the same productions, into any State of the Union where such duty has been or may in future be introduced; even when the duty in question, levied in the State which receives the compensation duty, should exceed the highest rate fixed.

(4.) No return of inland duties shall be granted on the transport of duty-paid articles into another country of the Union, unless the adjacent States thus interested shall have agreed upon exceptions from this principle, on account of particular local circumstances.

(5.) Under no circumstances shall differential duties be imposed upon any other products than beer and malt, spirits, tobacco-leaves, must, and wine.

(6.) In all the States in which a differential duty is levied on tobacco, must, and wine, no further imposts of any kind on these products shall in any case be retained or introduced, either on account of the States or on account of the communes.

(7.) Articles proved in the manner prescribed in the Customs' Regulations to be foreign import or transit-goods, and which, as such, have already been, or are still under, official cognisance at some Custom House of the Union, and also those articles produced within the boundaries of the Union which are passing on transit only through a State of the Union in order to be exported either into another such State or into foreign countries, shall not be subject to differential duties.

(8.) The differential duty shall be for the benefit of that State into which the consignment is being sent; should it not have been previously levied in the exporting country, on account of the State entitled thereto, it shall be levied in the territory of the latter.

(9.) In each of the Contracting States certain arrangements shall be adopted for levying the differential duty in that State of the Union from which the consignment takes place, either at the place from whence the goods are sent off, or else at the nearest and most conveniently situated Customs' Office, or where payment of such duties can be insured by proper notice.

(10.) Until these arrangements shall have been determined by special agreements, the traffic in articles which are subject to a differential duty will be in so far restricted that those articles must, without distinction as to the quantities transported, be imported into the territory of the State which is entitled to such duty, only upon roads which shall be specially defined for this purpose, and upon the navigable rivers, and must be respectively reported and cleared at the Customs' Houses which shall be established there.

IX. Respecting the excise of consumption which is levied within the dominions of the Union upon other articles than those which are mentioned in § 8, or upon the same articles in those countries where no differential duty is levied upon them, a reciprocity of treatment shall be observed as well by the Contracting States of the Union as by the Duchy of Nassau, in such manner that the production of any one State of the Union shall on no account be more heavily taxed in another State than its own indigenous productions.

The same principle shall apply also to the additional tolls and excise levied on account of single communes; provided that this kind of impost be not altogether inadmissible, according to the stipulation No. 6, § 8.

X. Highway or other similar dues, as well as paving and dyke rates, bridge and ferry-tolls, or under whatever denominations such dues may exist, and without difference whether they be levied on account of the State, or in virtue of private rights, for example, those of a commune, shall be respectively maintained, or new ones introduced, whether for causeways or other ways, high roads, or communication roads, only to such an amount as may be proportionate to the usual expenses of the construction and maintenance thereof.

The highway dues at present existing in Prussia, according to the general Tariff of the year 1828, shall be regarded as the highest rate, and shall not henceforth be exceeded in any one of the Contracting States.

Special charges for town-gate-dues and for paving on causeways shall be abolished, wherever they may still exist, according to the preceding principle; and the local paving dues shall be included in the tracts of the high roads or causeways, in such manner that highway dues alone shall be levied according to the general Tariff.

XI. His Highness the Duke of Nassau is also willing to co-operate, in order to introduce in all the States of the Contracting Governments the same system of moneys, measures, and weights, and will participate in the negotiations to be opened for this purpose.

His Highness accedes to the Convention already existing between the members of the Union, according to which the Hessian quintal, which is equal to the (ducal) quintal of Nassau, has been adopted as the (unity) standard for the common Customs' weight. The admeasurement and clearance at the Customs of goods on which duty is chargeable by measurement, shall take place in the Duchy of Nassau, according to the legal standard, until a common system of admeasurement shall likewise have been agreed upon.

To facilitate the transmission of goods, and for the readier dispatch of such consignments at the Customs' stations, the Government of the Duchy of Nassau will publish officially, for the use of the Customs' offices in the Duchy of Nassau as well as of the commercial public generally, a comparative statement of the weights and measures which have been adopted in the Tariffs of the other Contracting States.

Until the latter shall have agreed upon a common system of coinage, the payment of the Customs' duties in the Duchy of Nassau shall be made, according to usage in the other States of the Union, in the currency in which the payment of any other home contribution or taxes is made there.

The gold and silver coins however of all the Contracting States, without any distinction, with the exception of the small coinage, shall meanwhile be received at all the Customs' stations of the general Union, and from all persons who have to make payments; and for this purpose the valuation tables, in respect of which an agreement has already been made among the members hitherto forming the Union, shall be published in the Duchy of Nassau, and vice versâ, the valuation of the coins of the Duchy of Nassau, computed according to those tables, shall be published in the other States of the Union.

XII. The water-tolls or way-fees on rivers, including such dues as are chargeable on the body of the vessel (recognition fees), shall continue to be levied in future on those rivers to which the stipulations of the Act of the Congress of Vienna, or Special State Treaties apply, provided that no other special arrangements shall be made on this point.

Every concession granted by a State of the Union to the navigation of its own subjects upon the above-mentioned rivers, shall in like manner be conceded to the navigation of the subjects of the other States of the Union.

Upon the other rivers, to which neither the Act of the Congress of Vienna nor any other public State Treaties apply, the river dues shall be levied according to the private regulations of the respective Governments concerned; but the subjects of the Contracting States and their goods and craft shall invariably be treated on equal terms everywhere on these rivers.

XIII. All dues for canals, locks, bridges, ferries, harbours, weighing-machines, cranes, and warehouses, and all fees for arrangements intended to facilitate commerce, shall be levied only for the use of such actually existing arrangements; these dues shall, as a general rule, not be increased at all, but should they be so, they shall in no case be increased beyond the amount of the ordinary cost of construction and maintenance; and they shall be levied everywhere from the subjects of the other Contracting States in a perfectly equal degree with their own subjects, and likewise without any distinction as to the destination of the goods.

No charge of fees is to be made for the use of weighing-machines, if used only for the purpose of ascertaining the Customs' duties or for the general purposes of official Customs' control.

XIV. His Serene Highness the Duke of Nassau will also on his part co-operate with the Contracting States of the Union to promote trade and industry by the adoption of uniform principles, and to see that the utmost freedom of action be given to the right of the subjects of one State to seek work and employment in the other.

The subjects of one of the Contracting States carrying on trade or commerce, or seeking employment in the territory of another of these States, shall not, from the period when the present Treaty comes into force, pay any taxes which are not paid by the subjects of the latter State, in a similar position of trade or industry.

In like manner manufacturers and tradesmen who are only making purchases for their business, or travellers who do not carry goods but only samples of them, for the purpose of obtaining orders, shall not be compelled to pay any further tax on this account, if they have acquired in the State of the Union where they reside the licence for carrying on this trade by payment of the legal dues, or if they are in the employ of native merchants or tradesmen who have done so.

The subjects of any of the Contracting States who attend the markets and fairs in the other States in pursuit of trade, and for the disposal of their productions or manufactures, shall also be treated on equal terms with the subjects of the States thus visited.

XV. The Prussian sea-ports shall be open to the trade of the subjects of the Duchy of Nassau and of the other States of the Union, upon payment of precisely the same duties as are paid by the Royal Prussian subjects, and the Consuls of one or other of the Contracting States appointed at foreign sea-ports and other commercial places shall be bound to afford aid and assistance whenever it may be necessary to the subjects of the other Contracting States.

XVI. His Serene Highness the Duke of Nassau accedes by these presents to the Customs' Convention (Forekartel)—concluded under date of 11th of May, 1833, among the members hitherto forming the Union, for the purpose of protecting their common Customs' system against smuggling, and their duties upon articles of domestic consumption against fraud—during the continuance of the present Treaty, and will order that such Articles of the above Convention as concern him be published in his dominions simultaneously with the latter. The other members of the Union will also on their part take the necessary steps to ensure the general execution of the stipulations of that Customs' Convention in their reciprocal relations with the States of the Union.

XVII. The common participation in the receipts of the Contracting States consequent upon the present Treaty has reference to the proceeds of the import, export, and transit-duties in the Prussian States, the Kingdoms of Bavaria, Saxony, and Wirtemberg, the Grand Duchy of Baden, the Electorate of Hesse, the Grand Duchy of Hesse, the Thuringian Customs' and Trade Union, and the Duchy of Nassau, including also those countries which have hitherto joined the Customs' system of any of the Contracting States.

From the community of receipt is excepted the revenue arising from the following sources, which is reserved for the private benefit of the Governments interested, unless separate Conventions between particular States of the Union determine otherwise :

(1.) The taxes which are levied on home productions within each State, including the differential duties reserved in § 8.

(2.) The river-tolls.

(3.) Highway rates, paving, dyke, bridge, ferry, canal, lock, and harbour-dues, as well as weighing and warehouse fees, or any similar impost of whatsoever denomination.

(4.) Customs' fines and forfeitures, which shall belong to each Government within its own territory, after payment of the share reserved for the informers.

XVIII. The amount of the duties which are to become common property shall be divided among the members of the Union in proportion to the populations with which they form part of the general Union, after deducting :

(1.) The expenses which are mentioned hereafter in § 26.

(2.) The restitution of erroneous levies.

(3.) The indemnifications and reductions of Customs which have been made by virtue of joint agreements.

The population of such States as have acceded or may hereafter accede to the Customs' Union by virtue of an agreement with one or other of the Contracting States, guaranteeing an annual payment to be made by such State as their share in the common Customs' revenue, shall be included in the population of the State which makes the payment.

The census of the population of each separate State of the Union shall be taken every 3 years, and the result shall be reciprocally communicated by the members of the Union to each other.

XIX. Concessions to tradesmen respecting the payment of Customs' duties, which are not founded on the Customs' laws, shall be chargeable to the Treasury of that Government which has granted them; the circumstances, under which such concessions may be granted, are reserved for special agreement.

XX. Conformably with the object of the Union, which is the promotion of a free and natural movement in general commercial intercourse, special concessions in connection with the Customs which are enjoyed by certain places where fairs are held, more particularly the privileges of discount, shall not be extended in those States of the Union where they at present still exist, but rather be limited as far as possible, and be brought, as speedily as possible, to a total extinction, with due regard to the circumstances under which the maintenance of such hitherto favoured places, in their previous commercial relations with foreign countries, depends. In no case, however, shall any new concession be granted without general consent.

XXI. Articles, which are imported for the service of the Court household of the Sovereign and their reigning houses, or for the foreign Ambassadors, Envoys, Chargés d'Affaires, &c., accredited to their Courts, shall not be exempt from the payment of Customs according to the Tariff, and if any remission be made for the same, it shall not be charged to the general account.

Neither can any indemnifications which are to be paid to the former immediate estates of the Empire, or to communes, or privileged private individuals for abolished toll-rights or for exemptions repealed, be charged to the general account.

But, on the other hand, every State shall be at liberty to allow by means of warrants the free ingress, egress, and transit of single articles without the payment of duties. Such articles, however, shall be dealt with according to the Customs' laws, and shall be recorded in Free-registers, which shall be kept in the same manner as the other Customs' registers, and the duties, which would have been leviable on them, shall be deducted, at the next adjustment of the revenue accounts, from the share of the State by which the Free warrants have been granted.

XXII. The right of remission, and of commutation of punishment, shall be reserved to each of the Contracting States within its own dominions. Periodical returns of the remission of punishments thus granted shall be reciprocally communicated on demand.

XXIII. The appointment of officials at the local and central district stations for control and receipt of Customs, who, according to special agreement on this point, are to be appointed and instructed upon uniform principles, is left to the Ducal Government of Nassau, as well as to all the other members of the General Union within their own territories.

XXIV. In like manner the service at the local Customs' stations, and the execution of the common Customs laws, shall also in the Duchy of Nassau be under the direction of a Customs' Board, which shall be subordinate to the Ducal Ministry. The formation of this Board, and the regulation of its proceedings, is reserved to the Ducal Government of Nassau, but its jurisdiction, so far as it is left undecided in the present Treaty and in the common Customs' laws, will be defined in common instructions to be agreed upon.

XXV. The returns to be made up quarterly by the Officers of the Customs' receipts, and the final adjusted accounts, which are to be rendered at the end of the year, when the books are closed and balanced; as well as the accounts which have become due respectively in the course of each quarter and during the whole financial year, shall, after previous examination by the Customs' Boards of the Duchy of Nassau, be made up in general statements in the same manner as by the respective Customs' Boards of the Contracting States of the Union, and these statements shall be transmitted to the central office at Berlin. From the said statements this Central Board shall make up every three months the provisional accounts-current of the Confederated States, transmitting them to their central Finance Offices, and preparing the definitive annual balance account for the year.

Should it appear from the quarterly accounts, that the actual receipts of any member of the Union have remained below its proportionate share in the general revenue by more than the average amount of one month, the necessary measures must forthwith be taken to make up this deficiency by payments to be made by any State or States wherein a surplus receipt has taken place.

XXVI. With respect to the expenses of levying the duties and the charges of management, the following principles shall be observed also in the relations of the Duchy of Nassau with the Contracting States of the Union:

(1.) No community herein can be allowed, but each Government shall defray all expenses of levying the duties, and all charges of management incurred in its own territory, whether such expenses be for the establishment and maintenance of the chief and Sub-Customs' Offices, the inland Tax Offices and Customs' Warehouses, the Customs' Boards, the provision for the staff employed therein, or the pensions to be granted them; or lastly for any other requirements resulting from the administration of the Customs.

(2.) Respecting that portion of the expense however, which is necessary for the Customs' officers employed in levying duties, in supervision and control, or in watching on the external frontiers next foreign countries, and within the boundary district belonging thereto, an agreement shall be made for the payment of inclusive sums, which each of the Contracting States may deduct from its annual gross receipt of Customs, of which it has to render account to the Union.

(3) On ascertaining this proportion of expenses, and where the collection of private taxes is combined with the levying of Customs, the salaries and official expenses of the Customs' officers shall be chargeable to the joint account only in proportion to their occupation in the Customs' service, as compared with their official duties generally.

(4.) An agreement will be made with the Ducal Government of Nassau upon general rules to bring the rates of salary of the officers employed in levying Customs' duties, and in supervision, as much as possible into conformity, having reference also to the Duchy of Nassau.

XXVII. The Contracting Parties reciprocally concede to each other the right of appointing Comptrollers at the Chief Customs' offices on the frontiers of other States of the Union, who shall take cognizance there, and at the Sub-offices, of all matters connected with the despatch of business, the guarding of the boundaries, the observance of lawful proceedings, and the removal of defects, but who, for the rest, are to abstain from individual interference.

It is reserved for a regulation of service more especially to be agreed upon, whether and in what degree the above-mentioned comptrollers are to take part in the transactions of the current business.

XXVIII. The Ducal Government of Nassau shall have the right to delegate Officials to the Customs' Boards of the other members of the Union, and vice versa, the latter to the Ducal Customs' Board of Nassau, for the purpose of acquiring a perfect knowledge of all business connected with the administration, or having reference to the community of interest agreed upon by the present Treaty.

The relative position and duty of these officers which shall be similar to those of the delegates at the Customs' Boards of the other members of the Union, shall be further defined in a special instruction, based on the consideration of unreserved candour, on the part of the administration where these delegates exercise their functions, relative to all matters connected with the management of the joint Customs'-administration, and the facilitating of every means of acquiring information on this subject; whilst, on the other hand, the solicitude of the delegates must be directed no less sincerely towards the settlement of any doubts and differences of opinion which may arise, in a manner appropriate to the common object, and to the relations of Confederate States.

The Ministerial Departments or the Supreme Boards of Administration of all the States of the Union shall reciprocally communicate to each other, when requested, all desirable information upon the common affairs of the Customs; and if it should be resolved to delegate, temporarily or permanently, a superior Officer for this purpose, or to commission a Plenipotentiary, otherwise accredited to the Government, every opportunity, according to the above expressed principle, shall be readily afforded to such delegate, in order to enable him to make himself perfectly acquainted with the affairs of the management of the joint Customs.

XXIX. A meeting of Plenipotentiaries from the members of the Union shall be held annually at the beginning of June for the purpose of deliberation in common.

For the formal direction of the proceedings at the discussions, the Plenipotentiaries will choose from amongst themselves a President, who shall not, however, enjoy any preeminence over the other members.

At the close of each annual meeting the place for the next meeting shall be agreed upon, taking into consideration the nature of the objects expected to be discussed at the ensuing conference.

XXX. The attention of the Plenipotentiaries at the conference shall be directed to

a. The consideration of all complaints and defects which have been perceived in one or other of the States of the Union, relative to the execution of the fundamental Treaty, of the special Conventions, and of the Customs' laws, regulations, and Tariffs,—which may not have been settled and disposed of in the course of the year by correspondence upon the subject between the Ministerial Department and the Chief Boards of Direction.

b. The definitive settlement among the members of the Union of the common receipts, founded on such statements as are necessary for the purpose of a proper examination, agreeable to the common interest, which statements are to be rendered by the principal Customs' authorities, and to be submitted by the Central Office.

c. The consultations respecting wishes and propositions for the improvement of the Customs' administration which may be submitted by the Governments of particular States.

d. The negotiations respecting alterations of the Customs' laws the Customs' regulations, the Customs' Tariff, and the organization of the administration which may have been proposed by any of the Contracting States, and generally all matters referring to the suitable development and accomplishment of the common system of commerce and Customs.

XXXI. If any extraordinary events should occur in the course of the year, at any other period than that of the ordinary meeting of the Plenipotentiaries at the Conference, which call for immediate measures or dispositions on the part of the States of the Union, the Contracting Parties will decide thereon by diplomatic means, or they will convoke an extraordinary meeting of their Plenipotentiaries.

XXXII. The expenses of the Plenipotentiaries and of their assistants shall be defrayed by the members of the general Union by which they are deputed. The staff of the Secretarial and the place of assembly will be furnished free of expense by the Government in whose territory the meeting of the Conference takes place.

XXXIII. The Ducal Government of Nassau engages to take such measures as may be necessary to guard against any loss which might arise to the revenues of the general Union from the importation and accumulation of large stocks of goods imported at a lower rate of duty.

XXXIV. In case any other German States should intimate their wish to be admitted into the Customs' Union, the High Contracting Parties declare themselves ready to comply with such wish, by concluding Treaties for that purpose, as far as may be compatible with the regard due to the peculiar interests of the members of the Union.

XXXV. They will also exert themselves to facilitate and to extend as much as possible the commerce of their connections by means of Treaties with other States.

XXXVI. Whatever is necessary for the execution in detail of the stipulations of the present Treaty, and of its supplements, shall be prepared by common commissioners.

XXXVII. The duration of the present Treaty, which is to come into operation on the 1st of January, 1836, is provisionally fixed until the 1st of January, 1842. If during this period, and at the latest 2 years before the expiration of it, no notice of its cessation be given, it shall be considered as prolonged for 12 years, and so on afterwards from 12 years to 12 years.

This latter arrangement shall, however, be observed only in case all the States of the Germanic Confederation should not in the meantime agree upon adopting such common measures as may fully accomplish the object of the present Customs' Union, as being in accordance with the intention of Article XIX of the Act of the Germanic Confederation.

Should any general regulations be adopted relative to a free trade in provisions in all the States of the Germanic Confederation, the stipulations on this subject in the Tariff of the Union at present in force, conformably with the present Treaty, shall be modified accordingly.

The present Treaty shall be forthwith submitted for ratification by the High Contracting Courts, and the interchange of the Ratification shall be effected at Berlin as speedily as possible.

(Translation.)

HIS Serene Highness, the Prince of Lippe, having expressed his wish to procure for the principality of Lippe the advantages of a reciprocal and, as far as possible, free traffic and intercourse by means of a more intimate connection of the said principality with Prussia and the other States of the Customs' and Trade Union, the following Plenipotentiaries have been nominated in order to carry on the necessary negotiations for this purpose ; that is to say :

His Serene Highness the Prince of Lippe ;

William Arnold Eschenburg, His President of Government and of the Chamber, Knight of the Royal Hanoverian Guelphic Order ; and,

Otho William Charles von Röder, His Minister Resident at the Royal Court of Prussia, Lieutenant-Colonel and Chamberlain ; Knight of the Royal Prussian Order of the Red Eagle, Third Class ; Commander, First Class, of the Ducal Saxe-Ernestine Order ; Commander of the Ducal Order of Henry the Lion of Brunswick ; Knight of the Royal Bavarian Order of Civil Merit ; and Commander of the Royal Belgian Order of Leopold ; by which Plenipotentiaries the following Treaty has been concluded, subject to ratification :

ART. I. His Serene Highness the Prince of Lippe accedes, with his territory, but without prejudice to his sovereign rights, to the Customs' system of the Kingdom of Prussia, and of the States united therewith in a Customs' Union.

II. In consequence of this accession, His Serene Highness the Prince of Lippe will introduce in his States—on abolition of the laws and regulations at present existing there in reference to import, export, and transit-dues and the administration thereof,—the administration of the import, export, and transit dues in accordance with the respective laws, tariffs, regulations and other administrative dispositions which now exist in Prussia ; and he will for this purpose cause the necessary laws, tariffs, and regulations to be published ; special dispositions moreover for the guidance of his subjects, or persons bound to pay Custom dues, shall be made publicly known by his Government.

III. Any future alterations of the legal regulations existing in Prussia, mentioned in the preceding Article, or any new regulations of that kind, which, for the sake of uniformity, would have to be carried out in the principality of Lippe, will require the consent of the Government of Lippe. This consent will not be withheld, if such alterations are made general in the Royal Prussian States.

IV. With the execution of the present Treaty, all import, export, and transit dues on the boundaries between Prussia and the principality of Lippe shall cease, and all articles may be imported free and without hindrance from the latter territory into the Prussian State and those States united with Prussia in a Customs' Union, and vice versa, from the latter States into the principality of Lippe, with the reservation only of a. The articles belonging to the State monopolies (salt), and likewise playing cards and almanacks according to § 6, 7.

b. Such articles of home production as are liable to a duty within the territory of the Customs' Union according to § 8; and lastly,

c. Such articles as cannot be imitated or imported without infringement of the privileges of invention (Patents), granted by one of the Contracting States, and which therefore must be excluded during the continuance of said privileges (Patents), from importation into the State which has granted them.

V. 1.—Respecting salt, His Serene Highness the Prince of Lippe accedes to the arrangements existing between the members of the Customs' Union, in the following manner:

a. The importation of salt, and of all substances from which culinary salt is usually extracted, from foreign countries, not belonging to the Union, into the States of the Union, shall be prohibited, unless it be for the special account of one of the Confederated Governments, and for the purpose of immediate sale in their salt-offices, factories, or depôts.

b. The transit of salt, and of the above-mentioned substances, from countries not belonging to the Union into other countries similarly situated, shall take place only with the consent of those States of the Union whose territory is touched in the transit, and under such measures of precaution as they may think it necessary to enforce.

c. The exportation of salt into foreign countries, not belonging to the Union, is free.

d. With respect to the trade in salt within the States of the Union, the importation of that article from one State into another shall be allowed only in case of special Treaties to that effect existing between the respective Governments.

e. If one Government should desire to import salt from another Government within the General Union, either from the public or from private salt works, such transmission of salt must be accompanied by pass-warrants issued by the public authorities.

f. If a State of the Union desires to import its supply of salt through the medium of another such State, either from abroad or from a third State of the Union, or if the first State desires to export salt through the same channel into foreign countries not belonging to the Union, no impediment shall be offered thereto; so far, however, as no regulations on this point have been adopted by former Conventions, the respective roads for the transport, and the requisite measures of precaution for the prevention of smuggling, shall be agreed upon by previous Convention between the States concerned.

2.—With regard to the surplus of production over the consumption of salt in the principality of Lippe, and to the danger of salt-smuggling which might arise to the Kingdom of Prussia, as well from the above cause, as from a difference between the prices of salt in the 2 Contracting States, both Governments will agree upon measures to prevent this danger as far as possible, without causing impediment to the free traffic in other goods.

VI. Respecting the importation of playing cards and almanacks, the principles, according to which the present laws of prohibition or restriction, and the arrangements for the sale of these articles, still remain in force in all the States belonging to the Union, shall also be applied in the principality of Lippe.

VII. The regulations agreed upon between the States of the Union by the Convention of the 8th of May of the present year, respecting the internal duties which are levied in some States of the Union, partly on the manufacturing or preparation, partly direct on the consumption of certain productions, and respecting the traffic in such productions, shall be applied likewise in the principality of Lippe. In consequence hereof, and in accordance with the stipulations made for this purpose in the special Convention of this day between Prussia and Lippe, with reference to the duties which are leviable in the latter State on home productions, neither any remission of duties shall be made, nor any transit-dues levied reciprocally between Prussia and the territory of Lippe, on any kind of inland produce on its transit from one territory into the other. In its relation to the other States of the Customs' Union, the principality of Lippe shall be placed on the same footing with Prussia, with respect to remissions to be made and transit duties to be levied.

VIII. His Serene Highness the Prince of Lippe accedes to the agreement made between the States of the Customs' Union, under date of the 8th of May of the present year, respecting the duty to be levied on sugar made from beetroot within the territory of the Union, and he likewise agrees that, should the manufacture of sugar or treacle from any other home products than that of beetroot,—e.g., from starch,—attain any considerable extent within the Customs' Union, this manufacture should likewise be made subject to an equal taxation in all the States of the Union, according to the principles agreed upon with regard to the taxation of beetroot sugar.

IX. His Serene Highness the Prince of Lippe accedes to the arrangement made in the Customs' Convention concluded between Prussia and the other German States, and communicated to the Government of the Prince, with reference to the following articles:

1. Respecting the amount to be levied, and the mode of levying highway, paving, dyke, bridge and ferry-dues, town-gate fees and paving rates, without reference as to whether such dues are levied on account of the Government treasury, or in virtue of private rights,—of a Commune for example.

2. Respecting the introduction of an equal system of moneys, measures, and weights.

3. Respecting the adoption of uniform principles for the promotion of industry, more especially :

a. Respecting the right of the subjects of one State of the Customs' Union to seek work and employment in the territory of another such State.

b. Respecting the taxes to be paid by the subjects of one State of the Union who carry on commerce or trade, or who seek employment in the territory of another such State.

c. Respecting the free admission of manufacturers and other tradesmen, who are making purchases for their business only, or of travellers, who do not carry goods, but only patterns of such with them, for the purpose of procuring orders.

d. Respecting the attendance at fairs and markets.

4. Respecting the fees and payments for establishments or arrangements which are intended to facilitate intercourse and trade.

More especially His Serene Highness accedes by these presents, to the general Coinage Convention concluded under date of 30th of July 1838, between the Governments belonging to the Customs' Union, declaring the adoption of the 14 thaler standard as the legal coinage standard in the principality of Lippe.

X. The water tolls, as also the passage dues upon rivers, including such fees as are chargeable on the body of the vessel, shall continue to be reciprocally levied on navigation upon the rivers to which the stipulations of the Congress of Vienna or special State Treaties apply, provided that no other special arrangements in this respect be made.

All the privileges which one State of the Union may concede to the navigation of its own subjects upon the above-mentioned rivers, shall in like manner be conceded to the navigation of the subjects of the other States of the Union.

Upon the other rivers, to which neither the Act of the Congress of Vienna nor any other State Treaties apply, the water-tolls will be levied according to the private arrangements of the respective Governments concerned. But the subjects of the Contracting States and their goods and craft shall likewise be treated everywhere on these rivers on equal terms.

XI. From the day of the execution of the mutual Customs' regulations of the Union, all the staple rights and privileges of package, which may still exist in the principality of Lippe, shall cease, as such privileges have already been abolished in the other territories belonging to the Customs' Union, and no one shall be liable to any stoppage, loading, or warehousing of goods, except in such cases as are permitted or prescribed by the common Customs' regulations or by the respective rules of navigation.

XII. His Serene Highness hereby accedes to the Customs' Convention concluded between the members of the Union for Customs and Commerce, for the purpose of protecting their common Customs' system against smuggling, and their imposts on articles of home consumption against fraud; and will cause such articles of that Convention as concern him to be published in the principality simultaneously with the present Treaty. The other States of the Union will likewise adopt the proper measures to ensure the general execution of the stipulations of this Customs' Convention in their reciprocal relations.

XIII. The arrangements for the Customs' administration in the principality of Lippe, in conformity with the laws and regulations mentioned in § 2, more especially the formation of the boundary-district and the designation and official authorisation of the services requisite for levying and for other business of the Customs, shall be settled by mutual agreement, and with the assistance of the Executive Committee to be appointed for this purpose by both parties.

His Serene Highness the Prince of Lippe will assign the said administration to the Royal Prussian Provincial Direction of Customs at Münster.

In the formation of the boundary-district, and in fixing the interior line, due precaution shall be taken to impede the traffic as little as is consistent with the existing regulations and with the common end in view.

The Customs roads shall be marked out by notice boards, and the course of the internal line shall be publicly made known.

The offices for levying and for other business of the Customs shall be regarded as common.

XIV. His Serene Highness the Prince of Lippe will make provision for the regular appointment of proper officials at the common Customs' offices as well as at the requisite Customs' Comptrol offices, to be established in the principality of Lippe, according to the special agreement made on this point.

The Customs' and tax officers, who in consequence hereof are to officiate in the principality of Lippe, shall take the oath of allegiance to the Government of the Prince of Lippe in the name of the Sovereigns of both the respective countries, and shall be furnished with the proper certificates for the execution of their duties.

Respecting their official duties, however, more especially the discipline of the service, the said officials shall be subordinate only to the Royal Prussian Provincial Direction of Customs at Münster.

The shields in front of the offices for levying and for other business of the Customs in the principality of Lippe shall bear the arms of the principality of Lippe, and the simple inscriptions:—

“Chief Customs' office,” “Customs' office,” “Tax Office,” and these as well as the Customs' regulations-tables, turnpikes, &c., shall be furnished with the colours of the State of Lippe.

The stamps and seals used in the business of the Customs shall likewise bear the arms of the principality of Lippe only.

XV. The investigation and punishment of Customs' contraventions committed in the principality of Lippe, shall take place in accordance with the Customs' penal law, to be published there, in the administrative procedure, before the Chief Customs' Office and its constituted administrative authorities, in the judicial procedure, however, before the law courts of the principality, according to the existing rules and regulations of competency.

XVI. The exercise of the right of pardon and of commutation of punishment with respect to persons condemned in the principality of Lippe on account of offences committed against the Customs, is reserved to his Serene Highness the Prince of Lippe.

XVII. In consequence of the present Treaty, the Kingdom of Prussia and the principality of Lippe, shall enjoy a common interest in the revenue derived from import, export, and transit-duties, and, according to the arrangements made in this respect, the proceeds of these receipts shall be divided in proportion to the population.

XVIII. As foreign articles which are subject to duty in the States of the Customs' Union are, with few exceptions, subject to no duty in the principality of Lippe, the latter Government engages, before free intercourse becomes established between the principality and the territory of the Customs' Union, to adopt such measures as may be necessary to guard against any injury to the revenue of the Union which may arise from accumulation and importation of large stores of goods on which no duty has been paid.

XIX. The duration of the present Treaty is fixed until the last day of December, 1853.

If no notice of cessation be given on one part or the other, one year before the expiration of this period, the Treaty shall be regarded as prolonged for 12 years further, and so on from 12 years to 12 years.

This Treaty shall forthwith be submitted for ratification to all the respective Governments concerned, and the interchange shall take place at Berlin, with all possible despatch, but at the latest within 6 weeks.

*CORRESPONDENCE between Great Britain and France respecting the Affairs of Poland.—July, 1831.

No. 1.—The Prince de Talleyrand to Visc^t. Palmerston.—(Rec. July 20.)

Londres, le 20 Juillet, 1831.

LE Soussigné, Ambassadeur de Sa Majesté le Roi des Français près Sa Majesté Britannique, à l'honneur d'adresser à Lord Palmerston, Premier Secrétaire d'Etat au Département des Affaires Etrangères, la copie d'une dépêche qu'il a reçu de M. le Général Comte Sébastiani, relativement à la situation actuelle de la Pologne, et aux démarches de conciliation que le Gouvernement du Roi aurait le désir de faire de concert avec le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique.

Cette communication, dont le Soussigné a déjà fait connaître la substance à Lord Palmerston, dans plusieurs entretiens, notamment dans celui du 14 de ce mois, a pour but de satisfaire à la demande qu'il lui a fait de recevoir, à ce sujet, une pièce sur laquelle il serait à portée de fixer l'attention spéciale du Conseil de Sa Majesté Britannique.

Le Soussigné prie Lord Palmerston de vouloir bien lui faire part de l'opinion que le Gouvernement Anglais se sera formée sur la communication qu'il est chargé de lui faire, et il saisit, &c.

LE PCE. DE TALLEYRAND.

S.E. le Vicomte Palmerston, G.C.B.

(Inclosure.)—Count Sebastiani to the Prince de Talleyrand.

MON PRINCE,

Paris, le 7 Juillet, 1831.

LE Roi, touché des maux qu'à déjà causés la guerre de Pologne à 2 nations qui lui inspirent un si vif intérêt, jaloux d'assurer le maintien de la paix chaque jour compromise par une lutte aussi prolongée, et non moins occupé de préserver l'Occident de l'Europe du terrible fléau que cette guerre traîne à sa suite, s'est adressé avec confiance à l'Empereur de Russie pour mettre un terme à tant de malheurs, et faire cesser une effusion de sang dont l'humanité n'a que trop longtemps gémi. La pensée du Roi était aussi de conserver l'existence politique d'un peuple qui s'en est montré si digne par tant de courage et de patriotisme, et qui a pour sa nationalité la garantie des Traités de Vienne. Jusqu'ici les efforts du Roi n'ont pas obtenu les résultats qu'il était en droit de se promettre. Malgré leur peu de succès, Sa Majesté ne pense point qu'elle doive renoncer à la généreuse et pacifique médiation que lui conseillent ses sentiments personnels et que lui prescrit la situation de l'Europe. Elle croit surtout que si l'Angleterre agissait d'accord avec la France pour donner à cette salutaire intervention toute la force dont elle est susceptible, l'effet pourrait en être assuré par l'union de ces 2 Puissances. Le Roi connaît assez les sentiments qui animent Sa Majesté Britannique pour espérer qu'elle ne refusera point de donner sa franche et complète adhésion à nos démarches et de joindre à nos efforts son action puissante, lorsqu'il s'agit aussi souverainement du bien de l'humanité et de l'intérêt général de l'Europe. Le désir de Sa Majesté, mon Prince, est que vous fassiez à ce sujet des ouvertures immédiates et pressantes au Gouvernement Anglais : nous en attendons le résultat avec une vive impatience.

* Laid before Parliament, 1861.

Agréez, &c.

M. le Prince de Talleyrand.

HORACE SEBASTIANI.

No. 2. —Viscount Palmerston to the Prince de Talleyrand.

Foreign Office, July 22, 1831.

THE Undersigned has the honour to acknowledge the receipt of a note of the 20th instant from the Prince de Talleyrand, inclosing the copy of a despatch dated the 7th of July, addressed to his Excellency by Count Sebastiani, which the Undersigned has lost no time in laying before the King.

The Undersigned is commanded to express the sense entertained by His Majesty of the frank and conciliatory manner in which this communication has been made. It is His Majesty's sincere desire to cultivate the most friendly and confidential intercourse with the Court of France, more especially when the end in view is the preservation or the restoration of peace.

As far, therefore, as regards the desire of the French Government to secure to the Poles the national and political existence which it was one of the objects of the Treaty of Vienna to establish, the Undersigned has to state, in the most distinct terms, that His Majesty could not consent to see Poland deprived of the advantages of that arrangement; nor has the Undersigned waited for the present communication from the Prince de Talleyrand to make such representations upon this point to the Russian Cabinet as, without indicating any suspicion of the intentions of that Government, might prevent future misunderstanding.

The object of the communication which it is now proposed that France and England should jointly address to Russia, is an immediate cessation of hostilities, with a view to negotiations for the purpose of re-establishing peace between the contending parties by some lasting arrangement; and it appears from Count Sebastiani's despatch that a proposition to this effect has already been made to Russia by France, but hitherto without success.

If His Majesty had reason to think that the Emperor of Russia was disposed to avail himself of the good offices of the 2 Courts, and that their intervention might lead to an accommodation, His Majesty would willingly co-operate in a friendly endeavour to restore peace between Russia and Poland. But there are, on the contrary, too many reasons for fearing that a simple offer of mediation, so far from being desired by His Imperial Majesty, would, at the present moment certainly be refused.

Can it then be expedient to make a proposal which there is no ground to hope would be accepted; and which, if refused, would leave to the 2 Governments the embarrassing alternative of either acquiescing in a determined rejection of their proposal, or of taking measures to enforce it by means of a more direct and effectual interference? The British Government certainly is not prepared to adopt the latter course. The effects and bearing of the contest upon the security of other States have not hitherto been such as to warrant measures of such a description; nor has the conduct of Russia towards England been calculated to excite any unfriendly feeling: she has, on the contrary, performed towards this country all the offices of a good and faithful ally, and, in the late difficult negotiations for the purpose of effecting a settlement between Belgium and Holland, she has acted with perfect fairness in her co-operation with the other 4 Powers.

Under these circumstances, His Majesty, deeply lamenting the calamities of a disastrous and desolating contest, does not think the time has yet arrived when he could be justified in adopting a proceeding which, however conciliatory in form, could not fail to alarm an independent Power, naturally jealous of its rights, and sensibly alive to everything which might appear to affect its national honour.

For these reasons His Majesty feels himself under the necessity of declining the proposal which the Prince de Talleyrand has been instructed to convey. But the Undersigned is at the same time commanded to repeat to his Excellency that there exists on the part of His Majesty a sincere and earnest desire to co-operate with the King of the French in promoting the general interests of humanity and peace. The King can never look with indifference on such a state of things as that which now exists in Poland. His anxious attention will be constantly directed to the progress of the contest, and though he finds himself compelled at present to withhold his assent to the proposed offer of a joint mediation, His Majesty will not be the less anxious to avail himself of any favourable opportunity which the friendly relations subsisting between the Courts of Great Britain and Russia may afford, to lend his assistance to the benevolent work of putting a stop to the further effusion of blood, and of restoring to the countries now suffering under all the evils of war, the enjoyment of the blessings of peace.

The Undersigned, &c.

H.E. The Prince de Talleyrand.

*CORRESPONDENCE between Great Britain and Russia, respecting the Affairs of Poland.—1831, 1832.

No. 1.—Lord Heytesbury to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Feb. 10.)

MY LORD,

St. Petersburg, January 21, 1831.

THIS Government is extremely sensitive upon the question of foreign interference with the affairs of Poland, so much so that I fear the subject could hardly be approached, or any advice be tendered, without offence. Any proposal to mediate, whether from France, or from any other Power, would be received, I am convinced, with high indignation, and lead to no beneficial result.

I have, &c.

No. 2.—Lord Heytesbury to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. March 16.)

MY LORD,

St. Petersburg, February 25, 1831.

I UNDERSTAND that an Ukase has been made out, appointing Field-Marshal Diebitsch to be Military Governor of Poland, and M. Engel to be the head of the Provisional Civil Government which is to be established at Warsaw after the entry of the Russian army.

These appointments announce a material change of system with respect to the future government of Poland.

I have, &c.

HEYTESBURY.

No. 3.—Viscount Palmerston to Lord Heytesbury.

MY LORD,

Foreign Office, March 22, 1831.

YOUR Lordship's despatch of the 25th ultimo seems to imply that if the Russian arms should be finally triumphant in Poland, it is the intention of the Emperor to make some material change in the system of government in that country.

In an ordinary case of civil war between a Sovereign and his subjects, foreign States can have no grounds for interference, even by advice or remonstrance; but there are circumstances peculiar to the Kingdom of Poland which make it in this respect an exception to the general rule.

The Kingdom of Poland was created and attached to Russia by the Treaty of Vienna, to which most of the States of Europe were parties. That Treaty defines the relation in which Poland was to stand towards Russia, by providing that it should be attached to the Russian Empire by its constitution and should enjoy a distinct administration.

* Laid before Parliament, 1861.

His Majesty's Government are of opinion that any change which would have the effect of incorporating Poland with the Russian Empire, and of destroying its separate administration and constitution, would be a breach of the Treaty of Vienna, to which England and all the other Powers who were parties to that Treaty would have an unquestionable right to object.

His Majesty's Government, however, are disposed to believe that the appointments announced in the Ukase mentioned in your Lordship's despatch are intended to provide for the emergency of the moment, and are applicable only to the interval which must elapse between the occupation of Warsaw by the Russian troops, and the complete restoration of the Emperor's authority as King of Poland. But if your Lordship should find that there exists any intention on the part of the Russian Government to make any material changes in the political condition of Poland, you are instructed to watch those changes with the closest attention, and to remonstrate in strong terms against any measure of this kind which might not be in strict accordance with the stipulations of the Treaty of Vienna.

His Majesty's Government could not admit that the revolt of the Poles and their casting off the authority of the Emperor and King, could afford to the Russian Government any grounds for departing from the stipulations of the Treaty of Vienna.

The revolt cannot release Russia from engagements contracted with other Powers; engagements which had for their object not merely the welfare of the Poles, but the security of neighbouring States.

In order to put your Lordship more completely in possession of the views of the British Government in 1814 and 1815 upon the subject of the arrangements for Poland, of the part which was taken with regard to those arrangements by the British Plenipotentiary at the Congress of Vienna, and of the bearing of those arrangements upon the security of other States, I send your Lordship copies of various despatches received at this office in the years 1814 and 1815.

Your Lordship will see explained in these papers the importance of the advanced military position which the Kingdom of Poland presents to Russia, interposed as it is between Austria and Prussia, and at no great distance from the capitals of each.

It is obvious that this position would become more commanding, if Poland, instead of being a separate kingdom, and occupied, as by its constitution is stipulated, only by native troops, were to become a Russian province, and the Russian army were to change its permanent stations from the Niemen and the Memel to the Vistula and the Warta; such an alteration in the military attitude of Russia must of necessity tend to give her an inconvenient ascendancy over Austria and Prussia, and might, under many conceivable circumstances, impress upon the policy of those 2 Powers a character very different from that which it might assume if free from external influence.

These considerations were felt in the year 1815, but they have acquired additional weight since that time, in consequence of the increased security which Russia has acquired on her southern and on her Asiatic frontiers, by the successes of her arms over the Turks and the Persians; because in proportion as she is free from danger of all molestation in those quarters, she may concentrate her forces for any given purpose in Poland.

His Majesty's Government are fully sensible that it is a matter of great delicacy for one Government to make any communication to another as to the manner in which it may think fit to deal with subjects who have been subdued after an unsuccessful revolt; and they have too high an opinion of the generous and high-minded sentiments of the Emperor of Russia to doubt that his victory will be used with as much moderation and mercy as may be consistent with the future security of his authority; but as far as you may find it useful and proper to touch upon this subject, you will conform your language to the sentiments entertained upon it by His Majesty's Government.

There is one other point to which I wish to direct your attention.

By Article I of the Treaty of Vienna it is stipulated that the Poles, subjects respectively of Russia, Austria, and Prussia, shall obtain a national representation and institutions regulated according to the kind of political existence which each of the Governments to which they belong shall think it useful and fitting to grant them.

It is understood that although this stipulation has been executed by Austria and Prussia, it has hitherto been entirely unfulfilled by the Russian Government. His Majesty's Government have been informed by the French Ambassador at this Court that instructions have been sent to the Duke de Mortemart to draw the attention of the Russian Government to this matter, and the French Government have expressed a wish that your Lordship might be instructed to support the Duke in his representations on this subject.

Your Lordship will, of course, be careful not to take any step on this business which could lead to any unfriendly discussions with the Russian Government, with whom His Majesty's Government are, under present circumstances, more than ever desirous of keeping up the closest relations of friendship.

But if the question should be agitated, your Lordship is instructed to state that, as far as His Majesty's Government are informed of the facts of the case, it does not appear to them that the provisions of the Treaty of Vienna applicable to the Polish provinces of Russia have been hitherto carried into execution.

PALMERSTON.

No. 4.—Lord Heytesbury to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. April 26.)
(Extract.) St. Petersburg, April 13, 1831.

UPON the receipt of your Lordship's despatch of the 22nd March, I thought it advisable not to lose any time in informing Count Nesselrode of the nature of the instructions I had received, and in touching upon the several points to which my attention was directed. This I did in the order in which they stood in your Lordship's despatch, beginning with the obligations imposed upon us by the Treaty of Vienna, and the necessity in which England, as well as France, was placed to watch over the progress of the war in Poland, and to remonstrate in the event of any measures being adopted on its conclusion at variance with existing engagements. I also particularly alluded to the Special Commission lately for the Provisional Government of Poland.

Count Nesselrode observed that we could not but do the Russian Government the justice to admit that the violation of the Treaty of Vienna was entirely on the side of the insurgents, who, in proclaiming the déchéance of the Emperor and the independence of Poland, had virtually destroyed the act to which they owed their existence as a nation. But notwithstanding the just indignation to which such conduct naturally gave rise, the Emperor would adhere to the strict letter of the engagements he had contracted with foreign Powers by the Treaty of Vienna; and, in proof of this, his Excellency read to me a despatch addressed to Prince Lieven in the course of last month (which that Ambassador was authorized to communicate to your Lordship in case any conversation upon the subject took place), explaining the provisional nature of the Special Commission which had been appointed, and declaring that His Imperial Majesty, although by no means disposed to admit any right of interference with the internal affairs of his dominions, would hold to the strict letter of the engagements which Russia had really contracted with foreign Powers.

In answer to my allusion to the difference that would be given to the attitude of Russia by the permanent establishment of the Russian armies on the Vistula and the Warta, his Excellency observed that he could not understand why England and France should object to this, if the 2 Powers who might be supposed to be most immediately interested approved of the measure. An attempt had been made by France to alarm the Court of Vienna upon this subject, and to engage it to join in its remonstrances to the Cabinet of St. Petersburg, but entirely without success. Count Nesselrode here read to me a despatch from M. de Tatischeff, giving an account of Marshal Maison's conversation with Prince Metternich upon the subject, and the Prince's firm and decisive answer in approbation of the Emperor of Russia's proceedings. He further told me that a similar attempt had been made at Berlin, and though he was not yet officially acquainted with the answer, he had not the slightest doubt of its being essentially the same as that of Austria. "Indeed," observed his Excellency, "what possible difference can it make to these Powers or to Europe (if the army stationed in Poland be really faithful and devoted to its Sovereign) whether it wear a Polish or a Russian uniform? If it be not faithful, and be not attached to the Emperor (as there is but too much reason to fear so long as a Polish army shall exist there), the case may, indeed, be different; but then the inference to be drawn from the demand for its continued existence must be, that the object in view is not the tranquillity of Europe, but the weakening and embarrassing of Russia, by engaging her to maintain a force upon her frontier, ready to break into open rebellion upon every favourable opportunity. If," said the Count, "we are only to retain possession of Poland upon this condition, it would be better for us to make a present of it to any Power willing to accept the offer."

I strenuously denied the justice of this inference, in as far at least as England was concerned.

With respect to the want of institutions in the ancient Polish provinces of Russia, a question upon which I was instructed to support any observations that might be made by the Duc de Mortemart, Count Nesselrode informed me that the Duc de Mortemart had held vague language to the Emperor, but had not given any official character to his conversation.

Having made known to Count Nesselrode the feelings of the British Government upon these several points, I thought it unnecessary to push the conversation further, the more particularly as the line traced out for me by my instructions was rather to watch over what was done on the submission of the Poles than to take any official steps in their favour for the moment.

Upon my opening myself to the Duc de Mortemart upon the subject, and expressing my readiness to co-operate with him to a certain extent, his Excellency confirmed what had already been stated to me by Count Nesselrode, namely, that he had not as yet considered himself bound to do more than to recall to the recollection of the Emperor, as well as to that of Count Nesselrode, the engagements taken at Vienna, and to express the hope of his Government that they would not be violated. His instructions, he said, were not very precise, and were applicable rather to the moment of victory (which he did not think by any means arrived), when it might be attempted to give a good direction to the well-known magnanimity of the Emperor, than to the present state of things, when all was uncertainty and doubt.

The Duke then informed me that the assurances which had been given to him were perfectly satisfactory as far as they went. He had been told that the letter of the Treaty of Vienna would not be departed from; that no incorporation of the Kingdom of Poland with the Empire of Russia would take place; that the separate administration of the 2 countries would be maintained, though all the places in that administration might no longer be exclusively occupied by Poles; and lastly, that after the dissolution of the Polish army, arrangements would be made for supplying its place in a manner that would have no just ground for complaint to any foreign Power.

My conversation with Count Nesselrode enabled me to arrive pretty nearly at the same conclusions, with this addition, however, that the present constitution of Poland will be virtually, if not openly, done away with. There will be some difficulty in dealing with this question, should foreign powers be inclined to remonstrate upon it, as it does not appear that any particular form of constitution was guaranteed to Poland by the Treaty of Vienna.

Before I close this despatch, it may be proper for me to draw your Lordship's attention to the peculiar situation in which the Emperor will be placed with respect to his own people, when called upon to pronounce upon the future fate of Poland. Vast and unlimited as the Imperial power is upon ordinary occasions, history teaches us that there is a force of public opinion in this country, when strongly excited, which cannot be braved, even by the Sovereign, with impunity. If, after all the blood that has been spilt, and the treasure that has been expended, in the recovery of Poland, everything is placed again upon the ancient footing; and if no punishment is inflicted on the authors of the cold-blooded assassinations which took place in Warsaw on the first breaking out of the insurrection, I do not believe that, irritated and exasperated as this nation is, the exercise of such magnanimity will be unattended with danger. The cry of the nation may become too powerful for even the Sovereign to resist, and, in despite of himself, he may perhaps be forced into measures which his own nobler feelings—his own unbiassed judgment—would probably induce him under other circumstances to reject.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

HEYTESBURY.

P.S.—Since the above was written, Count Nesselrode has allowed me to read a despatch which he addresses to Prince Lieven, by the present courier, commenting, but in a very friendly manner, upon the communications which I made to him by order of my Government relative to the affairs of Poland. As Prince Lieven is instructed to read this despatch to your Lordship, it will be unnecessary for me to say more than that the apparent understanding between England and France upon this subject is a much greater source of regret to this Government than anything contained in the representations I was called upon to make. Your Lordship will find this very forcibly stated in the concluding passages of Count Nesselrode's despatch.

No. 5.—Lord Heytesbury to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Oct. 30.)
(Extract.) St. Petersburg, October 1, 1831.

As the time is fast approaching when the promulgation of the Emperor's decision with respect to the future fate of Poland may be expected, I am naturally anxious to receive from your Lordship instructions of rather a more specific and positive character than those contained in the despatch which your Lordship did me the honour to address to me on the 22nd of March last. I am therein instructed, "that if I should find there exists any intention on the part of the Russian Government to make any material changes in the political condition of Poland, I am to watch those changes with the closest attention, and to remonstrate in strong terms against any measure which might not be in strict accordance with the stipulations of the Treaty of Vienna."

Now, the stipulations of the Treaty of Vienna are of so vague and general a nature that an entire and radical change may be effected in the political condition of Poland without the violation of any one of them.

The Treaty of Vienna merely states: "Le Duché de Varsovie est réuni à l'Empire de Russie. Il y sera lié irrévocablement par sa constitution, pour être possédé par Sa Majesté l'Empereur de toutes les Russies, ses héritiers et ses successeurs, à perpétuité. Sa Majesté Impériale se réserve de donner à cet état, jouissant d'une administration distincte, l'extention intérieure quelle jugera convenable. Elle prendra avec ses autres titres, celui de Czar, Roi de Pologne, conformément au Protocole usité, et consacré pour les titres attachés à ses autres possessions."

"Les Polonais, sujets respectifs de la Russie, de l'Autriche, et de la Prusse, obtiendront une représentation et des institutions nationales réglées d'après le mode d'existence politique que chacun des Gouvernements auxquels ils appartiennent jugera utile et convenable de leur accorder."

In the mass of documents relating to the Vienna negotiations with which your Lordship has furnished me, I find, indeed, a great deal of discussion upon other points, but no positive engagements taken with respect to the Kingdom of Poland, beyond that of giving to it a constitution by which it shall be bound to the Russian Empire, and that of maintaining its distinct administration.

The maintenance of a distinct administration is easily understood, and no doubt could possibly occur; in that case a remonstrance would be necessary. But a constitution, the particular forms of which are nowhere specified, is a term of the most vague signification. The word itself does not necessarily imply even a representative form of government, though that a representation was meant, may be assumed from the introduction of that term in the latter paragraph of the Article, which relates more particularly to the Polish provinces not included in the kingdom. But the simple word "constitution," means any thing or nothing. It requires definition to be comprehended.

To the constitution given to Poland after the conclusion of the Treaty of Vienna, it does not appear that the other Powers were either parties or guarantees. Indeed, it might be impossible for foreign Powers to guarantee a particular and unchangeable form of government to any country. The Emperor Alexander reserved to himself the right of giving that special constitution to Poland which he himself should consider to be best adapted to the country. Such a constitution he gave, and once given, we might perhaps be justified in holding it to be the particular form of government contemplated in the Treaty, and consequently, more or less, under our protection. But then, on the other hand, it appears that this constitution has already been altered and modified upon several occasions, without the slightest reference to foreign Powers, and without the slightest remonstrance on their part, first by the Emperor, and more recently, and more radically, by the Poles themselves, since they have thrown off their allegiance to their Sovereign. Under these circumstances, it is impossible for me to determine, without a further reference to your Lordship, to what extent modification may be carried without its being considered by the British Government to be a violation of existing engagements.

Upon the subject of a national army in Poland, after all that has passed, I am thoroughly persuaded that neither Austria nor Prussia will oppose its dissolution, the more particularly as its continued existence forms no part of the stipulations of the Treaty of Vienna; France may be more anxious upon the subject, but this will certainly render Russia immovable in her determination to disband it.

The general sentiments of the British Government on the Polish question are perfectly well known at St. Petersburg. Your Lordship's conversations with Prince Lieven, and the communications I have been charged to make here, can have left no doubt upon the subject.

I have been constantly assured in reply, that the stipulations of the Treaty of Vienna will be strictly attended to, but this assurance amounts to little or nothing, for the stipulations themselves amount to little or nothing. Yet I am not authorized to ask more, certainly not under my present instructions, and, therefore, if your Lordship should now deem it necessary to go further, it will be expedient that your intentions should be made known to me, before any arrangements shall be finally determined on. What it may be the intention of the Russian Government to do, after the final pacification of Poland, I believe nobody can exactly tell, nor is it perhaps altogether decided. But, from the reports in circulation, I am inclined to believe, that though the kingdom will be maintained in its integrity, with a distinct and separate administration, the army will be entirely disbanded, and the constitution very considerably modified. Such measures would not be any violation of the Treaty of Vienna, however much at variance with the spirit in which that Treaty was negotiated.

HEYTESBURY.

No. 6.—Viscount Palmerston to Lord Heytesbury.

MY LORD,

Foreign Office, November 23, 1831.

I HAVE received your Excellency's despatches reporting the opinion which prevails in St. Petersburg that some considerable change is intended to be made in the Constitution of the Kingdom of Poland, explaining the arguments by which that supposed intention is defended, and asking for further instructions as to the course which your Excellency is to pursue with respect to the affairs of Poland in general.

His Majesty's Government have watched with unceasing interest and anxiety the progress of the contest in Poland. These feelings have been made known to your Excellency by the several communications which you have received from me, while they have not been concealed from the representative of His Majesty the Emperor of Russia at the Court of London. You have also been apprized of the grounds upon which His Majesty's Government considered it not to be advisable to interfere directly in the contest between the Emperor of Russia and his Polish subjects.

The war being now over, and the authority of the Emperor as King being completely re-established in Poland, the time is come when His Majesty feels himself justified, both by his friendship for the Emperor of Russia and by the duty resulting from the obligations which he has contracted under the Treaty of Vienna, in addressing to His Imperial Majesty, in the most amicable tone, and with the deference which is due to his rights as an independent Sovereign, some observations as to the best mode of resettling the Kingdom of Poland under the dominion of the Emperor, on principles accordant with those on which its union with the Imperial Crown of Russia was originally formed, and in such a manner as may be most conducive to its future good government and tranquillity.

Your Excellency has already been instructed, by my despatch of the 22nd March last, to express the confidence of His Majesty's Government that His Imperial Majesty would use his victory, when it should be obtained, with the moderation and mercy congenial with the high-minded and generous sentiments which are well known to animate the mind of His Imperial Majesty. It is, therefore, without any the slightest doubt of His Imperial Majesty's benevolent and merciful disposition, that I am commanded to instruct you to urge, whenever you may find a fit opportunity to do so, those considerations, both of humanity and policy, which cannot fail to find advocates in His Imperial Majesty's own feelings, and which would recommend the greatest forbearance and lenity in the treatment of his Polish subjects who, by the success of His Majesty's arms, have been again reduced to obedience.

Above all, your Excellency is instructed to represent to the Russian Government how much severities of any kind, not authorized by the laws and Constitution of Poland, are to be avoided. If it should appear, therefore, that there is any intention of proceeding to measures of proscription and confiscation, as has been reported, you are instructed to represent to His Imperial Majesty's Government the impolicy and injustice of proceedings that would violate the Constitution, which, according to the stipulation of the Treaty of Vienna, was granted by the Emperor Alexander to Poland, and by which it is provided that no man shall be punished except by virtue of existing laws, and no criminal banished except by process of law, and by which the penalty of confiscation is forever abolished.

His Majesty's Government, indeed, under all the circumstances of the case, would earnestly recommend a full and complete amnesty, from which those persons only should be excepted who have been guilty of the crime of assassination, and whose punishment would be effected by the ordinary course of justice.

This measure would appear to be one of the soundest policy. It could not in any degree weaken His Imperial Majesty's authority nor detract from his honour, being adopted at a moment when his power could no longer be resisted, and when such a measure could appear to be dictated only by the purest motives of benevolence and mercy. It could not fail to soothe the irritated feelings of the Poles, and to give them confidence in the Government, by preventing them from being exposed individually to vengeance; and it would do infinitely more than any harsh display of severity to reproduce among them those feelings of obedience to the Government which are necessary to its security and peace, and which cannot be expected under a system which might keep them in a state of continued insecurity and apprehension.

In this case, therefore, generosity and sound policy appear to go hand in hand, in suggesting that in order to make the possession of Poland conducive to the strength and prosperity of Russia, it is necessary for the Russian Government to conciliate the affections of the Poles, and to obliterate, instead of perpetuating, the traces of the recent contest.

The Poles have displayed, during the late war, qualities both of intellect and courage, which prove them capable of being either useful or dangerous subjects, according to the manner in which they may be governed. It is needless to point out the resources which may be drawn from 4,000,000 of people, full of activity, enterprize, and intelligence, provided they are attached to their Sovereign, and contented with their political condition. But such a people must necessarily become a source of embarrassment and weakness if they are kept in a state of exasperation and discontent, which will only be controlled so long as no favourable opportunity shall occur to excite them into action.

Is it on the very frontier of an empire, and in contact with military neighbours, that a wise Government would wish to place such elements of danger? Is it in the very outworks of defence that a prudent administration would incur the risk of having a population disaffected to its Government, and ready to join any invader who might promise them a milder rule and a better fate?

It is, then, not more upon principles of humanity than upon a friendly regard for the interests and the honour of Russia that His Majesty's Government instruct you earnestly to press upon the Russian Government a general and complete amnesty; an act which is understood to have been spontaneously offered by the Emperor on more than one occasion during the war, and which His Majesty's Government have reason to believe is also recommended by other allies of His Imperial Majesty.

Your Excellency was instructed in a former despatch to state that His Majesty's Government could not see with indifference the Poles deprived of the advantages which had been secured to them by the Treaty of Vienna. These advantages consisted in the stipulation that a Constitution should be granted to them, and in the Constitution which, in consequence of that stipulation, they afterwards received from the Emperor Alexander.

His Majesty's Government is not unmindful of the arguments which you state to have been adduced to prove that the Polish Constitution is in no degree identified with the Treaty of Vienna; but the validity of this reasoning cannot, as it appears to them, be maintained.

The Treaty of Vienna declared that the Kingdom of Poland should be attached to Russia by its Constitution. A Constitution the Emperor of Russia accordingly gave; and it surely is no forced construction of the meaning of that Treaty to consider the Constitution so given as existing thenceforth under the sanction of the Treaty. But it is argued, that the same Power which gave may modify or take away. This, however, is an assertion for which no proof is afforded. The Constitution once given, became the link which, under the Treaty, binds the Kingdom of Poland to the Empire of Russia; and can that link remain unimpaired, if the Constitution should not be maintained?

Had the Constitution reserved to the Sovereign a right to change or modify, no objection could then have been made to the exercise of a power which would legally have been his. But the Constitution carefully guards against any such acts of executive authority. It declares (Article XXXI) that the Polish nation shall for ever possess a national representation, consisting of a Diet, composed of a King and 2 Chambers; it declares (Article CLXIII) that the Organic Statutes and the Codes of Laws cannot be modified or changed, except by the King and the 2 Chambers: it requires (Article XLV) that every King of Poland shall swear before God, and upon the Scriptures, to maintain the Constitution, and cause it to be executed to the best of his power; and the Emperor Alexander on the 27th November, 1815, formally gave this Constitution, and declared that he adopted it for himself and for his successors.

Such are the provisions of the Constitution, which points out the authority by which any change or modification is to be made; and changes arbitrarily effected by the executive authority alone would obviously be violations of the Constitution.

It appears that some persons suppose the intention of the Russian Government to be to abolish the present form of Government in Poland, consisting of a Diet composed of a King and 2 Chambers, and to substitute for the Chambers Provincial States such as those which have been established in Galicia and in some of the provinces of Prussia: and it is argued that such a change would still leave to Poland a Constitution sufficient to satisfy the stipulations of the Treaty of Vienna. But could such a form of government, fairly, and according either to the letter or the spirit of the Treaty of Vienna, be considered as placing Poland in the situation which was thereby contemplated? That Treaty clearly appears to draw a marked distinction between the system of government to be established in those parts of Poland which had been annexed as provinces to Austria, Prussia, and Russia, and had been incorporated in their respective dominions, and that part which was to form the separate Kingdom of Poland, and which was to be placed, as such, under the same Sovereign as Russia, and secured in the enjoyment of its distinct rights and privileges.

In the former provinces, accordingly, the grant of Provincial States was perfectly in accordance with the rights to be exercised by the Sovereign over provinces that were incorporated with his other dominions; while the Constitution given to the Kingdom of Poland was suited to the separate and distinct position in which it was placed in its relation to the Russian Empire.

But in the separate Kingdom of Poland, united according to the Treaty of Vienna by its Constitution with the Crown of Russia, to abrogate that Constitution, and to substitute provincial States, expressly modelled after those which had been granted to the incorporated provinces of Austria and Prussia, would be, in effect, to reduce that Kingdom, though still nominally possessing a separate existence, to the state and condition of a province, deprived of all the rights, and excluded from all the advantages which had been secured to it.

It cannot be admitted that the revolt of the Poles, and their violation of the Constitution by voting the separation of Poland from the Crown of Russia, can absolve the Emperor, after his authority has been re-established, from his obligation to adhere to that Constitution. Wrongs committed by one side are not to be punished by the commission of wrongs on the other. From the submission of the Poles to the arms of His Imperial Majesty, Europe looks for the re-establishment of law and justice, and not for acts of retaliation and vengeance; since whatever excuse such acts may find in the troubles of an intestine war, they could not be palliated if resorted to by a Power which has subdued all opposition, and which cannot plead for its measures the necessity of any pressing emergency.

It has often been stated in the Proclamations which have been issued by the Russian Government from time to time during the war, that only a part of the Poles had joined in the revolt, and that the majority of the nation remained faithful. If that be so it affords a strong argument for not punishing the innocent for the offences of the guilty, by depriving all of the advantages which the Constitution confers upon them.

If, on the contrary, the whole of the nation should appear to have partaken in the revolt, such a general insurrection could only have proceeded from deeply-seated discontent, and such a feeling is not likely to be removed by a sweeping abrogation of the Constitution.

In pressing these considerations upon the Russian Government, your Excellency will be careful that while, on the one hand, you urge, as far as possible, the arguments which have been suggested, you do not, on the other, depart from that tone of friendly representation which is suited to the amicable relations existing between Great Britain and Russia.

I am, &c.

Lord Heytesbury.

PALMERSTON.

No. 7.—Lord Heytesbury to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Jan. 18.)

MY LORD,

St. Petersburg, January 2, 1832.

THE answer of the Russian Government upon the Polish question is such as I feared it would be, namely, a refusal to admit our interpretation of the Treaty of Vienna, and a determination to persevere in the arrangements previously announced.

The despatch to Prince Lieven in which this answer is conveyed, was given to me to read by Count Nesselrode this evening. It will be sent off by a messenger to-morrow, who will also be the bearer of this despatch. It will, no doubt, give your Lordship great regret to observe the little effect produced by your arguments. Those with which I endeavoured to support them have proved equally unsuccessful. There is an instinct of self-preservation stronger than all the arguments in the world, and against which no reasoning can prevail. This Government is persuaded that its own security depends upon the suppression of privileges, which already in fifteen short years have borne such bitter fruit, and your Lordship may be assured that nothing short of positive inability will prevent their suppression, in so far, at least, as it can be done without any direct violation of the strict letter of the Treaty of Vienna.

The despatch to Prince Lieven (which he will receive orders to communicate to your Lordship) is, however, courteous and friendly in its tone, though firm and positive in its rejection of our suggestions, and clearly expressive of the hope that they will be the last. All the arguments of your Lordship's despatch are recapitulated and replied to in detail; and these replies are based upon the same chain of reasoning which I have already had the honour of detailing to your Lordship upon more than one occasion. But the real motives which led to the rejection of our suggestions are not those put most prominently forward, nor, indeed, are these more than obscurely hinted at in Count Nesselrode's despatch, which is principally occupied with explanations of the engagements contracted by the Treaty of Vienna. They are, however, very easily summed up. In the first place, it is believed that no measures of conciliation or favour would ever reconcile the higher classes in Poland to Russian dominion; 2ndly, that a restoration of privileges, therefore, would only be the restoration of the powers of resistance; and, 3rdly, that even if means could be found to paralyse those powers, the peaceable co-existence for any long period, and under the same sceptre, of absolute government in Russia, and constitutional liberty in Poland, would be impossible.

These are, I apprehend, the real motives for the refusal to listen to our arguments. The question is a question of life or death to this Government. It feels it to be so; the public at large feel it to be so; and the refusal will, I fear, be steadily persisted in, let the consequences be what they may.

It must not, however, be concluded that our efforts in favour of the Poles have been entirely thrown away. It will be sufficient to cast our eyes towards the Russo-Polish provinces not included in the Kingdom of Poland, and, consequently, out of the reach of foreign intervention, to be convinced of the contrary. In the Kingdom of Poland, setting out of the question those accused of assassination and the officers of the 3 corps of Kaminski, Rybinski, and Ramorino, who form a class apart, and who are now gradually returning to their homes, upon consenting to renew their oaths of allegiance, there are not above 20 individuals excluded from the amnesty, or who will suffer for their political conduct. But in the Russo-Polish provinces incorporated with the Empire, confiscation of property, exile, or deportation to Siberia are the general lot. Not an individual has been suffered to escape who took any active part in the Revolution. This different measure of punishment, though it speaks little, perhaps, in favour of the clemency of this Government, shows clearly the effect of foreign intervention. We may not have gained much; but we, at least, have the consolation of reflecting that the course pursued would have been infinitely more severe had we not taken the line we did.

No. 8.—Count Nesselrode to Prince Lieven.—(Communicated to Viscount Palmerston by Prince Lieven, January 18, 1832.)

MON PRINCE,

St. Pétersbourg, le ^{22 Décembre 1831}
3 Janvier, 1832.

PAR mon expédition du $\frac{3}{18}$ Décembre, j'ai eu l'honneur d'entretenir préalablement votre Altesse de l'objet des communications que Lord Heytesbury venait de nous adresser, par ordre de sa Cour, relativement aux affaires de Pologne. Ayant depuis pris les ordres de l'Empereur je me trouve à même de vous faire connaître, mon Prince, le point de vue sous lequel Sa Majesté envisage ces communications.

Elles se divisent en 2 parties distinctes. Ce sont d'abord des conseils bienveillants, offerts à l'Empereur sur les moyens les plus propres à calmer les esprits en Pologne, à leur inspirer de la confiance, à effacer, en un mot, les traces de la lutte sanglante à laquelle la victoire des armes Russes vient de mettre un terme, et en second lien, quelques observations sur l'interprétation des Articles du Traité de Vienne auxquels le Royaume de Pologne doit son existence.

En nous adressant ces observations et ces conseils, le Cabinet Britannique a reconnu combien était délicate la tâche qu'il a cru devoir s'imposer. Aussi son langage dans cette circonstance est-il empreint de tous les ménagements que l'amitié a pu inspirer, et des justes égards auxquels l'Empereur était en droit de s'attendre. Sa Majesté Impériale y a été sensible, et elle y a trouvé un motif de m'autoriser à répondre en détail aux communications de Lord Heytesbury, bien que nos déclarations antérieures auraient dû ne laisser aucun doute sur les sentiments et les intentions de l'Empereur à l'égard des affaires de Pologne. Votre Altesse a été plus d'une fois dans le cas d'assurer, de la manière la plus formelle, les Ministres de Sa Majesté Britannique que l'Empereur n'a jamais eu, ni ne saurait avoir, la pensée de s'écarter des stipulations du Traité de Vienne, mais qu'il est fermement décidé à ne point admettre d'intervention étrangère dans des questions qui sont exclusivement de son ressort. Ce que nous demandions en même temps, c'est une interprétation loyale et équitable des Articles du Traité qui déterminent le mode d'existence du Royaume de Pologne. Or, nous voyons à regret que celui de ces Articles qui stipule que le Royaume de Pologne sera lié à la Russie par sa Constitution à donné lieu, même dans le Cabinet Britannique, à des conclusions sur lesquelles nous ne saurions partager son opinion. Pour peu qu'on veuille examiner cette clause avec impartialité, on se convaincra qu'elle n'a été insérée dans le Traité que pour exprimer que l'union du Royaume à la Russie doit être le principe fondamental et la condition de sa nouvelle existence. Cette clause n'impose donc à la Russie d'autre obligation que celle de maintenir l'union que le Traité avait formée. S'il avait été de l'intention des Parties Contractantes de stipuler en faveur du Royaume une charte spéciale, et de la lui garantir, nul doute qu'une telle stipulation n'eût été conçue d'une manière plus explicite et plus formelle. Loin de là, on s'est borné dans un paragraphe subséquent, à assurer aux Polonais sujets respectifs de Russie, d'Autriche, et de Prusse, des institutions nationales, en réservant à chacun des 3 Gouvernements la faculté de les régler selon qu'il le jugerait utile et convenable. La Constitution que dans sa magnanimité l'Empereur Alexandre de glorieuse mémoire accorda au Royaume, ne fut donc point une conséquence du Traité de Vienne, mais une acte spontané de son pouvoir souverain. Postérieure par sa date aux transactions du Recès, elle n'en fait point partie, et leur garantie ne s'étend point à elle. Si la Constitution de Pologne avait été donnée en exécution du Traité de Vienne, les Puissances Contractantes auraient eu le droit d'en prendre connaissance, et de s'assurer qu'elle répond aux engagements contractés par la Russie. Aucune d'elles n'a réclamé ce droit, ni ne pouvait le réclamer légalement. Toutes ont reconnu au contraire, soit explicitement, soit par leur silence, qu'en octroyant cette Constitution à ses nouveaux sujets, l'Empereur avait suivi l'impulsion de sa libre volonté.

En envisageant la question sous ce point de vue, l'on conviendra que puisque les Polonais ont eux-mêmes, par leur rébellion et leur décret de déchéance, annulé la Constitution du Royaume, rien n'oblige l'Empereur de la rétablir, et que Sa Majesté Impériale se trouve, au contraire, replacée dans la situation facultative où était son auguste prédécesseur lorsque, aux termes du Traité de Vienne, il avait encore à choisir le mode d'existence politique qu'il jugerait utile et convenable d'accorder à ses nouveaux sujets Polonais. Sous ce rapport, les engagements que la Russie a contractés sont les mêmes pour les 3 Puissances, et il serait difficile de prouver que l'Empereur fut tenu envers le Royaume de Pologne à des concessions que n'ont pas obtenues la Galicie ni le Grand Duché de Posen.

Nous avons dit plus haut, mon Prince, que la Constitution Polonaise a été annulée par le fait de la rébellion. Aurions-nous besoin de le démontrer ? Il est connu que de Gouvernement à Gouvernement les Traités et Conventions librement consentis de part et d'autre, sont anéantis par l'état de guerre, et ont besoin d'être renouvelés, ou de moins expressément confirmés à la paix. A plus forte raison il en est ainsi d'un acte qui n'est point bilatéral, d'un acte accordé par un Souverain à ses sujets, et dont la première condition est l'obéissance et la fidélité de ceux-ci. A plus forte raison, dis-je, un pareil acte se trouve annulé par l'état de guerre, lorsque la guerre est forcément amenée, à la suite de l'insurrection et de la trahison.

Ceci répond, mon Prince, aux citations que Lord Palmerston a cru devoir faire de divers Articles de la Constitution Polonaise, pour en déduire l'obligation où serait l'Empereur de la rétablir. Frappée de nullité dans son ensemble, elle l'est aussi dans chacune de ses stipulations, et nous ne saurions, par conséquent, accorder aucune valeur aux différentes clauses que l'on voudrait encore en invoquer.

En traitant cette question le Ministère Britannique a distingué, ainsi que nous l'avons observé plus haut, l'examen des Traités existants d'avec les considérations qui lui semblent fondées sur les convenances politiques. Nous croyons avoir montré que dans les arrangements qui concernent la Pologne, l'Empereur ne s'écarte pas des Traités, mais que ceux-ci ne renferment aucune stipulation qui puisse être invoquée pour le rétablissement de la Constitution Polonaise. Les arguments que nous avons développés ne sont pas nouveaux. L'Autriche et la Prusse les ont fait valoir avant nous, et le Ministère Britannique aura pu se convaincre, par la langage que ces 2 Puissances ont prescrit à leurs Représentants à Londres et à Paris, qu'il existe relativement à l'interprétation et à l'application du Traité du ^{31 Avril,}_{3 Mai,} 1815, une entière uniformité de vues et de principes entre les 3 Cours qui en sont spécialement les Parties Contractantes.

Pour ce qui est des convenances politiques, rien de plus judicieux, sans doute, que les considérations dans lesquelles le Ministère Anglais a cru devoir entrer ; rien de plus amical que les conseils qui en découlent. L'Empereur se plaît à en offrir ses remerciements au Cabinet de Sa Majesté Britannique, mais il se flatte que ce Cabinet ne se refusera point à vouer de justes égards à la position du Gouvernement Impérial, et aux devoirs qu'elle lui impose. Les questions dont il s'agit touchent trop directement aux intérêts de sa Couronne, et à ceux de son Empire, pour que Sa Majesté Impériale ne croie, avant tout, devoir consulter ces mêmes intérêts, dans les déterminations qui lui restent à prendre.

Ce n'est pas pour infliger aux Polonais un châtiment bien mérité, sans doute, que l'Empereur a résolu de ne plus faire revivre une Constitution qu'ils ont eux-mêmes foulée aux pieds, mais parceque l'expérience a prouvé que cette Constitution n'est pas le moyen le plus propre à assurer la tranquillité, et, par conséquent, le bonheur du pays ; que loin d'avoir pu prévenir les désastres dont la Pologne a été le théâtre, c'est elle qui a, pendant 15 ans, alimenté parmi les Polonais cet esprit inquiet et remuant que la première étincelle a fait éclater en révolte ouverte. Or, nous laissons les Ministres Anglais juger eux-mêmes, s'il serait prudent et d'une saine politique de laisser subsister des institutions qui ont si peu répondu aux vues bienfaisantes de leur auguste fondateur, et dont il a été fait un si criminel abus.

Pour ce qui regarde l'appel que le Cabinet Britannique fait aux sentiments de clémence et d'humanité de notre auguste Maître, Sa Majesté y a répondu d'avance par le manifeste d'amnistie du 20 Octobre. Tous nos allies, mon Prince, ont applaudi à cet acte. La France seule avait cru devoir insister sur une amnistie générale, sans exception aucune. Mais elle paraît être revenue depuis à des dispositions plus équitables. Peut-être le Gouvernement Français reconnaîtra-t-il avec le temps, qu'il est dans son propre intérêt que la révolte ne reste pas impunie, et qu'il se consolide et se fortifie lui-même en raison de l'affaiblissement du parti Révolutionnaire en France comme dans d'autres pays.

Tels sont les arguments que nous opposerions, mon Prince, aux suggestions que renferment les communications du Ministère Anglais par rapport à une amnistie pleine et entière. Nous aimons à croire d'ailleurs, que ce Ministère n'y insistera pas plus que celui du Roi Louis Philippe, et qu'il jugera même avec plus d'impartialité les actes du Gouvernement Impérial.

Tous les efforts et tous les soins de l'Empereur tendent à amener la pacification morale du royaume, c'est-à-dire, à calmer les esprits, à faire cesser les irritations, suite nécessaire d'une lutte sanglante et désastreuse, et à amener graduellement une réconciliation sincère entre 2 peuples réunis sous le même sceptre. Sa Majesté Impériale nourrit le juste espoir qu'à l'aide de la Divine Providence elle remplira cette tâche salutaire; mais ce qui doit en retarder l'accomplissement, entretenir une certaine agitation parmi les Polonais, encourager les coupables espérances de ceux qui persistent dans leur opposition au Gouvernement légitime, c'est l'intervention étrangère dans les affaires de la Pologne, c'est l'inquiète surveillance que l'on exerce sur ce qui se passe dans ce pays, la fausse interprétation que l'on donne aux Traités, c'est le droit de patronage que l'on paraît vouloir s'attribuer sur ceux des Polonais qui sont exclus de l'amnistie, ou qui en repoussent les bienfaits. Ce déplorable système que la propagande a fait adopter en France, et qui depuis a été imité dans plus d'un pays, a déjà eu les plus funestes conséquences pour le Royaume de Pologne. Il est en grande partie la cause de l'opiniâtre résistance des Polonais, qui a prolongé la lutte au delà de tous les calculs. Il peut encore faire un mal infini, si les Gouvernements ne cherchent pas, au moins par leur exemple, à paralyser les effets d'une tendance qui se manifeste si généralement, s'ils ne consentent pas à s'en remettre de bonne foi pour le sort futur du Royaume de Pologne à la sagesse et aux sentiments de l'Empereur, à la connaissance qu'il doit avoir lui-même des vrais intérêts de son Gouvernement et de ses peuples, au respect qu'il a sans cesse professé pour les Traités existants, enfin, à la sollicitude que lui inspirent le bonheur de ces sujets, la réparation des maux qu'une époque de désastres leur a causés, et le besoin d'en prévenir à jamais le retour.

C'est surtout de la part du Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique que notre auguste maître croit pouvoir s'attendre à ce témoignage de confiance et d'égards. La marche politique de son Cabinet, dont l'Angleterre a tant de fois été à même d'apprécier la franchise et la loyauté, en donne le droit à Sa Majesté Impériale. D'autre part, le Gouvernement Britannique ne se trouve pas dans la fâcheuse nécessité d'obtempérer aux exigences d'un parti qui ne cherche qu'à troubler les relations amicales entre les Puissances et à parvenir ainsi au but de ses efforts, c'est-à-dire, à un bouleversement général. Ce Gouvernement usera donc de sa force pour se maintenir sur la ligne de conduite que lui tracent ses principes de justice et la sagesse de ses conseils. Par une suite nécessaire, il respectera les droits de l'Empereur dans la plus juste des causes.

Nous venons de nous expliquer, mon Prince, avec une entière franchise sur l'objet des communications que Lord Heytesbury nous a faites par ordre de sa Cour. Nous le devons aux liens d'amitié qui unissent les 2 Gouvernements, et que l'Empereur aimera toujours à cimenter. Nous le devons surtout au caractère amical qui a présidé à ces communications. Mais Sa Majesté Impériale croit pouvoir se flatter que nos explications seront de nature à satisfaire le Gouvernement Britannique, et que c'est pour la dernière fois qu'elle se trouve dans le cas de s'expliquer sur des questions dont elle seule est appelée à connaître. Sa Majesté le désire d'autant plus vivement qu'elle met un prix infini à rendre de plus en plus intimes ses relations avec le Gouvernement Britannique, et qu'il lui importe d'en écarter tout ce qui pourrait leur nuire.

Votre Altesse voudra bien exprimer ce vœu à Lord Palmerston, en lui communiquant le contenu de la présent dépêche.

Recevez, &c.

NESSELRODE.

No. 9.—Lord Heytesbury to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. Jan. 24.)
(Extract.) St. Petersburg, January 4, 1832.

IN looking over the despatches which I had the honour of forwarding to your Lordship by the Russian courier who left St. Petersburg yesterday, it appears to me that I have not sufficiently explained how far this Government intends to carry the suppression of the privileges enjoyed by the Poles previously to the late revolution. It may be right, therefore, to state that, according to the information I have received, there exists no intention of making any other change in the political condition of Poland besides that of substituting Provincial Assemblies for the former General Diet, and that of disbanding its army. The Provincial Assemblies will be modelled upon those established in the Grand Duchy of Posen, which are understood to be rather of a more liberal form than those of Galicia. They will, however, be very far from presenting any sort of analogy with the Diet it is proposed to abolish.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

HEYTESBURY.

No. 10.—Viscount Palmerston to Lord Heytesbury.

MY LORD,

Foreign Office, March 12, 1832.

VARIOUS circumstances have prevented me from sooner transmitting to your Excellency the inclosed copy of a despatch from Count Nesselrode upon the affairs of Poland, which was communicated to me by Prince Lieven on the 18th of January last, and which contains the answer of the Russian Cabinet to the despatch which I addressed to your Excellency on the same subject on the 23rd November, 1831.

The friendly tone of Count Nesselrode's despatch, and the expressions which it contains of confidence in the principles and intentions of the British Cabinet, are most satisfactory, as proving that the reciprocal sentiments of the 2 Governments are the same, and that the Russian Minister has justly appreciated the spirit of friendship and good-will which dictated the observations contained in my despatch to your Excellency of the 23rd November.

His Majesty's Government, indeed, in instructing you to make that communication, could not forget that it was addressed to an independent and friendly Government. In stating, therefore, plainly and without reserve, their deliberate and fixed opinions upon the true interpretation of a Treaty to which Great Britain is a Contracting Party, they were anxious to discharge that duty in a manner which should leave no doubt of their being actuated by all the deference and respect to which every independent State is entitled, but which are so peculiarly and eminently due to the personal character of His Majesty the Emperor of Russia.

His Majesty's Government is fully sensible of the delicacy of the questions at issue, involving, as they do, the relations between a Sovereign and his subjects; matters upon which, under ordinary circumstances, and when those relations are not interwoven with the stipulations of Treaties, the most well-meant and friendliest interposition must at best be of doubtful expediency.

Having, therefore, distinctly expressed its sentiments, His Majesty's Government might have deemed it unnecessary to make any reply to the despatch of Count Nesselrode, were it not that from a passage towards the conclusion of that despatch, there seems reason to apprehend that the silence of his Majesty's Government might be liable to misinterpretation, and might be construed as implying that the explanations given in that despatch were entirely satisfactory to His Majesty's Government.

However deep, therefore, may be the anxiety felt by His Majesty's Government to render more and more intimate the relations of confidential friendship which unite the 2 Governments, and to avoid, as far as possible, every subject of discussion by which those relations might be affected, yet His Majesty's Government cannot, in justice to themselves, allow any doubt or uncertainty to exist as to their opinions upon a matter of so much interest and importance.

It is essential, then, that your Excellency should State that His Majesty's Government, after giving the most attentive consideration to the arguments used in Count Nesselrode's despatch, are still of opinion that the reasoning contained in my despatch of the 23rd November, 1831, with respect to the engagements and sanctions by which the Polish Constitution was secured, has not been satisfactorily answered.

It is not necessary for the present purpose that I should enter into any detailed reply to Count Nesselrode's statement, but there are one or two passages which bear upon important points, and upon which a few remarks appear to be required.

In my despatch of the 23rd November, 1831, I endeavoured to show that, by the words of Article I of the Treaty of Vienna, a marked distinction was made between the system of government to be established in the Kingdom of Poland, and that of the Polish provinces incorporated with Austria, Prussia, and Russia; and I argued that a change which would have the effect of reducing the separate Kingdom of Poland to the same administrative condition with the incorporated provinces, could not be consistent, either with the spirit or the letter of the Treaty. His Majesty's Government cannot admit the validity of the answer given by Count Nesselrode to this argument. He contends that the stipulation which provides that Poland should be united by its Constitution had no meaning, except to express that union with Russia should be the fundamental principle of the existence of Poland. But if this had really been the only object of that clause, why were the words "by its Constitution" inserted, seeing that, in that case, it would have been sufficient and more plain, to have declared simply that Poland should be inseparably united with Russia.

Count Nesselrode, however, states that no specific Constitution having been stipulated for the Kingdom of Poland, the Emperor retained the right of granting to it such charter as he might please; and this the Count asserts to be corroborated by the subsequent paragraph, which declares that the incorporated provinces shall receive such national institutions as their respective Sovereigns shall think fit to give them. He then goes on to assert that the Polish rebellion has annulled the Constitution, and has restored to the Emperor the discretionary power which his august predecessor possessed, when, according to the terms of the Treaty of Vienna, he still had to choose the mode of political existence which he might judge fit to grant to his new Polish subjects. On this assumption, Count Nesselrode proceeds to say that the engagements of Russia are the same as those of Austria and Prussia; and that it would be difficult to show any obligation on the part of the Emperor to make to the Kingdom of Poland, concessions which have not been obtained by Gallicia and the Duchy of Posen.

A slight attention to the words of Article I of the Treaty will show the want of logical connection in this series of deductions. In the beginning of the passage which has been referred to, words which apply solely to the incorporated provinces, are quoted simply as illustrating the meaning of other and preceding words, which apply solely to the kingdom of Poland. Further on, the first-mentioned words are insensibly separated from the object to which they are applied in the Treaty, and are transferred to an object to which they do not belong. The terms which in the Treaty relate to the old Polish subjects of Russia are incorrectly represented as applying to her new Polish subjects ; and this erroneous basis being thus established, there is immediately founded upon it the mistaken conclusion that the engagements of Russia, with respect to the kingdom, are the same with those of Austria towards Gallicia, and of Prussia towards Posen. This position, if granted, would lead to the inference that, consistently with the Treaty, the kingdom might be incorporated, as a province, with the Russian Empire ; an assertion evidently inconsistent with the admitted object of the Treaty, and for which the Russian Government do not even contend.

With regard to the argument that because war between 2 separate States dissolves Treaties, therefore a civil contest between a Sovereign and his subjects annuls the Constitution of the country in which that contest may take place, His Majesty's Government must still contend that the view of this matter which was taken in your instructions of November last was more correct, and more conformable with reason and justice, especially in a case in which abstract rights are mixed up with conventional agreements.

Count Nesselrode, indeed, states that the view which the Russian Government takes of the Treaty of Vienna is shared also by the Governments of Prussia and Austria, and that there is, on this subject, an entire uniformity of views and principles between the 3 Courts which are specially the Contracting Parties to the Treaty of the ^{21st April,}_{3rd May,} 1815.

Upon this it is to be observed, that the Treaty here quoted is not the Treaty upon which the arguments of His Majesty's Government are founded. The Treaty, or rather the Treaties, for there were 2 of the ^{21st April,}_{3rd May,} 1815, were between Russia and Austria, and Russia and Prussia. To those Treaties Great Britain was not directly a Contracting Party. The Treaty to which His Majesty's Government have appealed is the Treaty of the 9th June, 1815, and to that Treaty His Majesty's Government cannot admit that Austria, Prussia, and Russia were Contracting Parties in a greater or more special degree than the other Powers who signed it.

It is hoped that upon reflection the Russian Government cannot fail to see all the inconvenient and dangerous consequences which would flow from thus establishing different degrees of obligation among the Powers who have equally signed a general Treaty. It is certainly true, that the 3 Powers in question are specially interested in the execution of Article I of the Treaty of the 9th of June, 1815 ; but that very circumstance would, perhaps, rather lead them to examine with more peculiar attention the bearing and interpretation of that Article, and candidly to weigh the construction which may be put upon it by those of their Allies whose interests it does not so directly and immediately affect.

Having explained, in the outset of this despatch, the reasons which have led His Majesty's Government to think it to be necessary, I have only further to instruct your Excellency, in communicating its contents to Count Nesselrode, to convey to his Excellency renewed assurances of the earnest desire of His Majesty to maintain the closest relations of friendship and alliance with His Majesty the Emperor of Russia.

Lord Heytesbury.

PALMERSTON.

No. 11.—Viscount Palmerston to Lord Durham.

(Extract.)

Foreign Office, July 3, 1832.

It is impossible to give your Lordship instructions for your guidance without adverting to the subject of Poland.

You will find in the archives of the Embassy a record of the opinions of His Majesty's Government upon the proceedings of Russia with respect to Poland, and of the manner in which those opinions have at different times been communicated to the Russian Government. Those opinions remain unaltered. His Majesty's Government think that Russia was not justified by the Polish insurrection in depriving the Kingdom of Poland of that Constitution which the Emperor Alexander had granted, and which the Emperor Nicholas had sworn to maintain. His Majesty's Government think that the abrogation of that Constitution was inconsistent with the true spirit and meaning of the Treaty of Vienna, and that Great Britain, as a party to that Treaty, is entitled to object to that abrogation, and to protest, as she has done, against it.

If the view which Her Majesty's Government takes of that question had been shared by Austria and Prussia, as it was by France, the representations of the 4 Powers would probably have been attended with success; but Austria and Prussia having concurred with Russia in her interpretation of the Treaty of Vienna, and having approved of the changes which the Russian Government proposed to make in the Polish Constitution, it was evident that the remonstrances of Great Britain and France could not be effectual unless they had been supported by a threat of war—a threat to the execution of which so many obstacles were opposed both by the general state of Europe and by the negotiations in which, in concert with Russia, Great Britain has been, and still is, engaged.

In adverting, therefore, to the affairs of Poland, great delicacy and caution will be required. It would be inconsistent with the power and dignity of the British Empire to insist too strongly upon points which, from the considerations stated above, it might be inexpedient, if not impossible, to enforce by arms. On the other hand, His Majesty's Government cannot be expected to see measures taken which they believe to be at variance with the true spirit of the Treaty of Vienna, and which have excited so strong a feeling in Europe, without a clear though amicable expression of their opinion upon them.

Your Lordship is, therefore, instructed to treat the abrogation of the Constitution of Poland as a measure which His Majesty's Government deeply regret, as inconsistent with the true construction of the Treaty of Vienna, and as injurious to the interests of Russia herself. You will refer at the same time to the representations already made upon this subject by Her Majesty's Ambassador at the Court of St. Petersburg, but you will not press this matter in such a manner as, without producing any benefit to Poland, would incur the hazard of increasing the difficulties already existing on the various subjects to which your attention has been called in this despatch.

The Treaties of 1815, to which Russia was a party (not only the General Act of the Congress of Vienna, but the separate Treaty between Russia and Prussia), clearly stipulate that the nationality of the Poles shall be preserved. But statements have reached His Majesty's Government which, if true, tend to show a deliberate intention on the part of the Russian Government to break down the nationality of Poland, and to deprive it of everything which, either in outward form or in real substance, gives to its people the character of a separate nation.

The abolition of the Polish colours; the introduction of the Russian language into public acts; the removal to Russia of the national library, and public collections containing bequests made by individuals upon specific condition that they never should be taken out of the Kingdom of Poland; the suppression of schools and other establishments for public instruction; the removal of a great number of children to Russia on the pretence of educating them at the public expense; the transportation of whole families to the interior of Russia; the extent and severity of the military conscription; the large introduction of Russians into the public employments in Poland; the interference with the National Church;—all these appear to be symptoms of a deliberate intention to obliterate the political nationality of Poland, and gradually to convert it into a Russian province.

It is evident, upon the slightest reflection, that such a project could not be accomplished. To change 4,000,000 of Poles so entirely as to impart to them the character of Russians is an attempt for the success of which it would be difficult to assign a limit, either of time or perseverance. But the endeavour would lead to a severe and continued exertion of arbitrary power, which would create a strong and general feeling against Russia, and must be regarded as a decided violation of the engagements contracted by Russia at Vienna in 1815.

Your Lordship will endeavour to obtain accurate information as to what is true on these points, and if you should find that the reports which have reached His Majesty's Government are well founded, you will take every favourable opportunity of urging the Russian Government, on the part of His Majesty, with the earnestness, and at the same time with the freedom of a sincere friend, to adopt a milder and juster system; founding yourself upon the Treaty of Vienna, as the basis upon which rests the right of His Majesty to interpose this expression of his feelings on the affairs of Poland.

It is unnecessary to remind your Lordship that it is of great importance, not only for the accomplishment of the various objects pointed out in these instructions, but also for the permanent interests of Great Britain, to cultivate and to increase, if possible, the friendly relations now so happily subsisting between this country and Russia. Your Lordship, therefore, will use your discretion as to the manner of pressing the various topics to which I have adverted, so as to produce the greatest possible effect, giving, at the same time, the least possible offence; and your Lordship will omit no proper opportunity of assuring the Emperor of the sincere and cordial friendship which His Majesty entertains for His Imperial Majesty, and of declaring His Majesty's desire to maintain, and, if possible, to draw closer the bonds of alliance which connect 2 Powers whose union must have so salutary an effect in preserving the peace of the world.

Lord Durham.

PALMERSTON.

No. 12.—Lord Durham to Viscount Palmerston.—(Rec. September 3.)
(Extract.) St. Petersburg, August 22, 1832.

THE only subject contained in my instructions respecting which I have not as yet communicated with your Lordship is that of Poland.

Considering it one of great difficulty and delicacy, I thought it most advisable not to take any steps upon it hastily, or, indeed, to allude to it at all with Count Nesselrode, until I had some opportunities of convincing both him and the Emperor of the friendly feeling towards Russia which had dictated the appointment of this Embassy by His Majesty, and until I had been enabled to acquire, as I trust I have, his good-will and confidence.

In the meantime I examined the archives of the Embassy here, for the purpose of ascertaining exactly the nature and extent of the representations which had been previously made to this Government on the subject.

The result of this examination I forward to your Lordship in the inclosed abstract, by which it appears that not only have we constantly and firmly remonstrated against the measures which have been adopted in Poland by this country as contrary to the Treaty of Vienna, to which we were parties, but that, during the course of the war which preceded the adoption of those measures, we never ceased to make such representations to the Cabinet here as would, if they had been listened to, have prevented any infraction whatever of the letter or spirit of that Treaty.

It appears, also, that when, contrary to our remonstrances, the Polish Constitution was abrogated, we entered our formal protest against the measure, as being, in our opinion, contrary to the provisions of the Treaty of Vienna.

The correctness of this interpretation was denied by this country, by Austria, and Prussia, and affirmed by France; and with this protest and affirmation on the one side, and justification and denial on the other, the discussion closed on the 6th of April of this year.

It seemed to me that, unless we were prepared to enforce our view of the case by an appeal to arms, it was useless formally to re-open a subject on which no new facts had been elicited which could tend to alter the determination previously taken by Russia, and formally announced to us.

I knew that neither my Sovereign nor his Ministers were ever prepared to enter into a war in order to enforce our interpretation of the Treaty; that, if they had been, the time for that military interference was long passed; and I felt certain, moreover, that at no time would the Parliament of England have sanctioned such a war, whatever might have been the feelings excited and the sympathy expressed from the knowledge of the events which have so unfortunately taken place in that wretched country.

For these reasons I determined not to deliver in any formal note to Count Nesselrode, knowing that if I did I should only receive a repetition of the formal denial of the justice of our reasoning, and fearing that the publicity of our interference would oblige the Emperor either to take steps of additional severity in order to prove to his Russian subjects that he was not controlled in what they consider the administration of their internal affairs by a foreign Power, or that he would be forced, for the same reasons, to postpone those measures of conciliation which might be in His Imperial Majesty's contemplation.

That there is a public opinion in this country is not to be denied—existing doubtless in a class, and expressed in a mode and through channels differing in every respect from those which are known and recognized in our country, but yet one to which, when pronounced by the nobles and the military, the Emperor, all powerful as he is, is obliged to yield.

There has long been a jealousy, nay, hatred, existing between the Russians and Poles. The late war was one on which the very existence of the Russian Empire was considered to depend, more especially after the declaration of the Poles that the Emperor had forfeited his right to the Throne. Any acts of grace and favour, therefore, towards the Poles by the Emperor have been and still continue to be viewed by the Russians with great jealousy and disapprobation.

In these circumstances I deemed it most advisable to pursue the following line of conduct. I told Count Nesselrode that, by my instructions, I was charged to mention the affairs of Poland to him; that I was fully sensible of the delicacy of the question; that after a minute examination of all that had passed on this subject between him and Lord Heytesbury, I found that every point contained in my instructions had already been pressed upon him, and conveyed to the Emperor; that I did not therefore feel myself called upon to put in any formal repetition in writing of the same arguments, and protest against the proceedings in Poland, but that I begged him to understand that we adhered to the fullest extent to our original opinion. I also told him, that the accounts which had reached England of the severities which had been practised towards the Poles had produced the most unfavourable impression on the public mind, of which acts no contradiction had ever appeared; that when I mentioned this to Prince Lieven, he denied the truth of the statements in the strongest terms, but said it was beneath the dignity of the Emperor to notice such calumnies.

I said that I deeply lamented the adoption of this course; that the motives of this silence were not known or appreciated; that, in the meantime, all the accusations were believed to be true, and a feeling created against which no Minister in England could successfully contend, unable as he was either to justify or contradict the allegations advanced; and that, therefore, it was most essential that I should be enabled to obtain some information which would at once relieve the Russian Government from the imputations cast on them, and justify the English Cabinet in the avowal of those feelings of amity and cordiality towards Russia which we were so anxious to acknowledge.

Count Nesselrode said that he felt sensible of the friendliness and delicacy of the motives which induced me to take this mode of mentioning the subject to him; that it was surely not necessary to reopen an already settled question; that we had declared our interpretation of the Treaty of Vienna, from which 3 of the Great Powers had dissented; that, our protest having been recorded, he did not suppose that we required more than an acknowledgment of that record, and that Russia never could assent to the correctness of the view we had taken of the Treaty, in which opinion she had been joined by Austria and Prussia.

He then used the same expressions, nearly, as Prince Lieven, with reference to the charges brought against them in the public papers, denied their truth, and told me that, before my departure, I should be put in possession of such details as would convince me how much the Russian Government had been calumniated.

I assured him that I should receive these details with great pleasure, and should be most happy to be made the means of affording a contradiction to allegations so injurious to the interests of both Governments; and I finished the conversation by saying, that any acts of leniency and grace which the Emperor might be able to show towards the Poles could not but produce a most favourable effect in England.

I have now detailed to your Lordship all that has passed between Count Nesselrode and myself on the subject of Poland. If you think that an official note ought to be sent in, you will be pleased to say so; I have given my reasons for not having hitherto done it. I consider that the honour and consistency of England has been sufficiently vindicated by previous declarations, and I fear that its presentation now may have the effect of preventing, or arresting, those measures of grace towards the unfortunate Poles the adoption of which it must be our anxious desire to promote.

Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B.

DURHAM.

ART. I. It is preliminarily determined that the Union for Customs and Commerce should be continued for twelve years longer, that is to say, from the 1st of January, 1842, to the last day of December, 1853. The Customs' Union Treaties, dated the 22nd and 30th of March, and 11th of May, 1833, the 12th May, and 10th December, 1835, and the 2nd January, 1836, shall also remain in force for that period, but with the modifications and additional provisions contained in the following Articles :

II. Article VIII of the Customs' Union Treaties of the 22nd and 30th of March, and 11th of May, 1833, and of the 12th of May, 1835, relative to the common Customs' Entry Offices at the internal boundaries between Bavaria, Wirtemberg, and Baden on the one part, and the other States of the Union on the other part, shall cease to have effect, and the trade in articles of commerce at the said internal boundaries shall not be subject to any further supervision than such as is necessary for the purpose of levying the internal duties (Art. III) in one or the other of the States of the Union.

III. With regard to the internal duties mentioned in Articles XI and XII of the Customs' Union Treaties of the 22nd and 30th March, and 11th May, 1833, and of 12th May, 1835, as well as in Articles VIII and IX of the Customs' Union Treaties of 10th December, 1835, and 2nd January, 1836, and which are levied in particular States of the Union, either on the production or preparation, or directly on the consumption of certain commodities, all the members of the Union further acknowledge the desirability of establishing as far as practicable a uniformity of legislation, and of taxation in their States; their exertions will continue to be directed to the introduction of such uniformity, especially by uniting several States in the same system of internal Customs' regulations, with or without a common interest in the Customs' revenue. Until this end has been attained, in order to avoid the disadvantage to the producers as well as to the Customs' revenues of the particular States of the Union, which might arise from a difference in the system of internal duties generally, and especially from an inequality of the rates of the Tariffs,—independently of the taxation of beetroot-sugar produced within boundaries of the Customs' Union, in respect of which reference is made to special agreements,—the following principles shall be applied with regard to the above-mentioned duties, and to the trade in the respective articles subject thereto, between the States of the Union.

i. Respecting foreign productions.

No further duties of any kind, whether on account of the State or on account of Communes and Corporations, shall be levied on commodities respecting which it is proved in the manner prescribed by the Customs' regulations, that they have already undergone, or are still subject to official supervision at some Custom House of the Union, as foreign goods imported or in transit; or respecting which, in case they belong to the class of goods, duty free by Tariff, it is proved by certificates from the Boundary-Customs' offices that they have been imported from abroad; with the reservation, however, as regards import goods, of those internal duties which are imposed generally upon the further manufacture, or any other kind of preparation from such products, whether of foreign or inland origin, or from within the Union.

ii. With regard to inland productions, and those of the States of the Union.

1. No internal duties shall be levied, either on account of the State, or of Communes or Corporations, on articles produced within the boundaries of the Union, which are passing on transit only through a State of the Union in order to be exported either into another such State or into foreign countries.

2. Each State shall be at liberty to maintain, to alter, or to abolish the duties upon the manufacture, the preparation, or the consumption of any articles, or to introduce new duties of this kind; but for the present it shall be permitted only to impose such duties on the following home products, and on similar articles produced within the States of the Union, viz. :

a. Spirits, beer, vinegar, malt, wine, must, cider (fruit wine), tobacco, flour, and other ground preparations, as well as on baked articles, meat and preparations of meat, and fat; moreover,

b. There shall be, as far as necessary, an understanding as to certain rates, which shall not be exceeded in apportioning the duties.

3. With respect to all duties which, become leviable hereafter within the territory of the States of the Union, there shall be a reciprocal equality of treatment, so that the productions of any State of the Union shall, under no pretence whatever, be taxed more heavily, or in a more onerous manner, in any other such State, than its own home productions, or those of the other States of the Union. In conformity with this principle, it is determined as follows :

a. Those States of the Union which levy no internal duty on home production, shall not levy a duty on the same production from any other State of the Union; excepting, however, that those States of the Union where no wine is produced, shall be at liberty to levy a duty on wine from the other States of the Union, in accordance with the arrangements specially made to that effect.

b. Those States wherein internal duties on articles of consumption are levied, either on their purchase, their sale, or their consumption, shall demand payment of duties only in the same manner on articles of the same kind coming from other States of the Union; but they may either levy no duty, or they may return it wholly or in part, upon articles passing into other States of the Union.

c. Those States wherein internal duties are levied on the production or preparation of an article of consumption may levy the full legal amount of the said duties upon the importation of such article from other States of the Union, and may return it in part or in full on exportation to such States.

The duties which, in conformity with the present legislation in the said States, may hereafter be levied, and relatively remitted, are the subject of a separate agreement.

If any alterations should take place hereafter in the present duties on articles of home production, the Government concerned will communicate thereon with the Governments of the other States, and show that the rates of the duties which, in consequence of the alteration made or intended to be made, are levied upon articles produced within the States of the Union, and remitted on their exportation, have been fixed in accordance with the principles agreed upon.

d. Where an association for equal Customs' arrangements exists between several States of the Customs' Union, such States shall be considered as one body, in reference to the right of levying the respective duties equally on articles produced within the States of the Union.

4. The duties on the respective articles produced within the States of the Union, shall, as a rule, be levied in the country of their destination, provided the said duties be not levied, in consequence of special agreements, either at the common Customs' offices at the internal frontiers, or in the country from whence the consignment takes place on account of the State entitled to such duty. The regulations which are necessary to ensure the payment of the duties, so far as regards the appointed roads and supervision for consignments from one State of the Union into another, shall be such as to interfere as little as possible with the general traffic; they shall be settled by mutual agreement, and should the territory of a third State be passed on the way, only with the consent of such State.

5. Duties levied on account of communes and corporations, whether by way of addition to the State duties, or independently, shall be allowed only on articles intended for local consumption, and in accordance with special agreements made to such effect; the stipulation ii, 2 b, and the principle laid down in ii, 3, with regard to a reciprocal equality in the treatment of the productions of other States of the Union, shall be applied in the same way as in relation to the State duties.

No duties on tobacco shall be levied anywhere on account of communes or corporations.

6. The Governments of the States of the Union will reciprocally communicate to each other, complete information on the following points:

a. In regard to the State duties spoken of herein, on all the laws and regulations still in force, and on any alterations taking place in future as well as on all laws and regulations respecting new duties to be introduced.

b. With reference to communal and similar dues, what places, by what communes or corporations, on what articles, to what amount, and in what manner, they are levied.

IV. The High Contracting Parties having considered it necessary to lay a duty on sugar manufactured from beetroot within the territory of the Union, the subjoined special agreement has been made to that effect, and it forms an integral part of the present Convention, having the same force as if it were incorporated therein.

The said parties further agree that should the manufacture of sugar or treacle from other home products than beetroot, from starch for example, attain any considerable extent within the Customs' Union, this manufacture shall likewise be subject to an equal taxation in all the States of the Union, in conformity with the principles agreed upon for the duty on beetroot sugar.

V. With regard to the coinage, the Contracting Governments have already agreed, by the Convention of the 30th July, 1838, upon the adoption of an equal basis for their system of coinage, and for the mintage of a common coin to be current in every State of the Union, equally with its own coinage; and the said Governments will continue to devote their attention to the further development of their laws and systems of coinage on the general principle thus laid down.

In consequence hereof, the following stipulations of the Customs' Union Treaties, hitherto existing shall continue to be observed, viz.:

1. The common Customs' tariff shall continue to be made out in two principal divisions; that is, in the 14 thaler standard, and in the 24½ florin standard; and

2. The silver coins of all the Contracting States, with the exception of the small coinage, shall be taken in payment at all the Customs' offices of the Union, at the rate of 4 thalers to 7 florins, as stipulated in the above-mentioned Coinage Convention.

3. With respect to the gold coins, however, it shall be left to each Government of the Union to decide whether they shall be taken in payment, at the Customs' offices in their territory, and for what amount in silver.

VI. The Customs' quintal, already brought into use by the Customs' tariff of the Union, now in force, shall continue to be the common standard of the Customs' weight; but the Contracting Governments will direct their attention to the introduction of that uniformity in the systems of weights and measures of their States generally, which is desirable for the furtherance of reciprocal intercourse and trade.

VII. In reference to the distribution of the duties collected for the Union in general, instead of the stipulations of Article XXII of the Customs' Union Treaties of 22nd and 30th March, and of 11th May, 1833, as well as of 12th May, 1835; and likewise of Article XVIII of the Customs' Union Treaties of 10th December, 1835, and 2nd January, 1836, the following shall apply:

1. The amount of the import duties shall be divided among all the members of the Union in proportion to the population with which they form part of the General Union, after deducting:

a. The expenses requisite for protection and for levying of customs in the districts and at the boundaries next foreign countries (Article XXX of the Treaties of 22nd and 30th March, also of 11th May, 1833, and of 12th May, 1835, and Article XXVI of the Treaty of 10th December, 1835).

b. The returns for erroneous levies.

c. The indemnifications and reductions of customs made by virtue of special agreements.

2. The amount of export and transit duties shall be divided among the States concerned, after deducting only the returns for erroneous levies, and the indemnifications and reductions made by virtue of special agreements, as follows:

a. So far as these duties are levied at the Customs' offices in the eastern provinces of the Kingdom of Prussia (excepting therefore the province of Westphalia and the Rhenish province), in the Kingdom of Saxony and in the territory of the Thuringian Customs and Trade Union, they shall be divided among Prussia, Saxony, and the States of the Thuringian Union, in the proportions to be agreed upon; but,

b. So far as these duties are levied at the Customs' offices in the other parts of the Union, the amount of such duties shall be divided among the States concerned according to their population.

3. At the distribution of import, export, and transit duties to be made in conformity with the above sections 1 and 2, the population of such States as have joined, or may hereafter join, by Treaty, the Customs' system of any of the Contracting States, under agreement for an annual payment to be made by the latter States as the share of the former in the common Customs' revenue, shall be included in the population of the State which makes such payments.

4. The census of the population of each separate State of the Union shall be taken every 3 years, and the result shall be reciprocally communicated by the members of the Union to each other.

5. In consideration of the particular circumstances prevailing in the free city of Frankfort respecting the consumption of articles subject to duty, a special arrangement has been made respecting the share of the said city in the common revenue.

VIII. If no notice of the determination of the present Treaty be given at the latest 2 years before its expiration, it shall be considered as prolonged for another 12 years, and so on from 12 years to 12 years.

The same shall be forthwith submitted for ratification to the High Contracting Parties, and the interchange of the ratifications shall be effected in Berlin within 8 weeks.
